

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

40
Recd. Sept. 1935

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

Received

July 19. 1898

I

A.

Aug 10 86

THE LAWYERS REPORTS
ANNOTATED

BOOK XXXIX

ALL CURRENT CASES OF GENERAL VALUE AND IMPORTANCE, WITH FULL ANNOTATION.

BURDETT A. RICH, EDITOR, AND HENRY P. FARNHAM, ASST.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY
1898

*K1
133
.L3
Book 39*

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, by

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,

In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

Rec. July 19, 1898.

TABLE OF CASES REPORTED

IN LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK XXXIX.

A.		Burr, Harris v. (Or.)	708
Adair, Shuey v. (Wash.)	478	Burt v. State (Tex. Crim. App.)	805
Ainsworth v. Bank of California (Cal.)	686	Byers v. Byers (Pa.)	587
Allam v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.)	535
Allard, Murray v. (Tenn.)	249	C.
Allen v. Pearce (Ga.)	710	Callaghan's Estate, Re (Cal.)	689
Smith v. (Wash.)	82	Cape May v. Cape May, D. B. & S. P. R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.)	609
Alfman, Jasper County v. (Ind.)	58	Cape May, D. B. & S. P. R. Co., Cape May v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	609
American C. Ins. Co., Matthews v. (N. Y.)	438	Carstens & Earles v. Leidigh & H. Lumber Co. (Wash.)	548
American Sav. & L. Asso., Lewis v. (Wis.)	559	Carter v. Producers' Oil Co. (Pa.)	100
Amey v. Winchester (N. H.)	760	Chicago, Fishburn v. (Ill.)	483
		Chicago & W. M. R. Co., Rabidon v. (Mich.)	405
B.		Chicago Live-Stock Exch., People, McIlhany v. (Ill.)	873
Baily v. Philadelphia (Pa.)	837	Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., Thomas v. (Iowa)	899
Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Nugent (Md.)	161	Chicago Sanitary Dist. v. Cook (Ill.)	369
Bank, Citizens' Nat., Pepperday v. (Pa.)	529	Citizens' Nat. Bank, Pepperday v. (Pa.)	529
Cleveland Nat. v. Robertson (Tenn.)	423	City & S. R. Co., Finseth v. (Or.)	517
Deposit, Hutsell v. (Ky.)	408	Clapp, People, Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. (N. Y.)	237
Franklin Nat. v. Whitehead (Ind.)	725	Clarke, State v. (Conn.)	670
National Mechanics', Duckett, v. (Md.)	84	Clarke Hardware Co., Smith v. (Ga.)	607
Park Nat., Niblack v. (Ill.)	159	Clarkson v. Hatton (Mo.)	748
Second Ward Sav. v. Schranck (Wis.)	569	Clay, Luther v. (Ga.)	95
Union Nat., Gage Hotel Co. v. (Ill.)	479	Clayton v. Hebb (C. C. App. 4th C.)	177
Bank of California, Ainsworth v. (Cal.)	686	Clements v. Philadelphia Co. (Pa.)	532
Banker, Tracy v. (Mass.)	508	Cleveland Nat. Bank v. Robertson (Tenn.)	423
Bass v. Metropolitan West Side Elev. R. Co. (C. C. App. 7th C.)	711	Cone, McGregor v. (Iowa)	484
Bell, Fowler v. (Tex.)	254	Cook, Chicago Sanitary Dist. v. (Ill.)	369
Belleville Stone Co. v. Mooney (N. J. Err. & App.)	884	v. Fogarty (Iowa)	488
Benton v. Johncox (Wash.)	107	Hobart v. (Mass.)	715
Bergin v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. (Conn.)	192	Cornell, State, Douglas County v. (Neb.)	513
Bishop v. State, Griner (Ind.)	278	Cotting, Crocker v. (Mass.)	215
Bomeisler v. Forster (N. Y.)	240	Crocker v. Cotting (Mass.)	215
Bourne, Freeman v. (Mass.)	510
Branham, Taylor v. (Fla.)	362	D.
Breen, Potts v. (Ill.)	152	Dahnke v. People (Ill.)	197
British America Assur. Co. v. Miller (Tex.)	545	Davis v. Davis (Ky.)	408
Broadfoot v. Fayetteville (N. C.)	245	Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., People, ex rel. v. Clapp (N. Y.)	237
Brown v. McGill (Md.)	806	Deposit Bank, Hutsell v. (Ky.)	403
Brown Shoe Co. v. Hunt (Iowa)	291	Des Moines, State, Howe v. (Iowa)	285
Buckley v. Winchester (N. H.)	760	Detroit Loan & B. Asso., Smith v. (Mich.)	410
		Dixon v. People (Ill.)	116

Douglas County, State, ex rel. , v. Cornell (Neb.)	518	Henderson v. McClain (Ky.)	349
Drennen v. Mercantile Trust & D. Co. (Ala.)	623	Henes, Re (Wis.)	569
Duckett v. National Mechanics' Bank (Md.)	84	Henley, State v. (Tenn.)	126
Duckworth, State v. (Idaho)	365	Hennepin County Comrs., Schussler v. (Minn.)	75
Duncan, Stillwell v. (Ky.)	863	Hennessey, Holker v. (Mo.)	165
Dwight, Page v. (Mass.)	418	Hetterman v. Powers (Ky.)	211
Dwyer, Helena v. (Ark.)	266	Hilton, John V. Farwell Co. v. (C. C. E. D. Wis.)	579
E.		Hindry v. Holt (Colo.)	351
Eaton, Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. (Ill.)	722	Hobart v. Cook (Mass.)	715
Edward Heitzeberg Packing & P. Co., St. Louis v. (Mo.)	551	Hocking v. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. (Tenn.)	148
Edwards v. State (Tex.)	262	Holker v. Hennessey (Mo.)	165
Elliott, Hovey v. (N. Y.)	449	Hollenbeck v. Hall (Iowa)	734
Estate of Callaghan, Re (Cal.)	689	Holt, Hindry v. (Colo.)	351
Klemp, Re (Cal.)	340	Hovey v. Elliott (N. Y.)	449
Stull, Re (Pa.)	539	Howe, State, ex rel. , v. Des Moines (Iowa)	285
F.		Hubbard, Glazer, v. (Ky.)	210
Faucette, Gooch v. (N. C.)	835	State v. (Kan.)	860
Faucher v. Wilson (N. H.)	431	Hughes v. Monroe County (N. Y.)	33
Fayetteville, Broadfoot v. (N. C.)	245	Wilson, v. (W. Va.)	292
Finseth v. City & S. R. Co. (Or.)	517	Hunt, Brown Shoe Co., v. (Iowa)	291
Fishburn v. Chicago (Ill.)	482	McLouth v. (N. Y.)	230
Flemming, Phoenix Ins. Co. v. (Ark.)	789	Walsh v. (Cal.)	697
Flynn, Vinson v. (Ark.)	415	Hutsell v. Deposit Bank (Ky.)	403
Fogarty, Cook v. (Iowa)	488	I.
Forster, Bomeisler v. (N. Y.)	240	Iago v. Iago (Ill.)	115
Fowler v. Bell (Tex.)	254	Illinois C. R. Co. v. O'Keefe (Ill.)	148
Frleigh, Stearns v. (Fla.)	705	Insurance Co., American C., Matthews v. Liverpool & L. & G., O'Keefe v. (Mo.)	819
Franklin Nat. Bank v. Whitehead (Ind.)	725	Mutual L., v. Jarboe (Ky.)	504
Freeman v. Bourne (Mass.)	510	Phoenix, v. Flemming (Ark.)	789
Furnell, State, Gelsthorpe v. (Mont.)	170	Virginia F. & M., Hocking v. (Tenn.)	148
G.		J.
Gage Hotel Co. v. Union Nat. Bank (Ill.)	479	Jansen, Siddall v. (Ill.)	112
Galloway Female College, Rogers v. (Ark.)	636	Jarboe, Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. (Ky.)	504
Gelsthorpe, State, ex rel. , v. Furnell (Mont.)	170	Jasper County v. Allman (Ind.)	58
Gibson v. Safety Homestead & L. Asso. (Ill.)	202	Jaynes v. Omaha Street R. Co. (Neb.)	751
Glazer v. Hubbard (Ky.)	210	Jernigan v. Madisonville (Ky.)	214
Gooch v. Faucette (N. C.)	835	Johncox, Benton v. (Wash.)	107
Greenville v. Ormand (S. C.)	847	John V. Farwell Co. v. Hilton (C. C. E. D. Wis.)	579
Griner, State, ex rel. , Bishop v. (Ind.)	278	Jones, St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. (Ark.)	784
Grobber, Perkins v. (Mich.)	815	K.
Gustafson v. Rustemeyer (Conn.)	644	Karstendiek, State v. (La.)	520
H.		Kelch v. State (Ohio)	737
Hagerstown v. Witmer (Md.)	649	Kelley v. Ohio Oil Co. (Ohio)	765
Haggerty v. Wagner (Ind.)	884	v. Rhodes (Wyo.)	594
Hall, Hollenbeck v. (Iowa)	784	Kirby, Re (S. D.)	856
Hardman v. Montana U. R. Co. (C. C. App. 9th C.)	300	Klemp's Estate, Re (Cal.)	340
Hare, Miller v. (W. Va.)	491	L.
Harris v. Burr (Or.)	768	Langham, Sherman v. (Tex.)	258
Hatton, Clarkson v. (Mo.)	748	Lead, Searle v. (S. D.)	345
Hebb, Clayton v. (C. C. App. 4th C.)	177	Leidigh & H. Lumber Co., Carstens & Earles v. (Wash.)	548
Helena v. Dwyer (Ark.)	266	Leiferiman v. Osten (Ill.)	156
Hench and Dromgold, National Harrow Co. v. (C. C. App. 8d C.)	299	Lewis v. American Sav. & L. Asso. (Wis.)	559

Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co., O'Keefe v.
(Mo.) 819
Luther v. Clay (Ga.) - - - - 95

M.

McClain, Henderson v. (Ky.) - - - 349
McClatchy v. Sacramento County Super.
Ct. (Cal.) 691
McFarland, State, Morris v. (Ind.) - - 282
McGill, Brown v. (Md.) - - - 806
McGregor v. Cone (Iowa) - - - 484
McIlhany, People, ex rel., v. Chicago
Live-Stock Exch. (Ill.) - - - 373
McLouth v. Hunt (N. Y.) - - - 280
Madisonville, Jernigan v. (Ky.) - - 214
Markey v. Queens County (N. Y.) - - 46
Maryland Tube & I. Works v. West End.
Improv. Co. (Md.) - - - 810
Mathews v. American C. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 433
St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. (Ark.) 467
Maysville v. Wood (Ky.) - - - 93
Mercantile Trust & D. Co., Drennen v.
(Ala.) - - - 623
Metropolitan West Side Elev. R. Co.,
Bass v. (C. C. App. 7th C.) - - 711
Miller, British America Assur. Co., v.
(Tex.) - - - 545
v. Hare (W. Va.) - - - 491
Miller's Will, Re (Pa.) - - - 220
Milward v. Shields (Ky.) - - - 506 Modern Woodmen Acci. Asso. v. Shryock (Neb.) - - - 826
Monroe County, Hughes v. (N. Y.) - - 33
Montana U. R. Co., Hardman v. (C. C.
App. 9th C.) - - - 300
Mooney, Belleville Stone Co. v. (N. J.
Err. & App.) - - - 834
Moran v. Moran (Iowa) - - - 204
Morehouse's Appeal (Pa.) - - - 539
Morris, State, ex rel., v. McFarland (Ind.) 282
Murphy v. San Luis Obispo (Cal.) - - 444
Murray v. Allard (Tenn.) - - - 249
Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Jarboe (Ky.) - - 504

N.

National Harrow Co. v. Hench and Drom-gold (C. C. App. 3d C.) - - - 299
National Mechanics' Bank, Duckett, v.
(Md.) - - - 84
New Orleans City & L. R. Co., State v.
(La.) - - - 618
Niblack v. Park Nat. Bank (Ill.) - - 159
Noe, Spurlock v. (Ky.) - - - 775
Norwalk Street R. Co.'s Appeal (Conn.) 794
Nugent, Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v.
(Md.) - - - 161

O.

Oakes, Royce v. (R. I.) - - - 845
Ohio Oil Co., Kelley v. (Ohio) - - 765
O'Keefe, Illinois C. R. Co. v. (Ill.) - 148
v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co.
(Mo.) - - - 819
Omaha Street R. Co., Jaynes v. (Neb.) 751
Ontario Spinning Co., Stearns v. (Pa.) - 842
Ormand, Greenville v. (S. C.) - - 847
Osten, Leiferman v. (Ill.) - - - 156
39 L. R. A.

P.

Page v. Dwight (Mass.) - - - 418
Park Nat. Bank, Niblack v. (Ill.) - - 159
Pearce, Allen v. (Ga.) - - - 710
Peay v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Ark.) - 463
Pennsylvania R. Co., Allam v. (Pa.) - 535
People, Dahnke v. (Ill.) - - - 197
Dixon v. (Ill.) - - - 116
v. Thielman (Mich.) - - - 218
v. Truckee Lumber Co. (Cal.) - - 581
Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Clapp
(N. Y.) - - - 237
McIlhany v. Chicago Live-Stock
Exch. (Ill.) - - - 873
Pepperday v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (Pa.) 529
Perkins v. Grobben (Mich.) - - - 815
Philadelphia, Bailly v. (Pa.) - - - 837
Philadelphia Co., Clements v. (Pa.) - 532
Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Flemming (Ark.) - 789
Pickett, State v. (Iowa) - - - 302
Porter v. Ritch (Conn.) - - - 353
Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Eaton (Ill.) - 722
Potts v. Breen (Ill.) - - - 152
Powers, Hetterman v. (Ky.) - - - 211
Producers' Oil Co., Carter v. (Pa.) - 100

Q.

Queens County, Markey v. (N. Y.) - 46

R.

Rabidon v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co.
(Mich.) - - - 405
Railroad Co., Cape May, D. B. & S. P., Cape May v. (N. J. Err. & App.) - - - 609
Delaware, L. & W. People, ex rel.,
v. Clapp (N. Y.) - - - 237
Illinois C. v. O'Keefe (Ill.) - - - 148
Metropolitan West Side Elev.,
Bass v. (C. C. App. 7th C.) - - 711
New Orleans City & L., State v.
(La.) - - - 618
Pennsylvania, Allam v. (Pa.) - - - 535
Raleigh & G., v. Swanson (Ga.) - - 275
Railton v. Taylor (R. I.) - - - 246
Railway Co., Baltimore City Pass., v.
Nugent (Md.) - - - 161
Chicago & W. M., Rabidon v.
(Mich.) - - - 405
Chicago, M. & St. P., Thomas v.
(Iowa) - - - 399
City & S., Finseth v. (Or.) - - - 517 Montana U. Hardman v. (C. C.
App. 9th C.) - - - 800
Norwalk Street, Appeal of (Conn.) 794
Omaha Street, Jaynes v. (Neb.) - - 751
St. Louis, I. M. & S., v. Mathews
(Ark.) - - - 467
St. Louis S. W. v. Jones (Ark.) - - 784
Raleigh & G. R. Co., v. Swanson (Ga.) - 275
Re Callaghan's Estate (Cal.) - - - 689
Henes (Wis.) - - - 569
Kirby (S. D.) - - - 856
Klemp's Estate (Cal.) - - - 340
Miller's Will (Pa.) - - - 220
Stetson's Will (Mass.) - - - 715
Stull's Estate (Pa.) - - - 539
Rhodes, Kelley v. (Wyo.) - - - 594

Ritch, Porter v. (Conn.)	858	State, Douglas County, v. Cornell (Neb.)	518
Robertson, Cleveland Nat. Bank v. (Tenn.)	428	Gelsthorpe v. Furnell (Mont.)	170
Wiehl v. (Tenn.)	428	Griner, Bishop v. (Ind.)	278
Rode v. Siebe (Cal.)	842	Howe v. Des Moines (Iowa)	285
Rogers v. Galloway Female College (Ark.)	636	Morris v. McFarland (Ind.)	282
Rose v. Wollenberg (Or.)	878	Stearns v. Fraleigh (Fla.)	705
Royce v. Oakes (R. I.)	845	v. Ontario Spinning Co. (Pa.)	842
Rustemeyer, Gustafson v. (Conn.)	644	Sternberg v. Wolff (N. J. Err. & App.)	762
		Stetson's Will, Re (Mass.)	715
		Stillwell v. Duncan (Ky.)	863
		Stull's Estate, Re (Pa.)	539
		Sullivan v. Waterman (R. I.)	778
		Swanson, Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. (Ga.)	275
S.
Sacramento County Super. Ct., McClatchy v. (Cal.)	691	T.
Safety Homestead & L. Asso., Gibson v. (Ill.)	202	Taylor v. Branham (Fla.)	362
St. Louis v. Edward Heitzeberg Packing & P. Co. (Mo.)	551	Railton v. (R. I.)	246
St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Mathews (Ark.)	467	Thielman, People v. (Mich.)	218
St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Jones (Ark.)	784	Thomas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Iowa)	399
Sanitary Dist. of Chicago v. Cook (Ill.)	869	Topeka Water Co. v. Whitting (Kan.)	90
San Luis Obispo, Murphy v. (Cal.)	444	Tracy v. Banker (Mass.)	508
Santa Ana Valley Irrig. Co., Spurgeon v. (Cal.)	701	Truckee Lumber Co., People v. (Cal.)	581
Schranck, Second Ward Sav. Bank v. (Wis.)	569	U.
Schussler v. Hennepin County Comrs. (Minn.)	75	Union Nat. Bank, Gage Hotel Co. v. (Ill.)	479
Searle v. Lead (S. D.)	845	V.
Second Ward Sav. Bank v. Schranck (Wis.)	569	Vinson v. Flynn (Ark.)	415
Sherman v. Langham (Tex.)	258	Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co., Hocking v. (Tenn.)	148
Shields, Milward v. (Ky.)	506	W.
Shryock, Modern Woodmen Acci. Asso. v. (Neb.)	826	Wagner, Haggerty v. (Ind.)	384
Shuey v. Adair (Wash.)	473	Walsh v. Hunt (Cal.)	697
Siddall v. Jansen (Ill.)	112	Waterman, Sullivan v. (R. I.)	778
Siebe, Rode v. (Cal.)	342	West End Improv. Co., Maryland Tube & I. Works v. (Md.)	810
Smith v. Allen (Wash.)	82	Western U. Teleg. Co., Peay v. (Ark.)	463
v. Clarke Hardware Co. (Ga.)	607	Wheeling Electrical Co., Snyder v. (W. Va.)	499
v. Detroit Loan & B. Asso. (Mich.)	410	Whitehead, Franklin Nat. Bank v. (Ind.)	725
Snuggs, Stanly County v. (N. C.)	439	Whiting, Topeka Water Co. v. (Kan.)	90
Snyder v. Wheeling Electrical Co. (W. Va.)	499	Wiehl v. Robertson (Tenn.)	423
Southern New England Teleph. Co., Bergin v. (Conn.)	192	Wilcox v. State (Ga.)	709
Spurgeon v. Santa Ana Valley Irrig. Co. (Cal.)	701	Williams v. State (Ga.)	269
Spurlock v. Noe (Ky.)	775	State v. (Wash.)	821
Stanly County v. Snuggs (N. C.)	439	Will of Miller, Re (Pa.)	220
State, Burt v. (Tex. Crim. App.)	305	Will of Stetson, Re (Mass.)	715
v. Clarke (Conn.)	670	Wilson, Faucher v. (N. H.)	431
v. Duckworth (Idaho)	365	v. Hughes (W. Va.)	292
Edwards v. (Tex.)	262	Winchester, Amey v. (N. H.)	760
v. Henley (Tenn.)	126	Buckley v. (N. H.)	760
v. Hubbard (Kan.)	860	Witmer, Hagerstown v. (Md.)	649
v. Karstendiek (La.)	520	Wolff, Sternberg v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	762
Kelch v. (Ohio)	737	Wollenberg, Rose v. (Or.)	378
v. New Orleans City & L. R. Co. (La.)	618	Wood, Maysville v. (Ky.)	93
v. Pickett (Iowa)	302
Wilcox v. (Ga.)	709
Williams v. (Ga.)	269
v. Williams (Wash.)	821

CITATIONS

IN OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK.

A.

Abbott v. Johnson County Comrs.	114 Ind.	61
Abeel v. Clark	84 Cal.	326
Adams v. Flanagan	36 Vt.	400
v. Merchants' Nat. Bank	9 Biss.	396
2 Fed. Rep.	174	783
v. State	34 Tex. Crim. Rep.	470
v. Wiscasset Bank	1 Me.	361, 10 Am. Dec. 88
Agar v. Fairfax	17 Ves. Jr.	533
Agate v. Lowenbein	57 N. Y.	604
Agnew v. Bank of Gettysburg	2 Harr. & G.	493
Ahrend v. Odiorne	118 Mass.	261, 19 Am. Rep. 449
Alamango v. Albany County Supers.	25 Hun.	551
Albertson v. State	9 Neb.	429
Albrecht v. Queens County	84 Hun.	399
Aldrich v. Ames	9 Gray.	77
v. Campbell	8 R.	246
v. Howard	8 R.	246
v. Wetmore	52 Minn.	164
Alexander v. Worthington	5 Md.	472
Alexandria v. Dearmon	2 Sneed.	104
Alfalfa Irrig. Dist Directors v. Collins	46 Neb.	411
Allen v. Sackrider	37 N. Y.	841
Aliender v. Trinity Church	3 Gill.	166
Alisop v. Alisop	5 Hurst. & N.	634
Alknow v. Sibbey	30 Minn.	186, 44 Am. Rep. 191
American Bridge Co. v. Heidelberg	94 U. S.	798, 24 L. ed. 144
American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Haws (Pa.)	11 Atl.	107
American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Loretta Gold & S. Min.	Co. 185 Ill.	109
American Exp. Co. v. Sands	55 Pa.	140
American Telegraph & Teleg. Co. v. Smith	71 Md.	535, 7 L. R. A. 250
Ames v. Ames	143 Ill.	321
Amherst Academy v. Cowles	6 Pick.	427, 17 Am. Dec. 387
Amherst College v. Ritch	151 N. Y.	282, 37 L. R. A. 305
Anderson v. Dunn	19 U. S.	6 Wheat. 204, 5 L. ed. 242
v. Manchester F. Assur. Co.	59 Minn.	182, 28 L. R. A. 609
v. Mills	40 Ark.	192
v. Scottish Accl. Ins. Co.	27 Scott. L. R.	20
Angle v. Northwestern L. Ins. Co.	92 U. S.	330, 23 L. ed. 536
Anaspach v. Bast	52 Pa.	358
Antoni v. Greenhow	107 U. S.	769, 27 L. ed. 468
Apgar v. Hiller	24 N. J.	1, 812
Archer v. American Waterworks Co.	50 N. J. Eq.	33
v. Merchants & M. Ins. Co.	43 Mo.	434
Arln v. Brown	44 N. H.	102
Armour's Estate	154 Pa.	517
Armstrong v. Agricultural Ins. Co.	130 N. Y.	500
v. Kerns	61 Md.	364
v. McLaughlin	49 Ind.	370
Arnaut v. His Executor	3 La.	336
Arnold v. Estis	92 N. C.	162
Arrison v. Harmstead	2 Pa.	191

Ashley v. Root	4 Allen.	504
Ashworth v. Kittridge	12 Cush.	193, 59 Am. Dec. 178
Asknew v. Hale County	54 Ala.	639, 25 Am. Rep. 730
Atchison v. Peterson	87 U. S.	20 Wall. 507, 22 L. ed. 414
Atherfold v. Beard	2 T. B.	610
Atlanta Mills v. Mason	120 Mass.	244
Atty. Gen. v. Metropolitan R. Co.	125 Mass.	515, 28 Am. Rep. 264
v. Tomline	L. R. 5 Ch. Div.	762
Atwood v. Reliance Transp. Co.	9 Watts,	87, 34 Am. Dec. 503
Augustine v. State	20 Tex.	450
Avery v. State	7 Bart.	331
v. Tyrlingham	3 Mass.	160, 8 Am. Dec. 105

B.

Babbitt v. Bumpus	73 Mich.	331
Babcock v. Booth	2 Hill,	181, 38 Am. Dec. 578
v. Buffalo	56 N. Y.	268
Bailey v. Hervey	135 Mass.	172
v. Ingles	2 Palge,	278
v. Lawrence County	5 S. D.	398
v. New York	3 Hill,	531, 38 Am. Dec. 669
Baker v. Kelsner	75 Md.	332
v. Tillman	84 Ga.	401
Baldwin, Re	71 Cal.	74
v. Cross	5 Ark.	510
v. Fleming	90 Ind.	177
v. Hale	68 U. S.	1 Wall. 223, 17 L. ed. 531
Ballard v. State	19 Neb.	609
Ballentine v. Pulaski	15 Lea,	634
Baltimore v. State, Board of Police	15 Md.	376, 74 Am. Dec. 572
Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Whittington	30 Gratt.	810
Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church	137 U. S.	568, 34 L. ed. 784
Bangor Electric Light & Power Co. v. Robinson	52 Fed. Rep.	520
Bank v. Cook	38 Ohio	St. 442
Bank of Antigo v. Union Trust Co.	149 Ill.	343, 23 L. R. A. 611
Bank of Augusta v. Earle	38 U. S.	13 Pet. 519, 10 L. ed. 274
Bank of Columbia v. Okely	17 U. S.	4 Wheat. 235, 4 L. ed. 559
Bank of Commerce v. Chambers	96 Mo.	459
Bank of the State v. Cooper	2 Yerg.	600, 24 Am. Dec. 517
Barber v. East Dallas	83 Tex.	147
Barbier v. Connolly	113 U. S.	32, 28 L. ed. 925
Barnes v. District of Columbia	91 U. S.	540, 23 L. ed. 440
v. Irwin	2 U. S.	2 Dall. 199, 1 L. ed. 348
v. Perline	12 N. Y.	18
Barnett v. Contra Costa County	87 Cal.	77
Barnhart v. Riddle	29 Pa.	96
Barnitz v. Beverly	163 U. S.	118, 41 L. ed. 93

Barrett v. Boddie, 158 Ill. 479.....	158	Boody v. United States, 1 Woodb. & M.	279
Barry, Ex parte, 85 Cal. 603.....	382	Boon v. Bowers, 30 Miss. 246, 64 Am. Dec.	72
v. Ransom, 12 N. Y. 462.....	382	Booth v. Woodbury, 32 Conn. 126.....	799
Bartelott v. International Bank, 119 Ill.	114	Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S.	358
259.....	257	25, 24 L. ed. 989.....	744
Barth v. Backus, 140 N. Y. 230, 23 L. R. A.	53	Boswell v. State, 63 Ala. 326, 35 Am. Rep.	387
47.....	235	20.....	395
Bartlett v. Crozier, 17 Johns. 439, 8 Am.	110	Bowen v. Preston, 48 Ind. 307.....	486
Dec. 428.....	478	Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U.	815
Barton, Re, L. R. 5 Eq. 238.....	236	S. 465, 31 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com.	272
Basey v. Gallagher, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 670,	685	Rep. 823.....	383
22 L. ed. 452.....	99	Boyce v. Townsontown Station of M. E.	708
Bast v. First Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 93, 25	61	Church Trustees, 46 Md. 373.....	323
L. ed. 794.....	84	Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 618, 29 L.	577
Baib Gaslight Co. v. Claffy, 151 N. Y. 24,	804	ed. 746.....	567
36 L. R. A. 664.....	466	Boyer v. Soules, 105 Mich. 31.....	741
Batters v. Dunning, 49 Conn. 479.....	304	Boykin v. Ciples, 2 Hill, Eq. 200, 29 Am.	217
Baxendale v. Bennett, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div.	487	Dec. 67.....	897
525.....	132	Boyle v. State, 57 Wis. 472, 46 Am. Rep.	499
Baxter v. Winoski Turnp. Co. 22 Vt. 123,	252	41.....	409
52 Am. Dec. 84.....	771	v. Zacharie, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 348, 8 L.	235
Boyley v. Greenleaf, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 46,	643	ed. 423.....	810
5 L. ed. 393.....	774	Brabham v. Hinds County Supers. 54	395
Beard's Appeal, 64 Conn. 526.....	708	Miss. 363, 28 Am. Rep. 352.....	417
Beasley v. Western U. Tele. Co. 39 Fed.	135	22 L. R. A. 340.....	404
Rep. 181.....	436	Bradford v. Abend, 89 Ill. 78, 31 Am. Rep.	150
Beck v. State, 20 Ohio St. 228.....	736	67.....	73
Belne, Re, 42 Fed. Rep. 545.....	550	Bradley, Ex parte, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 364,	367
Bell v. Bank of Nashville, Peck (Tenn.)	44	19 L. ed. 214.....	432
269.....	57	v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 415, 7 Am. Rep.	575
v. Wilson, L. R. 1 Ch. 303.....	395	656.....	461
Belles v. Burr, 76 Mich. 1.....	507	v. State, 31 Ind. 492.....	714
Benjamin v. Birmingham, 50 Ark. 433.....	395	Bradley Fish Co. v. Dudley, 37 Conn. 136.....	475
v. Storr, L. R. 3 C. P. 400.....	481	Braker v. Devereaux, 8 Paige, 513.....	515
Bennet v. Davis, 2 P. Wms. 316.....	688	Brakken v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 29	444
Bennett v. Denay, 33 Minn. 530.....	463	Minn. 41.....	575
v. Kroth, 37 Kan. 235.....	536	Brandenburg v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co.	543
v. Lycoming County Mut. Ins. Co. 67	337	44 Mo. App. 224.....	846
N. Y. 274.....	608	Brander v. Brander, 4 Ves. Jr. 800.....	387
v. Williamson, 4 Sandf. 60.....	156	Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. Jr. 434.....	487
Bentley v. London & C. Finance Corp. 44	382	Brannon v. May, 42 Ind. 92.....	799
Fed. Rep. 667.....	396	Braveboy v. Cockfield, 2 Mull. L. 270.....	84
Benton v. Boston City Hospital, 140 Mass.	417	Breeding v. Taylor, 13 B. Mon. 477.....	578
13, 54 Am. Rep. 436.....	481	Bricker v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 132 Pa.	282
Bereel v. Lawton, 90 N. Y. 293.....	688	1.....	699
Bergen v. Valentine, 63 How. Pr. 221.....	463	Bright v. Hutton, 12 Eng. L. & Eq. 15.....	281
Bergin v. State, 31 Ohio St. 111.....	62	Brimmer v. Rehman, 138 U. S. 78, 34 L. ed.	417
742, 745, 748.....	547	862, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 485.....	578
Berna v. Gaston Gas Coal Co. 27 W. Va.	733	Brind v. Dale, 8 Car. & P. 207.....	729
285, 55 Am. Rep. 304.....	536	Brine v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 96 U. S. 627,	84
Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 515, 30 Am.	337	24 L. ed. 858.....	578
Rep. 323.....	156	Brinkley v. Brinkley, 47 N. Y. 40.....	461
Bertles v. Nunan, 92 N. Y. 152, 44 Am.	382	British Cast Plate Mfrs. v. Meredith, 4 T.	358
Rep. 361.....	396	R. 794.....	808
Best v. Spooner, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 602.....	417	Broadway Nat. Bank v. Adams, 133 Mass.	714
Bever v. North, 107 Ind. 534.....	395	170, 43 Am. Rep. 504.....	475
Bickford v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Ill. 238, 89	640	Brock v. Dole, 66 Wis. 142.....	515
Am. Dec. 436.....	481	Brockway v. Allen, 17 Wend. 40.....	444
Bigelow v. Folger, 2 Met. 255.....	688	Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 658.....	575
v. Forrest, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 339, 19 L.	463	Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244.....	543
ed. 686.....	62	Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 816, 11	575
v. Randolph, 14 Gray. 541.....	547	L. ed. 145.....	543
Bills v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 87 Tex. 547, 29 L.	733	Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 212.....	846
R. A. 706.....	536	Brown v. Boorman, 11 Clark & F. 1, 3 Q.	387
Bingham v. Jordan, 1 Allen, 873, 79 Am.	337	B. 511.....	602
Dec. 748.....	608	v. Harmon, 73 Ind. 412.....	487
v. Rogers, 6 Watts & S. 495, 40 Am.	156	v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. ed.	799
Dec. 581.....	382	257.....	84
Bishop v. State, 43 Tex. 390.....	396	v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 419,	578
v. Weber, 139 Mass. 411, 52 Am. Rep.	417	6 L. ed. 678.....	282
715.....	481	v. O'Connell, 36 Conn. 432, 4 Am. Rep.	699
Bissell v. Davison, 65 Conn. 183, 29 L. R.	536	89.....	84
A. 251.....	337	v. Oregon Lumber Co. 24 Or. 317.....	578
Bissig v. Britton, 59 Mo. 204, 21 Am. Rep.	156	v. Simpson, 4 Kan. 76.....	282
879.....	382	v. Smart, 69 Md. 320.....	729
Bittinger v. Bell, 65 Ind. 445.....	396	v. Vandergrift, 80 Pa. 147.....	730
Bixby v. Brundige, 2 Gray, 129, 61 Am.	417	Bruce v. Westcott, 3 Barb. 374.....	133
Dec. 443.....	395	Brutton v. State, 4 Ind. 601.....	731
Black v. Kuhlman, 30 Ohio St. 196.....	640	Bryan v. Winburn, 43 Ark. 28.....	810
Blackwell v. State, 30 Tex. App. 416.....	664	Bryant v. Thompson, 128 N. Y. 426.....	89
Blair v. Forehand, 100 Mass. 136, 1 Am.	298	Bucher v. Com. 103 Pa. 534.....	402
Rep. 94, 97 Am. Dec. 82.....	348	Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 1, 26 Am. Rep.	282
Blake v. Cole, 22 Pick. 97.....	733	75.....	846
Blackley v. Marshall, 174 Pa. 425.....	837	Buck v. Millford, 90 Ind. 291.....	627
Blanchard v. Kansas, 16 Fed. Rep. 444.....	843	Buckton v. Hay, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 645.....	158
Blandy v. Benedict, 42 Ohio St. 295.....	859	Bundy v. Monticello, 84 Ind. 119.....
Blanton v. McDowell County Comrs. 101 N.	757	Burg v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 90 Iowa
C. 532.....	472	108.....
Blodgett v. Morrill, 20 Vt. 509.....	757	Burke v. State, 52 Ind. 522.....
Blythe, Re, 99 Cal. 472.....	472	Burnett v. Lynch, 6 Barn. & C. 589.....
Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Barnett, 107	814	Burnham v. Bowen, 111 U. S. 776, 28 L. ed.
Ill. 507, 47 Am. Rep. 453.....	748	596.....
Bolles v. Sachs, 37 Minn. 315.....	483	v. Martin, 90 Ill. 438.....
Donaparte v. Baltimore, H. & L. R. R. Co.
75 Md. 347.....
Bond v. State, 23 Ohio St. 349.....
Bonner, Re, 151 U. S. 242, 38 L. ed. 149.....
39 L. R. A.

Burrows v. Bashford, 22 Wis. 104. 568
 v. Klunk, 70 Md. 451, 3 L. R. A. 576. 700
 Burton v. State, 107 Ala. 108. 273
 Bussey v. Hooper, 35 Md. 30, 6 Am. Rep. 350. 813
 Butner v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 2 Okla. 234. 466
 Byler v. Jones, 79 Mo. 261. 167

C.

Cabot v. Christie, 42 Vt. 121, 1 Am. Rep. 313. 648
 Caddy v. Barlow, 1 Mann. & R. 275. 270
 Cade v. Davis, 98 N. C. 139. 836
 Caldwell v. Copeland, 37 Pa. 427, 78 Am. Dec. 436. 538
 v. Fulton, 31 Pa. 475, 72 Am. Dec. 760. 253
 Callender v. Marsh, 1 Pick. 417. 347
 Calye's Case, 8 Coke, 32a. 761
 Camden v. Fletcher, 4 Mees. & W. 378. 196
 Campbell v. Brackenridge, 8 Blackf. 471. 68
 Campbell's Case, 2 Bland, Ch. 209, 20 Am. Dec. 360. 799
 Campbell Printing Press & Mfg. Co. v. Hickok, 140 Pa. 290. 818
 Cannon v. Barry, 50 Miss. 289. 714
 Carlin v. Ritter, 68 Md. 478. 371, 372
 Carlock v. Spencer, 7 Ark. 22. 248
 Carnig v. Carr, 167 Mass. 544, 35 L. R. A. 512. 472
 Carpenter v. Oswego & S. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 655. 724
 v. Pennsylvania, 58 U. S. 17 How. 456, 15 L. ed. 127. 174
 Carr v. Coke, 116 N. C. 223, 28 L. R. A. 737. 441, 442, 443, 444
 v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 307. 642 Carrico v. West Virginia, C. & P. R. Co. 35 W. Va. 389. 503
 v. West Virginia, C. & P. R. Co. 39 W. Va. 86, 24 L. R. A. 50. 164
 Carroll v. Wall, 35 Kan. 36. 284
 Carroll County Comrs. v. Bailey, 122 Ind. 46. 61, 70
 Carson v. Central R. Co. 35 Cal. 325. 760
 v. Ury, 39 Fed. Rep. 777, 5 L. R. A. 614. 213, 510
 Carson City Sav. Bank v. Carson City Elevator Co. 90 Mich. 550. 567
 Carter v. Hobbs, 12 Mich. 52, 83 Am. Dec. 762. 761
 Carvill v. Jacks, 43 Ark. 439. 648
 Cary, Re, 10 Fed. Rep. 622. 461
 Case of Ipswich Tailors, 11 Coke, 53. 376
 Caskey v. Lewis, 15 B. Mon. 29. 864
 Cass County Comrs. v. Ross, 46 Ind. 404. 68
 Castleman v. Belt, 2 B. Mon. 157. 405
 Cavaness v. State, 43 Ark. 331. 742
 Center v. Gibney, 71 Ill. 557. 157
 Central R. & Electric Co.'s Appeal, 67 Conn. 197. 802, 803, 805
 Central Trust Co. v. Thurman, 94 Ga. 735. 630
 Chaddock v. Briggs, 13 Mass. 248, 7 Am. Dec. 137. 512
 Chambers v. Cincinnati & G. R. Co. 69 Ga. 320. 348
 v. State, Barnard, 127 Ind. 385, 11 L. R. A. 613. 281
 Chamblee v. McKenzie, 31 Ark. 155. 643
 Chapeze v. Young, 87 Ky. 476. 383
 Chaplin v. Merrill, 4 Wend. 657. 382, 383
 Chapman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 88 Ga. 703, 17 L. R. A. 430. 400
 v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 90 Ky. 285. 466
 v. Young, 65 Ill. App. 131. 201
 Chartiers Block Coal Co. v. Mellon, 152 Pa. 286, 18 L. R. A. 702. 253
 Chase v. Lowell, 7 Gray, 33. 512
 v. People, 40 Ill. 352. 304, 741
 v. Stephenson, 71 Ill. 383. 156
 v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 44 Fed. Rep. 554, 10 L. R. A. 464. 467
 Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 4 Gill & J. 1. 813, 814
 Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Mackenzie, 74 Md. 36. 757
 Chicago v. Keefe, 114 Ill. 222, 55 Am. Rep. 860. 353
 v. Rumpff, 45 Ill. 90, 92 Am. Dec. 196. 482

Chicago v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 162, 31 L. ed. 639. 348, 351
 v. Union Bldg. Asso. 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598. 351 Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 148 Ill. 141. 200
 v. Dunleavy, 129 Ill. 132. 114
 Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Ayres, 106 Ill. 518. 348
 v. Englewood Connecting R. Co. 115 Ill. 375, 58 Am. Rep. 173. 122
 Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Hildebrand, 42 Neb. 33. 883
 v. Landauer, 36 Neb. 642. 833
 v. Mehlsack, 131 Ill. 61. 152
 v. State, Omaha, 47 Neb. 549. 142
 v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 156 Ill. 255, 29 L. R. A. 485. 760
 Chicago, K. & N. R. Co. v. Hazels, 26 Neb. 364. 758, 760
 Chitwood v. Cromwell, 12 Helsk. 658. 691
 Chrisman v. Carney, 33 Ark. 316. 418
 Christian v. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co. 92 Ala. 130. 630
 v. Williams, 111 Mo. 435. 167
 Chrysler v. Canaday, 90 N. Y. 272. 646
 Church v. Brown, 21 N. Y. 335. 71
 Cicero & P. Street R. Co. v. Melxner, 160 Ill. 320, 31 L. R. A. 331. 114
 Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 98 v. Conbalm, 40 Minn. 243, 3 L. R. A. 125. 213
 Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Adam, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 633. 353
 Citizens' Coach Co. v. Camden Horse R. Co. 33 N. J. Eq. 267, 36 Am. Rep. 542. 756, 760
 Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 664, 22 L. ed. 461. 515
 City Electric R. Co. v. Shropshire (Ga.) 28 S. E. 506. 788
 Clampit v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. 84 Iowa, 71. 401
 Clapp v. Hartford, 35 Conn. 66. 802
 v. State, 94 Tenn. 186. 136, 137, 144, 146
 Clare v. National City Bank, 1 Sweeny, 539. 502
 Clark, Re, 65 Conn. 17, 28 L. R. A. 242. 799, 800, 804
 v. Adair County, 79 Mo. 536. 61
 v. Farrington, 11 Wis. 307. 567
 v. State, 12 Ohio, 483, 40 Am. Dec. 481. 742, 748
 v. Waltham, 128 Mass. 567. 62
 Clarke v. Brown, 77 Ga. 606. 277
 v. Ohio River R. Co. 39 W. Va. 732. 500
 Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 646. 236
 v. Clarkson, 125 Mo. 381. 749, 750 Clements, Re, 78 Mo. 352. 749
 v. Waters, 90 Ky. 99. 864
 Clemm v. Wilcox, 15 Ark. 102. 417
 Clifford v. Eagle, 35 Ill. 444. 157
 Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 485, 93 Am. Dec. 459. 167, 168
 Clough v. Wing (Ariz.) 17 Pac. 453. 110
 Clyde v. Hubbard, 88 Ia. 358. 536
 C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. v. Loraine, 22 Fed. Rep. 54. 602, 603
 Cobb v. Illinois & St. L. R. & Coal Co. 68 Ill. 233. 713
 v. Telegraph Co. (Kan.). 467
 Cochran v. Ripy, 13 Bush, 495. 731
 v. Van Surlay, 20 Wend. 365, 32 Am. Dec. 570. 799
 Cochrane v. Frostburg, 81 Md. 54, 27 L. R. A. 728. 659
 Coe v. Errol, 62 N. H. 303. 599
 v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715. 601, 602
 v. New Jersey Midland R. Co. 31 N. J. Eq. 105. 634
 v. Schultz, 47 Barb. 64. 859
 Coffin v. Landis, 46 Pa. 431. 470, 471
 v. Left Hand Ditch Co. 6 Colo. 446. 110
 Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909. 846
 Cohen v. New York L. Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 610, 10 Am. Rep. 522. 436
 Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257. 360
 Cohn v. People, 149 Ill. 486, 23 L. R. A. 821. 213, 510
 Colby v. Jackson, 12 N. H. 526. 359
 Cole v. Drew, 44 Vt. 49. 723
 v. High, 173 Pa. 590. 648
 Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls, 90 Tenn. 481. 132

Demoville v. Davidson County, 87 Tenn.	220	Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 72	43, 61
Denison v. Foster (Tex. Civ. App.) 37 S. W. 167.	259	Am. Dec. 302.
Denny v. Bennett, 128 U. S. 489, 32 L. ed. 401.	578	East St. Louis v. United States, Zebler, 110 U. S. 321, 28 L. ed. 162.	250, 814
Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson, 21 Colo. 371, 81 L. R. A. 596.	503	Eaton v. Aspinwall, 19 N. Y. 121.	588
Denver, S. P. & P. R. Co. v. Wilson, 12 Colo. 20.	353	Ebert v. Wood, 1 Blinn 216, 2 Am. Dec. 436.	62
Derry v. Derry, 14 Ind. 560.	387, 396	Edgerly v. Concord, 62 N. H. 8.	765
Des Plaines v. Poyer, 123 Ill. 348.	268, 557	Edison v. Edison United Phonograph Co. 52 N. J. Eq. 620.	84
Detroit City R. Co. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634.	755	Edminster v. Higgins, 6 Neb. 265.	574, 575
De Turk v. Com. 129 Pa. 151, 5 L. R. A. 853.	281	Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 600, 24 L. ed. 796.	757
Dewey, Re, 153 N. Y. 63.	236	Eels v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 143 N. Y. 133, 25 L. R. A. 840.	886
De Witt v. Pierson, 112 Mass. 8, 17 Am. Rep. 58.	158	Elceman v. Finch, 79 Ind. 511.	121
D'Wolf v. Haydn, 24 Ill. 525.	98	Elmer v. Elmer, 47 Ill. 373.	704
Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, 7 Am. Rep. 415.	437	Elnstein v. Rosenstein, 38 N. J. Eq. 309.	757
Deyraud's Succession, 9 Rob. (La.) 357.	175	Elkins v. Boston & M. R. Co. 23 N. H. 275.	482
Dickon v. Clifton, 2 Wils. 319.	846	Elliot v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. 32 Conn. 579.	780
Drakson v. People, Brown, 17 Ill. 191.	281	Ellis, Re (Wis.) 72 N. W. 387.	576
Dillingham v. Anthony, 73 Tex. 47, 3 L. R. A. 634.	788	v. Andrews, 56 N. Y. 83, 15 Am. Rep. 379.	646
Dills v. State, 59 Ind. 15.	125, 392	v. Ellis, 4 R. I. 122.	248
Dingman v. Dingman, 39 Ohio St. 172.	410	v. Pomeroy Improv. Co. 1 Wash. 572	109
Dinwoodie v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 70 Wis. 160.	793	v. Little, 27 Kan. 707, 41 Am. Rep. 434.	862
Distilled Spirits Case, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 356, 20 L. ed. 167.	300	v. State, 92 Tenn. 93.	132
Distilling & Cattle Feeding Co. v. People, Maloney, 156 Ill. 448.	476	Elsee v. Gatzward, 5 T. R. 143.	846
Dix v. Akers, 30 Ind. 431.	691	Elwes v. Maw, 3 East, 38.	714
Dixon v. Gries, 106 Cal. 506.	502	Ely v. Com. Horine, 5 Dana, 398.	688
v. Plums, 98 Cal. 384, 20 L. R. A. 698.	709	Embury v. Connor, 3 N. Y. 511, 53 Am. Dec. 325.	568
Dodson v. Mock, 20 N. C. (4 Dev. & B. L.) 146.	854	Emerson v. Slater, 63 U. S. 22 How. 43, 16 L. ed. 365.	383
Dogan v. Dubois, 2 Rich. Eq. 85.	437	Ennis v. Gray, 87 Hun, 355.	503
Dolan v. Rodgers, 149 N. Y. 480.	730	Ensign v. Livingston County Supers. 25 Hun, 20.	44, 61
Donaghue v. Gaffy, 54 Conn. 257.	148	Erickson v. Smith, 2 Abb. App. Dec. 64.	317
Donaldson v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 280.	714	Erie R. Co. v. Union Locomotive & Exp. Co. 35 N. J. L. 245.	470
Dooley v. Crist, 25 Ill. 553.	65, 68, 70	Essex County Chosen Freeholders v. Newark City Nat. Bank, 48 N. J. Eq. 51.	88
v. Sullivan, 112 Ind. 451.	741	Evans v. Bouton, 85 Ill. 579.	157
Dosdall v. Olmsted County, 30 Minn. 96, 44 Am. Rep. 185.	432	Ewing v. Smith, 3 Desauss. Eq. 417, 5 Am. Dec. 557.	707
Dove v. State, 3 Helsk. 348.	207	Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 367.	173, 174
Dow v. Portland Steam Packet Co. 84 Me. 490.	167
Dowd v. Tucker, 41 Conn. 197.	155	F.
v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. 57 Mo. App. 219, 132 Mo. 581.	61	Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398.	338, 339
Dowling v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 92 Wis. 63, 31 L. R. A. 112.	359	Fairfield's Appeal, 57 Conn. 107.	904
Downing v. Mason County, 87 Ky. 208.	410	Fallon v. Kehoe, 38 Cal. 44.	130
Dowie, Re, 16 R. I. 537, 5 L. R. A. 359.	647	Falls v. United States Sav. Loan & Bldg. Co. 97 Ala. 417, 24 L. R. A. 174.	258
Drake v. Earhart, 2 Idaho, 716.	226	Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Kansas City, W. & N. W. R. Co. 53 Fed. Rep. 182.	625, 628
Drew v. Beall, 62 Ill. 164.	155	v. Minneapolis Engine & Mach. Works, 35 Minn. 543.	733
Driftwood Valley Turnp. Co. v. Bartholomew County Comrs. 72 Ind. 226.	147	v. San Diego Street Car Co. 45 Fed. Rep. 518.	738
Duffield v. Williamsport School Dist. 102 Pa. 476, 25 L. R. A. 152.	396	Farnham v. Camden & A. R. Co. 55 Pa. 53.	536
Dugger v. Mechanics & T. Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 258, 28 L. R. A. 796.	195	Farnum v. Concord, 2 N. H. 392.	61
Duncan v. Terre Haute, 85 Ind. 104.	635	Farrar v. Adams, 1 Bull. N. P. 69c.	432
Dundon v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 67 Conn. 206.	252	Farris v. Henderson, 1 Okla. 384.	367
Dunham v. Cincinnati, P. & C. R. Co. 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 254, 17 L. ed. 584.	359	Farson v. Louisville Sinking Fund Comrs. 97 Ky. 110.	446
v. Kirkpatrick, 101 Pa. 36, 47 Am. Rep. 696.	383	Farwell v. Sturges, 9 U. S. App. 504, 6 C. C. 115, 56 Fed. Rep. 732.	301
v. New Britain, 55 Conn. 378.	544	Faul v. Twiddle, 10 Abb. N. C. 94.	235
Dunn v. West, 5 B. Mon. 376.	381	Faull v. Cooke, 19 Or. 455.	111
Dupre v. Boulard, 10 La. Ann. 411.	248	Faust v. American F. Ins. Co. 91 Wis. 158, 30 L. R. A. 783.	791
Durbin v. Kuney, 19 Or. 71.	793	Faville v. Shehan, 68 Iowa 242.	303
Dutton v. Gerrish, 9 Cush. 89, 53 Am. Dec. 45.	602	Featherstone v. Cooke, L. R. 16 Eq. 298.	764
Dwelling House Ins. Co. v. Brodie, 52 Ark. 11, 4 L. R. A. 458.		Feltz v. Walker, 49 Conn. 93.	648
Dyer v. Osborne, 11 R. I. 321, 23 Am. Rep. 460.		Fenton v. Yule, 27 Neb. 758.	517
		Ferguson v. Crawford, 70 N. Y. 253, 26 Am. Rep. 589.	463
E.		v. Northern Bank, 14 Bush, 555, 29 Am. Rep. 418.	731
Earle v. Robinson, 91 Hun, 363.	252	Festorazzi v. St. Joseph's Catholic Church, 104 Ala. 327, 25 L. R. A. 300.	208
Earl Rosse v. Wainman, 14 Mees. & W. 559.	138	Fidelity Ins. & S. D. Co. v. Shenandoah Iron Co. 42 Fed. Rep. 372.	634
Earp's Appeal, 28 Pa. 368.	382	Field v. Chicago, 44 Ill. App. 410.	558
Eason v. State, 6 Baxt. 475.	472	v. Cooks, 16 La. Ann. 153.	814
Easter v. White, 12 Ohio St. 219.
East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Scott, 72 Tex. 70.
39 L. R. A.

Fifth Nat. Bank v. Ashworth, 123 Pa. 212, 2 L. R. A. 401.....	531	Geddis v. Parrish, 1 Wash. 587.....	109
Fifty Associates v. Howland, 11 Met. 99.....	422	Geilfuss v. Corrigan, 95 Wis. 651, 37 L. R. A. 106.....	730, 731, 732
Finch v. Toledo Bd. of Edu. 30 Ohio St. 37, 27 Am. Rep. 414.....	62	George v. Hoskins, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 63.....	383
Finnell v. Nesbit, 16 B. Mon. 351.....	688	v. State, 39 Miss. 570.....	304
First Nat. Bank v. Dovetail Body & G. Co. 143 Ind. 534.....	783	George's Creek Coal & I. Co. v. Alleghany County Comrs. 59 Md. 255.....	606
v. Williams, 120 Ind. 423.....	731	German Ins. Co. v. Eddy, 38 Neb. 461, 19 L. R. A. 707.....	820
v. Wilson, 62 Ark. 143.....	640	v. Gibson, 53 Ark. 494.....	702
Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 349, 46 Am. Dec. 393.....	432	Gerry, Re, 103 N. Y. 451.....	236
Fishback v. Van Dusen, 33 Minn. 111.....	729	Ghorimley v. Smith, 139 Pa. 584, 11 L. R. A. 565.....	809, 810
Fisk, Ex parte, 113 U. S. 713, 28 L. ed. 1117.....	463	Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525.....	236
Fitch v. Casler, 17 Hun. 126.....	761	v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23.....	367
Fitzherbert v. Shaw, 1 H. Bl. 258.....	371	Gilbert v. Sykes, 16 East. 150.....	837
Fitzpatrick v. Brady, 6 Hill. 581.....	687	Gillilan v. Union Canal Co. 190 U. S. 401, 27 L. ed. 977.....	805
Flagg v. Baldwin, 38 N. J. Eq. 219, 48 Am. Rep. 308.....	837	Gill v. Weston, 110 Pa. 313.....	253
Flinn v. Prairie County, 60 Ark. 204, 27 L. R. A. 669.....	125	Gillespie v. Beecher, 85 Mich. 355.....	413
Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Lull, 28 Mich. 514.....	410	v. State, 8 Yerg. 507, 29 Am. Dec. 137.....	304
Flori v. St. Louis, 69 Mo. 341, 33 Am. Rep. 504.....	62	Gillooley v. State, 58 Ind. 182.....	304
Foltz v. Kerlin, 105 Ind. 221, 55 Am. Rep. 197.....	281	Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 8 Cal. 62, 68 Am. Dec. 290.....	61
Ford v. Cobb, 20 N. Y. 344.....	714	v. Illinois & M. Teleg. Co. 91 U. S. 603, 23 L. ed. 405.....	626
v. Kendall School Dist. 121 Pa. 548, 1 L. R. A. 607.....	62	v. Lockwood, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 409, 18 L. ed. 432.....	576, 578
v. State, 71 Ala. 355.....	742	v. McArdle, 99 N. Y. 451, 52 Am. Rep. 41.....	209
v. Thornton, 3 Leigh. 695.....	688	Gindrat v. People, 138 Ill. 103.....	271
Forster v. Abraham, L. R. 17 Eq. 351.....	708	Giraudi v. Electric Improv. Co. 107 Cal. 120, 28 L. R. A. 596.....	503
Fort Dearborn Lodge No. 214, I. O. O. F. v. Klein, 115 Ill. 191, 66 Am. Rep. 133.....	412	Gleever v. Hynde, 1 Mod. 108.....	359
Fortman v. Goepper, 14 Ohio St. 558.....	714	Goddard v. Harpswell, 84 Me. 499, 30 Am. St. Rep. 373.....	62
Fosburgh v. Rogers, 114 Mo. 122, 19 L. R. A. 201.....	750	Godefroy v. Jay, 7 Bing. 413.....	846
Fosdick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 235, 25 L. ed. 339.....	625, 626, 629-631, 634-636	Godfrey v. Craycraft, 81 Ind. 476.....	386
Foss v. Cummings, 149 Ill. 353.....	483	Goldsmith v. Swift, 25 Hun. 201.....	236
Foster v. Pitts, 63 Ark. 387.....	418	Goodtitle, Chester, v. Alker, 1 Burr. 133.....	724
Fougeray v. Cord, 50 N. J. Eq. 185.....	765	Goodwin v. State, 96 Ind. 550.....	317, 339
Fourth Nat. Bank v. City Nat. Bank, 68 Ill. 398.....	481	Gosman v. State, Schumacher, 106 Ind. 203.....	280, 281
Fowler v. Allen, 32 S. C. 229.....	853	Gottschalk v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 14 Neb. 550.....	758, 760
Fox v. Miner, 32 Cal. 112, 91 Am. Dec. 566.....	691	Gould, Ex parte, 99 Cal. 360, 21 L. R. A. 751.....	694
v. Tabel, 66 Conn. 307.....	648	Graham v. Smith (Ga.) 28 S. E. 225.....	710
Frame v. Silter, 29 Or. 121, 34 L. R. A. 600.....	84	v. State, 1 Ark. 171.....	640
Francis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 58 Minn. 252, 25 L. R. A. 406.....	466	Graham Button Co. v. Spellmann, 50 N. J. Eq. 120.....	733
Francis v. Wiegert, 56 Mich. 474.....	412	Grand Lodge, I. O. of G. T. v. Farnham, 70 Cal. 158.....	641
Frank, Ex parte, 52 Cal. 608, 28 Am. Rep. 642.....	344	Granger v. Adams, 90 Ind. 87.....	732, 733
Frederich, Re, 140 U. S. 70, 37 L. ed. 653.....	463	v. Pulaski County, 26 Ark. 37.....	61
Freel v. Crawfordville School City, 142 Ind. 27, 37 L. R. A. 301.....	62	Grant County v. Colonial & U. S. Mortg. Co. 3 S. D. 390.....	348
Freeman v. Machias Water Power & M. Co. 38 Me. 243.....	364	Graves, Re, 20 Fed. Rep. 60.....	461
v. Mercantile Mut. Accd. Asso. 156 Mass. 351, 17 L. R. A. 753.....	832	v. Berdan, 26 N. Y. 498.....	158
v. Wilson, 16 R. I. 524, 17 Atl. 921.....	412	Gray v. Jones, 14 Fed. Rep. 83.....	98
Frontier Land & Cattle Co. v. Baldwin, 3 Wyo. 764.....	598, 602	Great Western R. Co. v. Blower, 20 Week. Rep. 776.....	432
Frorer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492.....	376	Green v. Biddle, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 1, 5 L. ed. 547.....	575
Frost v. Hsley, 54 Me. 345.....	577	v. Creswell, 10 Ad. & El. 453, 381, 382.....	383
Fry v. Albemarle County, 86 Va. 195.....	61	v. Groves, 109 Ind. 519.....	390
Fryeburg Parsonage Fund v. Ripley, 6 Me. 442.....	641	v. Hobby, 8 Conn. 165.....	802
Fuhr v. Dean, 20 Mo. 116, 69 Am. Dec. 484.....	412, 417	v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 91 Iowa, 615.....	547
Fuller v. Rowe, 57 N. Y. 23.....	364	v. Sinker, 135 Ind. 435.....	818
Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Pa. 229.....	296	v. State, 88 Ga. 518.....	273
Furness's Estate, 12 Phila. 130.....	235	Greene County Comrs. v. Boswell, 4 Ind. App. 133.....	62
G.
Gage, Re, 141 N. Y. 112, 25 L. R. A. 781.....	771	Greenfield Sav. Bank v. Stowell, 123 Mass. 196, 25 Am. Rep. 67.....	699
v. Tirrell, 9 Allen, 305.....	248	Greeno v. Barnard, 18 Kan. 518.....	84
Gahan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 59 Fed. Rep. 433.....	467	Greenwood v. Holbrook, 111 N. Y. 465, 436, 438.....	210
Galpin v. Page, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 350, 21 L. ed. 939.....	694	Gregory v. Brown, 4 Bibb, 29.....	392, 394
Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Cowdrey, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 481, 20 L. ed. 206, 626.....	635	Grelner v. Klein, 28 Mich. 12.....	500, 708
Garraud, Re, 35 Cal. 342.....	690	Gridley v. Wyant, 64 U. S. 23 How. 500, 16 L. ed. 411.....	413, 836
Garvin v. State, 13 Lea. 162.....	132	Griffin v. Carter, 40 N. C. (5 Fed. Eq.) 413.....	895
Gastenhofer v. Clair, 10 Daly, 265.....	761	Grissom v. Moore, 106 Ind. 296, 55 Am. Rep. 742.....	648
Gault v. Humes, 20 Md. 297.....	164	Grissold v. Gebble, 126 Pa. 353.....	407, 409
Gaynor v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 100 Mass. 208, 97 Am. Dec. 96.....	520	Gronlin v. Duluth, S. S. & A. R. Co. 100 Mich. 598.....	461
		Gross v. Clark, 87 N. Y. 272.....	410
		Grosse v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 91 Wis. 482.....	148
		Grosvenor v. Atlantic F. Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 391.....	72
		Grubbs v. State, 24 Ind. 295.....

Grundy County v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. 94 Tenn. 295.
 Guernsey v. Wood, 130 Mass. 503.
 Guetig v. State, 66 Ind. 94, 32 Am. Rep. 99.
 Guild v. Conrad, 63 L. J. Q. B. 721.
 Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 59 Minn. 332.
 Gulterman v. Liverpool, N. Y. & P. S. S. Co. 83 N. Y. 858.
 Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 10 U. S. App. 640, 54 Fed. Rep. 481, 4 C. C. A. 454.
 v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666.
 v. Warlick (Ind. Ter.) 35 S. W. 235.
 Gunmakers' Soc. v. Fell, Willes Rep. 334.
 Guykowski v. People, 2 Ill. 476.
 Guynne v. Cincinnati, 3 Ohio, 24, 17 Am. Dec. 570.

H.

Habig v. Layne, 38 Neb. 743.
 Hacker v. National Oil Ref. Co. 73 Pa. 98.
 Hagers-Town Turnp. Road v. Creeger, 5 Harr. & J. 122, 9 Am. Dec. 496.
 Haines v. Tiffany, 25 Ohio St. 549.
 Hale v. Frost, 99 U. S. 389, 25 L. ed. 419.
 v. Mechanics' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 199, 66 Am. Dec. 410.
 Haley v. State, 42 Neb. 556.
 Hall v. Harrell, 92 Ind. 408.
 v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 58 N. Y. 292, 17 Am. Rep. 255.
 v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 70.
 v. Plummer, 1 Lev. 196.
 v. Trucks, 38 Ark. 257.
 Halsey v. Rapid Transit Street R. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 380.
 Ham v. New York, 70 N. Y. 459.
 Hamberg-Bremen F. Ins. Co. v. Garlington, 66 Tex. 103, 59 Am. Rep. 613.
 Hamilton v. Annapolis & E. Ridge R. Co. 1 Md. Ch. 107.
 Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109.
 Hammond v. Straus, 53 Md. 12.
 Hancock v. Prodmore, 1 Barn. & Ad. 290.
 Handcock v. Baker, 2 Bos. & P. 290.
 Handelum v. Burlington C. R. & N. R. Co. 72 Iowa, 709.
 Handy v. Handy, 124 Mass. 394.
 Hanna v. State Trust Co. 36 U. S. App. 61, 16 C. C. A. 588, 70 Fed. Rep. 2, 30 L. R. A. 201.
 Hannegan v. Roth, 12 Wash. 65.
 Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. ed. 527.
 Hanson v. European & N. A. R. Co. 62 Me. 84, 16 Am. Rep. 404.
 v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 73, 1 Am. Rep. 215.
 v. Willard, 12 Me. 142, 28 Am. Dec. 162.
 Harlan v. Stout, 22 Ind. 488.
 Harmon, Re, 43 Fed. Rep. 372.
 v. Chicago, 110 Ill. 400, 51 Am. Rep. 668.
 v. Omaha, 17 Neb. 548, 52 Am. Rep. 420.
 Harnett v. Garvey, 66 N. Y. 641.
 Harper v. Albany Mut. Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 197.
 v. Hassard, 113 Mass. 188.
 Harrington v. Watson, 11 Or. 143, 50 Am. Rep. 465.
 Harris v. Corlies, 40 Minn. 106, 2 L. R. A. 349.
 v. State, Dolan, 72 Miss. 964, 33 L. R. A. 85.
 Harrison v. Baltimore, 1 Gill, 264.
 v. Fink, 42 Fed. Rep. 787.
 Harrow v. Myers, 29 Ind. 469.
 Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530.
 Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Raymond, 70 Mich. 485.
 Hartwell v. Camman, 10 N. J. Eq. 128, 64 Am. Dec. 448.
 Harward v. St. Clair & M. Levee & D. Co. 51 Ill. 180.
 Hasbrouck v. Shipman, 16 Wis. 297.
 Hasseld v. Seyfort, 105 Ind. 534.
 Hastings & G. I. R. Co. v. Ingalls, 15 Neb. 123.
 Hatcher v. State, 12 Lea, 371.
 Hathaway v. National L. Ins. Co. 48 Vt. 335.

39 L. R. A.

Havens v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 123 Mo. 403, 26 L. R. A. 107.
 Hawes v. Favor, 161 Ill. 440.
 Hawker v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 15 W. Va. 629, 36 Am. Rep. 825.
 Haws v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 130 Pa. 113, 2 L. R. A. 52.
 Hayes v. Douglas County, 92 Wis. 429, 31 L. R. A. 218.
 v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 71, 30 L. ed. 580.
 Haynes v. Cape May, 50 N. J. L. 55.
 v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810.
 Hays v. Jordan, 85 Ga. 741, 9 L. R. A. 373.
 v. Yarrowborough, 21 Tex. 487.
 Hazlett v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 182 Pa. 118.
 Heap v. Barton, 12 C. B. 274.
 Heard v. Eldredge, 109 Mass. 258, 12 Am. Rep. 687.
 Heath v. Silverthorn Lead Min. & Smelt. Co. 39 Wis. 146.
 Hecht v. Caughron, 46 Ark. 132.
 Hedderich v. Smith, 103 Ind. 203, 53 Am. Rep. 509.
 Hedges v. Madison County, 6 Ill. 567.
 Helgel v. Wichita County, 84 Tex. 392, 81 Am. St. Rep. 63.
 Helster v. Green, 48 Pa. 96, 96 Am. Dec. 569.
 Heldt v. State, 20 Neb. 492, 57 Am. Rep. 835.
 Hellen v. Noe, 3 Ired. L. 493.
 Hemenway v. Hemenway, 134 Mass. 446.
 Henderson v. Indiana Trust Co. 143 Ind. 561.
 v. Kentucky C. R. Co. 86 Ky. 389.
 v. State, 60 Ind. 296.
 v. Wickham, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543.
 Hendrix v. McBeth, 87 Ind. 287.
 Hennen, Ex parte, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 230, 10 L. ed. 138.
 Henry v. Bank of Salina, 5 Hill, 535.
 v. Lowe, 73 Mo. 96.
 Henry L. Crane Boot & Shoe Co. v. Treatman, 34 Fed. Rep. 620.
 Henson v. Beckwith, 20 R. I. pt. 1, p. 169, 33 L. R. A. 716.
 Hershey v. Clark, 27 Ark. 527.
 Herster v. Herster, 116 Pa. 612.
 Hext v. Gill, L. R. 7 Ch. 699.
 Hexter v. United States L. Ins. Co. 91 Ky. 357.
 Hickey v. State, 12 Neb. 490.
 Hill v. Beach, 12 N. J. Eq. 31.
 v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332.
 v. Easthampton, 140 Mass. 381.
 v. Ely (Pa.) 9 Am. Dec. 378.
 v. Livingston County Supers. 12 N. Y. 62.
 v. People, 16 Mich. 351.
 v. Smith, 27 Cal. 482.
 Hiller v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 70 N. Y. 223.
 Hilliard v. Ashville, 118 N. C. 845.
 v. White (Tex. Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 553.
 Hinds v. Stevens, 45 Mo. 209.
 Hine v. Roberts, 48 Conn. 267.
 Hines v. Driver, 89 Ind. 339.
 Hinz v. People, Halbert, 92 Ill. 406.
 Hite v. Hite, 93 Ky. 257, 19 L. R. A. 175.
 Hobart v. Milwaukee City R. Co. 27 Wis. 194, 9 Am. Rep. 461.
 Hodges, Ex parte, 24 Ark. 201.
 Hodgkins v. Price, 132 Mass. 196.
 Hoffman, Re, 143 N. Y. 327.
 v. Etna F. Ins. Co. 32 N. Y. 413, 88 Am. Dec. 337.
 v. Harrington, 22 Mich. 54.
 Hogan v. Chattanooga, 2 Tenn. Legal Rep. 12.
 Hoge v. Hoge, 1 Watts, 216, 26 Am. Dec. 52.
 Hoglan v. Carpenter, 4 Bush, 80.
 Hollenbeck v. Winnebago County, 95 Ill. 148, 35 Am. Rep. 151.
 Holley v. Glover, 36 S. C. 404, 16 L. R. A. 776.
 Hollingsworth v. Flint, 101 U. S. 596, 25 L. ed. 1020.

389

Hollinshead v. Van Glahn, 4 Minn. 190...	606	Illinois C. R. Co. v. O'Keefe, 154 Ill. 508...	149
Holla, Ex parte, 59 Cal. 408.	604	Illinois Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Flx, 53 Ill.
Holmes v. Knights, 10 N. H. 175.	383	151, 5 Am. Rep. 38.	148
v. Trumper, 22 Mich. 427, 7 Am. Rep.	700	Ilseley v. Nichols, 12 Pick. 270, 22 Am. Dec.	167
661.		425.
Holmes & G. Mfg. Co. v. Holmes & W.	567	Indiana Central Canal Co. v. State, 53 Ind.	388
Metal Co. 127 N. Y. 280.	128	575.	391
Home Ins. Co. v. Shelby County Taxing	736	Indianapolis v. Huegele, 115 Ind. 581.	386
Dist. 4 Lee. 650.		v. Kingsbury, 101 Ind. 200, 51 Am.
Homer v. Engelhardt, 117 Mass. 539.	646	Rep. 749.	757
v. Perkins, 124 Mass. 431, 27 Am.	516	Indianapolis B. & W. R. Co. v. Hartley,	400
Rep. 677.	207	87 Ill. 439, 16 Am. Rep. 624.	820
Hood v. Lynn, 1 Allen. 103.		Indianapolis, D. & W. R. Co. v. Clay, 4
Hooker v. Oxford, 33 Mich. 454.	566	Ind. App. 282.
Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L.	132	Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Bachler, 44 Neb.
ed. 297.		549.
Hope v. Deaderick, 8 Humph. 8, 47 Am.	132	Interstate Commerce Commission v. Balti-
Dec. 597.		more & O. R. Co. 145 U. S. 275, 98
Hopkins v. Lewis, 84 Iowa, 690, 15 L. R.	487	L. ed. 703, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 92.
A. 897.	733	v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed.
Hopper v. Lovejoy, 47 N. J. Eq. 573, 12 L.	741	1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545, 461.
R. A. 583.	804	Iowa v. McGregor, 78 Fed. Rep. 957.
Hopps v. People, 31 Ill. 385, 83 Am. Dec.	883	Irving v. Houston, 4 Pat. App. 521.
231.		Isaacs v. Barber, 10 Wash. 124, 30 L. R.
Hopson's Appeal, 65 Conn. 140.	109	A. 635.
Horn v. Bray, 51 Ind. 555.	142	Israel v. State, 8 Ind. 467.
Horne v. Memphis & O. R. Co. 1 Coldw.	646	Ives v. Carter, 24 Conn. 392.
74.	801	v. Goshel, 65 Conn. 456.
Houck v. Graham, 128 Ind. 277.	412	v. Ives, 13 Johns. 235.
House v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60	417
Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657.		J.
64, 68, 70, 71, 73, 74		Jackson v. Edwards, 7 Palge, 386, 392,
v. Whittis, 5 Baxt. 602.	393	v. Edwards, 22 Wend. 498.
Houston v. Brush, 66 Vt. 331.	397	v. Von Zedlitz, 136 Mass. 342.
v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24, 73 Am. Dec.	810	Jackson, ex rel. Stansbury, v. Farmer, 9
565.		Wend. 201.
Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 42 L. ed.	417	Jacobs, Re, 98 N. Y. 110, 50 Am. Rep.
215.		686.
v. McDonald, 109 U. S. 150, 27 L. ed.	268	Jarboe v. Severin, 85 Ind. 498.
588.	390	Jeffersonville v. Weems, 5 Ind. 547.
Howard v. Merriam, 5 Cush. 563.	888	Jencks v. Phelps, 4 Conn. 149.
v. Shoemaker, 35 Ind. 111.	880	Jenkins v. Ballantyne, 8 Utah, 245, 16 L.
v. Worcester, 153 Mass. 426, 12 L. R.		R. A. 689.
A. 160.	664	Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S. 456, 25 L.
Howe v. Cooke, 21 Wend. 29.	112	ed. 241.
v. State, 10 Ind. 423.		Jentzsch, Ex parte, 112 Cal. 468, 32 L. R.
Howland v. Edmonds, 24 N. Y. 307.	136	A. 604.
Howlett v. Dilts, 4 Ind. App. 23.	814	Johnson v. Hines, 61 Md. 130.
Howser v. Cumberland & P. R. Co. 80 Md.	387	v. Miller, 47 Ind. 376, 17 Am. Rep.
146, 27 L. R. A. 154.		649.
Hubbard v. Preston, 90 Mich. 221, 15 L.	348	v. Parkersburg, 16 W. Va. 402, 37
R. A. 240.	387	Am. Rep. 779.
v. Taunton, 140 Mass. 467.	387	v. Plume, 77 Ind. 166.
Huck v. Globe Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 306, 34	506	v. Southern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 79 Ky.
Am. Rep. 373.	416	403.
Huda v. American Glucose Co. 151 N. Y.	418	v. West, 41 Ark. 335.
540.	606	Johnson Count. Comrs. v. Searight Cattle
Hudson v. Baxendale, 2 Hurist. & N.	604	Co. 3 Wyo. 777.
574.	643	Johnston v. Ewing Female University, 35
Huesing v. Rock Island, 128 Ill. 465.	818	Ill. 518.
Huey v. Gahlenbeck (Pa.) 6 Am. St. Rep.		v. Whittemore, 27 Mich. 463.
793.		Jones v. Aspen Hardware Co. 21 Colo. 263,
Hughes v. Monroe County, 147 N. Y. 49, 39	814	20 L. R. 143.
L. R. A. 83.	383	v. Bacon, 72 Hun. 506.
v. Swope, 88 Ky. 257.	383	v. Letcher, 13 B. Mon. 363.
v. Watt, 28 Ark. 153.	478	v. Littleale, 6 Ad. & El. 486.
Humphrey v. Marshall, 15 Conn. 34.	304	v. People, 2 Colo. 351.
Hunt v. Browne, Snouse & S. 178.	792	v. Southern Ins. Co. 38 Fed. Rep. 19.
Hunter, Ex parte, Rice, Eq. 293.	273	v. State, 75 Ga. 825.
v. Memphis, 93 Tenn. 571.		Jordan v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co.
v. Watson, 12 Cal. 363, 73 Am. Dec.	353	89 Ky. 40.
543.	271	✓ Lewis, 2 Strange, 1122.
Huntington v. McMahon, 48 Conn. 174.	688	v. National Shoe & Leather Bank, 74
Hurley v. State, 30 Tex. App. 333.	393	N. Y. 467, 30 Am. Rep. 319.
Hurn, Ex parte, 92 Ala. 109, 13 L. R. A.	446	v. Van Epps, 85 N. Y. 427.
120.	665	Judson v. Bessemer, 87 Ala. 240, 4 L. R. A.
Hurst v. Warner, 102 Mich. 238, 26 L. R.	373	742.
A. 484.	601	Jullenne v. Jackson, 69 Miss. 34.
Hurt v. Salisbury, 55 Mo. 310.		Jungerman v. Boyce, 19 Cal. 355.
Hussey v. State, 69 Ga. 58.		Justice v. Ott, 87 Cal. 531.
Huston v. Reutlinger, 91 Ky. 333.		K.
Hutchins v. New England Coal Min. Co. 4		Kadish v. Garden City Equitable Loan &
Allen, 580.		Bldg. Assn. 161 Ill. 531.
Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 152 Ill. 347.		Kauffelt v. Bower, 7 Serg. & R. 64.
Hutton v. Uphill, 2 H. L. Cas. 674.		182.
Hyatt v. Wood, 4 Johns. 150, 4 Am. Dec.		Kean v. Davis, 21 N. J. L. 683, 47 Am. Dec.
258.		182.
Hyman v. Devereux, 63 N. C. 624.		Keasy v. Louisville, 4 Dana, 154, 29 Am.
Hypes v. Griffin, 89 Ill. 135, 31 Am. Rep.		Dec. 395.
71.		Keating v. Springer, 146 Ill. 481, 22 L. R.
		A. 544.
I.		Keefe v. Sholl, 181 Pa. 90.
Illinois & St. L. R. & C. Co. v. Cobb, 94 Ill.		Keegan v. Geraghty, 101 Ill. 26.
55.		Keene v. Van Reuth, 48 Md. 194.
Illinois C. R. Co. v. Crider, 91 Tenn. 506, 132, 138
39 L. R. A.

Keith v. State, 91 Ala. 2, 10 L. R. A. 430..	487	Lee v. Tillotson, 24 Wend. 337, 35 Am. Dec. 624.	568
Keleher v. Putnam, 60 N. H. 30, 49 Am. Rep. 304.	359	Legatt v. Tollervey, 14 East. 302..	270, 271
Kelley v. Drury, 9 Allen, 27.	578	Lehman Bros. v. Tallahassee Mfg. Co. 64 Ala. 567.	629, 630, 634, 635, 636
Kelly v. State, 19 Ga. 426.	274	Lelper v. Lewis, 15 Serg. & R. 108.	687
Kemmler, Re, 136 U. S. 448, 34 L. ed. 524..	246	Lelsy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36.	486
Kemper v. Louisville, 14 Bush, 90.	350	Leland v. Hayden, 102 Mass. 542.	236
Kennedy v. Shaw, 33 Ind. 474.	732, 733	Lemay v. Williams, 32 Ark. 166.	417, 418
Kernochan, Re, 104 N. Y. 618.	236	Le Page v. McNamara, 5 Iowa, 124.	208
Kerr v. Kingsbury, 39 Mich. 150, 33 Am. Rep. 362.	371, 372, 378	Le Roy v. New York, 20 Johns. 430, 11 Am. Dec. 289.	805, 768
v. Merchants' Exchange Co. 3 Edw. Ch. 316.	158	Letts v. Kessler, 54 Ohio St. 73.	768
v. Watts, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 550, 5 L. ed. 328.	389	Libbey v. Tolford, 48 Me. 316, 77 Am. Dec. 229.	248
Kester v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 55 Fed. Rep. 603.	407	Libby v. Maine C. R. Co. 85 Me. 34, 20 L. R. A. 812.	164
Kettenbach v. Omaha Life Asso. 49 Neb. 842.	830	License Cases, 46 U. S. 5 How. 504, 12 L. ed. 258.	486
Kidd v. Denulson, 6 Barb. 9.	714	Life Asso. of America v. Rundle (Relfe v. Rundle), 103 U. S. 222, 26 L. ed. 337.	566
Kilbourne v. Fay, 20 Ohio St. 264, 23 Am. Rep. 741.	733	Lillibridge v. Lackawanna Coal Co. 143 Pa. 293, 13 L. R. A. 627.	258
Kimball v. Salem, 111 Mass. 87.	512	Lime City Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. v. Black, 136 Ind. 544.	391
King v. Hermitage, Carth. 239.	217	Lincoln v. Sun Vapor Street Light Co. 19 U. S. App. 431, 59 Fed. Rep. 756	831
v. Hunter, 65 N. C. 603, 6 Am. Rep. 754.	143	Lindner v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 93 Wis. 526.	820
v. Sparks, 77 Ga. 285.	98	Linn v. Minor, 4 Nev. 462.	74
v. State, 9 Tex. App. 515.	329	Littell v. Grady, 33 Ark. 584.	416
v. Sutton, 8 Barn. & C. 417.	304	Little v. Birdwell, 27 Tex. 688.	365
v. Wade, 5 Price, 621.	507	Littlefield v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 3 Cliff. 371.	360
King, ex rel. Coates, v. Coopers Co. Wardens, 7 T. R. 543.	376	Little Miami R. Co. v. Wetmore, 19 Ohio St. 133, 2 Am. Rep. 373.	789
East India Co., v. Despard, 2 Mann. & B. 406.	304	Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Barker, 33 Ark. 350, 34 Am. Rep. 44.	467
Kings v. State, 46 Ind. 132.	383	Litzenberger v. Jarvis-Conklin Trust Co. 8 Utah, 15.	625
Kingsley v. Balcome, 4 Barb. 181.	382	Liver Alkali Co. v. Johnson, L. R. 9 Exch. 338.	432
Kinney v. Com. 30 Gratt. 858, 32 Am. Rep. 690.	544	Lloyd v. New York, 5 N. Y. 369, 55 Am. Dec. 347.	43, 55
Kirby v. McCook County Circuit Ct. (S. D.) 72 N. W. 461.	860	Lockhart v. Craig Street R. Co. 139 Pa. 419.	754
Kirk v. Rhoads, 46 Cal. 398.	448	Lockwood v. Slewin, 26 Ind. 124.	732, 733
Kissel v. Eaton, 64 Ind. 248.	386	Loeffner v. State, 10 Ohio St. 598.	742, 745
Klopp v. Creston City Guarantee Water-works Co. 34 Neb. 808.	550	Logan v. Lee, 53 Ark. 94.	416
Knapp v. Hungerford, 7 Hun, 568.	394	Loneragan v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co. 7 Blng. 729.	122
Kneeland v. American Loan & T. Co. 136 U. S. 89, 34 L. ed. 379, 625, 630, 633, 634.	136	Look v. Dean, 108 Mass. 116, 11 Am. Rep. 323.	359
Knox v. State, 9 Baxt. 202.	138	Lord v. Brooks, 52 N. H. 72.	237
Knoxville v. Lewis, 12 Lea. 181.	700	v. Essex Bldg. Asso. 37 Md. 325.	914
Knoxville Nat. Bank v. Clark, 51 Iowa, 264, 33 Am. Rep. 129.	755	Lorillard v. Monroe, 11 N. Y. 392, 62 Am. Dec. 120.	53, 54, 61
Koch v. North Ave. R. Co. 75 Md. 222, 15 L. R. A. 377.	476	Lough v. Outerbridge, 143 N. Y. 271, 25 L. R. A. 674.	432
Kost v. Bender, 25 Mich. 515.	417	Loughran v. Ross, 45 N. Y. 792, 6 Am. Rep. 173.	371, 372, 373
Krevet v. Meyer, 24 Mo. 107.	646, 647	Louisiana, ex rel. Folsom Bros., v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 936.	260
Krumm v. Beach, 96 N. Y. 398.	714	Nelson, v. Police Jury, 111 U. S. 716, 25 L. ed. 574.	260
Kutter v. Smith, 60 U. S. 2 Wall. 491, 17 L. ed. 830.		Southern Bank, v. Pillsbury, 105 U. S. 278, 26 L. ed. 1090.	261
L.
Ladies' Collegiate Inst. v. French, 16 Gray, 190.	641	Louisville v. Louisville Rolling Mill Co. 3 Bush, 424, 96 Am. Dec. 243.	350
Lahr v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 268.	757	Louisville & F. R. Co. v. Brown, 17 B. Mon. 763.	350
Laing v. Colder, 8 Pa. 479, 49 Am. Dec. 533.	530	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Davidson County Ct. 1 Sneed, 629, 62 Am. Dec. 424.	145
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 59, 30 L. R. A. 33.	114	Louisville Bagging Mfg. Co. v. Central Pass. R. Co. 95 Ky. 50.	753
Lake View v. Letz, 44 Ill. 81.	557	Low v. Elwell, 121 Mass. 309, 23 Am. Rep. 272.	412
Lampert v. Haydel, 96 Mo. 439, 2 L. R. A. 113.	809	Lucas v. Chamberlain, 8 B. Mon. 276.	383
Lane v. Woodbury District Twp. 58 Iowa, 462.	82	v. Coulter, 104 Ind. 81.	248
Lang v. Dougherty, 74 Tex. 226.	256, 258	v. Oliver, 37 Ala. 626.	630
Lange, Ex parte, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 872.	462	Lucky v. Police Jury, 46 La. Ann. 686.	529
Larimer County Comrs. v. Lee, 3 Colo. App. 177.	121, 122, 125	Luehrman v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 2 Lea. 438.	132
Larrabee v. Peabody, 128 Mass. 581.	62	Lupple v. Winans, 37 N. J. Eq. 245.	749
Larsen v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 19 Or. 240.	111	Lux v. Haggins, 69 Cal. 255.	109, 110, 112
Latta v. Redden, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 426.	864	Lynch v. Com. 77 Pa. 205.	742
Lauman v. Des Moines County, 29 Iowa, 310.	606	v. Knight, 6 H. L. Cas. 598.	467
Launtz v. People, Sullivan, 113 Ill. 137, 55 Am. Rep. 405.	284	Lynn v. Polk, 8 Lea, 121.	132, 134
Lavender v. Hudgens, 32 Ark. 763.	418	Lyons v. Orange, A. & M. R. Co. 32 Md. 18.	814
Lawson v. De Bolt, 78 Ind. 563.	399
Lay v. Parsons, 104 Cal. 661.	448
Lay's Case, 16 How. St. Tr. 4th ed. 230.	826
Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 58 Am. Rep. 638.	319, 334, 335, 336, 338
Leckey v. Cunningham, 56 Pa. 370.	228
Lee v. Colston, 5 T. B. Mon. 245.	389
v. Lindell, 22 Mo. 202, 64 Am. Dec. 262.	392, 394

Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. 86 Tenn. 143, 22 L. R. A. 802.....	256	Marion County Comrs. v. Riggs, 24 Kan. 255.....	61
M.		Mark v. Murphy, 76 Ind. 534.....	396
McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 445.....	196	Markham v. Brown, 37 Ga. 277, 92 Am. Dec. 73.....	142
McCabe v. Fountain County Comrs. 46 Ind. 380.....	68	Marks v. Ryan, 63 Cal. 107.....	371
McCahan v. Hirst, 7 Watts, 175.....	846	Marsh v. Bristol, 65 Mich. 378.....	412
McCall v. Foreyth, 4 Watts & S. 179.....	846	Marshall v. Betner, 17 Ala. 832.....	417
McCann v. McLennan, 2 Neb. 286.....	517	v. Marshall, 2 Hun. 238.....	543
McCaul v. Thayer, 70 Wis. 138.....	573	Martin v. Berens, 67 Pa. 463.....	478
McCauley v. Davidson, 10 Minn. 418 (Gil. 335).....	574	Martindale v. Alexander, 26 Ind. 104, 89 Am. Dec. 458.....	396
McClain v. Todd, 5 J. J. Marsh. 338, 22 Am. Dec. 37.....	501	Marvin v. Hawley, 9 Mo. 382, 43 Am. Dec. 547.....	169
McCluer v. Girard F. & M. Ins. Co. 43 Iowa. 349, 22 Am. Rep. 249.....	963	Mason v. Fenn, 13 Ill. 525.....	371
McClure v. State, 1 Yerg. 208.....	547	Masser v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 604.....	401
McCormick v. Burt, 95 Ill. 263, 35 Am. Rep. 163.....	304	Mathewson v. Strafford Bank, 45 N. H. 104.....	402
v. Hunter, 50 Ind. 186.....	156	Mawhinney v. Southern Ins. Co. 98 Cal. 184, 20 L. R. A. 87.....	688
McCourtney v. Matthes, 47 Mo. 533.....	389	Maximilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468.....	547
McCracken v. Kuhn, 73 Ind. 149.....	690	May v. Fletcher, 40 Ind. 575.....	42, 55
McCullough v. Maryland, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 428, 4 L. ed. 606.....	399	v. Hoover, 112 Ind. 455.....	387
McDaniels v. Robinson (Vt.) 62 Am. Dec. 590.....	288	Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnston, [1894] 1 Ch. 508.....	391
McDonald v. Webster, 2 Mass. 498.....	761	Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 31 L. ed. 654.....	217
McDonough v. Milwaukee & N. R. Co. 73 Wis. 223.....	688	Mears v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 92 Pa. 15, 37 Am. Rep. 647.....	797
McDougal v. State, 88 Ind. 24.....	410	Mechanics' Bank v. Bank of Columbia, 18 U. S. 5 Wheat. 326, 5 L. ed. 100.....	791
McDowell v. Oyer, 21 Pa. 423.....	741	Mechanics' Trust Co. v. Dandridge, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 625.....	476
McDuffee v. Portland & R. R. Co. 52 N. H. 430, 13 Am. Rep. 72.....	7a	Medway v. Needham, 16 Mass. 157, 8 Am. Dec. 131.....	730, 781
McElroy v. Kansas City, 21 Fed. Rep. 237.....	432	Meeks v. State, 57 Ga. 329.....	544
Macey v. Childress, 2 Tenn. Ch. 438.....	347, 348	Meier v. State, 57 Ind. 386.....	304
McFadden v. Fortler, 20 Ill. 509.....	383	Mellon v. Reed, 114 Pa. 847.....	282
McGlunis v. State, 9 Humph. 47, 49 Am. Dec. 617.....	857	Mendon v. Worcester County Comrs. 2 Allen, 463.....	538
McGlashan v. Tallmadge, 37 Barb. 313.....	132, 138	Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 514, 32 L. ed. 520.....	805
McGorty v. Southern N. E. Teleph. Co. 69 Conn. 635.....	248	Mentzner v. Western U. Teleph. Co. 93 Iowa, 752, 23 L. R. A. 72.....	510
McGrath v. Clark, 56 N. Y. 34, 15 Am. Rep. 372.....	190	Mercer v. Vose, 67 N. Y. 58.....	466
v. Detroit, M. & M. R. Co. 57 Mich. 355.....	699	Merchants' Bank v. Moore, 106 Ala. 646.....	338
McGregor v. Buel, 24 N. Y. 166.....	409	Merchants' Exch. Bank v. Luckow, 37 Minn. 542.....	636
McGuire v. Cook, 13 Ark. 448.....	437	Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 422, 53 Am. Rep. 723.....	476
McIlvalne v. Smith, 42 Mo. 45, 97 Am. Dec. 205.....	416	Merrick v. Intramontaine R. Co. 118 N. C. 1081.....	531
Mackason's Appeal, 42 Pa. 330, 82 Am. Dec. 517.....	809	v. Kennedy, 46 Neb. 62.....	760
McKelvey v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 85 W. Va. 500.....	809	Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 59.....	517
McKenzie v. State, 26 Ark. 334.....	501	Metcalfe v. Williams, 104 U. S. 93, 26 L. ed. 665.....	873
McKinney v. Smith, 106 Ind. 404.....	742	Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Jones, 137 Ill. 634, 12 L. R. A. 492.....	476
McKnight v. Bell, 135 Pa. 358.....	387	Meyer v. Johnston, 53 Ala. 237.....	481
v. Spain, 13 Mo. 536.....	538	v. Simonson, 5 DeG. & S. 723.....	629, 635
Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. Jr. 329.....	169	Michels v. Olmstead, 14 Fed. Rep. 219.....	235
M'Lean v. Longlands, 5 Ves. Jr. 71.....	83, 84	Mickle v. Stocksleger, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. 345.....	476
McManus's Estate, 87 Cal. 292, 10 L. R. A. 567.....	708	Midland R. Co. v. Checkley, L. R. 4 Eq. 19.....	883
McMillan v. Solomon, 42 Ala. 356, 94 Am. Dec. 654.....	342	Miller v. Ewer, 27 Me. 509, 46 Am. Dec. 619.....	251
McNally v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 137 N. Y. 389.....	158	v. Horton, 152 Mass. 540, 10 L. R. A. 116.....	364
M'Naughten's Case, 10 Clark & F. 200.....	436	v. State, 144 Ind. 401.....	142
McPherson, Re, 104 N. Y. 306, 58 Am. Rep. 502.....	322	v. Turney, 13 Ark. 385.....	731
McVeigh v. United States, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 259, 20 L. ed. 80.....	176	Milligan v. Lyle, 24 La. Ann. 144.....	417
McVey v. Brendel, 144 Pa. 235, 13 L. R. A. 877.....	462	v. Poole, 35 Ind. 64.....	477
Madison, W. & M. Pl. Road. Co. v. Water- town & P. Pl. Road. Co. 5 Wis. 173.....	213	Mills, Re, 136 U. S. 263, 34 L. ed. 107.....	396
Mager v. Grima, 49 U. S. 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168.....	567	v. Brown, 11 Iowa, 314.....	463
Magruder v. Carroll, 4 Md. 348.....	173	v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 37 Iowa, 400.....	383
Magwood v. Johnston, 1 Hill, Eq. 228.....	813	Miner v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 363.....	547
Maier, Ex parte, 103 Cal. 476.....	707	Miltenberger v. Logansport, C. & S. W. R. Co. 106 U. S. 286, 27 L. ed. 117.....	256
Malverer v. Spinke, 1 Dyer, 36b.....	593	Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Herrick, 127 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 109.....	626
Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 412.....	359	Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185.....	831
v. Leach, 35 Vt. 156, 82 Am. Dec. 625.....	383	Minor, Re, 60 Fed. Rep. 235, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 329.....	883
Mandel v. McClave, 46 Ohio St. 407, 5 L. R. A. 519.....	648	v. Staples, 71 Me. 316, 36 Am. Rep. 318.....	246
Maney v. State, 6 Lea. 221.....	395	v. State, 63 Ga. 321.....	367
Manuel v. Cumberland County Comrs. 96 N. C. 9.....	136, 138		761
Marble v. Worcester, 4 Gray, 396.....	61		274
Marbury v. Ehlen, 72 Md. 206.....	832
Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 49 Mich. 90.....	89
39 L. R. A.	407

Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101, 96 Am. Dec. 705.	236	National Harrow Co. v. Quick, 67 Fed. Rep. 130.	300
v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L. R. A. 259.	174	National Masonic Accl. Assn. v. Shryock, 36 U. S. App. 658, 73 Fed. Rep. 74, 20 C. C. A. 3.	830-833
Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 207, 32 L. ed. 108.	246	National State Bank v. Vilgo County Nat. Bank, 141 Ind. 352.	733
Mitchell v. Conley, 13 Ark. 414.	857	National Webster Bank v. Eldridge, 115 Mass. 424.	709
v. Farrish, 69 Md. 235.	392	Nave v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 37 Mo. 430, 90 Am. Dec. 394.	820
v. Rockland, 52 Me. 118.	61	Neaves v. North State Min. Co. 90 N. C. 412, 47 Am. Dec. (Rep.) 529.	477
v. Starbuck, 10 Mass. 5.	217	Neely v. State, 4 Baxt. 174.	133, 138, 142, 145
Money v. Jordan, 2 De G. M. & G. 318.	243	Nehr v. State, 35 Neb. 638, 17 L. R. A. 771.	664
Monsee v. State, 78 Ga. 110.	275	Nelson v. Woodruff, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 156, 17 L. ed. 97.	432
Monson v. New York Security & T. Co. 140 N. Y. 498.	236	Nester v. Continental Brewing Co. 161 Pa. 473, 24 L. R. A. 247.	300
Montague v. Richardson, 24 Conn. 338, 63 Am. Dec. 173.	342	New Brighton v. Petrol, 107 Pa. 280.	351
Montel v. Consolidation Coal Co. 39 Md. 171.	812	v. United Presbyterian Church, 96 Pa. 331.	348
Montgomery v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 14 Bush, 51.	506	Newcomb v. Horton, 18 Wis. 566.	396
Mooneys v. State, 2 Yerg. 578.	134	New England Trust Co. v. Eaton, 140 Mass. 532, 54 Am. Rep. 493.	235
Moore v. Boner, 7 Bush, 28.	864	New Home Sewing Mach. Co. v. Bothane, 70 Mich. 443.	818
v. New York, 4 Sandf. 456.	386, 387	New London v. Brainard, 22 Conn. 532.	516
v. New York, 3 N. Y. 110, 59 Am. Dec. 473.	396	New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 25, 35 L. ed. 924.	789
Moorman v. Wood, 117 Ind. 144.	608	Newport & C. Bridge Co. v. Foote, 9 Bush, 244.	350
Moran v. Stewart, 122 Mo. 295.	750	New York Exchange Co. v. De Wolf, 31 N. Y. 273.	643
More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 15 L. R. A. 361.	376	New York L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Kane, 17 App. Div. 542.	235
Moreland v. Boston & P. R. Co. 141 Mass. 31.	518	Niles Twp. Highway Comrs. v. Martin, 4 Mich. 557.	61
Morey v. Brown, 42 N. H. 273.	665	Nix v. Winter, 35 Ala. 309.	630
v. Newfane, 8 Barb. 645.	61	Noble v. Meymott, 14 Beav. 471.	700
Morgan v. Pickard, 86 Tenn. 208.	134	Nord Deutscher Lloyd S. S. Co. v. Ingenieurbreite, 57 N. J. L. 400.	834
Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Texas C. R. Co. 137 U. S. 171, 34 L. ed. 625.	625	Norfleet v. Hawkins, 93 N. C. 392.	700
Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925.	577	Norman v. Kentucky Bd. of Managers of World's Columbian Exposition, 98 Ky. 537, 13 L. R. A. 556.	516
Morrill v. Morrill, 11 L. R. A. 157, 20 Or. 96.	463	Norris v. Waco, 37 Tex. 635.	608
Morris v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 45 Iowa, 29.	402	North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Williams, 140 Ill. 275.	152
v. Penniman, 14 Gray, 220, 74 Am. Dec. 675.	188	Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336.	54
v. Platt, 32 Conn. 75.	358	North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & L. Assn. v. First Nat. Bank, 79 Wis. 31, 11 L. R. A. 845.	567
v. Strobel & W. Co. 81 Hun, 1.	502	Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Barbour, 92 Ky. 429, 15 L. R. A. 449.	505, 506
v. Switzerland County Comrs. 131 Ind. 285.	61, 62	Norton v. Sewall, 106 Mass. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 298.	608
Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co. 68 Pa. 173, 8 Am. Rep. 159.	300, 376	Norway Plains Co. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 1 Gray, 273, 61 Am. Dec. 423.	302
Morse v. Home Ins. Co. 30 Wis. 496, 11 Am. Rep. 580.	596	Nudd v. Powers, 136 Mass. 273.	510
v. Hutchins, 102 Mass. 439.	647	Nugent v. Smith, L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 420.	432
v. Shaw, 124 Mass. 59.	646	v. Wolfe, 111 Pa. 471, 56 Am. Rep. 291.	382, 383
Moses v. Boston & M. R. Co. 24 N. H. 71, 55 Am. Dec. 222.	432	Nysewander v. Towman, 124 Ind. 584.	647
Moss's Appeal, 83 Pa. 264, 24 Am. Rep. 164.	236
Mower v. Leicester, 9 Mass. 247, 6 Am. Dec. 63.	53
Moyer v. Preston (Wyo.) 44 Pac. 845.	110
Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205.	267, 358
Mulcairns v. Janesville, 67 Wis. 24.	502
Muldooon v. Crawford, 14 Bush, 125.	507
Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 35.	490, 481
Munns v. Dupont, 3 Wash. C. C. 31, 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 5th ed. 279.	417
Munnerlyn v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 88 Ga. 333.	88
Murphy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 38 Iowa, 542.	401
Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 59 U. S. 18 How. 272, 15 L. ed. 372.	800
v. Jennings, 42 Conn. 9, 19 Am. Rep. 527.	647
v. Reed, 17 Wash. 1, 48 Pac. 843.	476
Musgrave v. Morrison, 54 Md. 166.	814
Mussey v. Scott, 32 Vt. 82.	414
Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Bratt, 53 Md. 200.	324
Myers v. State, 46 Ohio St. 473.	697

N

Nash v. Towne, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 689, 18 L. ed. 527.	478
National Bank v. Carolina, K. & W. R. Co. 63 Fed. Rep. 25.	633
v. Cunningham, 75 Ga. 366.	278
v. Indiana Bkg. Co. 114 Ill. 483.	481
National Ben. Assn. v. Grauman, 107 Ind. 288.	830, 833
National Exch. Bank v. Wilder, 34 Minn. 149.	729, 731
39 L. R. A.

Onkes, Re (Mass.) 8 Law. Rep. 122.	359
O'Brien v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 76 N. Y. 459.	438
v. State, 63 Ind. 242.	282
O'Connell v. People, 87 N. Y. 377, 41 Am. Rep. 379.	741
Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat, 213, 6 L. ed. 606.	576, 577
Ogden City R. Co. v. Ogden City, 7 Utah. 207.	753
Oil Creek & A. R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Transp. Co. 83 Pa. 160.	567
Oldham v. Broom, 28 Ohio St. 41.	383
Olivet v. Whitworth, 82 Md. 262.	909
Omaha v. Kramer, 25 Neb. 489.	758, 760
Omaha & N. P. R. Co. v. Janacek, 30 Neb. 276.	758, 760
O'Neill v. American F. Ins. Co. 166 Pa. 72, 26 L. R. A. 715.	155
Opinion of the Judges, 30 Conn. 593.	796, 799
Opinion of the Justices, 115 Mass. 602.	711, 773
Orton v. Butler, 2 Chitty, 343.	845
Orvis v. Dea Molnes Park Comrs. 88 Iowa. 674.	291
Osborne v. State, Michaels, 128 Ind. 129.	281
O'Shea v. Wilkinson, 95 Cal. 454.	691
Oshkosh Pkg. & Provision Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 200.	820

Oyon's Succession, 6 Rob. (La.) 504, 41 Am. Dec. 274.....	175	People v. McCann, 16 N. Y. 58, 69 Am. Dec. 642.....	741
P.		v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 386, 52 Am. Rep. 34.....	267
Pacific Nat. Bank v. Windram, 133 Mass. 175.....	810	v. Murray, 5 Hill, 468.....	568
Page v. Mille Lacs Lumber Co. 53 Minn. 490.....	499	v. North River Sugar-Ref. Co. 121 N. Y. 592, 9 L. R. A. 83.....	377
v. Parker, 43 N. H. 363, 80 Am. Dec. 172.....	647	v. Queens County Supers. 142 N. Y. 571.....	54
Painter v. Ives, 4 Neb. 122.....	417	v. Rensselaer & S. R. Co. 15 Wend. 113, 30 Am. Dec. 39.....	54
Palatine v. Kreuger, 121 Ill. 74.....	723	v. Runkle, 8 Johns. 468.....	416
Paltrovitch v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 143 N. Y. 73, 25 L. R. A. 198.....	496	v. St. Clair County Officers, 15 Mich. 85.....	69
Paris v. Paris, 10 Ves. Jr. 184.....	235	v. Scott, 58 Mich. 154.....	304
Parker v. Gerard, 1 Ambl. 236.....	217	v. Stratton, 25 Cal. 242.....	594
v. Lewis, 2 Dev. L. 21.....	507	v. Treadwell, 96 Cal. 400.....	859
v. Moulton, 114 Mass. 99, 19 Am. Rep. 815.....	646	v. Wheeler, 60 Cal. 581, 44 Am. Rep. 70.....	324
v. Saratoga County Supers. 106 N. Y. 392.....	437	v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 196, 16 Am. Rep. 523.....	199
Parkersburg Industrial Co. v. Schultz, 43 W. Va. 27, S. E. 255.....	502	People, ex. rel. Ahrens v. English, 149 Ill. 622, 15 L. R. A. 131.....	772
Parks v. Wyandotte County Comrs. 61 Fed. Rep. 436.....	288	Board of Water Comrs., v. East Saginaw, 33 Mich. 164.....	515
Partridge v. Cavender, 96 Mo. 452.....	808	Brinkerhoff, v. Nelson, 18 Johns. 340.....	417
Parvin v. Winberg, 130 Ind. 561, 15 L. R. A. 775.....	391	Buffalo & S. L. R. Co., v. Barker, 48 N. Y. 70.....	239
Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238.....	344	Cornell University, v. Davenport, 30 Hun. 177.....	235
Patch v. White, 117 U. S. 219, 29 L. ed. 865.....	690	Dunham, v. Morgan, 90 Ill. 558.....	288
Patterson v. Graham, 140 Ill. 531.....	158	Gere, v. Gosper, 3 Neb. 310.....	517
v. Lawrence, 83 Ga. 703, 7 L. R. A. 143.....	709	Gre, v. Medical Soc. of Erie County, 24 Barb. 570.....	376
v. Patterson, 59 N. Y. 585, 17 Am. Rep. 384.....	688	Griffin, v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 286.....	176
Patton v. State, 93 Ga. 111.....	709	Herdman, v. Rose, 166 Ill. 422.....	200
Paul v. Davis, 100 Ind. 422.....	72, 73, 74	Hubbard, v. Springwells Twp. Board, 25 Mich. 153.....	289
v. Grimm, 165 Pa. 139.....	532	Kelly, v. Brooklyn, 77 N. Y. 503, 33 Am. Rep. 659.....	280
v. Virginia, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357.....	566	Le Roy, v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103.....	289
Paulus v. Latta, 93 Ind. 34.....	389	Longress, v. Quincy Bd. of Edu. 101 Ill. 309, 40 Am. Rep. 196.....	156
Payler v. Homersham, 4 Maule & S. 423.....	248	McCagg, v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 278.....	287
Payne v. Payne, 18 Cal. 291.....	690	McEwan, v. Keeler, 29 Hun. 175.....	201
Pease v. Dwight, 47 U. S. 9 How. 190, 12 L. ed. 399.....	854	Manhattan R. Co., v. Barker, 146 N. Y. 313.....	239
Peavy v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 81 Ga. 485.....	787	Panama R. Co., v. New York Tax Comrs. 104 N. Y. 240.....	239
Peck v. Culberson, 104 N. C. 426.....	84	Park Comrs., v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202.....	239
v. State, 86 Tenn. 282.....	182	Peabody, v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 130 Ill. 268, 8 L. R. A. 497.....	482
Peckham v. Newton, 15 R. I. 322.....	235	Reynolds, v. Buffalo, 140 N. Y. 307.....	576
v. North Parish in Haverhill, 16 Pick. 274.....	512	Ricks Water Co., v. Elk River Mill & L. Co. 107 Cal. 219.....	593
Peklin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 27 L. R. A. 206.....	114	Society of New York Hospital, v. Purdy, 126 N. Y. 679, 58 Hun. 396.....	45
v. Winkel, 77 Ill. 56.....	758	Woodratt, v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451.....	125
Peltier v. Bradley, D. & C. Co. 67 Conn. 42, 32 L. R. A. 651.....	196	Peoria & O. R. Co. v. Neill, 16 Ill. 271.....	248
Peltz v. Elchele, 62 Mo. 171.....	470	Perry v. Grant, 10 R. I. 384.....	84
Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 188, 31 L. ed. 653, 2 Intern. Com. Rep. 24.....	246	Phelan v. Boylan, 25 Wis. 679.....	714
Penley v. Waterhouse, 3 Iowa. 418.....	736	Philadelphia & P. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania (State Freight Tax), 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 232, 21 L. ed. 146.....	367
Pennegar v. State, 87 Tenn. 244, 2 L. R. A. 703.....	542	Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Anderson (Md.) 20 Am. St. Rep. 493.....	502
Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Montgomery County Pass. R. Co. 167 Pa. 62, 27 L. R. A. 766.....	757	v. Howard, 54 U. S. 13 How. 336, 14 L. ed. 169.....	97
v. Ralordon, 119 Pa. 577.....	536	Philbrook v. Delano, 29 Me. 410.....	84
People v. Ackerman, 80 Mich. 588.....	219	Phillips v. Berger, 2 Barb. 608.....	243
v. Angsbury, 97 N. Y. 501.....	338	Philmath College v. Hartless, 6 Or. 153, 25 Am. Rep. 611.....	641
v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277.....	273	Phoenix Nat. Bank v. Batcheller, 151 Mass. 589, 8 L. R. A. 644.....	578
v. Bell, 40 Cal. 485.....	742	Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Public Parks Amusement Co. 63 Ark. 187.....	793
v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 15, 5 L. R. A. 559.....	745	Pickett v. State, 99 Ga. 12.....	274
v. Cipperry, 101 N. Y. 634.....	142	Pidcock v. Potter, 68 Pa. 342, 8 Am. Rep. 181.....	333
v. Coffman, 24 Cal. 230.....	260	Pile v. Pile, 94 Ky. 308.....	408
v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 388.....	304	Pindar v. Kings County F. Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 643, 93 Am. Dec. 544.....	791
v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179.....	697	Pittsburg & S. Coal Co. v. Bates, 156 U. S. 877, 39 L. ed. 539.....	600
v. Equitable Trust Co. 96 N. Y. 387.....	176	Pittsburg Carbon Co. v. McMillin, 119 N. Y. 46, 7 L. R. A. 46.....	300
v. Fisher, 14 Wend. 9, 28 Am. Dec. 501.....	376	Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 38 L. ed. 1031.....	239
v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9, 97 Am. Dec. 162.....	741
v. Gold Run Ditch & Min. Co. 86 Cal. 138, 56 Am. Rep. 80.....	594
v. Harrington, 42 Cal. 165, 10 Am. Rep. 296.....	826
v. Hubbard, 24 Wend. 399, 35 Am. Dec. 628.....	167
v. King, 2 Cal. 98.....	416
v. Lake, 12 N. Y. 358.....	317
v. Leonard, 11 Johns. 508.....	417
v. Lewis, 86 Mich. 273.....	558
v. Long Island R. Co. 134 N. Y. 506.....	805

Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Reich, 101 Ill. 157.	351	Reg. v. Coghlan, 4 Post. & F. 318.	738
Planters' Bank v. Bank of Alexandria, 10 Gill & J. 348.	813	v. Taylor, 13 Cox, C. C. 77.	323
v. Sharp, 47 U. S. 6 How. 301, 12 L. ed. 447.	575	Regents of the University v. Williams, 9 Gill & J. 428, 31 Am. Dec. 72.	812
Plummer v. Yost, 144 Ill. 68, 19 L. R. A. 110.	771	Reid v. Safe Deposit & T. Co. 88 Md. 464, 38 Atl. 899.	810
Poe v. State, 85 Tenn. 495.	138	Reifsnnyder v. Lee, 44 Iowa, 102, 24 Am. Rep. 733.	168
Poland v. Lamolille Valley R. Co. 52 Vt. 144.	625	Reinders v. Koppelman, 68 Mo. 482, 30 Am. Rep. 802.	750
Poling v. Ohio River R. Co. 38 W. Va. 645, 24 L. R. 215.	500	Reining v. Buffalo, 102 N. Y. 388.	438
Pollock, Re, 3 Redf. 100.	235	Reithmiller v. People, 44 Mich. 280.	219
Pomeroy v. Willway, L. R. 42 Ch. Div. 510.	710	Republic v. Sparhawk, 1 U. S. 1 Dail. 357, 1 L. 174.	858
Pope v. Hanke, 155 Ill. 617, 28 L. R. A. 568.	836	Rex v. Gourlay, 7 Barn. & C. 689.	861
v. Phifer, 3 Helsk. 682.	143	v. Oxfordshire, 18 East, 223.	235
v. Terre Haute Car & Mfg. Co. 87 N. Y. 137.	550	Reynal v. Thebaud, 3 Misc. 187.	804
Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410.	708	Rice v. State, 16 Ind. 298.	549
v. Edmunds, 24 N. Y. 307.	438	v. Stevens, 9 Wash. 298.	708
v. Kingsbury, 71 N. Y. 588.	438	Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. Jr. 369.	517
Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 252.	176	Richard v. Clayton County Comrs. 40 Neb. 51.	617
Postmaster General v. Early, 25 U. S. 12.	279	Richards v. Arms Shingle & Lumber Co. 74 Mich. 57.	84
Wheat, 136, 6 L. ed. 577.	279	v. Chambers, 10 Ves. Jr. 580.	707
v. Furber, 4 Mason, 333.	279	v. Chicago, 1st P. & K. C. R. Co. 81, Iowa, 430.	402
Postal Tele. Cable Co. v. Adams, 155 U. S. 689, 39 L. ed. 312.	694	Richardson v. Anderson, (Tex. App.) 18 S. W. 195.	168
Potter v. Brown, 35 Mich. 274.	383	v. Parker, 2 Swan, 529.	688
v. Wheeler, 13 Mass. 504.	217	v. Pitts, 71 Mo. 128.	364
Potts v. Henderson, 2 Ind. 327.	68, 69	v. Schultz, 98 Ind. 429.	595
Powder River Cattle Co. v. Johnson County Comrs. 3 Wyo. 598, 604, 605, 127 U. S. 686, 32 L. ed. 267.	606	Richardson County v. Miles, 14 Neb. 811.	517
v. Waters, 17 Johns. 176.	268	Richelleu Hotel Co. v. International Military Encampment Co. 140 Ill. 248.	641
Pratt v. Allen, 13 Conn. 124.	854	Rickerson v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 807.	436
Presbrey v. Presbrey, 13 Allen, 281.	797	Riddle v. Proprietors of Locks & Canals, 7 Mass. 169, 5 Am. Dec. 35.	53
Preston v. Whitney, 23 Mich. 262.	518	Rider Life Raft Co. v. Roach, 97 N. Y. 878.	567
Prevost v. Greenaux, 60 U. S. 19 How. 1, 15 L. ed. 572.	176	Riele v. Eiting, 89 Iowa, 88, 26 L. R. A. 709.	499
Prime, Re, 138 N. Y. 847, 18 L. R. A. 713.	137	Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 487.	236
Prince v. State, 7 Humph. 137.	254	Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64, 348, 350, 351, 758.	758
Pritchitt v. Nashville Trust Co. 96 Tenn. 472, 33 L. R. A. 866.	237	v. Tacoma Light & W. Co. 9 Wash. 576, 26 L. R. A. 425.	109
Prouty v. Stover, 11 Kan. 225.	289	Rinear v. Grand Rapids, & I. R. Co. 70 Mich. 620.	407
Pryor v. Foster, 130 N. Y. 171.	640	Ripple v. Gilborn, 8 How. Pr. 456.	896
Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 148 Ill. 242.	114	Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79.	123
Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 30, 35 L. ed. 619, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595.	602	River Rendering Co. v. Behr, 77 Mo. 91, 46 Am. Rep. 6.	557
Pupke v. Resolute F. Ins. Co. 17 Wis. 879, 84 Am. Dec. 764.	148	Rivers v. Rivers, 60 Iowa, 373, 65 Iowa, 508.	860
Purdy v. Hall, 134 Ill. 298.	114	Rixford v. Smith, 52 N. H. 855, 18 Am. Rep. 42.	432
Putnam v. Putnam, 3 Pick. 483.	544	Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 459, 30 L. ed. 694.	486
Q.		Robert v. Sadler, 104 N. Y. 229, 58 Am. Rep. 498.	724
Quantock v. England, 5 Burr. 2630.	736	Roberts v. Austin, 5 Whart. 318.	477
Queen v. Crouch, 1 Cox, C. C. 94.	322	v. People, 19 Mich. 401.	266
R.		v. Sampson, 50 Neb. 745.	760
Raht v. Attrill, 106 N. Y. 423, 60 Am. Rep. 456.	634	v. Shroyer, 68 Ind. 64.	899
Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 82, 17 L. R. A. 830.	246	Robidoux v. Casselegg, 81 Mo. 459.	751
Rand v. Hubbell, 115 Mass. 461, 15 Am. Rep. 121.	236	Robinson, Ex parte, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 512, 22 L. ed. 208.	460
Rank v. Hanna, 6 Ind. 20.	395	v. Howard, 7 Cush. 258.	707
Ratterman v. State, 44 Ohio St. 641.	603	v. Welty, 40 W. Va. 385.	168
Rawlins v. Fuller, 81 Ind. 255.	476	Robson v. Alexander, 1 Moore & P. 448.	270
Rawson v. Copland, 3 Barb. Ch. 166.	688	Rockhill v. Nelson, 24 Ind. 422.	72
Raymond v. Fish, 51 Conn. 80, 50 Am. Rep. 3.	859	Roland Park Co. v. State, 80 Md. 448.	812
Read v. Nash, 1 Wils. 805.	882	Rose, Re, 66 Cal. 241.	691

Russell v. Tuttle, 2 Root, 22.....	648	Sheldon v. Congregational Parish in
v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 3 Dak. 315..	466	Easton, 24 Pick. 281.....	512
Ryan v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 65 Tex.		Shell v. Duncan, 31 S. C. 547, 5 L. R. A.
13, 37 Am. Rep. 580.....	257	821.....	395
S.		Shelton v. State, 96 Tenn. 521.....	135
Saint Joseph Hydraulic Co. v. Wilson, 133		Shepardson v. Cary, 29 Wis. 42.....	729, 730, 732
Ind. 465.....	730, 732,	Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330, 23 L. ed.
St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165	733	424.....	111
U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 611.....	246	Shilds v. State, 104 Ala. 35.....	271
St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Gay, 101 Cal. 286..	688	Shirley v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 36 S. W.
St. Paul v. Gildillan, 36 Minn. 298.....	558	207.....	338, 339
Sampeyreac v. United States, 32 U. S. 7		Shook v. Vanmarter, 22 Wis. 532.....	383
Pet. 222, 8 L. ed. 605.....	98	Shortridge, Re, 99 Cal. 526, 21 L. R. A.
Samuel v. People, 164 Ill. 385.....	122	755.....	693, 697
San Antonio Rapid Transit Street R. Co.		Shrader, Ex parte, 33 Cal. 279.....	359
v. Limburger, 30 S. W. 533.....	755	Stebert v. People, 143 Ill. 571.....	271
Sanders v. State, 74 Ga. 85.....	274	Stebold, Ex parte, 100 U. S. 393, 25 L. ed.
v. Yonkers, 63 N. Y. 491.....	714	725.....	799, 800
Sandford v. Sandford, 62 N. Y. 553.....	34, 35	Silvus v. State, 22 Ohio St. 90.....	745
Saner v. Hilton, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 815.....	248	Simar v. Canaday, 53 N. Y. 298, 13 Am.
Saunders v. Moore, 14 Bush, 97.....	404	Rep. 523.....	396
v. Richard, 35 Fla. 28.....	707	Simmons v. Chicago & T. R. Co. 110 Ill.
Sawrie v. Tennessee, 82 Fed. Rep. 615.....	487	340.....	114
Scalfe v. Farrant, L. R. 10 Exch. 358.....	432	v. Chicago & T. R. Co. 110 Ill. 346.....	152
Scales v. Chattahoochee County, 41 Ga.		v. New Bedford, V. & N. S. B. Co.
225.....	61	97 Mass. 361, 93 Am. Dec. 99.....	164
Scarry v. Bennett, 2 Ind. App. 167.....	732	Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. 637.....	236
Schafer v. Eneu, 54 Pa. 304.....	751	v. Munde, 3 Kan. 172.....	84
Schissel v. Dickson, 129 Ind. 139.....	396	Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L.
Schley v. McCeney, 38 Md. 206.....	709	ed. 496.....	800
Schmidt v. People, 18 Colo. 78.....	367	Sinsheimer v. Whitely, 111 Cal. 378.....	720, 731
Schneekloth v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co.		Sigler v. Cleveland, 3 Ohio N. P. 119.....	558
(Mich.) 65 N. W. 663.....	407	Sire v. St. Louis, 22 Mo. 206.....	392
Schneider v. Williams, 44 N. J. Eq. 391.....	213	Sisson v. Hill, 18 R. I. 212, 21 L. R. A.
Schofield v. Shiffer, 156 Pa. 65.....	581	207.....	581
Scholey v. Rew, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 331, 23		Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U. S. 16 Wall.
L. ed. 99.....	174	30, 21 L. ed. 304.....	246
Schofield v. Earl of Londesborough [1896]		Sloane v. Shiffer, 156 Pa. 59.....	581
A. C. 514.....	700	Small v. Smith, 1 Denio, 583.....	476
Schouler, Re, 134 Mass. 426.....	209	Skiles v. Houston, 110 Pa. 255.....	688
Schumaker v. State, 5 Wis. 324.....	304	Skinner v. Franklin County, 9 U. S. App.
Schwarz v. San Francisco City & County		676, 6 C. C. A. 120, 56 Fed. Rep.
Super. Ct. 111 Cal. 112.....	694	873.....	301
Scott v. Central Park, N. & E. River R.		v. Santa Rosa, 107 Cal. 465, 29 L. R.
Co. 53 Hun, 414.....	788	A. 512.....	447, 448
v. Duffy, 14 Pa. 18.....	837	Smith v. Accident Ins. Co. L. R. 5 Exch.
v. Hough, 151 Pa. 630.....	818	302.....	830, 832
v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 3		v. Allen County Comrs. 131 Ind. 116
Hurlst. & C. 506.....	502	v. Bolles, 132 U. S. 125, 33 L. ed.
v. Simons, 54 N. H. 426.....	158	281.....	647
v. State, 39 Ga. 321.....	544	v. Carlton County Comrs. 46 Fed.
Seanor v. McLaughlin, 165 Pa. 150, 32 L.		Rep. 340.....	61
R. A. 467.....	818	v. Chenault, 48 Tex. 455.....	365
Second Nat. Bank v. O. E. Merrill Co. 69		v. Chicago, A. & St. L. R. Co. 67 Ill.
Wis. 501.....	371, 372	192.....	724
Seehy v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 94 Mo.		v. City R. Co. 29 Or. 539.....	518
574.....	351	v. Delaney, 64 Conn. 264.....	383
Selbert v. Milligan, 110 Ind. 106.....	733	v. McLaughlin, 77 Ill. 596.....	121
Selbert's Appeal, 18 W. N. C. 276.....	209	v. Moore, 90 Ind. 294.....	891
Semmes v. City F. Ins. Co. 90 U. S. 13		v. New Haven & N. R. Co. 12 Allen,
Wall. 158, 20 L. ed. 490.....	436	531, 90 Am. Dec. 166.....	432
Sentell v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 166 U.		v. Northern P. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com.
S. 698, 41 L. ed. 1160.....	665, 666	Rep. 208.....	277
Seton v. Lafone, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 68.....	642	v. Omans, 17 Wis. 395.....	260
Seventh Nat. Bank v. Shenandoah Iron Co.		v. Reeder, 21 Or. 541, 15 L. R. A. 172.
35 Fed. Rep. 436.....	634	v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 506.....	44
Sexton v. Brock, 15 Ark. 345.....	418	v. Silver Valley Min. Co. 64 Md. 94,
Seybolt v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co.		54 Am. Rep. 760.....	814
95 N. Y. 562, 47 Am. Rep. 75.....	502	v. State, 54 Ark. 248.....	487
Seyk v. Millers' Nat. Ins. Co. 74 Wis. 72,		v. State, 88 Ga. 628.....	273
3 L. R. A. 523.....	820	v. State, 66 Md. 218.....	248
Seymour v. Fellows, 77 N. Y. 178.....	317	v. Towers, 69 Md. 77.....	807, 808, 810
Shaffer v. Lacock, 168 Pa. 497, 29 L. R. A.		Smith's Appeal, 65 Conn. 135.....	685, 800, 801
254.....	502	Snell v. Methodist Episcopal Church Soc.
Shanks v. Whitney, 66 Vt. 405.....	646, 647	58 Ill. 250.....	643
Sharkey v. McDermott, 91 Mo. 647, 60 Am.		So Relle v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 55 Tex.
Rep. 270.....	750	308, 40 Am. Rep. 805.....	466, 467
v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. 101.....	748	Souter v. Codman, 14 R. I. 119, 51 Am.
Sharp v. Milligan, 23 Beav. 419.....	371	Rep. 364.....	412
Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 150, 59		Southern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Montague, 84
Am. Dec. 759.....	515	Ky. 653.....	506
Shaw v. Cordis, 143 Mass. 443.....	235	Sparks v. National Masonic Accl. Asso.
v. Craft, 37 Fed. Rep. 317.....	709	100 Iowa, 458.....	566
v. Hoffman, 25 Mich. 162.....	412	Spellman v. Lincoln Rapid Transit Co. 36
Shawmut Nat. Bank v. Boston, 118 Mass.		Neb. 890, 20 L. R. A. 316.....	164
125.....	158	Spies, Re, 123 U. S. 131, 31 L. ed. 80.....	272
Shawneetown v. Mason, 82 Ill. 337, 25 Am.		Spokes v. Banbury Bd. of Health, L. R. 1
Rep. 321.....	756, 760	Eq. 42.....	461
Shearer v. State, 7 Blackf. 99.....	281	Sprague v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 68
Shelby County v. Tennessee Centennial		Conn. 345, 37 L. R. A. 638.....	196
Exposition Co. 96 Tenn. 653, 33 L.		Spring v. Gray, 5 Mason, 523.....	736
R. A. 717.....	516	Sproule v. Bouch, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 638.....	237
Shelden v. Robinson, 7 N. H. 157, 26 Am.		Stack v. East St. Louis, 85 Ill. 377, 28 Am.
Dec. 726.....	432	Rep. 610.....	756, 758, 760
39 L. R. A.

Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 715.....	830	832	State v. Snow, 117 N. C. 774.....	246
Stanton v. Allen, 5 Denio, 434, 49 Am. Dec. 282.....	376		v. Spaulding, 24 Kan. 1.....	862
Starchman v. State, 62 Ark. 538.....	271		v. Staten, 8 Coldw. 233.....	136
Starr v. Pease, 8 Conn. 547.....	796	797, 798,	v. Stovall, 103 N. C. 416.....	246
State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 674, 28 L. R. A. 178.....	174		v. Taylor, 34 La. Ann. 981.....	520
v. Atkinson, 40 S. C. 363.....	271,	272	v. Telpner, 30 Minn. 535.....	125
v. Babcock, 1 Conn. 401.....	304		v. Tuller, 34 Conn. 280.....	304
v. Bancroft, 22 Kan. 170.....	862		v. Tweedy, 115 N. C. 704.....	245
v. Bank of Tennessee, 3 Baxt. 395.....	134		v. United States & C. Exp. Co. 60 N. H. 219.....	432
v. Barringer, 110 N. C. 525.....	240		v. Vogel, 22 Wis. 471.....	304
v. Bartlett, 43 N. H. 224, 80 Am. Dec. 154.....	741		v. Wheelock, 95 Iowa, 577, 30 L. R. A. 429.....	488
v. Barton, 3 Humph. 13.....	134		v. Yardley, 95 Tenn. 550, 34 L. R. A. 656.....	138
v. Belvel, 89 Iowa, 405, 27 L. R. A. 846.....	304		State, ex rel. Adams, v. Burdge, 95 Wis. 390, 37 L. R. A. 157.....	135
v. Bishop, 128 Mo. 378, 29 L. R. A. 200.....	509,	510	Allison, v. Blake, 57 N. J. L. 6, 25 L. R. A. 480.....	771
v. Blackburn, 61 Ark. 407.....	134		Bloomstein, v. Sneed, 9 Baxt. 479.....	134
v. Buckner, 52 Ind. 278.....	282		Bulkeley, v. Williams, 68 Conn. 131 799, 803,	804
v. Buttz, 9 S. C. N. S. 156.....	281		Carter, v. Stevens, 29 Or. 464.....	772
v. Carpenter, 20 Ind. 219.....	282		Cochran, v. Winters, 44 Kan. 723, 10 L. R. A. 618.....	487
v. Chapman, 1 S. D. 414, 10 L. R. A. 432.....	487		Coughlan, v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 24 Md. 102, 87 Am. Dec. 600.....	163
v. Conlon, 65 Conn. 478, 31 L. R. A. 53.....	799		Covenant Mut. Ben. Asso., v. Root, 83 Wis. 667, 19 L. R. A. 271.....	566
v. Coonan, 82 Iowa, 400, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 670.....	487		Crosby, v. Cones, 15 Neb. 444.....	771
v. Crawford, 11 Kan. 32.....	741		Cummings, v. Cass, 52 N. J. L. 77.....	648
v. Dairymple, 70 Md. 294, 3 L. R. A. 372.....	173		Custer County Agri. Soc. & Live Stock Exchange, v. Robinson, 35 Neb. 401.....	516
v. Davis, 80 N. C. 412.....	304		Curtis, v. Topeka, 36 Kan. 78.....	665
v. De Gress, 53 Tex. 387.....	281		De Buys, v. Orleans Civil Dist. Ct. Judges, 32 La. Ann. 1256.....	694
v. Duket, 90 Wis. 272, 31 L. R. A. 515.....	860		Detmold, v. Engle, 34 N. J. L. 425.....	599
v. Fisher, 2 Nott & M'C. 281.....	304		Drake, v. Doyle, 40 Wis. 175, 22 Am. Rep. 692.....	566
v. Flynn, 36 N. H. 64.....	271		Drummond, v. Dillon, 125 Ind. 65.....	283
v. Franklin Falls Co. 49 N. H. 240, 6 Am. Rep. 513.....	593		Elkin, v. Deshler, 23 N. J. L. 177.....	771
v. Frew, 24 W. Va. 416, 49 Am. Rep. 237.....	697		Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., v. Moore, 48 Neb. 870.....	517
v. Giles, 125 Ind. 124.....	709		Gage County, v. Benton, 33 Neb. 834.....	517
v. Goetz (W. Va.) 27 S. E. 225.....	487		Gelpl. v. Orleans Bd. of Assessors, 46 La. Ann. 145.....	487
v. Gorham, 37 Me. 451.....	61		Hahn, v. Young, 20 Minn. 476.....	155
v. Griswold, 67 Conn. 290, 33 L. R. A. 227.....	271		Holt, v. Denny, 118 Ind. 440, 4 L. R. A. 65.....	62
v. Groome, 10 Iowa, 308.....	303,	304	J. J. v. Kilroy, 86 Ind. 118.....	283
v. Guarrel, 2 Bay, 150, 1 Am. Dec. 637.....	304		Kennedy, v. Brunst, 26 Wis. 412, 7 Am. Rep. 84.....	143,
v. Gut, 13 Minn. 341.....	742		Kimball, v. Hendee, 57 N. J. L. 307.....	771
v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 169.....	213,	510	Laskey, v. Perrysburg Bd. of Edu. 35 Ohio St. 510.....	470
v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 25 L. R. A. 632.....	174		Mann, v. Anderson, 26 Neb. 517.....	516
v. Hayden, 51 Vt. 296.....	338		Merrick, v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct. 33 Minn. 235.....	289
v. Hinkle, 27 Kan. 308.....	304		Metcalf, v. Goff, 15 R. I. 508.....	280
v. Hudson County, 30 N. J. L. 137.....	61		Morrell, v. Finkle, 3 Lea, 81.....	132
v. Jones, 64 Iowa, 349.....	742,	744	Pennsylvania R. Co., v. Jersey City, 47 N. J. L. 288.....	616
v. Jones, 50 N. H. 369, 9 Am. Rep. 242.....	741		Priest, v. Regents of Wisconsin Uni- versity, 54 Wis. 159.....	567
v. Joyner, 81 N. C. 534.....	246		Schwartz, v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 314, 30 L. R. A. 218.....	174
v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa, 578, 33 Am. Rep. 148.....	303		Seward County, v. Benton, 33 Neb. 823.....	517
v. Kennedy, 76 N. C. 251, 22 Am. Rep. 680.....	544		Walker, v. Bus, 125 Mo. 325, 33 L. R. A. 618.....	280
v. Kilinger, 46 Mo. 224.....	338		Whitall, v. Gloucester County Chosen Freeholders, 40 N. J. L. 302.....	61
v. Kring, 64 Mo. 591.....	826		Williams, v. Edwards, 114 Ind. 581.....	284
v. Laramie County Comrs. (Wyo.) 83 Pac. 992.....	606		State Bd. of Agri. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 47 Ind. 407, 17 Am. Rep. 702.....	567, 729,
v. Lawrence, 57 Me. 574.....	742		State Nat. Bank v. Dodge, 124 U. S. 333, 31 L. ed. 458.....	88
v. McCoy, 34 Mo. 331, 86 Am. Dec. 121.....	742		v. Rielly, 124 Ill. 464.....	88
v. McDuffie, 34 N. H. 526, 69 Am. Dec. 516.....	709		Steausbl v. Blaire Nat. Bank, 11 Wash. 426.....	731
v. Miller, 80 Iowa, 638.....	487		Stearns v. Field, 90 N. Y. 640.....	317, 338,
v. Moore, 104 N. C. 714.....	246		Stenberg v. State, Keller, 50 Neb. 127.....	516
v. Nolan, 8 Rob. (La.) 517.....	640		Stengel v. Boyce, 143 Ind. 642.....	733
v. North, 27 Mo. 464.....	487		Stetson v. Day, 51 Me. 434.....	714
v. Odom, 93 Tenn. 446.....	134		Stevenson v. State, 65 Ind. 409.....	282
v. Old Town Bridge Corp. 85 Me. 17.....	639		Stewart v. Beck, 90 Ind. 458.....	731
v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 308, 12 Am. Rep. 200.....	741		v. Chadwick, 8 Iowa, 463.....	253
v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399, 6 Am. Rep. 533.....	741		v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 53 Md. 564.....	90
v. Pomeroy, 130 Mo. 489.....	271,	272	Stirn v. McQuade, 66 N. H. 403.....	578
v. Powers, 10 Or. 145.....	304		Stockfleth v. De Tastet, 4 Campb. 10.....	270
v. Rackley, 2 Blackf. 240.....	388		Stockton & V. R. Co. v. Stockton, 41 Cal. 147.....	515
v. Rauscher, 1 Lea. 97.....	130		Stockwell v. Hunter, 11 Met. 448, 45 Am. Dec. 220.....	158
v. Redemeler, 71 Mo. 173, 36 Am. Rep. 462.....	742
v. Roberts, 59 N. H. 256, 47 Am. Rep. 198.....	593
v. Shapleigh, 27 Me. 344.....	487
v. Smith, 13 Kan. 274.....	862
v. Smith, 11 Or. 205.....	820
v. Smyth, 14 R. I. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 344.....	209

Stolberg v. Ohnmacht, 50 Ill. 442.....	157	Thomas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 93	402
Stone v. Woodbury County, 51 Iowa, 522.....	606	Iowa, 248.....	383
Storms v. Stevens, 104 Ind. 46.....	388, 391	v. Cook, 8 Barn. & C. 728.....	381, 382, 383
Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146.....	757	v. Gregg, 78 Md. 545.....	237
Stoughton's Appeal, 38 Pa. 198.....	252, 2-6	v. Marshall, 10 Pick. 364.....	430
Stout v. Grant County Comrs. 107 Ind. 343.....	388, 391	v. Western Car Co. 149 U. S. 96, 37 L. ed. 603.....	633, 634
v. State, 91 Tenn. 405.....	135	v. Western Union Teleg. Co. 100 Mass. 156.....	502
Stowell v. Johnson, 7 Utah, 215.....	110	v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455.....	608
Strait v. National Harrow Co. 18 N. Y. Supp. 233.....	300	Thompson v. Catholic Cong. Soc. 5 Pick. 469.....	512
Strasser v. Moonells, 23 Jones & S. 197.....	213	v. McCorkle, 136 Ind. 484.....	389, 395
Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 80 Tenn. 407, 12 L. R. A. 70.....	132, 136, 144, 147	v. Noble, 3 Pittsb. 201.....	252
Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 151.....	173	v. Peck, 115 Ind. 512, 1 L. R. A. 201.....	581
Strong v. Bragg, 7 Blackf. 62.....	389	v. Perry, 2 Hill, Eq. 204, 29 Am. Dec. 68.....	708
Stuart v. Hayden, 36 U. S. App. 462, 18 C. C. A. 618, 72 Fed. Rep. 402.....	581	Thomson v. Davenport, 9 Barn. & C. 78.....	478
v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289.....	176	Thorne v. First Nat Bank, 37 Ohio St. 254.....	731, 733
v. People, 4 Ill. 305.....	199	Thorpe v. Tenem Ditch Co. 1 Wash. 566.....	109
v. Second Presby. Church, 84 Pa. 388.....	644	Thresher v. East London Water-Works Co. 2 Barn. & C. 608.....	371, 372
Sturges v. Croninshield, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. ed. 529.....	577	Tift v. Horton, 53 N. Y. 380, 18 Am. Rep. 537.....	714
v. Spofford, 52 Barb. 436.....	283	Tighe v. Morrison, 110 N. Y. 270, 5 L. R. A. 617.....	383
Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 541, 33 L. ed. 761.....	111	Tinker v. State, 96 Ala. 115.....	487
Suiter v. Park Nat. Bank, 35 Neb. 372.....	833	Tipplin v. Ward, 5 Or. 453.....	384
Sullivan v. Williams, 43 S. C. 489.....	853	Tisdale v. Minonk, 46 Ill. 9.....	157
Summerfield v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 87 Wis. 1.....	496	Titus v. Kyle, 10 Ohio St. 444.....	478
Summers v. Davless County Comrs. 103 Ind. 262, 53 Am. Rep. 512.....	62, 63	Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. v. Thompson, 48 Ill. App. 36.....	400
v. State, 5 Tex. App. 365, 32 Am. Rep. 573.....	125, 126	v. Woody, 15 Ind. App. 331.....	410
Sussex County Chosen Freeholders v. Strader, 18 N. J. L. 108, 35 Am. Rep. 530.....	61	Tomlinson v. Gill, 1 Amb. 330.....	382
Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Clark & F. 85.....	543	Toole v. Toole (N. Y.), 2 L. R. A. 465.....	398
Sutton v. Johnstone, 1 T. R. 511.....	417	Torrance v. McDougald, 12 Ga. 526.....	248
v. State, 90 Tenn. 698, 33 L. R. A. 589.....	132, 136	Tourgee v. Rose, 19 R. I. 432.....	774
Swartwort v. Michigan Air Line R. Co. 24 Mich. 393.....	814	Trade Auxiliary Co. v. Vickers, L. R. 16 Eq. 303.....	764
Sweetland v. Boston & A. R. Co. 102 Mass. 276.....	432	Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co. 144 Mass. 523, 69 Am. Rep. 113.....	359
Swift v. Williams, 68 Md. 287.....	88	Tramley v. Luteran, 6 N. M. 15.....	110
Swineford v. Franklin County, 78 Mo. 279.....	61	Trasher v. Everhart, 3 Gill & J. 244.....	836
Sword v. Low, 122 Ill. 487.....	714	Trask v. People, 151 Ill. 523.....	271
T.
Taggart v. Newport Street R. Co. 16 R. I. 668, 7 L. R. A. 205.....	753, 754	Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mellick, 27 U. S. App. 547, 65 Fed. Rep. 178, 12 C. C. A. 544, 27 L. R. A. 629.....	830
v. Western Maryland R. Co. 24 Md. 596, 89 Am. Dec. 760.....	813	v. Robbins, 27 U. S. App. 547, 65 Fed. Rep. 178, 27 L. R. A. 629, 12 C. C. A. 544.....	830, 833
Talbot v. Wilkins, 31 Ark. 411.....	643	Tribble v. Frame, 7 J. J. Marsh. 601, 23 Am. Dec. 439.....	863, 864
Tash v. Adams, 10 Cush. 252.....	516	v. Frame, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 187.....	864
Tatham v. Philadelphia, 11 Phila. 276.....	516	Trigally v. Memphis, 6 Coldw. 382.....	138
Taunton v. Taylor, 116 Mass. 254.....	359	Trinity College v. Hartford, 32 Conn. 466.....	802
Taylor v. Chandler, 9 Helsk. 360.....	138	Trippe v. Provident Fund Soc. 140 N. Y. 23, 22 L. R. A. 432.....	436
v. Eastman, 92 N. C. 601.....	708	Troy Conference Academy v. Nelson, 24 Vt. 189.....	641, 642
v. Moore, 47 Conn. 278.....	196	Trueman v. Tilden, 6 N. H. 202.....	507, 508
v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274.....	789	Trustees of Schools v. People, Van Allen, 87 Ill. 303, 29 Am. Rep. 55.....	156
v. Sample, 51 Ind. 423.....	396	Tucker v. Linger, 46 L. T. N. S. 894.....	252
Tebbe v. Smith, 108 Cal. 101, 29 L. R. A. 673.....	447	v. Raleigh, 75 N. C. 267.....	259
Tee v. Ferris, 2 Kay & J. 357.....	207	v. State, 2 Head. 556.....	134
Temple v. Scott, 3 Minn. 410.....	688	Tugman v. Chicago, 78 Ill. 405.....	155
Templeton v. Linn County, 22 Or. 313, 15 L. R. A. 730.....	61	Tullet v. Armstrong, 4 Myl. & C. 377.....	809, 810
Tennessee Boomstein v. Sneed, 96 U. S. 69, 24 L. ed. 610.....	575	Turner v. Althaus, 6 Neb. 54.....	515
Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Schaeffer, 5 Ind. App. 36.....	409	v. Baker, 30 Ark. 186.....	641, 644
Terre Haute & S. R. Co. v. Rodol, 89 Ind. 128, 46 Am. Rep. 166.....	724	v. Morgan, 8 Ves. Jr. 143.....	217
Terrill v. State, 74 Wis. 278.....	266	Turpin v. Remy, 3 Backf. 210.....	417
Terry, Ex parte, 123 U. S. 289, 32 L. ed. 405.....	463	Tweedy v. Urquhart, 30 Ga. 446.....	708
Texas & P. R. Co. v. Rosedale Street R. Co. 64 Tex. 80, 53 Am. Rep. 739.....	756, 760	Twenty-Third Street Baptist Church v. Cornell, 117 N. Y. 601, 6 L. R. A. 807.....	641
Thayer v. Boston, 19 Pick. 511, 31 Am. Dec. 157.....	81	Tyler v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 54 Fed. Rep. 634.....	467
Thellan v. Porter, 14 Lea. 626, 52 Am. Rep. 173.....	142	U.
Third Nat. Bank v. Lange, 51 Md. 138, 34 Am. Rep. 304.....	89	Ugla v. West End Street R. Co. 160 Mass. 351.....	502
Thirby v. Rainbow, 93 Mich. 164.....	818	Unger v. Leiter, 32 Ohio St. 210.....	392, 395
39 L. R. A.		Union Bank v. Oxford Comrs. 119 N. C. 214, 34 L. R. A. 487.....	440, 441, 442, 443, 444
		Union Mill & Min. Co. v. Danzberg, 2 Sawy. 450.....	111
		v. Ferris, 2 Sawy. 177.....	112
		Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 628, 25 L. ed. 190.....	567
		v. Oceana County Bank, 80 Ill. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 185.....	481

Union P. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 12 U. S. App. 541, 56 Fed. Rep. 988, 6 C. A. 206.	831	Walker v. Beal, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 743, 19 L. ed. 814.	708
Union Trust Co. v. Illinois Midland R. Co. 117 U. S. 434, 29 L. ed. 963.	625	v. Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 14, 8 Am. Rep. 24.	515
v. Souther, 107 U. S. 591, 27 L. ed. 488.	625	v. Manhattan Bank, 25 Fed. Rep. 255.	88
v. Trumbull, 137 Ill. 146.	731	v. Walker, 82 N. Y. 260.	461
United States v. Baker, 3 Ben. 68.	304	Wall, Ex parte, 107 U. S. 288, 27 L. ed. 562.	859
v. Le Baron, 60 U. S. 19 How. 73, 15 L. ed. 525.	279	Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 492.	98
v. One Hundred and Thirty-Two Packages of Spirituous Liquors & Wines, 40 U. S. App. 333, 22 C. C. A. 228, 76 Fed. Rep. 364.	487	v. Myers, 38 Fed. Rep. 184, 4 L. R. A. 171.	173
v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287.	173	Walston v. Nevlin, 128 U. S. 578, 32 L. ed. 544.	246
v. Ritchie, 58 U. S. 17 How. 525, 16 L. ed. 236.	805	Walter v. Florida Sav. Bank & R. E. Exchange, 20 Fla. 826.	365
v. Todd, 64 U. S. 13 How. 53, 14 L. ed. 47.	799	v. Hodge, 2 Swanst. 92.	708
United States, ex rel., Ranger, v. New Orleans, 98 U. S. 381, 25 L. ed. 225.	260	Walters, Re, 84 Hun, 467.	156
Southern Exp. Co. v. Memphis & L. R. Co. 6 Fed. Rep. 237.	461	Wampler v. State, Alexander (Ind.) 88 L. R. A. 820.	294
Wolf, v. New Orleans, 103 U. S. 358, 29 L. ed. 396.	261	Ward v. Hartford County, 12 Conn. 404.	61
United States, D. & N. O. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 16 Fed. Rep. 853.	461	v. Sackrider, 3 Cal. 263.	248
United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60.	830	Ware v. Gay, 11 Pick. 106.	501
Updike v. Wright, 81 Ill. 49.	288	v. United States, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 617, 18 L. ed. 389.	279
Urban v. Helmick, 15 Wash. 155.	736	Warner v. Baynes, 2 Amb. 589.	217
V.		v. People, 2 Denio, 272, 43 Am. Dec. 740.	143
Vall v. Reynolds, 118 N. Y. 297.	646	v. Rice, 66 Md. 436.	807, 808
Valpariso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416.	397	Warren v. Wagner, 75 Ala. 188, 51 Am. Rep. 446.	158
Van Amringe v. Morton, 4 Whart. 382, 34 Am. Dec. 517.	98, 99	Washburn v. Green (Richardson v. Green), 133 U. S. 30, 33 L. ed. 516.	733
Vanbebber v. Plunkett, 26 Or. 562, 27 L. R. A. 811.	384	Washington v. Nashville, 1 Swan 180.	142
Vanderbilt v. Adams, 7 Cow. 349.	358	Washington C. & A. Turnp. Co. v. Case, 80 Md. 45.	163
Vanderlip v. Grand Rapids, 73 Mich. 52, 23 L. R. A. 247.	347	Waterman v. Ressetter, 45 Ill. App. 155.	883
Vanderpool v. Gorman, 140 N. Y. 563, 24 L. R. A. 548.	257	Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315, 12 Am. Rep. 694.	267
Van Deusen v. New Comer, 40 Mich. 90.	359	Watkins v. Preston County Ct. 30 W. Va. 657.	61
Vandevender v. Moore, 146 Ind. 44.	386	Watriss v. First Nat. Bank, 124 Mass. 571, 26 Am. Rep. 694.	371, 373
Van Doren v. Olden, 19 N. J. Eq. 178, 97 Am. Dec. 630.	237	Wayman v. Southard, 23 U. S. 10 Wheat. 46, 6 L. ed. 263.	800
Van Horn v. State, Abbott, 46 Neb. 62.	517	Weaver v. Gregg, 6 Ohio St. 547, 67 Am. Dec. 353.	396
Van Steenburgh v. Thornton, 58 N. J. L. 160.	835	v. State, 24 Ohio St. 584.	745
Van Voorhis v. Brintnall, 86 N. Y. 18, 40 Am. Rep. 505.	544	Webb v. State, 9 Tex. App. 490.	742
Van Wormer v. Albany, 15 Wend. 262.	361	Webster v. Fitchburg R. Co. 161 Mass. 298, 24 L. R. A. 521.	150
Vaughan v. Porter, 16 Vt. 270.	248	Weener v. Brayton, 152 Mass. 101, 8 L. R. A. 640.	509
Vaughn v. McFadyen (Mich.) 68 N. W. 135.	818	Weet v. Brockport, 16 N. Y. 162.	56
Vermillion County Comrs. v. Chipps, 131 Ind. 56, 16 L. R. A. 228.	62	Weetjen v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 4 Hun, 529.	460
Verry v. Robinson, 25 Ind. 14, 87 Am. Dec. 346.	396	Weider v. Maddox, 66 Tex. 372, 59 Am. Rep. 617.	257
Vigo County Comrs. v. Dally, 132 Ind. 73.	61, 62, 63	Weismar v. Douglas, 64 N. Y. 91, 21 Am. Rep. 586.	515
Vigo Twp. v. Knox County Comrs. 111 Ind. 170.	65, 68	Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway, 8 Wend. 480, 24 Am. Dec. 51.	814
Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Howe, 52 Miss. 202.	519	Wells v. Gates, 18 Barb. 554.	864
Victorian R. Comrs. v. Conitas, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 22.	467	Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347.	367, 487
Vinsant v. Vinsant, 49 Iowa, 639.	860	Wenona Coal Co. v. Holmquist, 152 Ill. 581, 18 L. R. A. 215.	114
Vise v. Hamilton County, 19 Ill. 78.	124	Wentworth v. Farmington, 48 N. H. 207.	860
Vogel v. Melms, 31 Wis. 306, 11 Am. Rep. 608.	383	Werth v. Springfield, 78 Mo. 107.	348
Volght v. Wright, 141 U. S. 62, 35 L. ed. 638.	367	West v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 39 Kan. 93.	466
Von Baumbach v. Bade, 9 Wis. 569, 76 Am. Dec. 283.	576	Westbrook's Appeal, 57 Conn. 95.	804
Voorhees v. Carpenter, 127 Ind. 800.	733	West Cambridge v. Lexington, 1 Pick. 506, 11 Am. Dec. 231.	544
W.		Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143.	793
Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Locke, 112 Ind. 404.	503	Western Sav. Fund Soc. v. Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 175, 72 Am. Dec. 730, 31 Pa. 185.	842
Wadsworth v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 86 Tenn. 635.	466	Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 300, 45 Am. Rep. 480.	278
Wagner v. Varner, 50 Iowa, 534.	750	v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co. 3 McCrary, 130, 11 Fed. Rep. 1.	470
Walte's Case, 1 Leach, C. L. 36.	826	v. Davenport, 97 U. S. 372, 24 L. ed. 1049.	98
39 L. R. A.		v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510.	466
		v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748, 13 L. R. A. 859.	466
		v. State, Nelson, 82 Md. 293, 31 L. R. A. 572.	503
		v. Taggart, 163 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 49.	239
		v. Williams, 86 Va. 696, 8 L. R. A. 429.	757

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Wood, 13 U. S. App. 317, 57 Fed. Rep. 471, 6 C. C. A. 432, 21 L. R. A. 706.....	467	Willock v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 166 Pa. 164, 27 L. R. A. 228.....	536
Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202, 62 Am. Dec. 160.....	175	Wilson v. Mitchell, 101 Pa. 495.....	220
Westman v. Krummelde, 30 Minn. 313.....	477	v. Nance, 11 Humph. 180.....	365
Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 731.....	252	v. Patton, 87 N. C. 318.....	837
Weston v. Foster, 7 Met. 297.....	217	v. Wilson, 36 Cal. 451, 95 Am. Dec. 104.....	691
Wharton's Case, Yelv. 24.....	304	Wind v. Iler, 93 Iowa, 324, 27 L. R. A. 219.....	487
Wheeler's Appeal, 45 Conn. 313.....	796, 798, 799, 803	Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274, 23 L. ed. 914.....	462
v. Brady, 15 Kan. 26.....	771	Wing v. Glick, 56 Iowa, 473, 41 Am. Rep. 118.....	478
v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 82 N. Y. 543, 37 Am. Rep. 594.....	436, 438	Wingert v. Gordon, 60 Md. 106.....	809
v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 338.....	842	Winton v. Cornish, 5 Ohio, 477.....	153
White v. Bond County, 58 Ill. 297, 11 Am. Rep. 65.....	61	Wixon v. Newport, 13 R. I. 454, 43 Am. Rep. 35.....	62
v. Chowan County Comrs. 90 N. C. 437, 47 Am. Rep. 534.....	61	Wolfe v. Covington & L. R. Co. 15 B. Mon. 404.....	350
v. Colorado C. R. Co. 3 McCrary, 359.....	302	Womack v. McQuarry, 28 Ind. 103, 92 Am. Dec. 306.....	158
v. Solomon, 164 Mass. 516, 30 L. R. A. 537.....	818	Wood v. Little, 35 Me. 107.....	217
v. Sullivan County Comrs. 129 Ind. 396.....	62, 63	v. Guarantee Trust & S. D. Co. 128 U. S. 418, 32 L. ed. 472.....	633
Whitfield v. Longest, 6 Ired. L. 268.....	245	v. State, 130 Ind. 364.....	279
Whiting v. Johnson, 6 Gray, 246.....	417	v. Steele, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 80, 18 L. ed. 725.....	98, 890, 700
Whitlock v. Ledford, 82 Ky. 391.....	864	v. Tipton County, 7 Bart. 112, 32 Am. Rep. 561.....	61
Whitney v. Allaire, 1 N. Y. 305.....	648	v. Wood, L. R. 10 Eq. 220.....	708
v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. ed. 1050.....	475	Woodard v. Erlan, 14 Lea, 523.....	136
Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 63 N. Y. 62.....	567	Woodruff v. State, 66 Miss. 298.....	446
Whittemore v. Heckman, 2 Dem. 276.....	235	Woods v. Colfax County Comrs. 10 Neb. 55	261
Wilder v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 70 Mich. 382.....	407	Worley v. Slpe, 111 Ind. 238.....	390
Wildes v. Dudlow, L. R. 19 Eq. 198.....	382	Worrall v. Gheen, 39 Pa. 388.....	709
Wile v. Farmers' State Bank, 36 U. S. App. 165, 17 C. C. A. 25, 70 Fed. Rep. 138.....	301	Worth v. Patton, 5 Ind. App. 272.....	396
Wiley v. State, 52 Ind. 516.....	282	Wragg v. Comptroller General, 2 Desauss. Eq. 506.....	84
Wilkinson v. Rahrer (Re Rahrer), 140 U. S. 559, 35 L. ed. 576.....	486	Wright v. MacDonnell, 27 S. W. 1024.....	372
Wilkinson v. Leland, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 627, 7 L. ed. 542.....	799	v. People, 112 Ill. 540.....	121
v. Parish, 3 Paige, 653.....	394	v. People, 4 Neb. 407.....	741
Willard v. Ostrander, 51 Kan. 481.....	859	v. State, 3 Helsk. 256.....	133
v. Warren, 17 Wend. 257.....	412	v. Stinson, 16 Wash. 368.....	599, 603
Willard, 145 U. S. 118, 36 L. ed. 644.....	217	Wyandotte County Comrs. v. Abbott, 52 Kan. 148.....	288
Williams v. Bank of Michigan, 7 Wend. 539.....	814	Wyman v. Kimberly-Clark Co. 93 Wis. 554	596
v. City Electric Street R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 556.....	753	v. Wyman, 26 N. Y. 253.....	438
v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 13 Conn. 110.....	802	Y.
v. Hartford Ins. Co. 54 Cal. 450.....	820
v. McFadden, 23 Fla. 143.....	647	Yarnold v. Lawrence, 15 Kan. 126.....	483
v. Nashville, 80 Tenn. 488.....	132	Yates v. Lansing, 9 Johns. 415, 6 Am. Dec. 290.....	72
v. Outes, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 535.....	543, 544	v. Milwaukee, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 384.....	558
v. Rogan, 59 Tex. 438.....	641	Yenger v. Bluefield, 40 W. Va. 484.....	503
v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 39 S. W. 687.....	321, 334, 335, 336, 338	Yeates v. Allin, 2 Dana, 134.....	864
v. Vreeland, 29 N. J. Eq. 417.....	207	Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 371, 30 L. ed. 227.....	622
v. Williams, 4 Thomp. & C. 251.....	359	Yonkey v. State, Cornellison, 27 Ind. 236.....	280
Williams's Case, 5 Coke, 72a.....	499	Young v. Commissioners of Roads, 2 Nott & M' C. 537.....	61
Williamson v. Jones, 39 W. Va. 231, 25 L. R. A. 222.....	252, 296, 297	v. Grote, 4 Bing. 253.....	700
		v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C. 370, 9 L. R. A. 695.....	406
		Z.
		Zell v. Arnold, 2 Penn. & W. 292.....	846

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS CITED, CONSTRUED, ETC.

England.

Statutes.

2 Edw. III. chap. 3. Prohibiting force....	419	32 Hen. VIII. Power of distress.....	404
5 Rich. II. chap. 7. Forcible entry and detainer.....	419	5 Eliz. chap. 9. Witness fees.....	121
15 Rich. II. chap. 2. Forcible entry and detainer.....	419	31 Eliz. chap. 11. Forcible entry and detainer.....	419
4 Hen. IV. chap. 8. Forcible entry and detainer.....	419	43 Eliz. chap. 4. Charitable gifts.....	710
8 Hen. VI. chap. 9. Forcible entry and detainer.....	419	21 Jac. I. chap. 15. Forcible entry and detainer.....	419
39 L. R. A.		3 & 4 Anne, chap. 9. Making promissory notes negotiable...	854
		2 Geo. II. chap. 22. Set-off.....	687
		9 & 10 Vict. chap. 93. Lord Campbell's Act	352
		29 & 30 Vict. chap. 90, § 19. Smoke as nuisance.....	558

United States.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 8. Power of Congress.	366, 496
1, § 8, subs. 17. Power of Congress; exclusive legisla- tion over seat of government.	461
4, § 2, ¶ 1. Privileges and immunities of citizens.	366
5th Amend. Deprivation of property without due process of law.	460
14th Amend. Equal protection of laws.	173, 245, 261
§ 1. Rights, privileges, and immunities of citizens	270, 598

Ordinance, 1787.

Art. 2. No man shall be deprived of his life, liberty, etc.	125
--	-----

Statutes.

1789, Sept. 24. Judiciary act.	461
1801, February 13. General power of the circuit court.	461
1831, March 2. Power of courts to punish for contempts.	460
chap. 99. Mode of punish- ment for con- tempts.	461
1836, July 2. Changing organization of postoffice department.	279
1845, March 3. Postal act.	279
1847, March 1. Compensation to deputy postmasters.	279
March 3. Establishment of postoffice at Astoria, Oregon.	279
1848, August 14. Establishment of territo- rial government of Ore- gon.	770
1851, March 3. Furnishing supplies to deputy postmasters.	279
1853, March 3, § 6. Regulations in regard to deputy postmasters	279
1863, March 3. Establishment of supreme court in District of Co- lumbia.	461
1866, July 26, § 9. Canal right of way.	111
1870. Amendatory act.	111
1873, p. 520. Regulating irrigation and wa- ter rights.	111
1887, Feb. 4. Interstate commerce act.	276
1889, March 2. Interstate commerce act.	276

Statutes at Large.

Vol. 1, p. 78, chap. 20, § 11. Judiciary act.	461
p. 733. Establishment of postoffice.	279
2, p. 92, chap. 4, § 10. General power of the circuit court.	461
p. 104, chap. 15, § 1. Laws of Mary- land contin- ued in force in District of Columbia.	461
p. 105, chap. 15, § 3. Establishment of circuit court in Dis- trict of Co- lumbia.	461
4, p. 102. Establishment of postoffice.	279
5, p. 80. Changing organization of postoffice department.	279
p. 732. Postal act.	279
9, p. 147. Compensation to deputy postmasters.	279
pp. 180, 200. Establishment of post- office at Astoria, Oregon.	279
p. 589. Furnishing supplies to depu- ty postmasters.	279
10, p. 249. Regulations in regard to deputy postmasters.	279
12, p. 762, chap. 91. Establishment of supreme court in District of Columbia.	461
16, p. 426, chap. 62, § 34. Constitution and laws to be in force in District of Columbia.	461
24, p. 879. Interstate commerce act.	276
25, p. 857. Interstate commerce act.	276

39 L. R. A.

Revised Statutes.

§ 629. Jurisdiction of circuit courts.	461
725. Power of courts to impose oaths and punish contempts.	460
2339. Canal right of way.	111

Arkansas.Constitution.

Art. 2, § 2. All men created free and inde- pendent.	267
---	-----

Sandels & Hill's Digest.

§ 5313. Powers of cities of first class.	268
5623. Right of college to sue.	643

California.Constitution.

Art. 4, § 25, subd. 10. Legislature prohib- ited from passing local or special laws for assessment or collection of taxes.	343
11, § 18. Incurring of indebtedness.	448
13, § 1. Taxation of property.	343
22, § 1. Provisions as to existing laws.	697

Statutes.

1883, March 15, p. 370. Power of cities to refund indebted- ness.	446
1889, March 19, p. 390. Indebtedness for public improve- ments.	445
p. 401. Indebtedness for public improve- ments.	445
1893, March 1, p. 59. Amendment of act of March 15, 1883.	446
1893, p. 61. Indebtedness for public im- provements.	445

Civil Code.

§ 1307. Rights of child not named in will.	689
1340. Mistakes and omissions in wills.	690
3479. Public nuisance defined.	593
3480. Public nuisance defined.	593

Political Code.

§ 3820. Power of assessor to assess and sell property.	345
3824. Power of assessor to assess and sell property.	345

Penal Code.

§ 370. Public nuisance defined.	593
---	-----

Code Civil Procedure.

§ 369. Persons who may sue.	691
373. Appointment of guardian ad litem.	691
437. Answer of defendant, what to con- tain.	687
438. Counterclaim defined.	687
440. Cross-demands deemed compen- sated.	687
690, subd. 3. Farming utensils exempt from execution.	341
1200. Contempts.	695
1217. Investigation by court.	695
§§ 1443-1446. Inventory of estate by execu- tor or administrator.	689
§ 1581. Executors to take possession of en- tire estate.	689

Colorado.Statute.

1877, p. 343. Right of action for damages resulting from death.	352
--	-----

Mill's Annotated Statutes.

Chap. 37. Right of action for damages re- sulting from death.	352
--	-----

Connecticut.Constitution, 1818.

Art. 2. Distribution of powers.	796
§ 1. Division of powers of govern- ment.	803
5, § 1. Judicial powers of the state.	805
10, § 3. Rights and duties of corpora- tions.	798
10, § 4. Officers debarred from general assembly.	803

Statutes.

1889, p. 88. Power of probate judge over insane person.	857
1898, chap. 169, § 2. Municipal regulation of street railways.	195, 795
1895, chap. 283. Street railways.	795
p. 631. Appeal to Superior Court.	804

General Statutes.

§ 1135. Action of supreme court of errors on appeals.	646
§ 8900. Appeal from board of relief to superior court.	801
§ 8946. Power to supervise placing of tele- graph apparatus.	195

Revision, 1821.

p. 141. Authority of county courts to lay county taxes.	804
150. Distribution of powers of govern- ment.	804
179. Power of justices over dogs.	804
250. Care of county property.	804
260. Commitment of witness for refusal to answer question.	804
308. Tanning forbidden except by skill- ful licensed person.	804

District of Columbia.Revised Statutes.

§ 92. Laws of Maryland continued in force in District of Columbia.	461
98. Constitution and laws to be in force in the District of Columbia.	461
760. Jurisdiction of the supreme court as a circuit court.	461
1007. Supersedeas.	462

Florida.Statutes.

1835, February 4, § 1. Conveyances of married women's property.	709
1845, March 6, § 4. Conveyances of mar- ried women's property.	709

Georgia.Bill of Rights, 1877.

¶ 16. Right of people to be secure against unreasonable searches.	270
--	-----

Civil Code.

§ 3354. Objections to execution.	97
3355. Objections to execution.	97
3538. Conveying title to property.	98
5883. Imposition of tax on domestic ani- mals.	710
5912. Right of aged or infirm person to exemption of property from sale.	710

Penal Code.

§ 703. Cruelty to domestic animals.	709
729. Acts constituting misdemeanors.	710

Idaho.Statutes.

1895, March 9, p. 124. Appointment of state sheep inspector.	368
1897, March 12, p. 115. Appointment of state sheep inspector.	368

39 L. R. A.

Illinois.Constitution, 1848.

Art. 9, § 5. Power of taxation in corporate authorities.	287
13, § 11. Compensation for property taken.	758

Constitution, 1870.

Art. 2, § 2. Due process of law.	376
2, § 13. Compensation for property taken or damaged.	724, 758
8, § 1. Provision for system of free schools.	154
10, § 7. County affairs of Cook county.	200
10, § 8. Election of sheriffs.	200

Statutes.

1845, March 3, chap. 27, § 38. Counties and county commissioners' courts.	201
1874, Feb. 16, § 4. Revision of law in re- lation to circuit courts, etc.	199
1874, March 31, § 26. Revision of law in relation to counties.	199
1877, p. 208, § 2. Board of health.	153

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 53, § 47. Witness fees.	121
---------------------------------------	-----

Revised Statutes, 1845.

P. 135. Counties and county commission- ers' courts.	201
515. Sheriffs and coroners.	201

Revised Statutes, 1874.

Chap. 34, §§ 24, 25. Power of counties.	200
125, § 14. Duty of sheriffs.	200
P. 1052, § 2. Telegraph companies.	723

Revised Statutes, 1893.

Chap. 86, § 13. Lunatics.	115
117, § 1. Authority of referees to take testimony.	371

Starr & Curtis's Annotated Statutes.

Vol. 1, chap. 24, p. 777, ¶ 166. Contracts for public improvements.	482
1, p. 1085 (2d ed.). Power of counties.	200
1, p. 1086. Power of counties.	200
1, p. 1089 (2d ed.). Revision of law in relation to counties.	199
1, p. 1157. Revision of law in relation to circuit courts, etc.	199
3, p. 3768 (2d ed.). Duty of sheriffs.	200
3, p. 3770 (2d ed.). Duty of sheriff.	201

Indiana.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 21. Compensation for particular services.	124, 183
2, § 9. Incompatible offices.	278
3, § 1. Departments of government.	890
4, § 1. Legislative power.	890

Statutes.

1852, May 20. Partition of lands.	396
1852, June 18. Code of Civil Procedure.	396
1875, p. 172. Public warehouse act.	729
1879, p. 230. Public warehouse act.	729
1879, p. 231. Private warehouse act.	729
1885, p. 202, § 3. Power of county commis- sioners over bridges.	70
1895, p. 363. Power of county commis- sioners over free gravel roads.	69

Revised Statutes, 1876.

Vol. 2, p. 64. Cross demands deemed com- pensated.	683
---	-----

Revised Statutes, 1881.

§ 96. Departments of government.	890
97. Legislative power.	890
1131. Filing information.	281
2483. Inchoate right of wife in hus- band's estate.	887

§ 2491. Inchoate right of wife in husband's estate.....	386
2499. Inchoate right of wife in husband's estate.....	387
2508. Judicial sale of husband's real estate.....	390
2385. Erection and repair of bridges.....	64
2386. Power of county commissioners over bridges.....	64
2387. Power of county commissioners over bridges.....	64
2388. Appointment of superintendent to erect bridges.....	69
2392. Repair of bridges.....	65
4424. Filling vacancy in office of county superintendent.....	283
5736. Board of county commissioners.....	68
5737. Board of county commissioners.....	68

Revised Statutes, 1894.

§ 96. Departments of governments.....	390
97. Legislative power.....	390
1145, subd. 2. Filling information.....	281
2640. Inchoate right of wife in husband's estate.....	387
2652. Inchoate right of wife in husband's estate.....	386
2660. Inchoate right of wife in husband's estate.....	387
2669. Judicial sale of husband's real estate.....	390
3275. Erection and repair of bridges.....	64
3276. Power of county commissioners over bridges.....	64
3277. Power of county commissioners over bridges.....	64
3278. Appointment of superintendent to erect bridges.....	69
3282. Repair of bridges.....	65
5900. Filling vacancy in office of county superintendent.....	283
6638. Fraud and perjuries.....	730
6818. Duty of road supervisors to keep bridges in repair.....	65
6832. Duty of road supervisors to keep bridges in repair.....	70
6833. Power of county commissioners over bridges.....	70
6834. Power of county commissioners over bridges.....	70
6838. Duty of road supervisors to keep bridges in repair.....	65
6868. Power of county commissioners over free gravel roads.....	69
6912. Power of county commissioners over free gravel roads.....	69
6983. Power of county commissioners over free gravel roads.....	69
6935. Power of county commissioners over free gravel roads.....	69
6950. Power of county commissioners over free gravel roads.....	69
6958. Power of county commissioners over free gravel roads.....	69
7821. Board of county commissioners.....	68
7822. Board of county commissioners.....	68
8704. Public warehouse act.....	729
8716. Private warehouse act.....	729
8719. Public warehouse act.....	729
8720. Private warehouse act.....	729
8722. Private warehouse act.....	729
8724. Private warehouse act.....	731
8729. Private warehouse act.....	729

Horner's Revised Statutes, 1897.

§ 1131. Filling information.....	281
4424. Filling vacancy in office of county superintendent.....	283
4913. Fraud and perjuries.....	730
6625. Public warehouse act.....	729
6637. Private warehouse act.....	729
6640. Public warehouse act.....	729
6641. Private warehouse act.....	729
6643. Private warehouse act.....	729
6645. Private warehouse act.....	731
6650. Private warehouse act.....	729

Gavin & Hord's Statutes.

Vol. 2, p. 45, § 17. Who shall be joined as plaintiffs.....	380
2, p. 46, § 18. Who may be made defendant.....	389
2, p. 361, § 1. Partition of lands.....	396

39 L. R. A.

Vol. 2, p. 365, § 21. Conveyances of commissioner; its effect.....	391
2, p. 365, § 23. Distribution of proceeds of partition sale.....	389
2, § 626. Pleadings and practice in partition proceedings.....	389

Code.

§ 61. Cross-demands deemed compensated	688
--	-----

Iowa.Constitution.

Art. 8, § 1. Power of taxation.....	289
-------------------------------------	-----

Statutes.

13th Gen. Assem. chap. 45. Establishment of free public library and reading room.....	286
14th Gen. Assem. chap. 47. Establishment of free public library and reading room.....	286
18th Gen. Assem. chap. 181, § 2. Right of innkeeper to lien.....	292
22d Gen. Assem. chap. 18. Payment of interest on sinking fund.....	286
22d Gen. Assem. chap. 99. Power of city to levy and collect taxes.....	286
25th Gen. Assem. chap. 41. Appointment of library trustees.....	286
25th Gen. Assem. chap. 70. Mode of drawing jury.....	489
25th Gen. Assem. chap. 5. Annual collection of tax.....	286
26th Gen. Assem. chap. 50. Power of board of library trustees.....	286
26th Gen. Assem. chap. 61, § 1. Competent jurors.....	803
26th Gen. Assem. chap. 96. Anti-cigarette law.....	486

Code.

§ 332. Competency to act as jurors.....	808
5360. Grounds of challenge for cause...	808
5361. Examination of juror to prove or disprove challenge.....	803
5362. Examination of juror to prove or disprove challenge.....	803

Code, 1873.

§ 461. Establishment and maintenance of free public library.....	286
335. Determination of state tax.....	289
1000. Law of the road.....	489
1934. Execution of trusts or powers in relation to real estate.....	206
2326. Wills to be valid must be in writing.....	206
4097. Libel defined.....	736
4405. Grounds of challenge for cause...	808
4407. Examination of juror to prove or disprove challenge.....	808
4408. Examination of juror to prove or disprove challenge.....	803

Kansas.General Statutes, 1889.

§ 2220. Crimes and punishments of agents	861
--	-----

Kentucky.Constitution.

§ 13. Compensation for property taken for public use.....	850
156. Division of cities and towns for purpose of organization.....	214
242. Compensation for property taken for public use.....	850

Constitution, 1850.

§ 14. Compensation for property taken for public use.....	850
---	-----

Statutes.

1869, March 6. Warehouse act.....	730
-----------------------------------	-----

General Statutes.

§ 900. Order of allowance to be paid by husband.	403
1930. Arrest of person found guilty of felony.	211
2117, subs. 2, 3. Grounds for divorce.	403
2120. Time within which action for divorce must be brought.	403
2301. Remedy by distress or landlord's attachment.	404
2302. Remedy by distress or landlord's attachment.	404
2304. Right of assignee to recover rent.	405
2305. Remedy by distress against assignee.	405
2312. Allowance of double damages for wrongful distress against landlord.	405
2318. Remedy by distress against tenant for life.	405
2319. Remedy by distress to person entitled to rents.	405
2321. Remedy by distress to personal representative.	405
2324. Remedy by distress to enforce lien given under contracts.	405
3861. Transfer or assignment of towns or cities from one class to another.	214
3862. Transfer or assignment of towns or cities from one class to another.	214
3868. Payment of burial expenses of decedent.	507

Civil Code.

§ 423, sub. 3. Proof by plaintiff in divorce proceeding.	403
654. Judgment on bond to discharge levy of distress warrant.	404

Louisiana.Constitution.

Art. 20. Laws shall embrace but one subject.	528
235. Infringement on rights of individuals.	529

Statutes.

1888, No. 19. Societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals.	528
---	-----

Maryland.Constitution.

Art. 4, § 8. Removal of case.	164
13, § 6. Right of trial by jury.	164

Statutes.

1890, chap. 244. Corporation taxes.	812
chap. 536. Corporation taxes.	812
1894, chap. 114. Corporation taxes.	812
1896, March 11, chap. 40. Payment of pilotage by vessels.	185

Code of Public General Laws.

Art. 81, §§ 88, A, B, C, D, E. Corporation taxes.	812
81, §§ 88, F, G, H, I, J. Corporation taxes.	812

Code of Public Local Laws.

Art. 22, § 171. Power to pass ordinances for Hagerstown.	658
--	-----

Massachusetts.Plymouth Colonial Laws.

1658, p. 11. Forcible entry and detainer.	419
1671, chap. 3, § 13. Forcible entry and detainer.	419

Province Laws.

1692, chap. 11, § 6. Punishment of criminal offenders.	419
39 L. R. A.

1701, chap. 72. Proceedings against forcible entry and detainer.	420
--	-----

Laws and Resolutions.

1794-85, pp. 19, 24. Proceeding against person in occupation of land.	420
---	-----

Statutes.

1784, chap. 8. Proceeding against forcible entry and detainer.	420
1825, chap. 89. Further remedies for landlords and tenants.	420
1835, April, chap. 114. Proceeding to recover property.	421
1851, chap. 233, §§ 76-85. Practice act.	421
1852, Aug. 7, chap. 312. Repealing Stat. 1851, chap. 233.	422
1866, chap. 410, cl. 1. Repeal not to revive previous statutes.	422
1879, chap. 237. Foreclosure of mortgage of real estate.	422
1888, chap. 431. Authority of towns to unite for the employment of school superintendent.	511
1890, chap. 104. Trademarks.	509
1892, chap. 344. Union of towns Sandwich, Bourne, and Mashpee for employment of school superintendent.	511
1893, chap. 443. Trademarks.	509
1894, chap. 285. Trademarks.	509
1895, chap. 462, § 3. Protection of manufacturers from use of counterfeit labels and stamps.	509

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 139, § 1. Sentence, where no punishment is specially provided.	421
104, § 1. Forcible entry forbidden.	421
104, § 8. Appeal by either party as in other civil actions.	421
104, §§ 9, 11. Proceedings, when title to freehold is in question.	421
104, § 12. Recovery of premises or further damages.	421

General Statutes.

Chap. 137, § 2. Person unlawfully held out, may be restored possession.	422
137, § 3. Termination of lease because of nonpayment of rent.	422
137, § 5. Form of writ.	422
137, § 6. Time of serving writ.	422
137, § 7. Judgment for plaintiff when.	422

Public Statutes.

Chap. 3, § 3, cl. 1. Repeal not to revive previous statutes.	422
44, § 44. Towns may unite for employment of superintendent of schools.	511
44, § 45. Manner of appointment of superintendent.	511
121, § 11. Termination of lease because of nonpayment of rent.	422
126, § 15. Forcible entry forbidden.	422
161, § 27. Time of serving original writ.	422
175. Forcible entry and detainer.	419
178, §§ 1, 45. Division of lands held by tenants in common.	217

Michigan.Constitution.

Art. 6, § 7. Election of county officers.	772
7, § 1. Qualifications for electors.	772
13, § 4. Establishment of free schools.	772

Statutes.

1865, No. 124. Legal holidays.	218
1875, No. 163. Legal holidays.	219
1879, No. 267. Prohibiting opening of saloons on legal holidays.	218
1887, No. 313, § 17. Prohibiting opening of saloons on legal holidays.	218
1893, No. 77. Legal holidays.	219
No. 185. Legal holidays.	219

Howell's Statutes.

§ 5774. Determination of estates at will and by sufferance.....	414
8284. Right of entry.....	412
8295. Right of entry.....	412
8295. Recovery of possession of premises	414
8299. Recovery of possession of premises.....	414
8308. Issuance of writ of restitution....	414

Minnesota.Statutes.

1889, April 22, chap. 236. Securities of building and loan association....	565
1891, chap. 381. Improvement of navigation of Lake Minnetonka.....	78

General Statutes, 1894.

§ 2860. Securities of building and loan association.....	565
--	-----

Missouri.Constitution.

Art. 2, § 11. Security from unreasonable searches and seizures.....	169
---	-----

Revised Statutes, 1855.

Chap. 32, p. 335, § 5. Conveyances to heirs of life tenant.....	740
---	-----

Revised Statutes, 1889.

Vol. 1, § 3651. Nuisance defined.....	558
§ 4264. All property bound for payment of fines and costs.....	170
4265. Duty of clerks of criminal courts.	170
4308. Authority of committing magistrate.....	168
4317. Lien on estate of criminal.....	170
4395. Persons convicted to pay costs....	170
4635. Recovery of rents and profits.....	751
5220. Officers not liable to be summoned as garnishees.....	169
5807. Insurance contracts.....	820
5809. Insurance contracts.....	820
Vol. 2, p. 2098, § 28, cl. 6. Charter of St. Louis; abatement of nuisances..	557

Wagner's Statutes.

Vol. 1, p. 256, § 1. Adoption of child.....	749
1, p. 256, § 3. Rights of adopted child	750

Montana.Constitution.

Art. 12, § 1. Taxation of property.....	174
§ 11. Uniform taxation.....	174
§ 17. "Property" defined.....	178

Special Laws.

1897, p. 41. Special charter to city of Sherman.....	260
--	-----

Statutes.

1897, March 4, p. 83. Tax on inheritances..	172
---	-----

Civil Code.

§ 1794. Testamentary dispositions.....	175
--	-----

Nebraska.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 21. Compensation for property taken for public use.....	757
---	-----

Statutes.

1891, chap. 57. Appropriation for World's Columbian Exposition.....	515
1893, chap. 41. Additional appropriation for World's Columbian Exposition.....	515
1897, chap. 24, p. 192. Authority of counties to participate in interstate expositions.....	514

39 L. R. A.

1897, chap. 88, p. 369. Appropriation for Trans-Mississippi & International Exposition.....	515
---	-----

Compiled Statutes.

Chap. 2, art. 1, § 3. Appropriation to state board of agriculture.....	515
2, art. 1, § 10. Appropriation to state horticultural society.....	515
2, art. 1, § 12. County agricultural societies.....	515
2, art. 1, § 16. Appropriation for fitting up fair grounds.....	515
18, art. 1, § 27. Submission of questions to vote of electors of county.....	516
18, art. 1, § 30. Submission of questions to vote of electors of county.....	516
43, § 110. Fraternal benefit associations.....	833

Compiled Statutes, 1897.

Chap. 14, art. 1, §§ 104-106. Plats.....	752
--	-----

New Jersey.Statutes.

1875, p. 206, § 19. Power to remove obstructions from street.....	614
---	-----

New York.Statutes.

1840, April 28, chap. 177. Rights of married women.....	397
1857, chap. 458, § 3. Tax assessment.....	238
1863, chap. 82. Monroe County Insane Asylum.....	41
1870, chap. 633. Monroe County Insane Asylum.....	41
1881, chap. 361, § 3. Taxation of corporations.....	238
1889, chap. 458. Standard fire insurance policy to be used.....	436
1892, chap. 686, § 2. County law.....	40, 51
690, § 121. Standard fire insurance policy to be used.....	436
1895, chap. 954. Consolidation of Kings county and Brooklyn city.....	51

Revised Statutes.

Pt. 1, art. 1, tit. 1, chap. 11, 12. Corporate powers of counties and towns...	53
2, chap. 1, tit. 3, § 1 (4th ed.) Endowment of widow.....	397
Vol. 2, p. 355, § 25. Set-offs in suits by executors and administrators.....	686

Code Civil Procedure.

§ 1000. Hearing of exceptions by appellate division.....	438
1022. Decision of the court upon trial of the whole issue of fact.....	242
1185. When verdict is taken subject to opinion of the court.....	438
1234. Motion may be made by either party before appellate division..	438
1338. Presumption of questions of law..	242
2670. When and how temporary administrator may be appointed.....	436
2672. General powers of temporary administrator.....	437
2675. Power of temporary administrator as to real property.....	437

North Carolina.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 6. Public debt.....	444
§ 7. Exclusive privilege of emoluments forbidden.....	245
2, § 12. Thirty days' notice shall be given prior to passage of private laws.....	443
§ 14. Creation of town indebtedness.....	440
§ 16. Journal of legislature.....	441
§ 23. Reading of bills.....	441

Art. 4, § 5. Gifts or loans by the state....	442
5, § 1. Power of legislature to levy taxes.....	444
7, § 7. No debt or loan to be made except by majority of voters.....	442

Statutes.

1786, chap. 1, § 15. Opening and guarding of highway.....	143
1868-69, chap. 171. Power of county commissioners to subscribe stock for completion of railroad.....	442
1870-71, chap. 236. Incorporation of Yadin Railroad Company.....	440
1887, chap. 183. Subscriptions to stock of company.....	440
1895, chap. 141. Protection of owners of cattle and other animals.....	245
chap. 154. Protection of owners of cattle and other animals in Cumberland county.....	245

Code.

§ 1996. Subscriptions to stock may be made by boards of county commissioners.....	441
2000. Taxes, how paid.....	441
2841. Gaming or betting contracts.....	836
2842. Gaming or betting contracts.....	836

Ohio.Revised Statutes, 1880.

§ 1038. Deduction of erroneous tax.....	605
1047. Duty of auditor.....	604
1101. Treasurer shall make return.....	605
1103. County treasurer charged with tax	604
2562. Allowance of counsel fees to county officers.....	605

Oregon.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 18. Private property taken for public use.....	183
2, § 2. Qualifications of voters.....	770
8, § 3. System of common schools.....	770

Statutes.

1855, p. 6. Qualification of voters.....	770
pp. 458, 463. Qualification of voters at school meetings.....	771
1862, p. 641. Qualification of voters at school meetings.....	771
1878, p. 67. Right of citizens to vote at school meetings.....	771
1885, p. 10. Witness fees.....	183
1891, p. 180, § 1. Citizens entitled to vote at school meeting.....	770

Deady & Lane's Compiled Laws.

P. 511. Right of women to vote.....	771
-------------------------------------	-----

Pennsylvania.Statutes.

1815, March 13. Guilty party prohibited from marrying.....	541
1854, Feb. 2, § 6 (Pub. Laws, 25). Consolidation act.....	841
1874, June 2 (Pub. Laws, 271). Partnership association.....	106
1885, May 29. Right of eminent domain for laying pipe lines for gas.....	533
June 1 (Pub. Laws, 37). "Bullitt Bill".....	840
June 25 (Pub. Laws, 182). Partnership associations.....	106

Brightly's Purdon's Digest.

P. 688, pl. 29, § 91. Guilty party prohibited from marrying.....	541
--	-----

Rhode Island.General Laws.

Chap. 233, § 16. Civil actions for injuries from crimes.....	846
39 L. R. A.

South Dakota.Constitution.

Art. 5, § 38. Style of process.....	857
6, § 13. Private property shall not be taken without compensation....	347

Statutes.

1890, chap. 37, art. 16, § 18. Liability of city for changing grade of street	349
1891, March 7, chap. 94. Assessment by jury of just compensation for property taken.....	847
1893, chap. 21, § 8. Attorneys.....	858

Compiled Laws.

§§ 462-480. Attorneys and counselors at law.....	857
§ 4807. Process defined.....	857
5189. Taxing costs in favor of prevailing party.....	860
5343. Pending action.....	858
6204. Felony defined.....	858

Political Code.

Chap. 18. Attorneys and counselors at law	858
---	-----

Tennessee.Constitution, 1796.

Art. 10, § 2. Witness fees.....	138
---------------------------------	-----

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 6. Right of trial by jury.....	138
8. Law of land.....	144
17. Suits against state.....	134
21. Particular services and property not to be taken without payment.....	182
2, § 17. Acts which repeal, revive, and amend.....	131
24. Appropriation of public funds	134
11, § 8. Class legislation.....	144

Statutes.

1859-60, p. 4, chap. 6, § 2. Expense of keeping jury.....	146
1879, chap. 210. Allowance of costs in criminal cases.....	135
1881, chap. 51. Repealing act.....	135
1885, p. 76. Bill for jury board.....	146
1889, chap. 189. Duty of officers in regard to bills for payment of costs.....	135
1891, chap. 22 (Ex. Sess.). Examination of bills of cost in criminal cases.....	135
1895, chap. 205. Defining larceny, etc.....	135
1897, February 8. Jarvis law.....	120

Code, 1858.

§ 4032. Expense of boarding jury.....	146
4517. Forbidding officers to demand fees	134
4564, suba. 28. Compensation to officers for attendance on court.....	146
§§ 4571-72, suba. 9. Compensation for attending on grand jury.....	146
§ 5561. Officer's fees in criminal cases....	134
5594. State's day.....	134
5604. Attendance of witness before grand jury.....	134

Milliken & Vertrees' Code.

§ 5492. Forgery defined.....	430
6454. Expense of keeping jury.....	146

Shannon's Code.

§ 6876. Half fees allowed on acquittal....	134
6879. District attorney's fees.....	134
6380. District attorney's fees.....	134
6383. District attorney's fees.....	134
6402, subs. 10, 11, 25. Fees of officers....	137
6409. Fees of officers.....	146
6410, subs. 8. Fees of officers.....	137
7590. District attorney's fees.....	134
7600. Compensation to witnesses.....	134
7607. Bill for jury board.....	146
7608. Bill for jury board.....	146

Texas.Revised Statutes, 1895.

Art. 487. Power of cities to levy taxes.... 259

Washington.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 22. Right of accused in criminal prosecutions..... 824
12, § 7. Transaction of business by foreign corporations..... 550

Statutes.

1888, p. 68. Common law doctrine..... 109
1895, p. 105. Taxing live stock..... 608

Hill's Annotated Statutes.

Vol. 1, § 1718. Appropriation of water for irrigation..... 109
1, § 1761. Appropriation of water for irrigation..... 109
1, § 1774. Appropriation of water for irrigation..... 109
2, § 158. Venue of action..... 83
2, § 159. Venue of action..... 83
2, § 161. Venue of action..... 83

Code of Procedure.

§ 108. Common law doctrine..... 109

West Virginia.Code.

Chap. 61, § 7. Compensation for recovery of property..... 499
83, § 12. Lands of persons under disability..... 294
83, § 14. Lands of persons under disability..... 294

Wisconsin.Statutes.

1888, chap. 849, § 2. Judgment in fraud of assignment..... 574
39 L. R. A.

1889, chap. 385. Discharge of debtor..... 578
1897, April 30, chap. 334. Voluntary assignments..... 573

Sanborn & Berryman's Annotated Statutes.

§ 1893a. Judgment in fraud of assignment 573
2014a. Foreign building and loan associations..... 585
2014b. Foreign building and loan associations..... 585

Wyoming.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 6. Deprivations of property prohibited..... 598
1, § 28. Uniformity of taxation..... 598
15, § 10. Duties of state board..... 602
15, § 11. Uniformity of taxation..... 598

Statutes.

1890-91, chap. 86. Property subject to taxation..... 597
1890-91, p. 103. When taxes are payable.. 597
1895, chap. 44. School money in county treasury..... 605
1895, chap. 61. Taxing live stock..... 597
1897, March 1, p. 113. Act repealing act taxing live stock..... 598

Revised Statutes.

§ 3055. Actions to recover back taxes illegally collected..... 604
8776. Property subject to taxation..... 597
8801. County board of equalization..... 597
8806. Time of making county levy..... 597
8808. Duties and authority of tax collector..... 597
8817. Omitted property added to tax list..... 597
8821. Duty of county board to direct treasurer to refund erroneous tax..... 605
8833. Redemption to purchaser at tax sale when unlawful..... 605
8845. Assessment of personal property. 597
8846. Assessment of personal property. 602
8847. Collector may detain property about to be removed..... 602
8849. Assessment of personal property.. 602

LAWYERS' REPORTS

ANNOTATED.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Elizabeth G. HUGHES, Appt.,
v.
COUNTY OF MONROE, Resp't.
(147 N. Y. 49.)

I. A county is not liable for injuries received by an employee from a defective machine in an asylum which was maintained by the county in discharge of its duty as a political division of the state to care for its insane.

2. The maintenance of a county asylum

NOTE.—Liabilities of counties in actions for torts and negligence.

- I. Injuries to travelers and vehicles.
 - a. By bridges and approaches being out of repair.
 1. Implied liability.
 2. Where statute imposes liability.
 - b. From defective roads and highways.
 - c. Where the injury was caused by the fright of a horse.
 - d. By negligence of employee.
- II. Injuries to other persons.
 - a. From condition of buildings.
 1. Generally.
 2. On account of escape from prison.
 - b. By negligence or wrongful act of employee.
- III. Injuries to real property from public improvements.
 - a. Generally.
 - b. By construction and operation of bridges.
 - c. By roads.
 - d. By ditches, canals, and dams.
 - e. By buildings.
- IV. Other wrongful and negligent acts affecting persons or property.
 - a. Generally.
 - b. Affecting property.
- V. Infringement of patents.
- VI. Damages by defaulting officer.
- VII. By misapplication, conversion, or taking property.
- VIII. Presentation of claims before county board as a condition precedent to suit.
- IX. Summary.

With but few exceptions counties are not liable for torts or negligence in the condition, use, and management of public institutions. The cases frequently admit that the distinction between liabilities of counties and cities is one without a difference, but nevertheless adhere to the rule. The reasons in the several cases endeavoring to apply or evolve the principle are various, among which are the following: That there is no corporation fund out of which satisfaction could be made; that it is better that an individual should sustain an injury than that the public should sustain an inconvenience; that it is not a body corporate; that it is does not become a private business such that the county is liable for injuries received by employees, by reason of the fact that some revenue is incidentally derived by the county from the sale of surplus farm products and from payments made by those liable for the support of insane persons kept in the asylum.

(October 8, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fifth a voluntary corporation; that it is a subordinate political division of a state; that its action is legislative; that neither the state nor its counties could be sued for trespass of its officers; that counties are instrumentalities of government; that counties partake of the immunities of states; that they should not be liable on the ground of ancient precedent and public policy.

The cases which hold that there is an implied liability against a county maintain this on various grounds, some of which are as follows: Electing to act under a power granted imposes a duty rendering it liable; there is a liability for acts done in the discharge of a self-imposed duty not enjoined by law; compensation must be made for taking property without compensation; where the statute creates a duty to repair the liability is the same as that of a city.

The leading case on this question is Russell v. Devon County, 2 T. R. 661, which has been made more or less the foundation of all the cases denying a liability, although it can hardly be said that the counties in this country at the present time stand on the same footing as quasi corporations in England in 1799.

- I. Injuries to travelers and vehicles.
 - a. By bridges and approaches being out of repair.
 1. Implied liability.

In JASPER COUNTY COMES. v. ALLMAN it was held that, under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2387, Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3277 (§ 3), providing that the board of county commissioners shall receive and appropriate donations for the erection and repair of bridges and aid the same when of general importance, providing, however, that if the board of commissioners shall not deem any such bridge of sufficient importance to make an appropriation from the county treasury for the erection or repairs thereof, the trustees of any township may appropriate any part of the road-tax fund for that purpose if they deem it right and expedient, the board of commissioners have no power to appropriate county funds to the repair of a bridge unless they deem it of sufficient importance, and therefore the county was not liable for injuries caused to a traveler by a defective approach to a bridge. It was further held that the board could only cause bridges to be repaired when the road district was Department, granting a new trial after verdict in favor of plaintiff at the Monroe County Circuit in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defective machinery furnished to plaintiff with which to perform work for the defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Eugene Van Voorhis, with Messrs. J. & Q. Van Voorhis, for appellant:

The defendant is responsible for its negligence.

At the time of the accident in question, the statutes of this state prescribed that each county might sue and be sued in the manner prescribed by law.

1 Birdseye's Rev. Stat. p. 780, § 1.

not able to do it by its road work and tax. This case follows the late Indiana cases overruling the former cases, which held there was an implied liability on counties for injuries caused from defective bridges. This decision is in accord with the weight of authority.

In the absence of a statute it is generally held that counties are not liable in an action for damages for injuries caused by bridges being out of repair, although in Iowa, Maryland, and Pennsylvania a contrary rule prevails, as formerly in Indiana, and in some states a provision is made therefor by statute. The cases holding there is no implied liability are as follows:

The leading case on liability of counties for negligence and tort held that the inhabitants of a county were not liable for an injury done to a wagon in consequence of a bridge being out of repair, which ought to have been repaired by the county. It held that no recovery could be had in the absence of a statute imposing liability, distinguishing the cases where a recovery was had under the statute of hue and cry, because in those cases there was a statutory remedy. It was further held that there could be no liability because there was no incorporation fund out of which satisfaction could be made; also that the principle of law that where an individual sustains injury by neglect or default of another the law gives him remedy, must give way to the principle that it is better that an individual should sustain an injury than that the public should sustain an inconvenience. Russell v. Devon County, 2 T. R. 667.

In an action against the inhabitants of a county for injuries caused by a defective bridge, naming the county surveyor as defendant, under 48 Geo. III., chap. 59, § 4, providing that the inhabitants of counties shall and may sue for any damages done to bridges and other works, and repair at the expense of such counties respectively, and for the "recovering" of any property belonging to such counties in the name of their surveyor, "and also shall and may be sued in the name of such surveyor, . . . but the surveyor for the time being shall be deemed the plaintiff or defendant in such action . . . provided always, that every such surveyor . . . shall always be reimbursed and paid out of the moneys in the hands of the treasurer of the public stock of such county . . . all such costs and charges as he shall be put unto," which statute was passed fifteen years after the decision of Russell v. Devon County, 2 T. R. 667,—it was held at first that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, but the judgment was arrested on the ground that the words "costs and charges" did not give a liability against the county by an action against the surveyor. It was said that it may be reasonably considered that the legislature supposed there were some cases where the county was liable at common law, and might have execution against it for the damages, 39 L. R. A.

Police duties are always held to be public duties, performed for the benefit of the whole state, and neither counties nor municipalities, existing under special charters, are liable for acts of omission or commission in the matter of preserving order or confining offenders against the law.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 8d ed. § 974, (772); Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 260; Beach, Pub. Corp. § 745.

Counties, and cities in states which recognize no distinction between the two are liable to action for private nuisance.

Michel v. Monroe County Supers. 39 Hun, 47; Thayer v. Boston, 19 Pick. 511, 31 Am. Dec. 157; Akron v. McComb, 18 Ohio, 229, 51 Am. Dec. 458; Rhodes v. Cleveland, 10 Ohio, though in truth "we believe there are none." It was also said: "It was much pressed that unless the words in question were allowed to have the operation contended for by the plaintiff, it was impossible to give them any at all. The court below felt the pressure of this argument, and attempted to meet it by one or two suppositions which do not entirely satisfy us. But this difficulty, even if it were greater than it appears to us, would not warrant us in giving such effect to these words as the plaintiff requires, creating a new liability clearly without the intention of the legislature, and working injustice at the same time. The judgment of the court below, therefore, will be affirmed." Makinnon v. Penzon, 25 Eng. L. & Eq. 457, affirming 18 Eng. L. & Eq. 509.

In Thomas v. Sorrell, Vaughan, 340, it was said that "if a man have particular damage by a foundrous way, he is generally without remedy though the nuisance is to be punished by the King. The reason is, because a foundrous way, a decayed bridge, or the like, are commonly to be repaired by some township, vill, hamlet, or a county who are not corporate, and therefore no action lies against them for a particular damage, but their neglects are to be presented, and they punished by fine to the King. But if a particular person or body corporate be to repair a certain highway, or portion of it, or a bridge, and a man is endamaged particularly by the foundrouness of the way, or decay of the bridge, he may have his action against the person or body corporate, who ought to repair for his damage, because he can bring his action against them; but where there is no person against whom to bring his action, it is as if a man be damaged by one that cannot be known."

So, a county was held not liable for injuries caused by a defective bridge on a public highway where there was no statute imposing liability, in Granger v. Pulaski County, 26 Ark. 37; Barnett v. Contra Costa County, 67 Cal. 77; White v. Bond County, 58 Ill. 297, 11 Am. Rep. 65; Hedges v. Madison County, 5 Ill. 567; Wheatly v. Mercer, 9 Bush, 704; Carter v. Wilds, 8 Honst. (Del.) 14; Brabham v. Hinds County Supers. 54 Miss. 363, 23 Am. Rep. 352; White v. Chowan County Comrs. 90 N. C. 437, 47 Am. Rep. 534; Clark v. Adair County, 79 Mo. 536.

In Clark v. Adair County, 79 Mo. 536, Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 313, was distinguished, as in that case the county was the owner and proprietor of the property it was improving.

And in Wood v. Tipton County, 7 Baxt. 112, 32 Am. Rep. 551, it was held that a county was not liable for failure to keep a county bridge in repair where there was no statute imposing such liability. It was said that a county was declared by statute to be a corporation, but this only meant in regard to contracts and the power to sue and be sued.

And a county was not liable for injuries caused by a defective bridge. It was said that counties 159, 86 Am. Dec. 82; Proprietors of Locks & Canals v. Lowell, 7 Gray, 223; Hildreth v. Lowell, 11 Gray, 345; Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 206.

Counties, while they may be exempt for omission to perform public duties imposed upon them as such by the state, are liable for the private wrongs they commit against others to the same extent as private corporations.

It is a ridiculous condition of the law if counties are properly liable for committing nuisances, for infringing patents, and for converting funds, and yet owe no duty to employees for which they can be held responsible.

Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 358, 23 Am. Rep. 332.

are only quasi corporations created for the purpose of government, and their functions are political and administrative, and their powers are rather duties imposed than privileges granted, while cities are chartered for the private advantage of their citizens, and that some courts hold that counties are but political subdivisions of a state, and a suit would be in effect a suit against the state, but, whatever the distinction may be, cities are liable, but counties are not. Heigel v. Wichita County, 84 Tex. 362.

And a county was not liable for injuries caused by defects in a bridge in the absence of any statute imposing such liability, as counties are only quasi corporations. Heigel v. Wichita County, 84 Tex. 362.

So a county was not liable for injuries caused by a county bridge being out of repair. It was held that counties were not liable at common law for injuries caused in this manner, and the statute in force at the time of the alleged injury (1876) did not change the common-law rule. It was said that a county is not, in the proper sense of the word, a municipal corporation. Woods v. Colfax County Comrs. 10 Neb. 562.

And a parish is not liable for private injuries caused by the ruinous condition of one of the parish bridges on a highway where there is no remedy given by statute. King v. Police Jury, 12 La. Ann. 368.

In King v. Police Jury, 12 La. Ann. 368, the case of Houston v. Police Jury, 3 La. Ann. 566, was distinguished, as in the absence of a statute requiring a bridge to be built or to be kept in repair the liability is different from the liability of municipal corporations for the injurious acts of their agents done in the proper scope of their employment, which was the case in 3 La. Ann. 566.

And a county is not liable for injuries occasioned through the negligence of county officers in the construction and repair of county bridges, there being a distinction between cities and counties, as the first are compact and have officers empowered to act promptly, while it is almost impossible for counties covering a large area to provide against defects in highways and bridges. El Paso County Comrs. v. Bish, 18 Colo. 474.

In El Paso County Comrs. v. Bish, 18 Colo. 474, it was said that an implied liability is recognized in Iowa, Maryland, Indiana, and Pennsylvania from the failure of county officers to perform a statutory duty, but the weight of authority is contra.

And where a bridge was out of repair, but the delay in repairing was unavoidable, and the plaintiffs attempted to ford a creek, and lost his horse by drowning, the county was not liable. It was further held that if plaintiff attempted to cross a ford when it was apparent that it was dangerous, the defendants would not be liable for failure to give notice. The court said that it has not been usual, 39 L. R. A.

Where a county undertakes other matters than these public functions of government, for its own advantage or emolument, it loses its character as a public corporation, and it becomes liable in regard to those matters, to the same extent and in the same way as a private corporation.

1 Thomp. Neg. p. 618; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 255-259; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 462 et seq.; Maximilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Bigelow v. Randolph, 14 Gray, 548; Jones v. New Haven, 84 Conn. 1; Perkins v. Lawrence, 186 Mass. 805; Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 318; Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill, 581, 88 Am. Dec. 669; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485; People v. Ingersoll, 58 N. Y. 29, 17 Am. Rep. 178.

nor is it necessary, to give notice when the streams are "up," and "besides, it would have been contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff to venture to cross a stream so swollen." Jackson v. Greene County Comrs. 76 N. C. 282.

So, the justices of a county were not liable for injuries caused by the breaking of a bridge which was admitted to be dangerous, and known to be so by the magistrates, who made a contract to have the same repaired as soon as they were aware of its condition, but the contractor had neglected to repair the same. It was said that the remedy for a bridge being out of repair is by mandamus, and that there was no liability created by any statute. Kinsey v. Jones County Magistrates, 8 Jones, L. 186.

And a county was not liable for injuries caused by neglect in keeping a bridge in repair where there was no statutory liability, although the statute imposed on the boards of county commissioners the duty of keeping in repair the bridges. Bailey v. Laurence County, 5 S. D. 393.

In Bailey v. Laurence County, 5 S. D. 393, it was said that counties are made corporations for civil and political purposes, but with limited powers; and while it is true that the legislature has imposed upon them the duty of keeping in repair all bridges on public highways, and provided the method, yet to hold that counties are thereby liable for injuries caused by defects in bridges in the absence of legislation would be a species of judicial legislation.

And where an action was brought against the supervisors of a county on a warrant issued for damages caused by the breaking of a bridge on a county road, which warrant had been refused payment, it was held that there was no liability under Cal. Code 1883, § 7, providing that all supervisors, or any officer, authorizing, auditing, or allowing any claim in violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be liable in person to the person damaged to the extent of his loss. It was held that neither the original holder of the warrant nor his assignee had any claim, as the warrant was invalid. Bank of Santa Cruz County v. Bartlett, 78 Cal. 301.

And for injuries caused by failure to repair a bridge the county was not liable under Cal. act March 23, 1855, creating a board of supervisors and giving them the management and control of bridges, and act April 28, 1855, concerning roads and highways, and imposing upon the overseers of the county the duty of keeping bridges on public highways in repair. The remedy, if any, for injuries resulting from neglect to keep such bridges in repair is against the road overseers or supervisors personally. Huffman v. San Joaquin County, 21 Cal. 423.

So, a county was not liable for injuries from a defective bridge in the absence of a statute, and it was held that Cal. Stat. 1875-76, p. 237, § 50, providing that a county is responsible for providing and keeping in good repair bridges, did not create any

The defendant was conducting a private business in connection with the care of its own pauper insane. Under the authorities this renders it liable to the same extent as a private individual.

Neff v. Wellesley, 148 Mass. 498, 2 L. R. A. 500; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485; Worden v. New Bedford, 181 Mass. 23; Tindley v. Salem, 187 Mass. 172; Eastman v. Meredith, 86 N. H. 285.

There is no ground for claiming that the warden of this asylum was an independent officer, over whom the defendant had no control.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 8d ed. § 974 (772); New York & B. Sawmill Lumber Co. v. Brooklyn, 71 N. Y. 584; Appleton v. New York Water Comrs. 2 Hill, 485; Bailey v. New York, 8 Hill, 531, 38 Am. Dec. 669.

liability, as the act did not say the county shall be responsible in damages for the failure to keep the bridges in repair. Barnett v. Contra Costa County, 67 Cal. 77.

And a county was not liable for injuries caused from a defective bridge on a highway, under Miss. Rev. Code, arts. 12-14, 17, 18, 21, providing that boards of county police are charged with the duty of making provisions for the building of bridges, making roads and keeping them in repair in their respective counties, and of dividing the public roads into convenient districts, and of appointing one overseer for each district. Sutton v. Carroll County Bd. of Police, 41 Miss. 236.

In this case it was said that under Rev. Code, 600, art. 162, making it the duty of the overseer to keep the roads in his district in good repair, and Rev. Code, 178, art. 38, providing that the board of police shall contract for building and keeping in repair any bridge which the overseer of the road cannot conveniently make with the labor of the hands under his charge, the action would lie against the overseer or contractor.

And the county of St. Louis was not liable for negligence in not keeping a bridge in repair upon a public road. Reardon v. St. Louis County, 36 Mo. 555. This case was distinguished in Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 313.

So, where injuries were caused by the failure to keep a bridge in safe condition upon a public highway the county was not liable. It was also held that Mo. Const. art. 2, § 21, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, did not apply. Pundman v. St. Charles County, 110 Mo. 564.

In Pundman v. St. Charles County, 110 Mo. 564, it was said that Chester County v. Brower, 117 Pa. 647, which held that a county was liable where the plaintiff's property was damaged by the erection of the abutments of a bridge some 14 feet above the grade of the street in front of his house, and which held that municipal corporations shall make just compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed by the construction of their highways or improvements, did not furnish any support to this action.

And a county was not liable in damages for injuries caused by defects in a bridge arising from the neglect of the county to maintain it, under N. Y. Laws 1837, chap. 388, § 9, providing that in case a bridge of a certain chartered company shall be impassable for the term of fifteen days, or taken down for the purpose of being rebuilt, or if the same shall not be rebuilt within eighteen months, the bridge shall thereupon become a public bridge, and may be maintained at the expense of the county of L. Ensign v. Livingston County Supers. 25 Hun, 20.

39 L. R. A.

The factory law in force at the time of this accident required manufacturing establishments to provide safe mechanical contrivances for the purpose of throwing on and off belts or pulleys. It also provided that machinery of every description in such manufactories shall be properly guarded.

Laws 1890, chap. 398, § 12; Knisley v. Pratt, 75 Hun, 828; Cobb v. Welcher, 75 Hun, 283.

Messrs. Parker, Drake, & Parker, for respondent:

Counties are under no liability in respect of torts, except as imposed (expressly or by necessary implication) by statute.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 963; Addison, Torts, Banks & Bros.'s ed. p. 1298, § 1526; Mazmilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Ensign v. Livingston County Supers.

Under N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 688, declaring counties to be municipal corporations, an action could not be maintained for injuries caused by a defective bridge between two counties, as this statute did not change the liability of counties. Albrecht v. Queens County, 84 Hun, 390; Abern v. Kings County, 89 Hun, 148.

In MARKEY v. QUEENS COUNTY, where plaintiff's intestate lost his life by a temporary bridge being out of repair while the bridge was being reconstructed between the counties of Queens and Kings, it was held that the board of supervisors were executing a certain public duty imposed upon them as the proper public agents in that particular civil division of the state, and that a county could not be subjected to a private action for injuries occurring in or by reason of the performance of the work. It was further held that N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 688, providing that a county is a municipal corporation, and that an action to enforce any liability created or duty enjoined upon it or upon any of its officers or agents for which it is liable, or recover damages for any injuries to any property or rights for which it is liable, shall be in the name of the county, did not import any greater liability than that which already existed before the passage of the law.

In Indiana, Iowa, Maryland, and Pennsylvania, counties have been held liable for injuries caused to travelers by bridges being out of repair, under an implied liability, but in Indiana a long line of such cases has been now overruled.

Indiana.

In JASPER COUNTY COMRS. v. ALLMAN it was held that a county was not liable for damages caused by negligence of its officers in respect to keeping bridges in repair, in the absence of any statute imposing a liability. In this case all the previous cases in Indiana holding a county liable in such case were overruled, and it was held that counties are instrumentalities of the government, and exercise authority given by the state, and are no more liable for the acts or omissions of their officers than the state.

So, following that case, it is held in Johnson County Comrs. v. Hemphill, 14 Ind. App. 219, Cowan v. Adams County Comrs. 142 Ind. App. 690, that a county is not liable for injuries caused by the defective condition of an approach to a bridge.

Nor for negligence in permitting the county bridge to become out of repair. Montgomery County Comrs. v. Coffinberry, 14 Ind. App. 701.

But in Park v. Adams County Comrs. 3 Ind. App. 538, under the previous holding of the courts in this state a county was liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of the contractor employed by the county to repair bridges, who failed to place 25 Hun, 20; Alamango v. Albany County Supers. 25 Hun, 551; Symonds v. Clay County Supers. 71 Ill. 355; Hollenbeck v. Winnebago County, 95 Ill. 155, 85 Am. Rep. 151; Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109; Summers v. Daviess County Comrs. 103 Ind. 262, 53 Am. Rep. 512; Downing v. Mason County, 87 Ky. 208; Dosdall v. Olmsted County, 30 Minn. 96, 44 Am. Rep. 185; Brubham v. Hinds County Supers. 54 Miss. 868, 28 Am. Rep. 352; Kincaid v. Hardin County, 53 Iowa, 480, 36 Am. Rep. 236; Sherbourne v. Yuba County, 21 Cal. 118, 81 Am. Dec. 151; Barnett v. Contra Costa County, 67 Cal. 77; Crowell v. Sonoma County, 25 Cal. 813; Rear-don v. St. Louis County, 86 Mo. 555; Pund-man v. St. Charles County, 110 Mo. 594.

Even a municipal corporation proper, as a city created by special charter, is not liable for the negligence of its officers and agents, except in relation to a certain class of matters.

Western College of Homeopathic Medicine v. Cleveland, 12 Ohio St. 875; Ulrich v. St. Louis, 112 Mo. 138; Maxmilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Ham v. New York, 70 N. Y. 459; Ogg v. Lansing, 35 Iowa, 495, 14 Am. Rep. 499; Calwell v. Boone, 51 Iowa, 687, 38 Am. Rep. 154; Blake v. Pontiac, 49 Ill. App. 543; Buttrick v. Lovell, 1 Allen, 172, 79 Am. Dec. 721; Wheeler v. Cincinnati, 19 Ohio St. 19, 2 Am. Rep. 868; Brinkmeyer v. Evansville, 29 Ind. 187; Toomey v. Albany, 38 N. Y. S. R. 91; Smith v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 506; Hafford v. New Bedford, 16 Gray, 297; Fisher v. Boston, 104 Mass. 87, 6 Am. Rep. 196; Pettingell v. Chelsea, 161 Mass. 368, 24 L. R. A. 426; Howard v. Worcester, 153 Mass. 426, 12 L. R. A. 160; Finch v. Toledo Bd. of Edu.

lights or barricades to warn travelers of the danger.

And a county was held liable for negligent omission to keep in a reasonably safe condition the bridges on the public highways. Morgan County Comrs. v. Pritchett, 85 Ind. 68; Pritchett v. Morgan County Comrs. 62 Ind. 210.

And a county was held liable for injuries caused by a defective bridge, in the absence of express statutory liability, under 1 Ind. Rev. Stat. 1876, p. 239, providing that the board of county commissioners shall cause all bridges therein to be kept in repair. House v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657.

In House v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657, Russell v. Devon County, 2 T. R. 687, was not followed; and it was said that Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109, overruled Brown County Comrs. v. Butt, 2 Ohio, 348.

In an action for injuries caused by the breaking down of a bridge from hauling a heavy load over it, evidence that if the bridge had been kept in good repair, as originally built, it would have sustained a much larger load, should have been admitted. Bonebrake v. Huntington County Comrs. 141 Ind. 62.

In Fulton County Comrs. v. Rickel, 106 Ind. 501, it was said that counties are liable for negligence respecting county bridges.

In State, Roundtree, v. Gibson County Comrs. 80 Ind. 478, 41 Am. Rep. 821, it was said that counties are liable for injuries received because of negligence in not making bridges safe for travel.

And a county was held liable, under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2302, for injuries caused to plaintiff from defects in a bridge, where she and her husband, a good and careful teamster, were driving. It was further held that an allegation that the bridge was on a public highway leading into a city, at or near the city limits on the south side of the city, showed that the bridge was not within the city, and that it was the duty of the county to keep it in repairs. So it was held that Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2302, Rev. Stat. 1894, § 2323, providing that the township superintendent shall place a warning against fast driving at the end of any bridge in his district whose chord is less than 25 feet, does not relieve the county from repairing a bridge which was less than 25 feet. It was also held that the allegation that the bridge was constructed by the county avoided the presumption that it was a township bridge. Jackson County Comrs. v. Nichols, 139 Ind. 611.

And under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881 (Acts 1855, p. 18, § 11), providing that the board of commissioners of such county shall cause all bridges therein to be kept in repair, a county was held liable for injuries 39 L. R. A.

caused by negligently suffering a bridge to remain out of repair, although such action was not authorized expressly by statute; and the county could not escape liability by showing that the bridge had been built, repaired, and maintained by township officials alone, and had never been recognized as a county bridge by the commissioners, where it was erected upon and part of a public highway over which the board of commissioners had exclusive dominion. Vaught v. Johnson County Comrs. 101 Ind. 123.

And a county was held liable in Gibson County Comrs. v. Emmerson, 95 Ind. 579, for negligence in not keeping a bridge in proper repair whereby a party was injured. It was held that 1 Ind. Rev. Stat. 1876, p. 239 (act. March 3, 1855, § 11), providing that the boards of commissioners of the respective counties shall cause all bridges to be kept in repair, continuing in force as Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2302, was not affected by act March 2, 1883, p. 62, providing that the supervisors of roads shall carry into effect all orders of the trustee of the township touching highways and bridges therein, and keep the same in good repair.

And a county was liable for injuries caused through negligence of the county board in suffering a bridge to get out of repair, and this liability was not changed by the act of 1881, providing for the superintendent of roads, or by the act of 1883 in regard to counties. Patton v. Montgomery County Comrs. 96 Ind. 131.

So, evidence of repairs made by the county on a bridge shortly after an accident was competent to show that the bridge was a county bridge, but not for the purpose of showing negligence. Shelby County Comrs. v. Blair, 8 Ind. App. 574.

And where injuries were caused by negligence in failing to keep a bridge on a public highway in repair a county was held liable without regard to the cost of the repairs. It was held that this liability was not relieved by Ind. acts 1883, p. 68, amended by acts 1885, p. 202, § 3, providing that if the probable cost of constructing and repairing any bridge shall exceed $75, the township trustees of the township shall notify the board of commissioners of the necessity of such bridge or culvert; and if, in the opinion of the county commissioners, the public convenience shall require the building or repairing of the same, they shall cause the same to be erected, and the township shall pay $75 of the cost. Sullivan County Comrs. v. Arnett, 116 Ind. 438.

And where injuries were caused by negligence in constructing or maintaining a public bridge a county was liable, and it was not a defense to show irregularities in the proceedings establishing the highway of which the bridge was a part. Knox County Comrs. v. Montgomery, 109 Ind. 62.

80 Ohio St. 37, 27 Am. Rep. 414; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332; McKay v. Buffalo, 9 Hun, 401, Affirmed 74 N. Y. 619; Givens v. Paris, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 705; Whitfield v. Paris, 84 Tex. 432, 15 L. R. A. 788; Curran v. Boston, 151 Mass. 505, 8 L. R. A. 243; Benton v. Boston City Hospital, 140 Mass. 13, 54 Am. Rep. 436.

While municipal corporations proper may be liable in cases where counties would not be, still, neither can be held liable for negligence of its officers or agents in the execution of powers conferred for the public good.

The officers are created by the statute, and the officers' powers and duties defined by the statute, and they are public officers, performing public duties by virtue of the statute, and in the performance of those duties are absolutely independent of the board of supervisors. Whether individually they would be liable to a private person for negligence or not, the county certainly cannot be liable therefor.

Ham v. New York, 70 N. Y. 459; Smith v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 506; Bamber v. Rochester, 26 Hun, 587; Curran v. Boston, 151 Mass. 505, 8 L. R. A. 243.

The fact that the asylum received a small sum from the sale of surplus produce, etc., of its farm, is unimportant.

Curran v. Boston, 151 Mass. 505, 8 L. R. A. 243; Alamango v. Albany County Supers. 25 Hun, 551; People, Society of New York Hospital, v. Purdy, 126 N. Y. 679.

The fact that the plaintiff was an employee at the asylum when she was injured does not affect the question of the county's liability.

Pettingell v. Chelsea, 161 Mass. 368, 24 L. R. A. 426.

It is of no materiality whether in fact the asylum derived some slight revenue from pay-

But a county was not liable for injuries caused from a defective bridge or culvert, where it was not shown over what the bridge spanned, or over what it constituted a passageway; and this was not cured by the averment that "the defendant in its corporate capacity had supervision over, and had control of, the structure." It was further held that the allegation that the plaintiff was without fault was not overcome by an averment that the plaintiff attempted to pass over the bridge with a steam threshing engine. Clark County Comrs. v. Brod, 8 Ind. App. 586.

And where the bridge was within a city, formed one of its streets, and it was not shown that it belonged to the county, or that it was its duty to keep it in repair. Spicer v. Elkhart County Comrs. 126 Ind. 390.

In Goshen v. Myers, 119 Ind. 186, it was said: "It has often been held by this court that it is the duty of the counties in this state to keep their bridges in repair, and that they are liable in damages to those injured, without their fault, for a neglect of that duty. . . . But the county is not liable for a failure to keep in repair bridges over which the board of commissioners has no control."

In Shelby County Comrs. v. Deprez, 87 Ind. 509, it was said that a county was liable for injuries caused by defective approaches to bridges; but in this case the petition failed to show that the bridge was a part of a public highway. As to whether a county could be held liable for a bridge in a city was not decided.

Where the question was as to notice of defects, a county was held liable for injuries caused by the negligent construction of a bridge, and it was no defense that the bridge had been safely used for thirteen years. Where it was shown that the bridge was negligently constructed so as to be unsafe, it was not necessary to allege that the county had notice of its condition. Wabash County Comrs. v. Pearson, 120 Ind. 426.

And in an action against a county for negligence in not keeping a county bridge in repair, it is not necessary to allege that the board of supervisors had notice of the condition of the bridge, and it is no defense that the bridge had been built and maintained by the township, and that they have sufficient means to keep it in repair, as it is the duty of the board of commissioners under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2392, and the act of March 2, 1883, did not relieve the county. Allen County Comrs. v. Bacon, 96 Ind. 81.

So, a county was liable for injuries caused by a defective bridge where its proper officers did not exercise reasonable care in ascertaining the condition, and repairing the same. It was held that no-notice might be inferred where defects existed for such length of time that the county by the exercise of reasonable care could have discovered the same. Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 110 Ind. 479.

So, a county was liable for the breaking down of a bridge, where it had been built for seven or eight years, and the county had been petitioned to erect a new bridge, the present one being unsafe, the timbers having been placed upon the ground and rotted. The duration of time and manner of structure was held to be notice to the county of its dangerous character. Bonebrake v. Huntington County Comrs. 141 Ind. 62.

And where the county not only negligently used unfit and unsafe material, but during eight years of use and exposure to the elements made no inspection of it, and the defects were of such a character as to be easily discernible on inspection, it was held liable. Allen County Comrs. v. Creviston, 133 Ind. 89.

So, a county was liable for injuries caused by negligence in not keeping a county bridge in repair. It was held that notice, express or implied, on the part of the county should be shown in order to recover for failure to repair. It was said that a county adopting a bridge erected by others would be bound to the same extent as though it originally constructed it; but that if it was a township bridge the county would not be liable. Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 98 Ind. 523, 47 Am. Rep. 390.

And a county was liable for injuries caused by failure to keep a bridge in repair, where a horse was frightened by a crooked log placed at the corner of the bridge to keep the earth from washing away, and there was no railing, and it was shown that two members of the county board had crossed the bridge some months before, but had not noticed that there was no railing. It was further held that Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2392, requiring county boards to keep bridges on public highways in repair, was not repealed by act of 1885, and that the duty resting on the county board to repair bridges applied to approaches and railings where the same were needed to make a bridge reasonably safe for travel by those who exercised ordinary care. Sullivan County Comrs. v. Sisson, 2 Ind. App. 311.

Where a county was held liable for injuries from a defective bridge it was further held that it was no defense to show that the plaintiff was driving in the dark. Jackson County Comrs. v. Nichols, 139 Ind. 611.

And where a recovery was had for injuries caused by a bridge being out of repair, and the verdict was that "had the timber in said bridge been sound the same would have carried said load over safely," and the verdict did not show that the ing patients admitted by agreement made between the warden and individuals.

Benton v. Boston City Hospital, 140 Mass. 18, 54 Am. Rep. 486; Doune v. Harper Hospital, 101 Mich. 555, 25 L. R. A. 602; McDonald v. Massachusetts Gen. Hospital, 120 Mass. 436, 31 Am. Rep. 529; Murlaugh v. St. Louis, 44 Mo. 479.

Defendant owed plaintiff no duty in the way of furnishing a finger bar or guard.

Hickey v. Taaffe, 105 N. Y. 26; Sweeney v. Berlin & J. Envelope Co. 101 N. Y. 520, 54 Am. Rep. 722; Harley v. Buffalo Car Mfg. Co. 142 N. Y. 31; Sisco v. Lehigh & H. R. Co. 145 N. Y. 296; French v. Aulls, 72 Hun, 442.

Defendant owed no duty to plaintiff to provide any device for shifting the belt other than was furnished.

Even if it were the duty of defendant to provide safeguards, and the same had been provided, the accident would not have been averted, and whether the injuries to plaintiff would have been different or less severe is merely conjecture.

Pauley v. Steam Gauge & Lantern Co. 181 N. Y. 90, 15 L. R. A. 194; Babcock v. Fitchburg R. Co. 140 N. Y. 808.

The warden was a physician, not a machinist. He was selected for that position, not because of his knowledge of machinery, but because of his knowledge of the proper method of treating the insane. The asylum was primarily a hospital, and the laundry department, like the kitchen department, was but an incident. The rule of duty therefore to be applied in this case is the rule applicable where the master and servant are to be charged with equal knowledge and ignorance.

Marsh v. Chickering, 101 N. Y. 896; Thomp. Neg. 1009; French v. Aulls, 72 Hun, 442; Benfield v. Vacuum Oil Co. 75 Hun, 209.

The injury sustained by plaintiff resulted load was unusual, the deceased was held not guilty of contributory negligence. Allen County Comrs. v. Creviston, 138 Ind. 39.

And the petition stated a cause of action where it alleged the negligent use of defective material in the construction of a bridge, and the failure to keep the same in repair, whereby an engine, boiler, and wagon fell through the bridge, without fault or negligence on the part of plaintiff's intestate, causing his death. It was held that the attempt to cross the bridge with an engine, boiler, and wagon was not negligence per se. Allen County Comrs. v. Creviston, 138 Ind. 39.

And it was held that if the county was bound to know of the defective condition of the bridge by reason of the long continuance of such condition this would not charge the deceased, and contributory negligence was not shown by hauling an engine weighing over 11,000 pounds, where the deceased had threshed in that neighborhood for three years, and had used the bridge a few days before, and did not know that it was unsafe, and examined it carefully before attempting to cross. La Porte County Comrs. v. Ellsworth, 9 Ind. App. 566.

And where traction engines were in use in the neighborhood for many years previous to the construction of the bridge, it was held that the bridge was presumed to have been built in anticipation of taking such engines over it. Bonebrake v. Huntington County Comrs. 141 Ind. 62.

So, a county was liable for injuries caused from a defective bridge, although plaintiff had knowledge of the kind of timber of which the bridge was constructed, and of the length of time the timbers had been in the bridge, as he would have the right to assume that the decayed timber would be removed and the defects repaired. Apple v. Marion County Comrs. 127 Ind. 553.

But in Vermillion County Comrs. v. Chippe, 181 Ind. 56, 16 L. R. A. 223, where a man was killed in hauling a traction engine over a bridge, and the bridge had been built for about fifteen years before traction engines were used on highways, and it was tested about two weeks before the accident by the county expert, it was held that if he made a mistake the county cannot be charged with negligence by reason of such mistake. "The duty of the county was to exercise reasonable care in selecting a proper person to examine and repair the bridge, and to require of him the exercise of his skill, and if it did so, and the bridge still remained unsafe, the county was not liable," and it was error to allow the plaintiff to prove that it was usual and ordinary for traction engines to pass over other highways and bridges than the one in controversy, and the fact that one engine had passed over this bridge shortly before this accident did not make that the usual and ordinary mode of travel over it. It was held that one who uses a bridge and subjects the same to an extraordinary strain cannot recover damages.

And a county was not liable for damages for injuries caused by a public bridge being out of repair and dangerous, where the plaintiff knew that such was its condition, although the bridge was being used by the public and plaintiff exercised care in going upon it. Morrison v. Shelby County Comrs. 116 Ind. 481.

And it was no defense that the bridge was over an artificial ditch, as the county should keep all bridges upon highways safe regardless of the kind of stream or ditch which they span. Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 110 Ind. 479.

And a county is liable whether the bridge is on a natural or artificial watercourse. Jackson County Comrs. v. Nichols, 139 Ind. 611.

An action for causing death by want of a railing over a county bridge across a mill race on a highway, where the horse shied and there was no railing, an allegation in the complaint that the bridge complained of was constructed at a point "where the defendant had the right to and it was its duty to construct it," was a conclusion, and did not show that the county had authority to build it; but another allegation that the bridge complained of was a part of a public highway in said county, and was situated and located over and across a mill race through which a large quantity of water flowed rapidly, was sufficient to show that it was a county bridge within the meaning of Ind. Stat. 1881, § 2892, providing that the board of county commissioners shall cause all bridges in the county to be kept in repair, and §§ 2880, 2885, authorizing such board to erect bridges over streams and watercourses. Evidence that the county board exercised control over it by looking after and repairing it was competent for the purpose of showing that it had adopted it and considered it a part of the highway. Shelby County Comrs. v. Blair, 8 Ind. App. 574.

And in that case it was held that the law was settled in Indiana that the board of commissioners are required to keep all bridges in the county over watercourses, either natural or artificial, which are part of the highway, and a failure on the part of the county in the performance of this duty renders the county liable to a traveler for damages.

And a county was liable for injuries caused by defects in a bridge over a natural watercourse on a highway, under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2892, providing that the board of commissioners of such county from conditions, the risk of which was assumed by plaintiff when she entered into the employment of operating the mangle.

Hickey v. Taaffe, 105 N. Y. 26; Buckley v. Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. 113 N. Y. 540; Ogley v. Miles, 139 N. Y. 458; Appel v. Buffalo, N. Y. & P. R. Co. 111 N. Y. 550; Crown v. Orr, 140 N. Y. 450; DeForest v. Jewett, 88 N. Y. 284; Cowhill v. Roberts, 71 Hun, 127; French v. Aulla, 72 Hun, 442.

The very accident suggests carelessness on plaintiff's part, and she is bound to prove her freedom from negligence, which, we submit, she has failed to do.

Babcock v. Fitchburg R. Co. 140 N. Y. 308.

Bartlett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff appeals from an order, made shall cause all bridges therein to be kept in repair. Parke County Comrs. v. Wagner, 138 Ind. 609.

In Parke County Comrs. v. Wagner, 138 Ind. 609, it was said: "The cases in this state are in confusion upon this question, many apparently holding that the liability arises from the fact that the bridge forms a part of the highway, and not depending upon the size of the bridge or the character of the stream or body of water crossed by it. Sullivan County Comrs. v. Arnett, 116 Ind. 438; Hamilton County Comrs. v. State, Stephenson, 118 Ind. 179; Knox County Comrs. v. Montgomery, 109 Ind. 69; Vaught v. Johnson County Comrs. 101 Ind. 123; Allen County Comrs. v. Bacon, 96 Ind. 31; Gibson County Comrs. v. Emmerson, 95 Ind. 579; Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 93 Ind. 523, 47 Am. Rep. 390; Madison County Comrs. v. Brown, 89 Ind. 43; Morgan County Comrs. v. Pritchett, 85 Ind. 69; House v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657; Harris v. Vigo County Comrs. 121 Ind. 299; Owen County Comrs. v. Washington Twp. 121 Ind. 373, and probably other cases. In Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 110 Ind. 479, and Boone County Comrs. v. Mutchler, 137 Ind. 140, it was expressly held that the size of the bridge, and the character of the stream or ditch crossed were unimportant if the bridge was a part of the public highway, and liability was extended to bridges crossing ditches for the drainage of wet lands. In Carroll County Comrs. v. Bailey, 122 Ind. 46; Clark County Comrs. v. Brod, 8 Ind. App. 585; Shelby County Comrs. v. Castetter, 7 Ind. App. 309; Shelby County Comrs. v. Blair, 8 Ind. App. 574,—it was held that Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2892 (Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3232), should be construed in connection with other provisions of the statute requiring counties to build and repair bridges, and when so construed the authority of the counties was to build bridges only over watercourses, and the duty of counties was only to repair such bridges as they were authorized to build. The latest decision by this court is that of Boone County Comrs. v. Mutchler, 137 Ind. 140, and if we found it necessary to reconcile the conflict suggested, and to adhere to the holding in that case, it would be unnecessary to decide whether the definitions of a watercourse given by the trial court in this case were correct, since they could in no way have harmed the appellant, but would have required more from the appellee than necessary to establish his cause of action." And the court concludes "The channel should have a supply of living water, though it is not necessary that the supply should be sufficient at all times, or most of the time, to flow the entire length of the channel."

A county was liable for injuries caused by the negligent construction of a bridge over a ditch, under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2892, providing that the board on a motion heard at the general term in the first instance, granting a new trial after verdict at the Monroe circuit in her favor.

39 L. R. A.

The plaintiff, an employee of the Monroe County Insane Asylum, was severely injured while operating a machine known as a steam mangle, which was used in the laundry.

At the trial it was insisted on behalf of the defendant that the county of Monroe was not liable in any event; that assuming its liability, the plaintiff had failed to make out a cause of action.

As we are of opinion that the county of Monroe is not liable under the facts as disclosed in this record, it is unnecessary to determine whether the plaintiff was entitled to go to the jury.

The plaintiff was injured February 11, 1891. Before this action was commenced the county law of 1892 was in force, but it is unnecessary of commissioners of such county shall cause all bridges therein to be kept in repair, where plaintiff's horse was frightened by a hog in a ditch on a free gravel road, a public highway, and backed the buggy over the side of the bridge, there being no railing to protect the same. It was held that another allegation that the county negligently permitted the adjoining owner to allow his animals to run in the ditch, thereby frightening the horse, stated no cause of action; but this did not affect the cause of action as to the construction of the bridge, or relieve the county from liability. It was also held that it was not necessary to allege notice where the cause of action arose from faulty construction. It was further held that the fact that the horse was driven by plaintiff's daughter, a married woman who was a skilful driver, did not show contributory negligence. Boone County Comrs. v. Mutchler, 137 Ind. 140.

But in an action for injuries caused by the breaking down of a bridge a demurrer was properly overruled to an answer averring "that the bridge or culvert complained of was not a bridge or structure which spanned a watercourse with defined bed and banks; but was a small bridge or culvert made to carry the surface water from said road away from it after heavy rains," as under a general denial in the answer these facts might be proved. Bonebrake v. Huntington County Comrs. 141 Ind. 62.

A county was not liable for damages resulting from a defective bridge described as one "spanning a ditch which made a deep break in said highway," and "which was a natural outlet for surface water from adjoining lands, and for waters that flowed from under a railroad near by, being dry portions of the year only." Reinhart v. Martin County Comrs. 9 Ind. App. 572.

In Reinhart v. Martin County Comrs. 9 Ind. App. 572, the case of Boone County Comrs. v. Mutchler, 137 Ind. 140, was distinguished, as in that case the ditch was regarded as a public ditch, and it was constructed by the board of commissioners as a part of a free gravel road.

In an action to recover damages for injuries from an unsafe bridge, it must be alleged that the unsafe condition of the bridge was the cause of the injury. An allegation that the bridge was unsafe, and the plaintiff's horse was injured, was held not to show any connection between the two things. Harris v. Vigo County Comrs. 121 Ind. 299.

And a county was liable for negligence in allowing a slab bridge over a pond to remain out of repair, causing injury, and the fact that it was in this condition for six months was sufficient to imply notice. A recovery was not prevented by the fact that plaintiff knew that it was somewhat out to examine its provisions, as the status of the county of Monroe on the 11th day of February, 1891, must determine its liability.

Prior to the year 1863 the county of Monroe cared in part for its insane in a department of the county poorhouse. By chapter 82, Laws of 1863, it was enacted that the insane asylum of the county of Monroe should be a separate and distinct institution from that of the Monroe county poorhouse, and the board of supervisors were placed in control and authorized to elect a warden, who was to hold office for three years, and a board of three trustees for a like term.

The warden was constituted the chief officer of the asylum, subject to the regulations established by the board of supervisors; all purchases for the asylum were to be made by the warden under the direction of the trustees; all contracts with the attendants and assistants were to be made in the official names of the trustees; the warden was also required to make out and deliver to the trustees annually an inventory of all property belonging to the asylum; the warden was also authorized to make contracts for the support of insane persons of the county, and by the direction of the board of supervisors or the trustees to demand from the state lunatic asylum all persons who were chargeable to the county of Monroe or to any town or city in the county.

It was further provided that no insane person residing in the county of Monroe and likely to become a county charge should thereafter be admitted to the state lunatic asylum without the written consent of the trustees of the Monroe county asylum or the chairman of the board of supervisors.

By chapter 638, Laws of 1870, it was made the duty of the trustees to determine all quesof repair. Madison County Comrs. v. Brown, 89 Ind. 48.

And a county was liable for injuries caused from a defective bridge on a public highway which spanned a watercourse. La Porte County Comrs. v. Ellsworth, 9 Ind. App. 566.

In Parke County Comrs. v. Sappenfield, 10 Ind. App. 609, where a recovery was allowed for negligent failure to erect and maintain suitable railings upon a county bridge, it was held that the evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to find that the bridge was constructed over a natural watercourse—a "branch," as one of the witnesses styled it.

And a verdict for damages for injuries from failure to erect barriers on a bridge was not set aside on conflicting evidence. Parke County Comrs. v. Sappenfield, 10 Ind. App. 609.

But a county was not liable for damages caused by a defective culvert on a public highway, where such culvert drained water from a ravine only in case of rain, under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2885, requiring the county commissioners to repair or build bridges over watercourses. This was held not to be a watercourse, and a distinction was made between the care required for bridges and highways. Carroll County Comrs. v. Bailey, 122 Ind. 46.

Iowa.

In Iowa counties are held liable for failure to exercise care in the construction or repair of county bridges and a notice to any one of the county agents or officers will render the county liable for injuries thus caused. This rule has been limited to bridges of such size as the county should take care of, and does not extend to small bridges.

And a county was liable for injuries caused by a defective bridge. In this case the court recognized that the question was one upon which there was conflict, but refused to change the rule of that state. It was held that the county was bound to exercise such care as reasonably prudent and careful men used in the conduct and management of their own affairs of like importance. Cooper v. Mills County, 60 Iowa, 360.

And in this case where the court instructed the jury, in substance, that if the bridge was properly built, though from a plan in the builder's head, such plan will be sufficient, and a jurymen wrote on a paper planned to that part of the instruction "not sufficient," such writing was held to be only an irregularity, and did not have the force of a special verdict, although perhaps some of the jury may have understood that as an interrogatory.

Where an action was brought for $20,000 damages for injuries caused by a defective bridge, and the petition was amended increasing the claim to $35,000, 89 L. R. A.

and the amendment was not filed within two years from the time the cause of action occurred, as required by statute for bringing an action, and the action was brought within the proper time, the amendment was properly allowed, and a recovery could be had for damages within the amount claimed in the petition and amended petition. Cooper v. Mills County, 60 Iowa, 350.

And evidence by an expert bridge builder as to the effect of decay, and the ordinary life of bridge timber, was held competent as tending to show notice to the county of defects, and it was further held that a county should provide a competent person to inspect the bridges if the board had not that skill. Morgan v. Fremont County, 92 Iowa, 644.

A notice to one of the board of supervisors of a county for defects in a bridge is notice to the county, where it is the duty of the board to act, and a meeting of the board is held after the notice and before the accident. Morgan v. Fremont County, 92 Iowa, 644.

A verdict for $1,000 was held not excessive for injuries caused by defective bridges, where plaintiff was lamed, his jaw injured, some teeth broken, and his injuries caused much suffering. Morgan v. Fremont County, 92 Iowa, 644.

A county was liable for negligence in the construction of a bridge, and was required to exercise reasonable skill and care in adopting a plan, and it could not negligently or carelessly adopt an unsafe and insufficient plan on account of its cheapness, and be allowed to escape all liability for damages resulting from the insufficiency of the plan. It was also held that the bridge may have been built so long and become so old that the defendant in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence ought to have known that it would in such time become rotten and unsafe; and, further, that if the members of the county board did not possess the requisite skill to discharge the duty of inspection, then it was the duty of the board to appoint or provide someone possessing such skill, and to have all county bridges under their care examined as frequently as a man of ordinary prudence and care would deem necessary for the safety of the public. But it was further held that if the bridge had stood for a period greater than the average life of timber of which it was composed, and had been rotten and unsafe for some months, the county would not be liable unless some member of the board in the exercise of reasonable care should have known of such condition. Ferguson v. Davis County, 57 Iowa, 601.

In Huff v. Poweshiek County, 60 Iowa, 529, it was held that it was a question for the jury whether the county was negligent in allowing bridge timbers tions in relation to the indigent insane as to whether their maintenance was properly a charge upon a specified town within the county of Monroe, or upon the city of Rochester, or upon the county of Monroe; the trustees were also empowered when any lunatic, not indigent, was placed in the asylum, to charge his estate, or the person legally responsible, for his maintenance, and to collect the same.

It will thus be observed that the county of Monroe, being legally chargeable as one of the political divisions of the state with the care of its insane, saw fit in 1863, with the consent of the legislature, to undertake the discharge of that duty through the instrumentality of a county asylum.

In other words, the county of Monroe from that time shared with the state the burden of caring for the insane, withdrew from the state lunatic asylum all indigent insane for whose maintenance it was liable, and secured legislation requiring all the pauper insane of the county to enter its own asylum.

When an insane person is deprived of his liberty and the custody of his property, placed in close confinement, and separated from family and friends, it is an extreme exercise of the police power by the state, or some political division thereof, for the protection of society and to promote the best interests of the unfortunate victim of mental alienation.

It therefore follows that the county of Monroe, while acting under the statutes referred to, was engaged in the discharge of a most important public duty and, consequently, not liable to the plaintiff in damages by reason of her injuries. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 693; Addison, Torts, Banks' ed. p. 1298, § 1526.

In Maximilian v. New York, 63 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468, this court laid down the rules of law that control this case. The plaintiff sought to recover damages for the death of her to become rotten, and if the bridge was unsafe the county was liable if any member of the board of supervisors knew of its unsafe condition, or by the exercise of ordinary care and watchfulness would have known of it.

In Roby v. Appanoose County, 68 Iowa, 114, it was held that notice to the agents or proper officers of a county of the condition of the approach to a bridge was notice to the county in order to hold it liable for injuries caused thereby.

But it was held that the county was not liable where it was not shown to have had notice of the defect, or that it was of such duration as to imply notice. It was said that a county is liable for injuries caused by a defective bridge which it has neglected to repair, where the railing is insufficient. Davis v. Allamakee County, 40 Iowa, 217.

And where a county had obstructed an unsafe bridge by barriers, which had been removed at the time of the accident without the knowledge of the county, it was not liable unless sufficient time had elapsed after the removal of the same, and before the accident, for the county, in the exercise of ordinary care and vigilance, to have discovered the fact, and to have caused the barriers to be replaced. Weirs v. Jones County, 80 Iowa, 361.

And under Iowa Code, § 527, providing that all public bridges exceeding 40 feet in length over any stream crossing a county street or highway shall be constructed and kept in repair by the county, and § 308, requiring the board of supervisors of each county to provide for the erection of all bridges which may be necessary to keep the same in repair, and § 990, providing that when notified in writing that any bridge or any portion of the public highway is unsafe the supervisor shall be liable for all damages after a reasonable time, and if there is in the district any bridge erected or maintained by the county, then he shall on such notice of the unsafe condition of such bridge obstruct the passage and use diligence in notifying the board of supervisors, and if he fails to obstruct or notify he shall be liable for all damages, providing that nothing shall be construed to relieve the county from liability for the defects of such bridge,—a county was liable for all bridges which exceeded 40 feet in length, and the liability for constructing and maintaining bridges less than 40 feet was not affected by these provisions, but depended upon the necessity and importance to the public and the ability of the road district. The county was liable where there were two spans 20 feet apart, one of which was over 40 feet and the smaller one not more than 40 feet long, and the smaller one was out of repair causing personal injury. Casey v. Tama County, 75 Iowa, 655.

That a bridge was wholly within B. county did not exonerate T. county, under Iowa Acts, 17th Gen. Assen. authorizing the construction of county bridges on county-line roads wholly within one of the two counties interested where a suitable site cannot be obtained on the county line, where the defendant rebuilt the span over the main stream and put piling under the other after this law went into effect. Casey v. Tama County, 75 Iowa, 655.

In this case it was held that it was a question for the jury to determine whether or not the road in question on which was the bridge was a public highway.

A county was liable for injuries caused by defects in a county bridge upon a public highway, where such bridge was erected and maintained by the county. Krause v. Davis County, 44 Iowa, 141; Hughes v. Muscatine County, 44 Iowa, 672.

And was liable for injuries resulting from the negligent construction of a county bridge, and from the failure to keep the same in repair, although it could have been remedied by the road supervisor at a small expense. Huston v. Iowa County, 43 Iowa, 456.

And for injuries caused by a county bridge being out of repair, a county was liable under the Iowa statute making it the duty of the county in which the bridge is situated to build bridges and make all repairs requiring an extraordinary expenditure of money. It was held that this duty involved the corresponding obligation or liability to pay damages for the injuries resulting from the neglect of the same. Wilson v. Jefferson County, 13 Iowa, 181.

And a county was liable for injuries caused by a county bridge being out of repair, and all that was incumbent on the plaintiff was to show that this road existed and was traveled as a public highway in order to bring it within the duty of a county to keep it in repair. It was further held that an obstruction and notice warning the public that it was dangerous to use the bridge would not excuse, where it was not shown that such notice and obstruction existed at the time of the injury or that plaintiff had seen the same. Brown v. Jefferson County, 16 Iowa, 389.

The fact that it was the duty of the road supervisors to make slight repairs about a county bridge or its approach would not relieve the county from liability for injuries caused thereby, as a like obligation rests upon the county under Iowa Code, § 527. Roby v. Appanoose County, 68 Iowa, 114.

In this case it was said that it would be presumed that the bridge was a county bridge where the instructions were based upon that theory, and there was no evidence in the record to the contrary.

But a county is not liable for injuries caused intestate, who was killed by an ambulance wagon which was driven by an employee of the commissioners of charities and corrections.

It was held that when the city of New York, by legislative enactment, was required to elect or appoint an officer to perform a public duty laid not upon it, but upon the officer, in which it had no private interest, and from which it derived no special advantage, such officer is not a servant or agent of the municipality for whose acts it is liable, even though the officer had in charge and was negligently using corporate property.

Judge Folger said (p. 164, 30 Am. Rep. 470): "There are two kinds of duties which are imposed upon a municipal corporation. One is of that kind which arises from the grant of a special power, in the exercise of which the municipality is as a legal individual; the other is of that kind which arises, or is implied, from the use of political rights under the general by a defective bridge, where such bridge is in a town which has been recently changed into a city of the second class, under Iowa Rev. Stat. §§ 1078-1097, providing that cities of the second class shall be invested with the power to control its own bridges and charged with the duty of keeping them in repair. McCullom v. Black Hawk County, 21 Iowa, 410. But this case was remanded for a new trial with leave to amend, if possible, to show that at the time the accident happened there had been no regular annual election for the city officers as a city of the second class, as the county would then be liable.

And a county was not liable for a defective bridge where the same was a small bridge, 12 feet span, and a complete and safe bridge with railings could have been built for $75, and the defect in the bridge was the absence of railings, which could have been put on at a cost of $5, and the road district had employed men to erect the same, and there was an absence of evidence that the county ever had anything to do with the bridge. It was said that if it had been a large bridge the county would have been liable. Chandler v. Freemont County, 42 Iowa, 58.

And where it was not shown that the county had control over or constructed the bridge there was no liability; and the fact that it subsequently made an appropriation for repairing or reconstructing could not be shown. Titler v. Iowa County, 48 Iowa, 90.

So, where the bridge was small and one which it was the duty of the officers of the particular road district to keep in repair, the county was not liable. Taylor v. Davis County, 40 Iowa, 295.

A distinction was made between expensive bridges and small bridges, although in this case the county board of supervisors had sent a committee to examine the work including the bridge, and then established the road where the road had been changed. This bridge had not been erected by the county or by the county funds.

And a county was not liable for injuries caused by a defective culvert or bridge which was a part of an ordinary road or highway, as counties were not charged by law with the duty of keeping in repair the ordinary highways or roads, but this duty was committed to the several road districts whose officers acted independently and in the exercise of their duty were not under the control of the county authorities, and no right of action existed against the county in respect to defective roads. Soper v. Henry County, 26 Iowa, 289.

In that case it was said under Iowa Rev. Stat. § 312, ¶ 18, § 710, authorizing county authorities to make and repair bridges and levy a bridge law, in the exercise of which it is as a sovereign. The former power is private, and is used for private purposes; the latter is public and is used for public purposes (Lloyd v. New York, 5 N. Y. 874, 55 Am. Dec. 347). . . . But where the power is intrusted to it as one of the political divisions of the state, and is conferred, not for the immediate benefit of the municipality, but as a means to the exercise of the sovereign power for the benefit of all citizens, the corporation is not liable for nonuser, nor for misuser by the public agents. Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 802."

In the case at bar, it is true, we are not dealing with a municipal corporation, for in February, 1891, the county of Monroe was a political division of the state, and at most only a quasi corporation; but, nevertheless, the reasoning in the opinion just cited is applicable.

By the act of 1863 the county of Monroe, through its board of supervisors, was required tax, counties were liable for injuries caused by the condition of such bridge requiring extraordinary expense to build and maintain, but were not liable for small bridges which it was the duty of the road-district officers to maintain.

So, a county was liable for negligence in the construction and maintenance of the approaches to its bridges the same as it would be for a bridge, and the fact that a part of the cost of the construction of the county bridge was contributed by others did not relieve the county from liability. Albee v. Floyd County, 46 Iowa, 177.

It was held that the question whether or not the approach was a part of the bridge was one of fact for the jury. It was also held that where the bridge was of such an extent that it required a large expenditure of money to construct it, it would be a county bridge, although the repairs could be made for a small amount, and the bridge had been built by others than the agents of the county. Moreland v. Mitchell County, 40 Iowa, 394.

And where a trestle work was made between a road and a bridge intended to be filled on both ends of the trestle work, but the fill was incomplete, and a man in driving along the road at night approached the trestle work when he was on the embankment and got out of the buggy to investigate and fell off because there was no railing, it was held that the jury were authorized to find that it was a continuation of the traveled highway, and when connected with the trestle work the whole formed an approach to the bridge. It was also held that if the embankment was intended to connect the trestle work, and one fill was made first, which when connected with the trestle work, made it dangerous to persons traveling along the highway, the county would be liable even if there was negligence on the part of the contractor, as it would be the duty of the county to see that suitable barriers were erected. It was further held that the jury were authorized to find that plaintiff was rightfully passing over both the earth and trestle work, although it had not been used before for public travel, as someone must be the first to pass over a newly constructed or repaired highway, and that whether he was guilty of contributory negligence or not was a question for the jury. Van Winter v. Henry County, 61 Iowa, 684.

The questions whether an approach to a bridge is a part of the same or forms a part of the highway, and also whether the accident occurred upon the approach, where there are no barriers on an approach of the height of 30 feet, should both be submitted to the jury at the same time. Newcomb v. Montgomery County, 79 Iowa, 487.

Whether an approach to a county bridge built by by the legislature to elect a warden and trustees of its insane asylum to perform an important public duty in which it had no private interest, and from which it derived no special advantage. The warden and trustees, when so elected, were in no legal sense the agents of the county of Monroe, but were public officers engaged in the discharge of duties which involved the exercise of the police power, and in which the general public were interested.

While the county of Monroe, by its board of supervisors, was empowered to enact general rules and regulations for the government of the asylum, and to elect its warden and trustees, it had no power to interfere directly with the management of the institution unless the warden so elected was guilty of misconduct, when he could be removed by the board of supervisors.

The nonliability of counties and also of municipal and other corporations having special charters for the acts of their officers when engaged in the discharge of public duties, and to that extent exercising acts of sovereignty, is established by many cases. Ensign v. Livingston County Supers. 25 Hun, 20; Alamango v. Albany County Supers. 25 Hun, 551; Ham v. New York, 70 N. Y. 459; Smith v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 506; Benton v. Boston City Hospital, 140 Mass. 18, 54 Am. Rep. 436; Curran v. Boston, 151 Mass. 505, 8 L. R. A. 243.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff, evidently appreciating the force of the general rule to which we have adverted, sought to show that the case at bar was, by reason of special facts, not within its operation.

It is insisted that the defendant, at the time of this accident, was not only caring for the pauper insane of Monroe county, but also for other patients through contracts made for that purpose.

There is no evidence that the county of the road district was a part of the bridge was a question for the jury in an action for injuries caused from the dangerous condition of the bridge and approach, and it was erroneous for the court to hold that, as a matter of law, the bridge and approach being more than 40 feet long are to be considered together as constituting a county bridge. Nims v. Boone County, 68 Iowa, 642, 66 Iowa, 272.

So, in Nims v. Boone County, 66 Iowa, 272, it was said that in Moreland v. Mitchell, 40 Iowa, 394, it was held that whether an approach to a bridge constitutes a part of the bridge, for negligence in the construction of which the county is liable, is a question of fact for the determination of the jury; and the court said it was held by the court that the jury in that case rightfully found the approach to be part of the bridge, but there are many differences between the facts of that case and this.

And in Roby v. Appanoose County, 63 Iowa, 118, it was held that an approach to a bridge may be a part of the bridge, for negligence in the construction and repair of which the county would be liable. In this case the evidence did not show who built the approach.

The plaintiff must show that he has exercised due care in order to recover.

A county was liable for injuries caused by a county bridge being out of repair, and the plaintiff was held not to be guilty of contributory negligence where he got out of his wagon and examined the bridge before crossing, although one end had settled about 2 feet but appeared to him to be strong, and there was no other place to cross. Kendall v. Lucas County, 26 Iowa, 395.

And an instruction that if the defect in a bridge was "observable to all" the defendant's officers would be presumed to have known of it did not show that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in going upon the bridge. Homan v. Franklin County, 98 Iowa, 692. See former trial, 90 Iowa, 185.

And it was held that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence in driving on a bridge when he had no knowledge of any defect therein, although the accident happened by reason of decay and rottenness of its timbers. Huff v. Poweshiek County, 60 Iowa, 529.

But a county was not liable for injuries caused by want of a railing on a bridge where the same had existed for two years, which was known to the deceased, who, in walking on the bridge at night carrying a lantern and reading a letter, stumbled and fell and was killed, as his contributory negligence would bar a recovery, although such accident may have been caused by a large spike projecting from the floor, but there was no evidence that the county had knowledge of the same. Dale v. Webster County, 76 Iowa, 370.

And where injury was caused in an attempt to cross a defective bridge with a threshing outfit and steam engine weighing 8,250 lbs. where the plaintiff laid 3x12 inch planks 16 feet long for the wheels of the engine and moved at a slow speed, it was a question for the jury whether the use of such bridge was contributory negligence, and whether such use was reasonable, proper, and probable in view of the extent, kind, and nature of the travel and business on that road. Yordy v. Marshall County, 80 Iowa, 405.

In Walker v. Decatur County, 67 Iowa, 307, it was held erroneous to exclude evidence offered by the county to show that there was another equally convenient and perfectly safe road by which the plaintiff might have reached his destination and escaped injury from an unsafe bridge. It was further held that an instruction that if he knew the bridge was dangerous and could have reached his destination as readily by a different road, the use of this bridge constituted contributory negligence, was erroneous, in that the mere fact that it was unsafe would not of itself prevent a recovery, and that whether plaintiff exercised reasonable discretion in attempting to pass over was a question for the jury.

It was said that a county was liable for an injury to a person caused by a defective county bridge; but that this doctrine would not be carried any further and apply to anything else, as it was recognized as contrary to other decisions. Kincaid v. Hardin County, 53 Iowa, 430, 38 Am. Rep. 238. The court attempted to make a distinction between bridges and court-houses in respect to liability for defects on the ground that the county had an option as to building bridges but none as to court-houses.

Maryland.

In Maryland counties are held liable for injuries to travelers from the defective condition of the county bridges.

Where a party injured was negligent, but his negligence only remotely contributed to produce the accident caused by a small bridge being out of repair, he would be entitled to recover providing the road was in disrepair through defendant's negligence, and if the consequences of plaintiff's negligence would have been thereby avoided. Kennedy v. Cecil County Comrs. 69 Md. 65.

And under Md. Code, art. 23, § 1, declaring county commissioners to be a corporation, and to have power to appoint supervisors, and to have charge and control over county roads and bridges, and to Monroe was caring for insane patients not residing in the county, for a consideration, but if such were the case it would be without warrant of law, as we think a fair construction of § 7 of chapter 82 of Laws of 1868, limits the contracts to be made "to any individual of said county" who wishes to contract as to the care of the insane of Monroe county.

There can be no doubt that the committee of a lunatic, or anyone legally liable to support him, should, in the first instance, be required to pay for his maintenance and the income derived in this manner is in no sense a source of profit to the county so that it would be deemed in law as conducting a private business.

We may also consider in this connection the suggestion that as the asylum received a small sum annually from the sale of surplus farm product it was to be treated as engaged in a private enterprise resulting in profits.

have power to appoint all officers, agents, and servants as are required for county purposes, the county of Baltimore was liable for injuries caused by neglecting to repair a bridge on one of the public highways, and it was held that if the act of April 11, 1874 (Acts 1874, chap. 274), repealing local legislation for that county in relation to road supervisors until the January succeeding the accident, suspended power under that act, there was still general power under the Code. Baltimore County Comrs. v. Baker, 44 Md. 1.

Under Md. Code, art. 23, providing that the county commissioners of each county shall have charge of and control over county roads and bridges, and authorizing them to build and repair bridges, a county was liable for injuries caused by a defective bridge, where a bridge was erected by a canal company at the crossing of a highway and burned down, and the canal company erected another bridge at the same place. It was held that, although it was the duty of the canal company to maintain the bridge, and it was liable to the party injured or to reimburse the county, the county was also liable for injuries occurring. Eylerv. Alleghany County Comrs. 49 Md. 257, 33 Am. Rep. 249.

Where it was the duty of a canal company to keep a bridge in repair and it had notice of the suit, the county had a remedy over against the canal company for the amount of a judgment against the county. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Alleghany County Comrs. 57 Md. 201, 40 Am. Rep. 430.

The burden of proving contributory negligence in an action against a county for injuries caused from a defective bridge is on the defendant. The simple fact of the existence of a hole in the bridge with the knowledge of the plaintiff is not sufficient to bar a recovery against the county, where it is not shown that the hole rendered the bridge practically impassable. Prince George's County Comrs. v. Burgees, 61 Md. 20, 48 Am. Rep. 88. Pennsylvania.

In Pennsylvania a county is liable to travelers for injuries received from a bridge being out of repair or insecure, where the county has notice of its condition. The fact that the plaintiff had reason to believe that the bridge was unsafe was held not to bar a recovery, as permitting the public to use it would hold the county liable; but it would not be liable where a statutory notice to repair was required but not given.

So, under Pa. act June 13, 1836, relating to roads, highways, and bridges, providing that county bridges on the line of adjoining counties shall be maintained and kept in repair by the commissioners of such counties at the joint and equal charge

The revenue derived from both of the sources referred to is merely incidental and tends to some little extent to lessen the public burden assumed by the county of Monroe. Curran v. Boston, 151 Mass. 505, 510, 8 L. R. A. 243; Alamango v. Albany County Supers. 25 Hun, 551-553; People, Society of New York Hospital, v. Purdy, 126 N. Y. 679, and 58 Hun, 886.

We have considered the other suggestions of counsel for appellant contained in his brief and consulted the authorities to which he refers, but find nothing to take this case from the operation of the general rule.

The order of the General Term should be affirmed and under the stipulation of plaintiff judgment absolute ordered for the defendant dismissing the complaint on the merits, with costs to defendant in all the courts.

Ordered accordingly.

All concur, except Haight, J., not sitting.

of both, under act April 13, 1843 (Pub. Laws, 221), making it the duty of the county commissioners of the several counties to repair all bridges erected by the county, and act May 5, 1854, extending this provision to the county of Armstrong, the county was liable where it was known that the timbers were rotten and the bridge unsafe, and that it was left in this condition. It was further held that it was not contributory negligence for plaintiff to use such bridge although he knew the condition, if the county did not see fit to give notice or prevent its use. Humphreys v. Armstrong County, 56 Pa. 204, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 49.

In Armstrong County v. Clarion County, 66 Pa. 218, it was held that where the county was liable to pay for injuries caused by a defective bridge, as in Humphreys v. Armstrong County, 56 Pa. 204, such county might recover contribution from the other county.

Where a recovery was had against a county for injuries caused by a defective bridge, an instruction was proper which submitted to the jury the question that there could be no recovery if the deceased attempted to use a vehicle of extraordinary weight, if he did not first examine the condition of the bridge. The court held that the jury must have found that the injury was caused without any fault of the decedent, and in consequence of the negligence of the county. Shadler v. Blair County, 136 Pa. 488.

The county of Blair was liable for injuries causing death, from a defective bridge, where the deceased tried to cross a county bridge with a threshing engine and the bridge gave way, and the timbers were badly decayed, and ordinary inspection would have disclosed this defect. The bridge was built by the counties of Huntingdon and Bedford and was entered of record as a county bridge, and Blair county was formed from Huntingdon and Bedford counties, and from the organization of Blair county the bridge was known as a county bridge, and the only repairs ever made thereon were made by that county. Under Pa. act April 13, 1843 (Pub. Laws, 221), providing that it shall be the duty of the county commissioners to repair all county bridges, and act February 23, 1846 (Pub. Laws, 64), providing that Blair county and all the officers therein shall be subject to perform the same duties as other similar officers in other said counties, it was held that Blair county was bound by the same rule as other counties. Shadler v. Blair County, 136 Pa. 488.

But a county was not liable for injuries caused by defects in a county bridge, arising from a concealed breakage in an iron rod, which had probably existed for a long time. In the absence of evi-

Kate MARKEY, Admr., etc., of Hugh Markey, Deceased, Appl.,
v.

QUEENS COUNTY, Impleaded, etc., Resp.

(154 N. Y. 675.)

1. No new liability for torts is imposed upon a county by a statute making it a municipal corporation for exercising the powers and discharging the duties of local government and the administration of public affairs, and providing that actions for damages for any injury to any property or rights for which it is liable shall be in the name of the county.
2. A county is not liable for the negligent exercise of the duty of maintaining bridges, imposed on it by the state, since it derives no special advantage from it in its corporate capacity.

(Bartlett and Martin, JJ., dissent.)

(January 11, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of a Special Term for Queens County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

dence or of direct proof of negligence in the acceptance by the county, it would be presumed that upon the erection of the bridge it was properly examined. It was error to submit to the jury the question "Did the bridge fall by reason of a defect in the original construction?" Childe v. Crawford County, 176 Pa. 139.

And a county was not liable for injuries causing death occasioned by an unsafe bridge, under Pa. act March 6, 1860, § 2 (Pub. Laws, 106), making it the duty of the several townships and boroughs of S. county, in which any county bridge may be erected, to keep the same in repair at their own expense, and act March 21, 1861 (Pub. Laws, 163), providing that that section shall not be construed so as to require the several townships and boroughs in S. county in which any county bridge or bridges are now or may be erected to keep the same in repair, when in the opinion of the auditors of the township or borough the expense of repairing shall at any one time exceed $20, and if in the opinion of said auditors the repairs shall exceed the sum of $20 they shall cause the same to be made known to the county commissioners, who shall cause the same to be done at the expense of the county, and no notification as to the condition of the bridge or cost of repairs was given by the auditors to the commissioners. It was held that it was a question for the jury whether the injury was caused by defects in the original structure of the bridge or from want of repair. In the former event the county would be liable, in the latter the township, as it was only the duty of the county commissioners to make repairs in such cause where the township or borough auditors were of the opinion that the expense exceeded $20, and when, in addition, such opinion was made known to the commissioners. It appeared that its original construction was safe, but the bridge had become out of repair. Rigony v. Schuylkill County, 103 Pa. 382.

2. Where statute imposes liability.

Alabama.

In Alabama there is a statute imposing liability
89 L. R. A.

Mr. Charles J. Patterson, for appellant:
Each county is now a municipal corporation.

County Law, Laws 1892, chap. 686, § 2; General Corporation Law, Laws 1892, chap. 687, § 2; General Municipal Law, Laws 1892, chap. 685, § 1.

By the county law it is clearly contemplated that an action may be maintained against a county for damages.

Laws 1892, chap. 686, § 3.

The county of Queens and the county of Kings were charged by law with the duty of reconstructing this bridge (Laws 1892, chap. 288).

People, Keene, v. Queens County Supers. 142 N. Y. 271.

In England it is settled that a municipal corporation or other public body will not be held liable to an injured person for a mere nonfeasance consisting of a neglect to repair a public highway, even though the duty to repair is imposed by law upon the corporation.

Cowley v. Newmarket Local Board, 1 Fed. Rep. 45; Thompson v. Brighton, 9 Fed. Rep. 111; Gibson v. Preston, L. R. 5 Q. B. 218; M'Kinnon v. Penson, 8 Exch. 319; Young v. Davis, 7 Hurlst. & N. 760, Affirmed in 2 Hurlst. & C. 197.

It is also settled that for misfeasance whereby the safety of the highway is disturbed the corporation will be held liable.

upon counties for failure to take an indemnity bond from contractors on public bridges where the guaranty has expired, but this liability does not attach to bridges which are not built by the county; and in the absence of this statute there is no implied liability on the part of counties.

So, a county was liable for injuries caused by a bridge falling in where the guaranty had expired, under Ala. Code, § 1203, providing that the county is liable for damages by a defect in a county bridge if a guaranty is not taken from the contractors, or the period has expired. This section was held to apply although it was not a toll bridge. Barber County v. Brunson, 36 Ala. 362.

And under Ala. Code, § 1203, the county was liable, although the bridge might have been built before the passage of the act, where the injury complained of occurred after its passage; but a charge given to the jury assuming that the bond was void, or that a period of six years during which the bridge was to be kept in repair had expired, was incorrect, where the bond was not invalid, as the question of the expiration of the guaranty where the date was uncertain was one for the jury; and it was also erroneous as a charge upon the effect of the evidence. Barbour County v. Horn, 48 Ala. 649.

Under Rev. Code, § 1396, same as § 1203, it must be alleged that no guaranty was taken from the builders of the bridge, or that such guaranty was taken, and that the time stipulated for its continuance had expired before the injury complained of was inflicted, in order to recover. Barbour County v. Horn, 48 Ala. 649.

A county was liable for damages for injuries from a defective bridge, under Ala. Code, § 1692, where the guaranty had expired, and the county could not be discharged by devolving the duty to repair on the overseer of the road, or by claiming that the repair amounted to a contract for the erection of another bridge. Greene County v. Eubanks, 80 Ala. 204.

But under Ala. Code, § 1203, providing that when a bridge has been erected under a contract with Bathurst v. Macpherson, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 256; Smith v. West Derby Local Board, L. R. 3 C. P. Div. 423; White v. Hindley Local Bd. of Health, L. R. 10 Q. B. 219; Blackmore v. Mile End Old Town, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 452; Whitehouse v. Fellows, 10 C. B. N. S. 765; Foreman v. Canterbury, L. R. 6 Q. B. 214; Tucker v. Azbridge Highway Board, 52 J. P. 87; Cox v. Paddington, 64 L. T. N. S. 566; Ruck v. Williams, 8 Hurlst. & N. 808; Brownlow v. Metropolitan Bd. of Works, 13 C. B. N. S. 768. Affirmed on appeal in 16 C. B. N. S. 546; Southampton & I. Floating Bridge & R. Co. v. Southampton Local Bd. of Health, 8 El. & Bl. 801.

The same distinction prevails in Massachusetts, where it has been held that at common law neither cities, counties, nor towns were liable for mere nonfeasance to a person injured by a defective highway.

Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332 and cases cited.

But the liability for misfeasance has been repeatedly enforced.

Doherty v. Braintree, 148 Mass. 495; Waldron v. Haverhill, 148 Mass. 582; Doane v. Randolph, 132 Mass. 475; Hawks v. Charlemont, 107 Mass. 414.

The construction and maintenance of the temporary structure are part and parcel of the general work of reconstruction, and negligence in such construction and maintenance of the temporary bridge is a positive misfeasance as distinguished from nonfeasance. It is like the case of one who lawfully digs a pit in the highway and puts a temporary bridge over it for public passage. Such a one is bound to use care in constructing and maintaining the temporary bridge.

Nolan v. King, 97 N. Y. 565, 49 Am. Rep. 561.

All public corporations are liable for creating nuisances.

Thayer v. Boston, 19 Pick. 511, 31 Am. Dec. 157; Hawks v. Charlemont, 107 Mass. 414.

There is no sound distinction between the sanction of an obligation voluntarily assumed by a public body and that of an obligation which the legislature in the due exercise of its powers has imposed upon it.

1 Thomp. Neg. p. 619; Jones, Neg. of Mun. Corp. §§ 59-69, pp. 113-129.

Where a duty to maintain or repair a highway or bridge is imposed by law upon a county, the county will be held liable at common law out of its corporate funds for an injury occasioned to an individual arising from the neglect to keep the bridge or highway in repair.

Mahanoy Twp. v. Scholly, 84 Pa. 136; Newlin Twp. v. Davis, 77 Pa. 319; Rapho & West Hempfield Twp. v. Moore, 63 Pa. 404, 8 Am. Rep. 202; Dean v. New Milford Twp. 5 Watts & S. 545; Anne Arundel County Comrs. v.

the county commissioners with a guaranty by bond any person injured may sue on the bond, and, if no guaranty has been taken or the period has expired, may recover damages of the county, an action against a county on the ground that a bond of insufficient amount was taken, was denied. Barbour County v. Horn, 41 Ala. 114.

Where the evidence affirmatively showed that the bridge was not erected by contract of the county commissioners as provided by § 456, Code 1886, providing that a bond of indemnity shall be required of a contractor building a bridge, and if none is taken the county shall be liable for injuries caused by defective condition, under which the plaintiff sought to fix the liability upon the county, no recovery could be had. Roberts v. Cleburne County (Ala.) 22 So. 545.

In Covington County v. Kinney, 45 Ala. 176, it was held that in cases not under Ala. Rev. Code, § 1266, providing substantially as § 1208 for a liability for defective bridges on failure to take a bond from the contractor, counties were not required to keep public bridges in repair, and no liability attached for an injury from a defective bridge built by private subscription, although it was shown that the county had at one time paid for hauling lumber to repair said bridge, but the repairs were done by citizens gratuitously.

And under Ala. Rev. Code, § 1266, a county was not liable for injuries caused by a defective public bridge, where the bridge was not erected by a contract with the court of county commissioners, and was not such a bridge erected under the provisions of the Code as required the county to keep it in repair. Sims v. Butler County, 49 Ala. 110.

And in Barbour County v. Horn, 43 Ala. 649, it was said there was no liability against a county for damages from a defective bridge in the absence of a statute imposing a liability.

And a detached county in which was a defective bridge was not liable for injuries caused by such bridge where it was built by the county from which this county was detached, but there was no statute imposing a liability upon the detached county. 39 L. R. A.

Askew v. Hale County, 54 Ala. 630, 25 Am. Rep. 730.

In Askew v. Hale County, 54 Ala. 630, 25 Am. Rep. 730, it was said "that a county is not liable to an individual for an injury sustained, because of its failure to exercise a governmental power with which it is clothed, or because it is not exercised in the manner most conducive to the safety of the public, or because of the negligence or unskillfulness of its officers or agents, in the absence of a statute expressly declaring the liability."

Georgia.

In Georgia there is a statute imposing a liability where the bridge is a toll bridge built by the county or a bridge built by contract, if the county fails to take a seven-year guaranty bond, but the county is not liable after the expiration of seven years or for defects existing in other bridges.

So, a county was liable in damages for an injury resulting from a defective bridge where the bridge was built by a contract, and the county failed to take the bond, under Ga. Code, § 671, providing that when a public bridge is let out the contractor must in his bond make a condition to keep it in good repair for at least seven years, although the injury complained of occurred more than seven years after its completion. Mackey v. Murray and Whitfield Counties, 59 Ga. 332. (See Gwinnett County v. Dunn, 74 Ga. 358. This case is in effect overruled by Monroe County v. Flynn, 80 Ga. 499, although not referred to in that case.)

And where a county had let out a bridge by contract, and had failed to take a bond of sufficient guaranty, and injury was caused thereby, under Ga. Code, § 691, providing that if no bond or sufficient guaranty has been taken by the ordinary, the county is also liable for damages, it was held that the plaintiff could sue either the county or the contractor. Arnold v. Henry County, 81 Ga. 730.

And where the time covered by the contractor's bond for keeping it in repair had expired, and the county did not make a new contract for that pur-

Duckett, 20 Md. 468, 88 Am. Dec. 557; Calvert County Comrs. v. Gibson, 86 Md. 229; Prince George's County Comrs. v. Burgess, 61 Md. 29, 48 Am. Rep. 88; Baltimore County Comrs. v. Baker, 44 Md. 1; Flynn v. Canton Co. 40 Md. 312, 17 Am. Rep. 603; Harford County Comrs. v. Wise, 71 Md. 48; House v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657; Morgan County Comrs. v. Fritchett, 85 Ind. 68; Fritchett v. Morgan County Comrs. 62 Ind. 210; Shelby County Comrs. v. Deprez, 87 Ind. 509; Madison County Comrs. v. Brown, 89 Ind. 48; Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 93 Ind. 523, 47 Am. Rep. 390; Gibson County Comrs. v. Emmerson, 95 Ind. 579; Patton v. Montgomery County Comrs. 96 Ind. 131; Vaught v. Johnson County Comrs. 101 Ind. 123; Knox County Comrs. v. Montgomery, 109 Ind. 69.

The foregoing cases were recently overruled on the ground that by the true construction of the Indiana statute the county was not charged with the repair of bridges, and could not, except in special cases, appropriate county funds to repair them.

Jasper County Comrs. v. Allman, 142 Ind. 578; McCalla v. Multnomah County, 8 Or. 424; Eastman v. Clackamas County, 32 Fed. Rep. 24; Wilson v. Jefferson County, 13 Iowa, 181; Brown v. Jefferson County, 16 Iowa, 339; McCullom v. Black Hawk County, 21 Iowa, 409; Soper v. Henry County, 26 Iowa, 264; Collins v. Council Bluffs, 32 Iowa, 324, 7 Am.

Rep. 200; Chandler v. Fremont County, 42 Iowa, 58; Huston v. Iowa County, 43 Iowa, 456; Krause v. Davis County, 44 Iowa, 141; Kincaid v. Hardin County, 53 Iowa, 430, 36 Am. Rep. 236; Huff v. Poweshiek County, 60 Iowa, 529; Cooper v. Mills County, 69 Iowa, 350; Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 313; Sims v. Butler County, 49 Ala. 110; Jackson v. Greene County Comrs. 76 N. C. 282; Threadgill v. Anson County Comrs. 99 N. C. 352; White v. Chowan County Comrs. 90 N. C. 437, 47 Am. Rep. 584.

In the New England states and in many others it has been held that there is no distinction in liability between the cases of cities, counties, and towns, and that all three classes of corporations are free from such liability at common law.

Farnum v. Concord, 2 N. H. 392; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332; Mower v. Leicester, 9 Mass. 247, 6 Am. Dec. 63; Brady v. Lowell, 8 Cush. 121; Morgan v. Hollowell, 57 Me. 375; Jones v. New Haven, 84 Conn. 1; Hewison v. New Haven, 37 Conn. 475, 9 Am. Rep. 842; Sussex County Chosen Freeholders v. Strader, 18 N. J. L. 108, 35 Am. Rep. 530; Fray v. Jersey City, 32 N. J. L. 394; Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84, 4 Am. Rep. 450; Wingbiger v. Los Angeles, 45 Cal. 36; Taylor v. Peckham, 8 R. I. 349, 5 Am. Rep. 578; Black v. Columbia, 19 S. C. 412, 45 Am. Rep. 785; Young v. Edgefield Dist. Road Comrs. 2 Nott pose but undertook to keep the bridge in repair itself. Davis v. Horne, 64 Ga. 69.

And a county was liable for an injury caused by a public bridge being out of repair where such county had failed to take the contractor's bond, under Ga. Code, § 691, providing that if the county authorities fail to take the bond required by § 671 of the Code then the county shall be liable in the place of the contractor, and such bridge was built prior to the passage of the act of 1888, and where the injury occurred by reason of a horse becoming frightened at a hole in the bridge and backing the buggy over into the stream below, there being no banners or railings. (There was no question made as to the cause being fright. In this case the bridge was built to connect two counties, and one county refused to co-operate, and the suit was against the county which built the bridge.) Cook v. De Kalb County, 95 Ga. 218.

In Hammond v. Richmond County, 78 Ga. 188, it was said that where the statute provides a liability for counties for failure to take a bond to keep a bridge in repair, a recovery can be had for injuries.

And where a county was liable for injuries caused by a defective bridge, the county commissioners could be compelled by mandamus to pay it. Dearing v. Shepherd, 78 Ga. 23.

In Moreland v. Troup County, 70 Ga. 714, it was held that the right to recover for injury from a defective bridge was not affected by the adoption of the Constitution of 1877, art. 7, § 6, ¶ 2, restricting the taxing power of a county, and a demurrer to the petition on the ground that the injuries occurred after the adoption of the Constitution was overruled.

But a county was not liable for injury caused by want of proper repairs to a public bridge, where there was no allegation that the bridge was erected by letting it out to the lowest bidder, and that no bond was taken from the contractor faithfully to perform his contract and to indemnify for all damages occasioned by the failure so to do and to keep the bridge in good repair for seven years, 39 L. R. A.

and for such further time as may be embraced in the contract, under Ga. Code, § 691, providing that on failure to take such bond the county is liable. Collins v. Hudson, 54 Ga. 25.

And a recovery was denied where a party was injured by a defective bridge which was built under a contract awarded on May 12, 1886, and a bond was taken, as Ga. act December 20, 1888, did not apply to bridges which had been let out and built before the passage thereof. It was said that before the passage of the act of 1888 counties were not primarily liable for injuries received from defective bridges where they had taken bond as required by law from the contractor. Mappin v. Washington County, 92 Ga. 130.

And under Ga. Code, § 671, requiring, in case of county bridges built by the lowest bidder, that the contractor should give a bond for seven years, and a bond for three years was taken, the county was not liable where the accident occurred before the three years expired, as the contractor was primarily liable. It was said that if the accident had happened after the three years the county would probably have been liable, as in that event the county should be treated as having taken no bond at all under the Code, § 691. Mappin v. Washington County, 92 Ga. 130.

And where there was no contract to build the bridge, and it had been more than seven years since it had been built, and it was a public bridge, and was not under bond, a county was not liable for injuries caused from the same being out of repair. It was held that Ga. Code, December 22, 1888, on the subject of county bridges (Acts 1888, p. 30), was not applicable to any county bridge erected before the passage of the act, and under the prior laws the counties were not liable in a case of this kind. Bibb and Crawford Counties v. Dorsey, 80 Ga. 72; Grays v. Bibb County, 94 Ga. 606.

And a county was not liable for injuries caused by neglect of the proper authorities to repair a bridge where it was not a toll bridge or one built by contract, under Ga. Code, § 709, providing for suit against counties for neglect to keep bridges in & M'C. 537; Welsh v. Rutland, 56 Vt. 228, 48 Am. Rep. 762; Stilling v. Thorp, 54 Wis. 528, 41 Am. Rep. 60; Hiner v. Fond du Lac, 71 Wis. 74; Akadelfphia v. Windham, 49 Ark. 189.

Other courts, agreeing in the proposition that there is no distinction in liability between counties, cities, and towns, hold that they are all equally liable for negligence in the maintenance of public highways and bridges whereby an individual is injured.

Dean v. New Milford Twp. 5 Watts & S. 545; Rapho & West Hempfield Twp. v. Moore, 68 Pa. 404, 8 Am. Rep. 202; Mahanoy Twp. v. Scholly, 84 Pa. 186; Newlin Twp. v. Davis, 77 Pa. 317; Chandler v. Fremont County, 42 Iowa, 58; Wilson v. Jefferson County, 18 Iowa, 181; Anne Arundel County Comrs. v. Duckett, 20 Md. 468, 88 Am. Dec. 557; Jackson v. Greene County Comrs. 76 N. C. 282; Hous v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657; McCalla v. Multnomah County, 8 Or. 424; Eastman v. Clackamas County, 32 Fed. Rep. 24; Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 313; Sims v. Butler County, 49 Ala. 110.

Some classes of duties undoubtedly pertain strictly to the government, such as the furnishing of jails, court-houses, and the distribution of public charity.

Alamango v. Albany County Supers. 25 Hun, 551.

Other classes of duties belong to the private and corporate character, such as the maintenance of the New York and Brooklyn Bridge.

Walsh v. New York, 107 N. Y. 220.

Or such as the maintenance of public docks.

Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cas. 686.

Or beacons.

Gilbert v. Trinity House, L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 795.

The cases in this state holding that towns could not be sued for negligence are put upon the ground that the town is not charged with the duty of repairing highways.

Morey v. Neufane, 8 Barb. 645. See also People, Loomis, v. Little Valley Town Auditor, 76 N. Y. 317.

The artificial reasoning which is used to discharge the county is exhibited in the opinion in Albrecht v. Queens County, 84 Hun, 399.

Mr. Townsend Scudder, for respondent:

A county is a corporation of limited corporate capacity and liability, and is under no liability in respect of torts.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 22, 23 et seq.; Ensign v. Livingston County Supers. 25 Hun, 21; People, Downing, v. Stout, 23 Barb. 338; Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighela, 7 Ohio St. 109; Bertles v. Nunan, 92 N. Y. 152, 44 Am. Rep. 361; Fitzgerald v. Quann, 109 N. Y. 441; Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336; People, Keene, v. Queens County repair when the bridge is a toll bridge built by the county, or § 731, providing that if a bond is not taken from the contractor the county shall be liable for damages, did not apply. Scales v. Chattahoochee County, 41 Ga. 225.

A county was not liable for injuries resulting from a defective bridge where it was not alleged that toll was charged, under Ga. Code, § 669, providing that the ordinary may establish a toll bridge for the benefit of the county; but when toll is charged the county is liable as individuals owing them. Arline v. Laurens County, 77 Ga. 249.

In Arline v. Laurens County, 77 Ga. 249, the cases of Gwinnett County v. Dunn, 74 Ga. 358, and Collins v. Hudson, 54 Ga. 25, were approved.

In Gwinnett County v. Dunn, 74 Ga. 358, it was held that an action did not lie against a county for damages caused by neglect of proper authorities to repair a bridge, where it was not shown that it was a toll bridge or such a one as was built by a contractor, and that there was a failure to take the proper bond of indemnity required by the Code. Following Scales v. Chattahoochee County, 41 Ga. 225, and Collins v. Hudson, 54 Ga. 25.

In Gwinnett County v. Dunn, 74 Ga. 358, it was said that the decisions in Mackey v. Murray and Whitfield Counties, 59 Ga. 382, and Davis v. Horne, 64 Ga. 66, seem to have been made without any reference to Collins v. Hudson, 54 Ga. 25.

In Monroe County v. Flint, 80 Ga. 429, it was held that a county was not liable for injury from a defective bridge although no bond was taken and more than seven years had expired, under Ga. Code, § 671, providing that the contractor must in his bond make a condition to keep it in good repair for at least seven years, as the construction would be that a contractor would be liable and the county would be liable if they failed to take the bond, and the contractor would be liable to keep the bridge in good repair for seven years, and the liability of the county did not extend beyond that. This case virtually overrules Mackey v. Murray and Whitfield Counties, 59 Ga. 382, but does not refer to that case.

39 L. R. A.

A county was not liable for damages caused by a defective bridge where the plaintiff by the use of proper care could have prevented the injury. Macon County v. Chapman, 74 Ga. 107.

Kansas.

In Kansas it was formerly held that there was no implied liability against counties for failure to keep a bridge in proper condition, but now a statute provides that if the chairman of the board of county commissioners has five days' notice of such defects the county will be liable.

So, a county was not liable for injuries caused from a defective public bridge in the absence of any statute imposing a liability. The court said there is a distinction between the liability of cities and of quasi corporations like counties in this state. Marion County Comrs. v. Riggs, 24 Kan. 255.

Where defects in a county bridge are described by witnesses who have knowledge of the same, and the character and extent of such defects are comprehensible by the ordinary mind, the jury are the judges of the safety of such bridge for travel, and evidence by a witness, even an expert, as to his opinion, is incompetent. Murray v. Woodson County Comrs. (Kan.) 48 Pac. 554.

But a county is only bound to exercise reasonable or ordinary care and diligence in the discovery and repair of defects in its bridges, under Taylor's Kan. Gen. Stat. 1889, § 7134 (Laws 1887, chap. 237), providing that any person who shall without contributory negligence sustain damage by reason of a defective county bridge may recover from the county, where the chairman of the board of county commissioners shall have had five days' notice of such defects prior to the time when such damage was sustained. Murray v. Woodson County Comrs. (Kan.) 48 Pac. 554.

In an action under Taylor's Kan. Gen. Stat. § 7134 (Laws 1887, chap. 237), to recover for injuries occasioned by a defective bridge, it must be proved that the chairman of the county board had notice of such defect, and the presumption that another Supers. 143 N. Y. 271; Mower v. Leicester, 9 Mass. 247, 6 Am. Dec. 63.

The maintenance of highways and bridges is a public, not a private, function of government, and for its exercise a county does not incur a liability to an individual.

Marmikan v. New York, 63 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Lloyd v. New York, 5 N. Y. 374, 55 Am. Dec. 347; Eastman v. Meredith, 86 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 302; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 28 Am. Rep. 332.

A county, in caring for highways and bridges, performs a duty properly belonging to the towns within its limits; a town not being liable for defects in highways and bridges, the county can incur no liability by the performance of this duty.

Hill v. Livingston County Supers. 12 N. Y. 52; Barber v. New Scotland, 88 Hun, 522; Martin v. Brooklyn, 1 Hill, 545; Waldron v. Baverhill, 143 Mass. 582; Doherty v. Braintree, 148 Mass. 495; Hawks v. Charlemont, 107 Mass. 414; Mower v. Leicester, 9 Mass. 247, 6 Am. Dec. 63; Bigelow v. Randolph, 14 Gray, 541; Chidey v. Canton, 17 Conn. 475; Reed v. Belfast, 20 Me. 248; Eastman v. Meredith, 86 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 302; Morey v. Newfane, 8 Barb. 645; People, Van Keuren v. Esopus Town Auditors, 74 N. Y. 316; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 28 Am. Rep. 332.

The bridge in question was in the control of member told him will not be indulged. Murray v. Woodson County Comrs. (Kan.) 48 Pac. 554.

Where the evidence showed that the county rebuilt, maintained, and undertook to repair a bridge at the expense of the county, which cost more than $200, the court properly instructed the jury "there is no dispute of the fact that the bridge and approaches in question were built and paid for by the county." Nemaha County Comrs. v. Allbert (Kan. App.) 51 Pac. 307.

The mere fact that the board of county commissioners established a rule that the matter of repairing bridges should be left to the commissioners in whose district the bridge is located did not tend to show whether or not the chairman had actual notice of the defective and dangerous condition of the bridge, and such evidence was properly refused. Nemaha County Comrs. v. Allbert (Kan. App.) 51 Pac. 307.

See subhead Where the injury was caused by the fright of a horse, I. c.

Massachusetts.

In Massachusetts there is a statute imposing a liability.

Under Mass. Stat. 1877, chap. 234, and 1879, chap. 244, providing that for injuries the plaintiff should within thirty days thereafter give written notice of the time, place, and cause of said injury, a notice was sufficient where it stated the name of the bridge and that "said injuries were caused by a defect in the planking of the said bridge, one of the plank being insufficient in length, which insufficiency caused a hole in the said bridge into which I fell," although it appeared in evidence that there were three holes of a similar character, but the others were not as large as the one into which the plaintiff fell. The notice was also sufficiently addressed: "To Lewis Warner, Treasurer County of Hampshire. Dear Sir,—I hereby give you notice that I have this day . . . received bodily injuries, etc.," under Mass. Stat. 1877, chap. 234, providing that notice may be given in the case of a county to any one of the county commissioners or to the county treasurer. Lyman v. Hampshire County, 186 Mass. 74.

89 L. R. A.

the contractors, who alone are liable for the failure to keep it in repair.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 1028-1030; Engel v. Eureka Club, 137 N. Y. 100; Nolan v. King, 97 N. Y. 565, 49 Am. Rep. 561; Pack v. New York, 8 N. Y. 222; Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48; Kelly v. New York, 11 N. Y. 432; McCafferty v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. 61 N. Y. 178; Engel v. Eureka Club, 137 N. Y. 100.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court: Plaintiff's intestate lost his life through the breaking down of the bridge over Newtown creek, and this action was brought to recover damages of the defendants, the county of Queens and the city of Brooklyn, for their alleged negligence with respect to the condition of the bridge. A bridge had long existed over Newtown creek, which was the boundary line between the counties of Kings and Queens; and, pursuant to an act passed in 1892, the boards of supervisors of these counties had made a contract for its reconstruction. Meanwhile, a temporary foot bridge, for the accommodation of foot passengers during the progress of the work, was erected, and made use of by the public. The plaintiff alleges that this temporary bridge was insufficient, out of repair, inadequate for its purposes, and not calculated to bear the strain to which it would be subjected, and that the defendants were

A county was liable for injuries caused to a person by a defect in a bridge, under Mass. Stat. 1794, chap. 30, which provided for imposing one half the expense on said county and the other half on a town, although the officers of the town had always made the necessary repairs, receiving one half of the expense thereof from the county. It was held that both the town and the county would be equally liable, but after verdict nonjoinder of the town could not be set up. Lyman v. Hampshire County, 140 Mass. 311.

Where plaintiff was injured by stepping into a hole on a bridge, and there was evidence that it had existed for ten years, and that the officers of the county were very frequently on the bridge, it was a question for the jury whether the county might have had notice by reasonable diligence, and whether the injury to the plaintiff might have been prevented by care and diligence on the part of the county; and the fact that he had previous knowledge of the defect was not conclusive evidence of his negligence. Lyman v. Hampshire County, 140 Mass. 311.

Michigan.

Under How. (Mich.) Stat. § 1442, the township, village, city, or corporation whose corporate authority extends over a public highway, street, bridge, or culvert, is liable for injuries caused by negligence in not keeping the same in repair. There appear to be no cases against counties under this statute.

Nebraska.

In Nebraska a county was not liable in the absence of any statute, but there is now a liability imposed by statute for injuries caused to travelers from defective bridges.

A county was not liable for injuries caused by a defective public bridge in the absence of any statute imposing a liability. It was said: "Counties were not liable at common law for injuries caused in the manner set forth in the petition in this case, and our statute, in force at the time of the alleged injury, did not change the common-law rule." Woods v. Colfax County Comrs. 10 Neb. 552.

But a county was liable for negligence in failing negligent in permitting its use by the public in that condition. The county of Kings, under chapter 954, Laws 1895, became absorbed on January 1, 1896, into the city of Brooklyn, which was therefore made a defendant. The county of Queens, the other defendant, demurred to the complaint, for not stating facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against it. The demurrer was sustained at the special term and at the appellate division of the supreme court, in the second judicial department, which latter court has certified the case to us, as involving a question of law which ought to be reviewed by this court. That question, broadly, is whether, by any rule of law, as established in this state, a county may be held liable at the suit of a private individual who has received personal injuries from a defective bridge, with the maintenance of which the county was chargeable. The question is one of considerable interest, and, beyond the general discussion, demands an interpretation of the provisions of the county law of 1892 (Laws 1892, chap. 686), the 2d section of which declares the county to be a municipal corporation. The provision is as follows: "A county is a municipal corporation, comprising the inhabitants within its boundaries, and formed for the purpose of exercising the powers and discharging the duties of local government, and the administration of public affairs conferred upon it by law." By the 8d section, it is provided that "an action . . . to enforce any liability created, or duty enjoined upon it, or upon any of its officers or agents for which it is liable, or to recover damages for any injury to any property or rights for which it is liable, shall be in the name of the county." It is argued that the county, being thus declared a municipal corporation and being charged by law with the duty of maintaining the bridge, is made subject to those liabilities which it was understood the law attached to that class of corporations for breaches of duty. It is urged that as counties never were known, before this statute, as municipal corporations, the legislature, in its enactment, must have intended that they should be treated as upon a par with cities, when engaged in similar transactions, and that this proposition should be sustained from the point of view of public interest. In considering the question before us, we must not fail to observe that the language of § 8, above quoted, seems to import no further liability than that which was then existing. The only portion of that section which is material to the case is that which provides for an action "to recover damages for any injury to any property or rights for which it is liable." In other words, what the legislature appears to have done was to provide that, where the county is liable for an injury, the to keep a bridge in repair, under Neb. act July 1, 1890 (Laws 1890, chap. 7, Rev. Stat. p. 733), providing that if damage happens to any person or property by means of insufficiency or want of repair of a highway or bridge which the counties are liable to keep in repair, the person sustaining the damage may recover against the county. Hollingsworth v. Saunders County, 36 Neb. 141.

In Hollingsworth v. Saunders County, 36 Neb. 141, Woods v. Colfax County Comrs. 10 Neb. 552, was distinguished, as this statute was passed after that decision.

New Jersey.

In New Jersey there was no implied liability for injuries to travelers from defective bridges, but there is now a statutory liability.

The board of chosen freeholders of a county was not liable for injuries sustained by reason of an abutment of a public bridge being without side railings, under N. J. Rev. Laws, 47, § 1, providing that the freeholders are to consider and decide upon the utility and necessity of erecting, rebuilding, or repairing bridges, as this statute made it discretionary. It was said that if they erred in judgment, however well meaning, and the plaintiff's counsel were correct in their argument, they would be exposed to all the responsibility, but "this gross injustice arises from the counsel's substituting the responsibility of the freeholders in place of the county, which latter is under all circumstances bound prima facie to keep the public bridges in good repair and liable to indictment if it do not." Sussex County Chosen Freeholders v. Strader, 18 N. J. L. 108, 35 Am. Rep. 580.

An individual could not sustain an action against the board of chosen freeholders for injuries sustained by reason of a defect in a public bridge constructed by them. Cooley v. Essex County Chosen Freeholders, 27 N. J. L. 415, following Sussex County Chosen Freeholders v. Strader, 18 N. J. L. 108, 35 Am. Rep. 580.

But the freeholders of a county were liable on the ground of neglect for injuries caused by falling off the abutment wall of the approach to a bridge, under N. J. act March 15, 1890 (Pub. Laws, p. 285, 39 L. R. A.

Rev. p. 86, § 9), where they adopted a plan which contemplated the filling in of the sidewalk by others so as to bring it up to the abutment wall, and were preparing a permanent railing to render the approach safe, but put up no temporary barrier, and the dangerous condition was notorious for more than two weeks before the injury. Morris County Chosen Freeholders v. Hough, 55 N. J. L. 628. In this case the plan of the committee contemplated a structure with the sidewalk filled in by others to be protected by a railing erected by defendants on the wing wall of the bridge, and the defendants were in the performance of that duty when the plaintiff was injured, and the neglect consisted in not providing a temporary barrier, having knowledge of its danger.

Oregon.

In Oregon there was a statutory liability for defective bridges, but this statute has been repealed.

A county was not liable for injury resulting from defect in a bridge, after Oregon Code, § 847, providing that an action may be maintained against a county for injury to the rights of plaintiff arising from some act or omission of such county, was amended in 1887 by omitting the words "or for an injury to the rights of the plaintiff, arising from some act or omission of such county or other public corporation." It was held that Oregon Const. art. 1, § 10, providing that every man shall have a remedy by due course of law for injury done him in person, property, or reputation, did not prevent a repeal of this statute, although before the adoption of the Constitution there was a similar statute enacted by the territorial legislature. Templeton v. Linn County, 22 Or. 313, 15 L. R. A. 730. In this case the statute was repealed before the injury was caused.

In Templeton v. Linn County, 22 Or. 313, 15 L. R. A. 730, the case of McCalla v. Multnomah County, 8 Or. 424, was distinguished, as the statute was different in that case.

But under Oregon Code Civ. Proc. subd. 4, § 870, authorizing the county court to provide for the erection and repair within the county of public bridges on any road or highway, and Laws 1854-'55, p. 168, act June 7, 1854, § 4, authorizing an action action shall be in the name of the county. If, prior to the passage of the county law, the county was not liable for such an injury as was sustained in the present case, did it become so thereafter, by implication from the language of the 2d section, as argued for the appellant, in the use of the words "municipal corporation," or by reason of the 8d section?

To a clear understanding of the question, it may be well to consider what was the legal status of counties of this state, and then, incidentally, what is that of a municipal corporation proper, such as an incorporated city. The civil divisions of a state into counties had their origin in England, where, preceding the organization of the Kingdom itself, they were thereafter continued, from recognized necessities in government, as other countries had their departments or their provinces. In such divisions it was found that the purposes of local government and of the administration of justice were promoted. Differing from England in their origin, in this country they were first created by the legislatures of the various colonies, and subsequently by the states of the Union. They were invested with such corporate attributes as were essential to a proper performance of the duties of local government. They were, in effect, subdivisions of the governed territory, established for the more convenient administration of government and having such powers as were necessary to be exercised and for the welfare, advantage, and protection of the public within their boundaries. While in the people resided the sovereign right to declare the general mode of their government, it was the appropriate duty of their legislative body to so arrange the territory of the state into civil divisions, and to so apportion among them governmental duties, as would best conduce to the advantage of its citizens. By the common law of England, a county, though sometimes regarded as a quasi corporation, could not be subject to a civil action for a breach of its corporate duty unless such an action was expressly given by statute. The duty of maintaining and repairing bridges belonged to it, but the only remedy for a breach of that duty was by presentment or indictment. An unsafe condition of a highway, or a bridge as a part of the highway, was regarded as the subject of a popular action, and not of a private action. In Russell v. Devon County, 2 T. R. 667, which was an action by an individual against the inhabitants of a county for an injury sustained through the defective condition of a county bridge, it was held that they were not such a corporation, or quasi corporation, against whom such an action could be maintained. It was reasoned that, while the inhabitants of the county might be a corporation for some purposes, no statute had authorized such an action, and that the action would be one against the public. The authority of that case, as settling the rule at common law against a county for an injury to the rights of plaintiff arising from some act or omission of said county, a county was liable where a plank in the floor of a bridge was broken or too short, and one horse of a team becoming frightened pushed the other horse, causing him to step off the bridge drawing the team and buggy over and injuring plaintiff. It was further held that act February 21, 1887, amending Code Civ. Proc. chap. 4, title 4, § 847, restraining the right to maintain an action against the county to cases arising on contract, which act was passed after this action was commenced, did not affect plaintiff's claim. It was said: "The 14th Amendment declares that the state shall not deprive any person of . . . property without due process of law.' Assuming, as I do for the present, that the plaintiff's right of action, whether vested or not, is not 'property,' within the meaning of this amendment, there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States or of this state prohibiting the passage of retrospective laws by the latter, provided they do not impair the obligation of contracts, or partake of the character of ex post facto laws. Subject to these qualifications, the state may pass retrospective laws, and thereby divest vested rights, without violating the Constitution of the United States. . . . And admitting that the right to maintain this or an equivalent action for the redress of this wrong is a vested one, of which the plaintiff ought not to be wantonly deprived, it is clear the legislature may do so, if it will, unless the Constitution of the state is in the way." But it was further held that, under Or. Const. art. 1, § 10, providing that every man shall have a remedy by the course of law for injury done him in personal property or reputation, this right could not be taken away by any statute. Eastman v. Clackamas County, 32 Fed. Rep. 24.

And a county, having laid out and opened a road and built a bridge thereon, and invited the public to walk thereon, was estopped from denying that it was a public road. Eastman v. Clackamas County, 32 Fed. Rep. 24.

39 L. R. A.

And under Oregon Laws, December 19, 1865, § 4 (Oregon Laws, 723, § 40, note), providing that a bridge of 10 feet or more span shall be built in a good substantial manner and covered with sound plank well spiked down, the county was chargeable with negligence in not having planks well spiked down, by reason of which an injury was caused. The want of railing was negligence on the part of the county when the accident could have been prevented by a railing on the bridge. Eastman v. Clackamas County, 32 Fed. Rep. 24.

And a county was liable for damages caused by a defective bridge which was out of repair through the negligence of the county, under Oregon Stat. 863, § 19, providing that all county roads shall be under the supervision of the county in which such road is situated, and making it the duty of the county court to appoint supervisors, and giving the court power to remove the same on failure to perform their duties, and Oregon Code, p. 235, § 847, providing that an action may be maintained against the county for an injury to the rights of plaintiff arising from some act or omission of such county. McCalla v. Multnomah County, 3 Or. 424.

A county was liable for damages caused by a defective bridge where such bridge was a public bridge or was knowingly recognized as a county structure by the proper officials of said county, and they had been notified for a reasonable time prior to the accident of the defective condition of the bridge, or where it had been openly and notoriously unsafe to such an extent as to convey notice of its condition for a reasonable time prior to the accident. It was further held that the mere fact of intoxication of the injured party would not of itself bar a recovery. Ford v. Umatilla County, 15 Or. 313.

In Ford v. Umatilla County, 15 Or. 313, it was said that under Oregon Sess. Laws 1887, p. 45, the liability of counties had been changed but the act was passed after this accident, and it was held that it did not apply, as in Eastman v. Clackamas County, 32 Fed. Rep. 24. The decision in the Ford case evithat no civil action could be maintained for an individual injury in consequence of the breach of a public duty on the part of the inhabitants of a county, has been repeatedly recognized in England and in this country. I may refer in particular to the case of Bartlett v. Crozier, in this state (17 Johns. 439, 8 Am. Dec. 428), and to the cases in Massachusetts of Riddle v. Proprietors of Locks & Canals, 7 Mass. 169, 5 Am. Dec. 85, and Mower v. Leicester, 9 Mass. 247, 6 Am. Dec. 68, and to the very thorough discussion of the cases in England and in the United States, which will be found in Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 844, 23 Am. Rep. 382, and in chapter 28, 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. I think it, however, sufficient to confine the present discussion to what the statutes and decisions of this state require us to hold upon the question.

In this state, its division into counties or sections for the purposes of local government was but a continuance of a method which, while a colony, it had adopted from England. By the Constitution of the state, it was provided that such parts of the common law as formed the law of the colony of New York were retained as the law of the state. If, under the common law, counties could not be subjected to private actions for the results of acts done in the performance of governmental duties, then it should follow that counties of this state could not become liable to such actions, unless the common law in that respect has been changed by statute. Where a principle of the common law has entered into our form of government, it is controlling, until by legislation, express in its terms, it is modified, or negated by the substitution of a new declaration upon the subject. The only statute for which that could be claimed is the county law of 1892, which heretofore I have referred to. Having regard to the fact that counties were created such for the better and more convenient government of the state, both upon authority and upon principle, in the exercise of those political powers which appertain to local government, and which are for the public benefit, they should be no more liable for damages resulting therefrom, at the suit of a private individual, than would be the state itself. The counties and towns of this state were always bodies corporate for certain purposes; having been endowed with capacities to purchase and to hold real and personal property, and to make contracts in reference thereto. Rev. Stat. pt. 1, art. 1, title 1, chaps. 11, 12. The corporate powers were of defined and limited extent, and in all other respects which concern governmental duties, included among which was the conservation of highways, roads, and bridges, they were merely divisions organized for the convenient exercise of portions of the political power of the state. Lorillard v. Monroe, 11 N. Y. 392, 62 Am. Dec. 120. The common-law rule which rested the duty of caring for and repairing highways and bridges upon the counties did not obtain in this state. That notice must have been upon the same statute upon which the prior affirmative decisions were made, although such statute was not referred to in the opinion, but reference was made to the new statute which relieved the counties from liability.

In Helluer v. Union County, 7 Or. 83, 33 Am. Rep. 708, it was held that a county was liable for injuries caused by a bridge being out of repair, but no recovery could be had where it was not shown that the county authorities knew of its condition, or no averment made of a statement of facts from which they might have known it with reasonable diligence. It was held that if the condition of the bridge was stated to be such that the road supervisor by the use of ordinary diligence might have known of its condition, a recovery would be allowed.

South Carolina.

Under S. C. Gen. Stat. § 1087, making the county liable for injuries from defective roads, and providing that such damage should not be recovered by the person so injured if his load exceeded the ordinary weight, amended December 19, 1892, so as to read "provided, such person has not in any way brought about such injury or damage by his own act, or negligently contributed thereto, etc.; and provided further, that such county shall not be liable, unless such defect was occasioned by the neglect or mismanagement," etc., where a person was injured before the amendment and the action was not brought until after the amendment,—it was held that if his action was under the prior statute he should negative the proviso to show that his vehicle was not overloaded, and if the amendment applied no recovery could be had unless the county commissioners were negligent. It was further held that they were not negligent in this case, where they were very active in their effort to repair a bridge over a swamp after a flood and made a contract and gave notice that the bridges were let out for repair, and that they would not be responsible for any damages while crossing, which notice was posted up at each side of the swamp. The trial judge held that no recovery could be had under the old statute on an allegation that plaintiff was riding a mare and plaintiff showed that he was driving, as the variance would be important under a statute fixing the load at a certain weight. Cope v. Hampton County, 42 S. C. 17.

39 L. R. A.

Where a horse was frightened on a public bridge by reason of a piece of timber which was lying near for the purpose of repairing the bridge, and backed the buggy off the bridge where there was no railing, and injured the plaintiff, and the only allegation of defect in the repair of the bridge was that one piece of railing or bannister was absent, it was held that the absence of such piece of railing would not be called a defect in the repair contemplated by S. C. Gen. Stat. § 1087. Brown v. Laurens County, 38 S. C. 232.

See also subhead, Where the injury was caused by the fright of a horse, I. c.

West Virginia.

A county was liable for injuries caused by a horse becoming frightened at a pile of large rocks on the roadside, and backing over an unprotected wall of the approach to a bridge, throwing the plaintiff out and injuring the buggy, which would not have happened if a suitable railing had been placed along the bridge, where the fall of the horse and the accident were almost simultaneous, and want of care could not be imputed to the driver. Rohrbough v. Barbour County Ct. 39 W. Va. 472. (For the West Virginia statute see Phillips v. Ritchie County Ct. 31 W. Va. 478, subd. I. b.)

In Rohrbough v. Barbour County Ct. 39 W. Va. 472, it was said that in Smith v. Kanawha County Ct. 38 W. Va. 713, 8 L. R. A. 82, a recovery was denied in a similar case for a defective road, but that was on account of the negligence of the driver.

See also subhead, Where the injury was caused by the fright of a horse, I. c.

b. From defective roads and highways.

It is held, with but few exceptions, that counties duty was confided to the officers of towns. But special acts were passed from time to time, whereby the burden has been shifted so as to be imposed, either upon two or more towns, or upon the county, or upon both counties and towns. Hill v. Livingston County Supers. 12 N. Y. 52. In the county law of 1892 it was provided that where a bridge spans any of the navigable tide waters of this state, as in the present case, forming a boundary line between two counties, the expense of its maintenance is made an equal charge on the two counties in which the bridge is situated. § 63. Whether the maintenance of highways and bridges is devolved as a duty upon the towns or upon the counties of the state, it must be regarded as a duty, in its nature, public and governmental. Lorillard v. Monroe, 11 N. Y. 392, 62 Am. Dec. 120. There is no distinction to be made between highways and bridges, in the matter of the duty. A public bridge is a public highway. Angell, Highways, § 40. Its maintenance is quite as much a governmental duty towards the public within the territory of the state, and the principle that the state holds its highways in trust for the public is applicable. Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 386. This is especially true where a bridge is necessary to cross the navigable waters of the state, but it is true under all circumstances. In People v. Rensselaer & S. R. Co. 15 Wend. 113, 134, 30 Am. Dec. 33, it was said by Savage, Ch. J.: "There can be no question, therefore, that the state legislature has the power to build bridges where they shall be necessary for the convenience of its citizens. . . . It is the duty of the state governments to afford their citizens all the facilities of intercourse which are consistent with the interests of the community." To charge the duty of building and maintaining a bridge over navigable waters upon the boards of supervisors of counties was but a convenient mode of exercising that governmental function. The power thus conferred upon the county officers was for the public benefit, and in its exercise they acted as the agents for the public at large. The state, in its sovereign character, had a duty to perform in the maintenance of the bridge as a part of the public highway, and its performance might properly be delegated to the officers of the particular civil division. The corporate body of Queens county derived no especial advantage from it in its corporate capacity, and, if that be true, it should not be liable for the negligent acts of the board of supervisors, upon whom the duty was rested of reconstructing the bridge. It should be as exempt from a private action as would be the state itself. In People v. Queens County Supers. 142 N. Y. 271, we expressly held that the power conferred upon the counties of Kings and Queens with respect to this work was in the public interests, and for the public benefit. As lately as in the case of Hughes v. Monroes County, 147 N. Y. 49, ante, 33, where it was sought to hold the de-are not liable for injuries to travelers caused by roads or highways being out of repair, in the absence of a statute imposing a liability. Some of the states which allow a liability for defective bridges refuse to apply the same rule in regard to roads, although recognizing that the principle is the same. In Maryland a recovery is allowed. So in New Jersey where the county made an excavation in the road. In South Carolina and West Virginia the statute imposes a liability.

In Indiana a county was held not liable for personal injuries sustained while driving upon a free gravel road of a county, by reason of defects in the construction and repair of such road. It was said that the principle was the same in regard to roads as in regard to bridges, but that Indiana has adopted a rule in regard to bridges which was contrary to the weight of authority [since overruled, see supra, I, a], and it would not be extended to apply to roads. Cones v. Benton County Comrs. 137 Ind. 404.

And a county was not liable for injuries caused from a defective highway where lumber on the same caused plaintiff's horse to run away, as the law has not given boards of commissioners power to raise money to repair highways, nor imposed the duty of keeping public highways in repair upon county boards. Abbott v. Johnson County Comrs. 114 Ind. 61.

In Fulton County Comrs. v. Rickel, 106 Ind. 501, it was said that counties are not responsible for defective highways.

And for damages occasioned by a defective sidewalk under its control a county was not liable. It was said that counties partake of the immunity of states, and are not subject to liabilities of this kind. Clark v. Lincoln County, 1 Wash. 518.

So where a party was injured by reason of a sidewalk on the court-house premises being out of repair a recovery was refused. Dodsall v. Olmsted County, 50 Minn. 96, 44 Am. Rep. 185.

Where a county contracted for a curb between a park owned by the county and the street, and the commissioners prohibited the dirt from being thrown on the grass, and the contractor placed it on the sidewalk without warning or protection to passersby at night, and a person fell into the trench, no recovery could be had, as the work was not being done by the county but by independent contractors. Eby v. Lebanon County, 166 Pa. 382.

In Worden v. Witt (Idaho) 89 Pac. 1114, in an action against a county commissioner individually for injuries received from defective highways, it was said: "To hold counties or county commissioners liable for all injuries arising from defective highways, in this country would result in two very undesirable conclusions.—the literal abrogation of the office of county commissioner (for no sane man would assume the position, with such a liability attached), and the bankruptcy of every county in the state."

In May v. Ralls County, 31 Fed. Rep. 473, it was said that counties are not liable for failure to keep roads, bridges, or public buildings in repair and in a safe condition, and for injuries sustained in consequence of such neglect on the part of the county officials a suit is not maintainable against the county.

Under N. J. Pub. Laws 1889, p. 58, an act to compel boards of chosen freeholders to acquire, improve, and maintain public roads, where a declaration alleged that it thereby became the duty of the board to maintain a highway in good and safe condition for public use, and that plaintiff was injured while passing along the highway, which was out of repair and in an unsafe condition, it was held that a municipal corporation charged with the performance of a public duty was not liable to an individual for neglect to perform or negligence in the performance of such duty, whereby a public wrong has been done for which an indictment will lie, although such an individual has suffered special damages thereby, and this exemption was put on the ground of ancient precedent and public policy. But the other count of the declaration, that said board wrongfully and illegally made a deep excavation in a public highway under the control fendant liable for injuries sustained by the plaintiff while operating a steam mangle in the laundry of an insane asylum, the doctrine was plainly asserted of the nonliability of counties and of other municipal corporations for the acts of their officers when engaged in the discharge of public duties, and to that extent exercising acts of sovereignty. This doctrine of nonliability, resting as it does upon the principle that the grant of power is to the county in its political character, and as a means of the exercise of the sovereign power in measures of public interest and for the public benefit, is illustrated in various decisions of this court where the question arose as to the liability of a city for corporate acts resulting, through a negligent performance, in injury to individuals.

With respect to such a municipal corporation proper as a city, the rule of law is well settled by frequent adjudications that the grant by the legislature of a city charter authorizing and requiring a city to perform certain duties renders it liable to a private action for neglect in their performance, when a county or town would not be so liable. A distinction exists between such a corporation, which is created by charter, and is granted the power to own and to manage private property, and is invested with particular franchises, and a municipal corporation, which is created for the purposes of state government, and to exercise, as one of its civil divisions, certain of its political powers. In the case of the former, its responsibility depends upon the nature of the powers exercised. Nelson, Ch. J., in Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill, 531, 38 Am. Dec. 669, discusses the powers of cities as municipal corporations, but the discussion is not without its usefulness to the present case. He laid down the doctrine (which has been followed in subsequent decisions in this court) that a clear distinction exists between the powers which belong to a city as a municipal body. He observed that, if they were "granted for public purposes exclusively, they belong to the corporate body in its public, political, or municipal character. But if the grant was for purposes of private advantage and emolument, though the public may derive a common benefit therefrom, the corporation, quoad hoc, is to be regarded as a private company. It stands on the same footing as would any individual or body of persons upon whom the like special franchises had been conferred." This doctrine was reiterated in Lloyd v. New York, 5 N. Y. 369, 55 Am. Dec. 347, and in Mazmilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 164, 20 Am. Rep. 468, Folger, J., in the latter case, expounding the nature of the duties imposed upon a municipal corporation, said: "One is of that kind which arises from the grant of a special power, in the exercise of which the municipality is as a legal individual; the other is of that kind which arises, or is implied, from the use of political rights under the general law, in the exercise of which it is as a sovereign. The former power of said board, into which the plaintiff while lawfully passing along the highway fell and was injured, disclosed a special injury inflicted on plaintiff by a common public nuisance, created, not by the defendant's neglect, but by its active wrongdoing, and there was no reason arising out of public policy why municipal corporations should be shielded from liability when a private injury was inflicted by their wrongful act as distinguished from mere negligence, and that count charged a cause of action. Hart v. Union County Chosen Freeholders, 57 N. J. L. 90.

A recovery was allowed against a county where a minor child was killed while riding a horse, his death being caused by the bad condition of the county road. It was held that the care and caution required of a traveler on a public road were such as persons of common prudence ordinarily exercised. Hartford County Comrs. v. Hamilton, 60 Md. 340, 45 Am. Rep. 739.

Under Md. act 1853, chap. 239, § 1, constituting and declaring the county commissioners a corporation and body politic, and providing that they shall have charge of and control over the property owned by the county, and over county roads and bridges, a county was held liable for injuries caused by a defective road. In this case the case of Russell v. Devon County, 2 T. R. 661, was distinguished, as in that case the county was not a corporation for that purpose and had no corporate fund. The liability was placed on the same ground as that of a city. Anne Arundel County Comrs. v. Duckett, 20 Md. 463, 33 Am. Dec. 557.

And where the plaintiff was injured by falling off of an unprotected precipice on the edge of a road, an instruction that if he traveled on a dark night walking on the edge of the road without a light, and voluntarily took the dangerous edge, when by taking the middle of the road he could have avoided the accident, he could not recover, was properly rejected, as the question of contributory negligence was one for the jury. The county was liable for injuries caused by an unguarded precipice on a road where such road was negligently constructed and left to remain by the defendants in an unsafe condition for travelers, where the plaintiff used due care and caution and was injured. Alleghany County Comrs. v. Broadwaters, 69 Md. 533.

So, a county was liable for injuries caused to a wagon and carriage by a defective road through the negligence of the supervisor, and this liability was not changed by Md. act. 1853, § 8, directing the commissioners to require the road supervisors to give bond to the state, which bond may be put in suit for the benefit of any person suffering by the neglect of said supervisors, as this does not take away the right of action against the commissioners of a county. An instruction that no recovery could be had against a county for injuries from a road out of repair, if the injuries could have been avoided by using another road in a good condition but a short distance further, was erroneous as it did not state that there was any knowledge on the part of the plaintiff that one road was dangerous and the other was safe. Calvert County Comrs. v. Gibson, 36 Md. 229.

A county was liable for injuries caused by a defective highway through improper work done under the supervision of the county officials, under S. C. Gen. Stat. § 1067, providing that counties are liable for injuries caused from defective highways and bridges. This statute was not unconstitutional in that it deprived counties of their property without process of law, or that it denied to counties the equal protection of the law, or that it subjected counties to restraints other than are laid upon other corporations under S. C. Const. art. 1, § 12, or that it imposed a new obligation upon counties for the benefit of another class of citizens when they are guilty of no neglect or duty. Blum v. Richland County, 88 S. C. 291.

But under S. C. Gen. Stat. § 1067, providing that any person who shall receive bodily injury or damage in his person or property through a defect in the repair of a highway, causeway, or bridge may recover in an action against the county the amount is private, and is used for private purposes; the latter is public, and is used for public purposes.

Where the power is intrusted to it as one of the political divisions of the state, and is conferred, not for the immediate benefit of the municipality, but as a means to the exercise of the sovereign power for the benefit of all citizens, the corporation is not liable for nonuser, nor for misuser, by the public agents." The principle that a city, as a municipal corporation, is held to a strict liability to respond in damages, at the suit of a private individual, for its negligence in the maintenance of its streets and other properties, was thus explained by Selden, J., in Weet v. Brockport, 16 N. Y. 102, footnote: "The surrender by the government to the municipality of a portion of its sovereign power, if accepted by the latter, may with propriety be considered as affording ample consideration for an implied undertaking, on the part of the corporation, to perform with fidelity the duties which the charter imposes." The reasoning of these cases has its pertinency to the present case. The county law of 1892, in denominating a county as a municipal corporation, specifies the purpose to be that of "exercising the powers and discharging the duties of local government and the administration of public affairs;" and, prior to the enactment, it existed to perform just such governmental functions.

I think that the principle of our decision must necessarily be this: "That as the counties of this state were bodies corporate, for certain specific purposes, before the enactment of the county law of 1892, now that they are declared thereby to be municipal corporations their liability for corporate acts is no further enlarged than what may be clearly read in, or implied from, the statute. Their becoming municipal corporations in name imports no greater liability, because by the 3d section of the law their liability for injuries is confined by the language to that which was existing. The liability remains as it was,—neither greater nor less. No new duty or burden has been imposed upon counties in respect to the maintenance of bridges over navigable boundary streams. The duty which always existed for public purposes and for the public benefit is continued. The work of maintaining the bridge in question was properly charged upon the counties, because it could be more advantageously performed by them than by the towns. Towns themselves were not liable for damages arising from defective highways and bridges until, by an act of the legislature in 1881, the liability which formerly rested upon the commissioners of highways was transferred to them. If it was necessary, in order that towns might be made liable in private actions, that there should be such legislation, it is as necessary, I think, that there should be some express legislation, in order to impose the liability upon a county which did not previously exist. The object of the county law of 1892, in my judgment, in declaring the county a municipal corporation, of damage fixed by the finding of the jury, a recovery cannot be had where the injury occurred on a road under a railway trestle, which was a divergence from the county road because the county road was very rough, although this road had been improved some by the overseer of the road hands without any authority, as act 1883, 18 Stat. at. L. 631, providing for appointing commissioners and employing a surveyor to change the location of a highway, was the only law prescribing the mode of making a change, and the act of the overseer in this case was without lawful authority, even if it could be assumed that the county commissioners approved of this change. Hill v. Laurens County, 34 S. C. 141.

And under this act a recovery could not be had where the injury arose from a defective ferry boat operated by the county, as a ferry boat was not a highway within the intention of the statute. Chick v. Newberry & Union Counties, 27 S. C. 419.

In Smith v. Kanawha County Ct. 33 W. Va. 718, 8 L. R. A. 82, it was held that under W. Va. Code 1887, chap. 43, § 7, providing that the road surveyor shall cause the roads and bridges to be put in good order and repair to the proper width, the county was not liable where the party was injured while driving on a narrow road and two calves appeared suddenly out of the bushes causing the horse to become frightened and back over a steep bank. It was held that the road was as wide as could be expected at that place with a steep river bank on one side and a slipping hillside on the other. It was further held there was some evidence to show that the plaintiff pulled the horse. The negligence of the driver barred a recovery.

Under W. Va. Code, chap. 43, imposing a liability on counties for injuries sustained by reason of a public road or bridge being out of repair, the county was not liable where about eight days before the injury a landslide came into the road filling it about 4 feet on one side and extending nearly to the other side, and plaintiff attempted to drive over the same and struck a small stone, which tilted the buggy, frightening the horse, causing it to run away, and upset the buggy. The condition of the road was such that it was reckless to drive over it, and contributory negligence barred a recovery. Phillips v. Ritchie County Ct. 31 W. Va. 478.

In this case it was also held that it was unnecessary for the plaintiff to allege or prove that the county had notice of the defect which caused the injury.

Under W. Va. Code 1887, p. 331, chap. 43, providing for an action against a county court to anyone who has sustained injury by reason of a public road or bridge being out of repair, and Code 1868, chap. 43, § 7, p. 267, providing that every surveyor of roads, shall cause the same to be put in good repair and to be clear and "kept clear of rocks, falling timber, landslides, and other obstructions," the county was not liable for an injury caused by a dead tree standing within 5 feet of the roadside which fell on the plaintiff and injured him. This law was amended three days after the accident, requiring the surveyor to remove all dead timber standing within 30 feet of the road, and W. Va. Code 1887, chap. 43, § 7, p. 318, and the law prior to the Code of 1868, required the surveyor to keep the roads secure from the falling of dead timber therein. It was held that the omission in the law in existence at the time of the accident indicated that the surveyor was only to pick up falling timber and obstructions, and not to cut it down. It was further held that if it was his duty to cut it down an action would not lie against the county court as there was no statute imposing a liability. Watkins v. Preston County Ct. 30 W. Va. 667.

c. Where the injury was caused by the fright of a horse.

In the states where a recovery may be had for injuries from a defective bridge, either on account of implied liability or by statute, a question has been made as to a recovery for an injury caused through the fright of a horse. It seems that was in order that it might be sued as a legal entity in cases where previously actions were maintainable only in the name of the board of supervisors.

The appellant's counsel attacks the reasoning which distinguishes between counties and chartered municipal corporations in respect to their liability for corporate acts, as being unsubstantial and artificial, and he is able to cite us to some observations by text-writers to that effect. The distinction is none the less real, however, because processes of reasoning might lead to the conclusion that the two classes of corporations should be placed upon a par in their attributes and incidents. The distinction rests upon established conditions of state government, which must endure until the legislature expressly changes them. It has not unfrequently been the case that statutes have so far modified some common-law condition, under which we were governed as a society, as to subject what remained of it to criticism similar to that now indulged in, but the rule is firmly established that the common law has been no further abrogated by a statute than is to be understood from the unmistakable import of the language used. Bertles v. Nunan, 92 N. Y. 152, 44 Am. Rep. 381, presents an interesting discussion, in point, under that head.

The conclusion I have reached after a careful consideration of the subject is that in the work of construction of this bridge the board of supervisors were executing a certain public duty, imposed upon them as the proper public agents in that particular civil division of the state, and that the county could not be subjected to a private action for injuries occurring in, or by reason of, the performance of the work. I do not think it is consonant with the reason of the rule of law which concedes to the sovereign power in government an exemption from liability that a private individual may have a right of action against those who have but exercised a lawful power which was vested in them by the legislative body for the public convenience and welfare, and not for any private benefit of the corporate body.

The judgment appealed from should be affirmed, with costs.

Bartlett and Martin, JJ., dissenting:

Where the duty to construct a highway or bridge is imposed by law upon a county, we see no reason why, in case of negligence and consequent injury to the citizen, there should be any substantial difference as to liability between counties and cities, as the former, like the latter, are now municipal corporations. The county, in the performance of this duty, is clothed with a special power, not intrusted to it as a political division of the state in the exercise of the sovereign power for the benefit of all citizens, but strictly in the interest of the municipality.

where the injury would not have happened if there had been sufficient railing, the liability was allowed, but on this there is some little conflict, and a case in Indiana held that where the horse was frightened at the defective bridge and overturned the buggy a recovery was denied.

Under an Oregon statute, providing for an action against the county for injuries to the rights of plaintiff arising from some act or omission, a county was liable where a horse became frightened because a plank was broken, and caused the other horse to go over a bridge which was unprotected. Eastman v. Clackamas County, 32 Fed. Rep. 24.

And under a statutory liability to travelers from defective bridges a recovery was had where a horse was frightened by a hole in the bridge, and backed the buggy over into the stream below, and there were no banisters or railings. There was no question made in the case as to the proximate cause being fright. Cook v. De Kalb County, 95 Ga. 218.

Where the plaintiff's horse took fright and backed her buggy off the approach to a bridge which had no guards or railings, the county was liable if the chairman of the board of county commissioners had notice of the defect and it was a county bridge. The question of contributory negligence was one for the jury, and the court did not discuss the question of fright. Nemaha County Comrs. v. Allbert (Kan. App.) 51 Pac. 307.

Where plaintiff attempted to cross a small bridge which was out of repair, and his mules became frightened, and he was injured, an instruction that if the accident was caused by the fright of the mules the verdict must be for the defendant, unless the fright was caused by a defect in the road manifestly calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, and the defendants by the use of ordinary care and diligence might have known of the same in time to repair it, was erroneous in stating that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover under any circumstances unless the fright of the mules was caused by failure of duty on the part of the defendants. It was said that the fright of the mules did not necessarily imply any negligence or culpability on the part of the plaintiffs, and it was error to direct the attention of the jury to this sole inquiry without considering anything else. Kennedy v. Cecil County Comrs. 60 Md. 65.

And the fact that the conduct of the horse might have been one proximate cause of an injury from the failure to have railings on a bridge would not prevent the county from being liable if its negligence was also a proximate and concurring cause of the injury. Parke County Comrs. v. Sappenfield, 6 Ind. App. 577, 10 Ind. App. 609.

A county was liable for injuries resulting from a defective county bridge, where a hole in the bridge was covered by a stone which frightened plaintiff's horses, and there were no barriers on the approaches to protect the same. Moreland v. Mitchell County, 40 Iowa, 394.

And a county was liable where a horse was frightened at a pile of rocks on a road, and backed the buggy over an unprotected approach to a bridge, where the fall of the horse and the accident were simultaneous. Rohrbough v. Barbour County Ct. 39 W. Va. 472.

So, a county was liable for injuries caused by failure to keep a bridge in repair where a horse was frightened at a crooked log placed at the corner of the bridge to keep the earth from washing away, and there was no railing. Sullivan County Comrs. v. Sisson, 2 Ind. App. 311.

So, where the horse shied and death was caused by want of a railing over a county bridge, a recovery was allowed, in Shelby County Comrs. v. Blair, 8 Ind. App. 574.

In Boone County Comrs. v. Mutchler, 137 Ind. 140, it was said that a county was liable where plaintiff's horse was frightened at a hog in a ditch on a free gravel road, and backed the buggy over the side of the bridge where there was no railing. The court said: "It is quite certain that the injury in this case would not have been caused had there been proper guards upon the bridge. And if it be conceded that the fright of the horse and the defect in the bridge were concurrent causes of the injury,

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF JAS. PER COUNTY, Appt.,

v.

John L. ALLMAN, Admr., etc., of Reuben P. Ryan, Deceased.

(142 Ind. 572.)

1. Counties, being subdivisions of the state and instrumentalities of government exercising authority given by the state, are no more liable for the acts or omissions of their officers than the state.
2. A county is not liable by implication for damages caused by negligence of its officers in respect to keeping bridges in repair, where the county commissioners have no power to appropriate county funds for that purpose except when and so far as the road district is unable to make the repairs, and there is no statute giving a right of action against the county for its negligence or that of its commissioners, or authorizing the use of county funds to pay damages caused thereby.
3. It is the duty of the court to overrule a decision or series of decisions if clearly incorrect either through a mistaken conception of the law or through misapplication of the law to the facts, if no injurious results would follow from their overthrow.

(November 25, 1886.)

both present and active in the result, yet, as neither party was to blame for the fright of the horse, and as the appellant was alone to blame for the defect in the bridge, it is quite evident that the appellant cannot escape responsibility. Fulton County Comrs. v. Rickel, 106 Ind. 501; Shelby County Comrs. v. Sisson, 2 Ind. App. 811."

But a county was not liable for injuries caused by a horse becoming frightened at a pile of lumber on a road and running away, as the county was not liable for defective roads. Abbett v. Johnson County Comrs., 114 Ind. 61.

In Fulton County Comrs. v. Rickel, 106 Ind. 501, it was held that a county was not liable for injuries caused by a horse becoming frightened at a plank standing upright in a bridge, as an injury caused by the horse's fright was not the proximate result of a breach of duty, and no greater duty is imposed upon counties in respect to bridges than that of using ordinary care and diligence to make and keep them safe for travel. In this case the frightened horse caused the carriage to upset and there was no question made as to defective railing, but fright of the horse at the defective bridge seems to have been the cause.

And a county was held not liable for injuries caused by a runaway team to a foot passenger on account of failure to erect proper barriers over a long and narrow county bridge in a large city, where the bridge was a solid stone bridge in good repair erected fifty years previous and sufficiently adequate at that time. It was further held that the commissioners were not negligent in anticipating that horses would become frightened on a wagon road and injure foot passengers; also that Pa. act February 18, 1870 (Pub. Laws, 181), providing that the commissioners of L. county are authorized to erect foot sidewalks adjoining the stone bridge at the expense of the county, was discretionary and not mandatory, for which there would be no liability. Lehigh County v. Hoffert, 116 Pa. 119, 19 W. N. C. 863.

89 L. R. A.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Newton County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate which was alleged to have been caused by a bridge which defendant had allowed to become defective. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. P. Thompson and Stuart Brothers & Hammond, for appellant.

While the statute makes it the duty of the county board to cause the bridges of the county to be kept in repair, the county is not liable for injuries caused by defects in such bridges for the reason that there is no statute imposing such liability.

Cones v. Benton County Comrs., 137 Ind. 404; Bailey v. Lawrence County, 5 S. D. 393.

The rule of stare decisis cannot properly be invoked as a reason for following the line of decisions which hold counties liable in such cases.

Certainly no one would have a right to incur a risk to his person from a defective bridge on the strength of decisions holding the county liable in such cases. The fact that he did so would be a most conclusive reason why he could not recover.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 36.

If the deceased knew, as he is presumed in the absence of an averment to the contrary to

In South Carolina there is a statute imposing a liability, but where the proximate cause of the accident was the fright of a horse the county would not be held liable. Brown v. Laurens County, 38 S. C. 232.

A county was not liable under a statute requiring roads to be kept in good repair, where a horse was frightened by two calves coming out of the bushes, and backed over a steep bank. There was some evidence to show that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. Smith v. Kanawha County Ct., 33 W. Va. 713, 8 L. R. A. 82.

And under a statute imposing a liability for roads and bridges being out of repair a county was not liable where plaintiff attempted to cross a landslide on the road, and his horse ran away, as the driver was reckless. Phillips v. Ritchie County Ct., 31 W. Va. 478.

And where a horse was being driven on a buggy across a public bridge, and as he put his fore feet on the bridge became frightened by a large hole under the bridge, and, backing, threw the buggy over the edge of the approach to the bridge, and the timbers there, being rotten, gave way with the rocks and rolled down upon the plaintiff and injured him, no recovery could be had, as the injury was not received because of the hole under the end of the bridge, but from the fright of the horse. Mason v. Spartanburg County, 40 S. C. 330.

Under S. C. act, 1874, Gen. Stat. § 1067, providing that any person who shall receive injury in his person or property through a defect in the repair of a highway, causeway, or bridge, may recover in an action against the county, a county was not liable where a mule, drawing a buggy, became frightened at a placard advertisement on a bridge, and backed against the railing, which gave way and the vehicle was thrown over the bridge, and the commissioners as soon as they knew of the placard had it removed. Nor was it error to ask the jury, "Would a prudent man have driven his mule across the bridge, with two ladies in his buggy, with the sign staring him have known, of the dangerous condition of the approach as described, and attempted to cross it on a load of hay, as averred in the complaint, and met with his death by the wagon slipping off the grade, which was "so narrow on top as to be dangerous for travelers and persons to pass and drive over," he was guilty of such contributory negligence as precludes a recovery.

Jonesboro & F. Turnp. Co. v. Baldwin, 57 Ind. 86; Indianapolis v. Cook, 90 Ind. 10; Morrison v. Shelby County Comrs. 116 Ind. 481; Wilson v. Trafalgar & B. County Gravel Road Co. 83 Ind. 326; Albion v. Hettrick, 90 Ind. 545, 46 Am. Rep. 230; Riest v. Goshen, 42 Ind. 389; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 96 Ind. 40; Gosport v. Evans, 112 Ind. 188; Horton v. Ipswich, 13 Cush. 488; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pinchin, 112 Ind. 592; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Walker, 113 Ind. 196.

A county, like a state, is not liable for the negligence of its agents and officers, unless made liable by a statute.

Morris v. Switzerland County Comrs. 131 Ind. 285; Vigo County Comrs. v. Daily, 182 Ind. 73; Smith v. Allen County Comrs. 181 Ind. 116; Cones v. Benton County Comrs. 187 Ind. 404; Parke County Comrs. v. Wagner, 188 Ind. 609; Vermillion County Comrs. v. Chippe, 181 Ind. 56. 16 L. R. A. 228.

The county is only liable when a bridge is out of repair that it is in fact not what its appearance indicates.

In this case the width of the bridge and its approaches, their relative height from the ground and the stream, were matters of the original plan, survey, and estimate. The plan was adopted by the board as one in its opinion suitable to the width of the highway, the banks of the stream, the extent of the travel, and all the circumstances; and this political determination of the board cannot certainly be changed at the behest of the circuit court or a petit jury of another county.

The liability must be limited to one class of persons also, to wit, travelers using due care in entering upon and passing over the bridge needing repair.

O'Connell v. Lewiston, 65 Me. 84, 20 Am. Rep. 678; Mauch Chunk v. Kline, 100 Pa. 119, 45 Am. Rep. 364; Schaeffer v. Sandusky, 88 Ohio St. 246, 81 Am. Rep. 583; Taylor v. Yonkers, 105 N. Y. 202, 59 Am. Rep. 492.

Messrs. R. W. Marshall, Cummings & Darroch, and Brown & Hall, for appellee:

In Parke County Comrs. v. Wagner, 188 Ind. 609, the court uses the following language: "We are unable to recede from the position of this state upon the question [liability of counties for defective bridges], since that position has been so often assumed that it has become a part of 'the law of the land,' and if hereafter departed from it must be by legislative direction," and in support of this proposition cites the following cases:

Vigo County Comrs. v. Daily, 182 Ind. 73; Vermillion County Comrs. v. Chippe, 181 in the face?" This was not a charge on the fact within the provisions of the Constitution, art. 4, § 23, as the violation would be in the judge deciding a fact about which there was a dispute, and so instructing the jury. Acker v. Anderson County, 20 S. C. 495.

d. By negligence of employee.

Counties are not liable to travelers for injuries caused by negligence of employees, in the absence of a statute imposing such liability.

So, the county commissioners were not liable for an injury sustained by a person driving on the county road by reason of a tree falling upon him through the negligence of a laborer employed by the road supervisors, under Md. act 1878, chap. 364, authorizing the appointment of a road supervisor by commissioners, who fix the price paid by the supervisors, but do not contract with the laborer. It was held that a laborer employed by the supervisor was not the servant of a county commissioner. Arundel County Comrs. v. Duvall, 54 Md. 850, 39 Am. Rep. 393.

And where a cart driven negligently by a convict of the chain gang collided with plaintiff's buggy the county was not liable. Va. Code 1873, chap. 45, § 13, providing that counties may sue and be sued, did not impose any liability, as this provision applied to contracts. Fry v. Albemarle County, 86 Va. 195.

And under S. C. act 1874 (Gen. Stat. 1087), providing liability for defective highways, causeways, and bridges, a county was not liable for loss of a wagon and mule from the sinking of a ferry boat, as this was not within the terms of the statute. Chick v. Newberry and Union Counties, 27 S. C. 419.

II. Injuries to other persons.

a. From condition of buildings.

1. Generally.

In the absence of a statute counties are not liable for personal injuries caused by reason of negligence in the construction or maintenance of public buildings.

39 L. R. A.

So, a county was not liable for personal injuries sustained by reason of the defective construction of its court-house, and the failure to keep it properly lighted at night. It was said that the question is similar to that of liability for a county bridge but that the doctrine of the liability of a county would not be extended. A distinction was made that under the Iowa Code, § 303, the board of supervisors are empowered to build and keep in repair the necessary buildings, and this imposes an involuntary duty to provide a place for holding court. But under the Code, § 303, subd. 18, providing that the board of supervisors shall have power to provide for the erection of bridges which may be necessary to keep the same in repair, the counties are not absolutely required to build any bridge, and when they elect to build a bridge there is a duty incurred which renders them liable for negligence. Kincaid v. Hardin County, 53 Iowa, 480, 36 Am. Rep. 236.

And a county was not liable for injuries caused to a witness in attendance upon court who was injured by reason of negligence in not properly lighting the stairway in the court-house. It was held that Ohio act March 12, 1853, § 7 (Swan's Rev. Stat. 181), providing that the boards of commissioners in the several counties shall be capable of suing and being sued, did not constitute or declare the county or the board of county commissioners a body corporate, and made no provision for claims against the county for torts. Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109.

And a county was not liable where the plaintiff, then but eight years old, was injured while attending a school exhibition in the county court-house, and fell from the veranda, which had no railing. It was said that a county is not liable for an injury arising from its neglect, or even its positive act, unless the liability is imposed by statute. Sheppard v. Pulaski County, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 672.

In holding that a county was not liable for damages for personal injury caused by negligence in Ind. 56, 16 L. R. A. 228; Morris v. Switzerland County Comrs. 181 Ind. 285; Smith v. Allen County Comrs. 181 Ind. 116; Fulton County Comrs. v. Rickel, 106 Ind. 501.

This court has frequently had occasion to sustain the doctrine of stare decisis.

Stout v. Grant County Comrs. 107 Ind. 348; Hale v. Matthews, 118 Ind. 527; Fowler v. Wallace, 181 Ind. 849.

The approaches to a bridge are a part of a bridge, which it is the duty of a county to keep in repair as a part of the structure itself.

Huntington County Comrs. v. Huffman, 184 Ind. 4; Driftwood Valley Turnp. Co. v. Bartholomew County Comrs. 72 Ind. 228; State, Winterburg v. Demaree, 80 Ind. 519; Shelby County Comrs. v. Deprez, 87 Ind. 509; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 24.

It is the duty of counties to keep the bridges of the counties in repair, and for failure to do so damages may be recovered for injuries.

House v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657; Driftwood Valley Turnp. Co. v. Bartholomew County Comrs. 72 Ind. 228; Shelby County Comrs. v. Deprez, 87 Ind. 509; Madison County Comrs. v. Brown, 89 Ind. 48; Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 93 Ind. 523, 47 Am. Rep. 890; Allen County Comrs. v. Bacon, 96 Ind. 81; Porter County Comrs. v. Dombke, 94 Ind. 72; Patton v. Montgomery County Comrs. 96 Ind. 131; Vaught v. Johnson County Comrs. 101 Ind. 128; Knox County Comrs. v. Montgomery, 109 Ind. 69; Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 101 Ind. 479; Wabash County Comrs. v. Pearson, 120 Ind. 426; Sullivan County Comrs. v. Sisson, 2 Ind. App. 317.

the care and control of a court-house, it was said that counties are involuntary corporations organized as political subdivisions for governmental purposes, and not liable for the negligence of its agents unless made so by statute. It was further said there may be little distinction between the duties in regard to bridges and public buildings, but the rule as to bridges would not be extended. Vigo County Comrs. v. Daily, 182 Ind. 73.

For damages caused by maltreatment of a person committed to jail by the ordinary preparatory to being sent to the lunatic asylum, under Ga. Code, § 1864, providing for proceedings to confine a lunatic at the instance of third persons a county, was not liable. It was said that the injured person must sue the jailor, sheriff, or those who maltreated him while in jail. Wilson v. Fannin County, 74 Ga. 818. In this case his limbs were so badly frozen that one leg had to be amputated, and the toes on his other foot were frozen off.

For injuries caused by negligence of the superintendent and building committee appointed by the county board to erect a court-house, where the building fell and killed one of the men, and it was not alleged that the defendants were owners of or had exclusive control of the building, or that the defendants had any power over the plans of the building or the character of the material to be furnished, a recovery was denied because there was no statute imposing a liability. Hollenbeck v. Winnebago County, 95 Ill. 148, 35 Am. Rep. 151.

In Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 322, in a city case it was said of earlier cases that they "have ever since been considered as having established in this commonwealth the general doctrine that a private action cannot be maintained against a town or other quasi corporation, for a neglect of corporate duty, unless such action is given by statute."

In Riddle v. Proprietors of Locks & Canals, 739 L. R. A.

Monks, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action by appellee to recover damages for the death of his intestate, caused, as is alleged, by a defective approach to a bridge over a watercourse. This action was commenced in Jasper county, and the venue changed to the court below. To the complaint, which is in one paragraph, appellant demurred, for want of facts, which was overruled. An answer of general denial was filed. The cause was tried by a jury. A special verdict was returned, and over a motion for a venire de novo, a motion for judgment in favor of appellant on the special verdict, a motion for a new trial, and a motion in arrest, judgment was rendered against appellant for $6,000. Appellant assigns as error the action of the court in overruling the demurrer to the complaint and the motion in arrest of judgment.

Appellant earnestly insist that "there is no liability by counties for injuries caused by the negligence of its officers in constructing or in repairing, or failing to repair, bridges over watercourses, for the reason that there is no statute imposing such liability; the overwhelming weight of authority is to the effect that the duty imposed upon counties to keep bridges in repair does not carry with it an implied liability to answer in damages for injuries sustained from defective or unsafe bridges, and that such liability can only arise from express statutory enactment; that the case of Cones v. Benton County Comrs. 137 Ind. 404, in effect overruled the former holdings of this court in Mass. 189, 5 Am. Dec. 35, it was said: "These are in the books sometimes called quasi corporations. Of this description are counties and hundreds in England; and counties, towns, etc., in this state. Although quasi corporations are liable to information or indictment, for a neglect of a public duty imposed on them by law, yet it is settled in the case of Russell v. Devon County, 2 T. R. 667, that no private action can be maintained against them for a breach of their corporate duty, unless such action be given by statute."

In Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 302, which was an action against a town for personal injuries from a town hall, it was said that "towns and other municipal corporations, including counties in this state, have power, for certain purposes, to hold and manage property, real and personal; and for private injuries, caused by the improper management of their property as such, they have been held to the general liability of private corporations and natural persons that own and manage the same kind of property." (This was not only a dictum, but it is questionable whether this doctrine was ever applied to any county in New Hampshire.)

2. On account of escape from prison.

Counties are not liable for escape of prisoners in the absence of a statute imposing a liability. In some states there is such a statute and the early Ohio cases affirmed an implied liability, but these cases were overruled.

Under the Connecticut statute providing that if any person lawfully committed to gaol shall break such gaol and make his escape, by reason of the insufficiency of such gaol, the damages sustained by persons by reason of such escape shall be paid by the county, and that nothing in this act shall hinder any person from recovering damage of the such cases." It must be admitted that the decided weight of authority in such cases is as stated by appellant. From the numerous decisions to the effect claimed, we cite the following: Cones v. Benton County Comrs. 187 Ind. 404; Smith v. Allen County Comrs. 181 Ind. 116; Morris v. Switzerland County Comrs. 181 Ind. 285; Vigo County Comrs. v. Daily, 182 Ind. 78; Hollenbeck v. Winnebago County, 95 Ill. 148, 35 Am. Rep. 151; Templeton v. Linn County, 22 Or. 813, 15 L. R. A. 780; Manuel v. Cumberland County Comrs. 98 N. C. 9; White v. Chouan County Comrs. 90 N. C. 437, 47 Am. Rep. 534; Wood v. Tipton County, 7 Baxt. 112, 32 Am. Rep. 561; Brabham v. Hinds County Supers. 54 Miss. 363, 28 Am. Rep. 352; White v. Bond County, 58 Ill. 297, 11 Am. Rep. 65; Hedges v. Madison County, 6 Ill. 567; Lorillard v. Monroe, 11 N. Y. 892, 62 Am. Dec. 120; Askew v. Hale County, 54 Ala. 639, 25 Am. Rep. 730; Granger v. Pulaski County, 26 Ark. 87; Downing v. Mason County, 87 Ky. 208; Reardon v. St. Louis County, 36 Mo. 555; Swineford v. Franklin County, 73 Mo. 279; Clark v. Adair County, 79 Mo. 586; Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 8 Cal. 52, 68 Am. Dec. 290, and note on pages 294 and 295; Barnett v. Contra Costa County, 87 Cal. 77; Scales v. Chattahoochee County, 41 Ga. 225; Marion County Comrs. v. Riggs, 24 Kan. 255; Fry v. Albemarle County, 86 Va. 195; Watkins v. Preston County Ct. 30 W. Va. 657; Woods v. Colfax County Comrs. 10 Neb. 552; Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109; Baxter v. Winoski Turnp. Co. 22 Vt. 128, 52 Am. Dec. 84; Ward v. Hartford County, 12 Conn. 404;

Niles Trp. Highway-Comrs. v. Martin, 4 Mich. 557; Adams v. Wiscasset Bank, 1 Me. 861, 10 Am. Dec. 88; Mitchell v. Rockland, 52 Me. 118; Altnow v. Sibley, 30 Minn. 186, 44 Am. Rep. 191; Doddall v. Olmsted County, 30 Minn. 96, 44 Am. Rep. 185; Sussex County Chosen Freeholders v. Strader, 18 N. J. L. 108, 35 Am. Rep. 530; Cooley v. Essex Chosen Freeholders, 27 N. J. L. 415; Young v. Commissioners of Roads, 2 Nott & M'C. 587; Farnum v. Concord, 2 N. H. 392; Eastman v. Meredith, 86 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 303; Morrey v. Newfane, 8 Barb. 645; Heigel v. Wichita County, 84 Tex. 392, 31 Am. St. Rep. 68, and note on pages 65 and 66; Ensign v. Livingston County Supers. 25 Hun, 20; Albrecht v. Queens County, 84 Hun, 899; Smith v. Carlton County Comrs. 46 Fed. Rep. 340; Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440; Bailey v. Lawrence County, 5 S. D. 893; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 301; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 25, 26; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 996, 997, 999; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 364-367, and notes; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1143, 1144, and cases cited in note; 1 Beach, Pub. Corp. § 784; Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. § 325. By common law, the inhabitants of a county were required to repair bridges over watercourses. Carroll County Comrs. v. Bailey, 123 Ind. 46, 48; State v. Gorham, 37 Me. 451; State, Whitall v. Gloucester County Chosen Freeholders, 40 N. J. L. 302; State v. Hudson County, 30 N. J. L. 137; Rex v. Oxfordshire, 16 East, 223. Yet it is settled law that counties were not liable at common law for injuries caused by their negligence in failing to keep such bridges in repair. Cones persons or out of the estate of such persons who shall break or be aiding or assisting in breaking the gaol or who shall escape, a county was liable for an escape, and it was no defense that the escape was effected through the aid of persons outside, or that the plaintiff could have sued those aiding, where they were insolvent, and plaintiff had no knowledge of them at the time of this suit, and it was not shown that the prisoner had an estate, or that the prisoner was recaptured after suit, or that detention would not avail plaintiff. Clark v. Litchfield County, Kirby, 318. [Note by reporter: "This decision was afterwards reversed in the supreme court of errors."]

And the county was liable for the escape of a debtor by reason of insufficiency of the gaol, under the Connecticut statute providing that if any person lawfully committed to any gaol shall break such gaol and make his escape, the county shall pay all damages. Dutton v. Litchfield County, 1 Root, 450.

So, a county was held liable for special damages caused by the escape of a prisoner through the insufficiency of the "gaol" on execution of the debt. Staphorne v. New Haven County, 1 Root, 125; Hawley v. Litchfield County, 1 Root, 155; Dennie v. Middlesex County, 1 Root, 278; Murray v. Bishop, and Smith v. County Treasurer, 1 Root, 367.

In Sheldon v. Litchfield County, 1 Root, 158, it was said that an action against a county for a prisoner escaping through insufficiency of the gaol was under a statute.

And the county was liable under special damages for the insufficiency of a gaol, whereby a party who had been imprisoned for debt made his escape. Williams v. New Haven County, 2 Root, 23.

But a county was not liable for the escape of a prisoner confined for horse stealing, where it was shown the gaol was sufficient, and the prisoner 39 L. R. A.

could not have got out unless he had had assistance from some person outside. Paul v. Tolland County, 2 Root, 186.

In Ward v. Hartford County, 12 Conn. 404, it was said that the only case in which provision is made for redress against a county is where a debtor escapes from prison through the insufficiency of the gaol. "The creditor, by an application to the county court, may procure an order for payment of his debt. [Conn.] Stat. 256, title 42, § 24."

A mandamus was held to be not the proper remedy for a sheriff to hold the county liable for damages which he was compelled to pay for an escape, under a ca. sa. owing to the insufficiency of the jail. Governor, Haygood, v. Clark County Inferior Ct. Justices, 19 Ga. 97.

But it was further held in this case that a county was not liable for the escape of a prisoner under a ca. sa. owing to the insufficiency of the jail. It was said that a county is a corporation of the municipal kind or it is not, and if it is a municipal corporation it is not liable for the conduct of the inferior court in not providing a more efficient jail, where it is not shown that they have funds to make it more secure, and a municipal corporation is not liable for the acts or omissions of its officers. The court held that if it was not a municipal corporation it could not have an agent. Governor, Haygood, v. Clark County Inferior Ct. Justices, 19 Ga. 97.

In Haygood v. Inferior Ct. Justices, 20 Ga. 845, on the return of this case to the lower court an amendment setting up that the justices of the inferior court had funds on hand sufficient to repair the jail was denied, and it was held that the sheriff could not recover as he was the legal custodian of the jail, and if it was unsafe it was wrong for him to imprison the debtor there, and if the jail was wholly insufficient it was the same thing as if there

v. Benton County Comrs. 187 Ind. 404, and authorities heretofore cited. It is a well-settled proposition that, when subdivisions of a state are organized solely for a public purpose by a general law, no action lies against them for an injury received by anyone on account of the negligence of the officers of such subdivision, unless a right of action is expressly given by statute; that such subdivisions, as counties and townships, are instrumentalities of government, and exercise authority given by the state, and are no more liable for the acts or omissions of their officers than the state. Cones v. Benton County Comrs. 187 Ind. 404; Morris v. Switzerland County Comrs. 181 Ind. 285; Vigo County Comrs. v. Daily, 182 Ind. 73; Smith v. Allen County Comrs. 181 Ind. 116; White v. Sullivan County Comrs. 129 Ind. 396; Abbott v. Johnson County Comrs. 114 Ind. 61, cases cited on page 68; Freel v. Crawfordville School City, 142 Ind. 27, 87 L. R. A. 301; Summers v. Daviess County Comrs. 103 Ind. 262, 58 Am. Rep. 512; Greene County Comrs. v. Bonnell, 4 Ind. App. 133; Edgerly v. Concord, 62 N. H. 8; Goddard v. Harpwell, 84 Me. 499, 30 Am. St. Rep. 373, and note on pages 398-402; Howard v. Worcester, 158 Mass. 426, 12 L. R. A. 160; Larrabee v. Peabody, 128 Mass. 561; Clark v. Waltham, 128 Mass. 567; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344; Wison v. Newport, 18 R. I. 454, 48 Am. Rep. 35; Finch v. Toledo Bd. of Edu. 80 Ohio St. 37, 27 Am. Rep. 414; Lane v. Woodbury District Twp. 58 Iowa, 462; Flori v. St. Louis, 69 Mo. 341, 33 Am. Rep. 504; Bigelow v. Randolph, 14 Gray, 541; Ford v. Kendall School Dist. 121

Pa. 548, 1 L. R. A. 607, and all authorities cited on the proposition concerning bridges.

In Vermillion County Comrs. v. Chipps, 181 Ind. 56, 16 L. R. A. 228, this court said: "The decided weight of authority is that, in the absence of a statute upon the subject, a county is not liable for a failure to keep its bridges in repair. Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 42." It was held by this court in Smith v. Allen County Comrs. 181 Ind. 116, that a county is not liable for an injury to a servant sustained without his fault while engaged in tearing down one of its bridges, although he worked under the immediate charge of its agent, who was known by the board of commissioners to be incompetent, which incompetency was the proximate cause of the injury. The court said: "A county is a civil or political division of the state, created by general laws to aid in the administration of the government, and in the absence of a statute imposing special duties with corresponding liabilities, is no more liable for the tortious acts or negligence of its officers and agents than the state." In Morris v. Switzerland County Comrs. 181 Ind. 285, this court held that a county was not liable in an action for damages resulting from a failure of the board of commissioners to keep the jail in a healthy and inhabitable condition. The court said: "The most logical and generally accepted theory is, that political subdivisions, such as counties and townships, are created to give effect to and enable citizens to exercise the right of local self government. State, Holt, v. Denny, 118 Ind. 449, 4 L. R. A. 65; White v. Sullivan County Comrs. 129 Ind. 396. Such had been no jail. It was said he ought to have conveyed the debtor to the jail of the adjoining county and delivered him to the jailor there.

In Brown County Comrs. v. Butt, 2 Ohio, 348, it was held that a county was liable to a sheriff who had been mulcted in damages for an escape of a debtor owing to the insufficiency of the county jail. It was said that if it was a new question it would have been proper that the action should have been against the county in the first instance to avoid circuitry of action for damages for an escape of a debtor from an insufficient jail. But this case was overruled in Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109.

In Richardson v. Spencer, 6 Ohio, 18, where a sheriff was sued for the escape of a prisoner taken on an execution, it was held that where the escape resulted from the insufficiency of the jail the sheriff was liable in the first instance to the plaintiff on execution, and a recovery against him clothed him with power to coerce indemnity from the county.

In Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109, the case of Brown County Comrs. v. Butt, 2 Ohio, 348, and the dictum of Richardson v. Spencer, 6 Ohio, 18, were overruled.

For prisoner's right of action for imprisonment in unhealthful or unfit prison, see Shields v. Durham (N. C.) 36 L. R. A. 233, note.

b. By negligence or wrongful act of employee.

Counties are not liable for personal injuries caused to persons by reason of negligence or tort of employee.

In the case of HUGHES v. MONROE COUNTY it was held that the county of Monroe was not liable for injuries caused by the operation of a laundry machine, whereby an employee of the County Insane Asylum was injured, under N. Y. Laws 1363, chap. 82, placing the asylum under the board of supervisors, authorizing them to elect a warden, and Laws 1870, chap. 633, making it the duty of the trustees to determine whether an inmate was a charge upon the town, or the city of Rochester or upon the county, as the warden and trustees were in no sense the agents of the county but were public officers. It was also held that the county would not be made liable by caring for insane patients not residing in the county under a contract, or by deriving a revenue in small amount from surplus farm products. The county was held to be a quasi-municipal corporation, and the law of 1892, which provided that a county is a municipal corporation, did not apply because the injury was committed before its enactment. This case is in accord with the authorities generally.

So, a county was not liable where injuries were caused to a servant in the employ of the county working under the personal superintendence of one of the board of commissioners in tearing down a bridge, although it was charged that the superintendent was incompetent, inexperienced, and negligent. Smith v. Allen County Comrs. 181 Ind. 116.

Nor where a convict in the penitentiary was required to work at a circular saw, and he alleged that the injury was occasioned by the illegal and negligent acts of the defendant in compelling him to approach the saw, and in not providing proper means for the execution of the business of the penitentiary. Alamancos v. Albany County Supers. 25 Hun, 551.

Nor where an employee of an independent contractor of defendant while carrying lumber to a bridge was injured by reason of a negligent blast of dynamite. It was said that counties are subordinate political divisions of a state, and are not liable for torts of their officers unless made so by statute. Smith v. Carlton County Comrs. 46 Fed. Rep. 340.

subdivisions are instrumentalities of government and exercise authority delegated by the state and act for the state. As the state is not liable for the acts or omissions of its officers, neither should a political subdivision of the state be liable for the acts or omissions of its officers as relating to political powers." White v. Sullivan County Comrs. 129 Ind. 396, and Summers v. Daviess County Comrs. 103 Ind. 262, are to the same effect. This court held in Vigo County Comrs. v. Daily, 182 Ind. 73, that a county is not liable for damages occasioned by the negligence and carelessness of the board of commissioners in the care and control of the court-house. The court said: "It is now well settled that counties are involuntary corporations, organized as political subdivisions of the state for governmental purposes, and not liable, any more than the state would be liable, for the negligence of its agents or officers unless made liable by statute." In Cones v. Benton County Comrs. 187 Ind. 404, this court held that a county could not be held liable for personal injuries sustained while traveling upon a free gravel road of the county, and by reason of the defects in the construction and repair of such road. The court also expressly declared that the county was not liable at common law for the negligence of its officers, and that no liability existed by statute with reference to bridges. The court said: "It is quite true that the principle adopted in the bridge cases is in perfect analogy to the case before us, and if we would be consistent, those cases would control the present; but we are fully convinced that the principle there adopted, of an implied liability, is not in harmony with the great weight of authority, ancient and modern. . . . The liability did not exist at common law, and does not exist by statute with respect to bridges or highways, and the objections to liability are well stated in Hollenbeck v. Winnebago County, 95 Ill. 151, 85 Am. Rep. 151, as follows: 'No reason is perceived why a county should be held to respond in damages for the negligence of its officers while acting in the discharge of public corporate duties enjoined upon them by the laws of the state . . . clothed with but few corporate powers, and these not of a private . . . character. . . . In fact, the powers and duties of counties bear such a due analogy to the governmental functions of the state at large that as well might the state be held responsible for the negligent acts of its officers as counties.' . . . It will be found that the authorities upon which cities and towns, as municipal corporations, are held liable for the results of the negligence of official duties make this distinction: That such municipalities are voluntary corporations organized for corporate purposes, and possessing legislative, administrative, and judicial functions not possessed, to the same degree by counties or townships, and that they exercise and enjoy advantages purely local and which are independent of the state, and inure to their benefit as distinguished from that of the state. We are aware that profound jurists do not agree with the doctrine that cities and towns are less governmental subdivisions of the state . . . than counties or townships; but, aside

And a county was not liable for negligence in not appointing a guardian for, and in not confining, a party who had been found by inquisition to be of unsound mind, who was allowed to run at large and kill her husband. Miller v. Iron County, 29 Mo. 122.

Nor for damages and unskillful treatment received by an indigent sick person while in the county hospital. Sherbourne v. Yuba County, 21 Cal. 113, 81 Am. Dec. 151.

And no recovery could be had for damages caused by negligence of the county physician for the poor in a surgical operation, where it was not shown that the board of commissioners did not exercise care and diligence in his selection. Summers v. Daviess County Comrs. 103 Ind. 262, 58 Am. Rep. 512.

And a county was not liable for injuries caused by one of the guards unlawfully beating a convict in the chain gang, or for the negligence of the rest of the guards in not protecting the convict from the unlawful beating. Hammond v. Richmond County, 72 Ga. 188.

But in Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 313, a county was held liable for negligence in constructing a sewer to the county insane asylum under the superintendence of the county engineer who was present directing the work, where by neglect of the contractor and of the engineer the edge caved in, killing a son of the plaintiff.

In Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 313, it was said: "It would be foreign alike to our purpose and the facts admitted by the demurrer, to question the correctness of the proposition so generally occurred in elsewhere, asserted in Reardon v. St. Louis County, 86 Mo. 555, that quasi corporations, created by the legislature for the purposes of public policy, are not responsible for the neglect of duties enjoined on them, unless the action was given by the statute." It was further said: "In the case at bar, the county of St. Louis was not engaged in the discharge of duties imposed alike by general law on all counties; duties whose performance, if neglected, might have been enforced by appropriate procedure for that purpose; but in the discharge of a self-imposed duty not enjoined by any law. And the test of the latter is this: That the county could not have been compelled to enter on the work for whose performance it contracted."

This injury occurred in 1872, and in 1878 under the Constitution the county of St. Louis became the city of St. Louis or the two corporations were consolidated with double functions, as shown by State, Beach, v. Finn, 4 Mo. App. 347.

III. Injuries to real property from public improvements.

a. Generally.

The weight of authority is that a county is not liable for injuries to property by reason of bridges, roads, drains, and the like being improperly constructed or out of repair or creating a nuisance. But some cases allow a recovery where a constitutional right is invaded, as where it can be construed to be a taking of private property without compensation, or where the Constitution provides compensation for property damaged.

The cases denying a liability for damages to real property are as follows, and will be found below under the appropriate subheads:

A county was not liable for a nuisance arising from a defective ditch causing overflow. Dashner v. Mills County, 88 Iowa, 401; Green v. Harrison County, 61 Iowa, 311; Nutt v. Mills County, 61 Iowa, 754.

Nor where the bridge abutment diverted the water and washed away land, prior to the Califor-from the reasons so stated for the support of the distinction, it is plain to us that counties have no such powers as cities or towns to ordain, in a corporate capacity what improvements shall be made, the free choice of agents to make them, and the discretion as to the rate of levy to be made for the same. Nor have counties the express power, nor the power necessarily implied, to raise a fund to pay damages for injuries, unless we imply this power, not from legislative grant, but from the liability implied in any case. General powers are not extended to counties, but the measure of their privileges must be found expressed by, or necessarily implied from, some statute." The doctrine declared in House v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657, and the cases following it, is that the laws of this state concerning the building and repair of bridges imposed the duties upon counties to keep public bridges in such repair, that they are reasonably safe for travel, and gave them ample power to provide the means necessary to make such repairs, and that, therefore, there was an implied liability to answer in damages for injuries from a failure to discharge that duty.

But even if the doctrine of implied liability from a duty enjoined, and the provision of means for the performance of that duty, declared and applied in the bridge cases, is a correct and not an erroneous statement of the law, it yet remains for us to determine whether the cases named can be sustained on this ground, to do which we must ascertain whether the legislature has given the boards of commissioners the power, and provided them with the means and instrumentalities, to cause the bridges in their respective counties to be kept in repair; for, unless this has been done, no liability can be implied, even though the doctrine of implied liability is correct.

The 1st section of the act to provide for the erection and repair of bridges (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2885; Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3275), provides that, "whenever in the opinion of the county commissioners the public convenience shall require that a bridge shall be repaired or built over any watercourse, they shall cause survey and estimate therefor to be made, and direct the same to be erected." The 2d section (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2886; Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3276), provides: "If the estimate therefor shall exceed the ability of the road district in which such bridge is to be built, by the application of its ordinary road work and tax, to perform, the county commissioners may make an appropriation from the county treasurer to build or repair the same." The 3d section (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2887; Rev. Stat. 1884, § 3277), enacts that "such board shall receive and appropriate all donations for the erection and repair of bridges; they shall also aid the same, when of general importance, by advances from the county treasury, and shall make such regulations in reference to payments and kinds of bridges as to them shall seem proper; provided, however, that if the board of commissioners of any such county shall not deem any such bridge of sufficient importance to make an appropriation from the county treasury for the nia Constitution providing compensation for property damaged. Crowell v. Sonoma County, 26 Cal. 313.

Nor where a bridge caused an overflow of plaintiff's land. Davis v. Ada County (Idaho) 47 Pac. 93.

Nor where building a jail obstructed a stream flooding plaintiff's premises. Downing v. Mason County, 87 Ky. 208.

Nor where a highway was built so as to cause overflow of water on plaintiff's land. Grimwood v. Summit County Comrs. 23 Ohio St. 600.

Nor where a dam was injured by the fall of a bridge which washed against it. Livermore v. Camden County Chosen Freeholders, 29 N. J. L. 245, 31 N. J. L. 507.

Nor where damages were caused to a mill dam by flooding, and plaintiff depended on the bridge approach to retain water. Jerne v. Mounmouth County Chosen Freeholders, 52 N. J. L. 553, 11 L. R. A. 416.

Nor where an overflow was caused by putting an insufficient drain in the road. Packard v. Voltz, 94 Iowa, 277.

So, where an obstruction of a stream was caused by the manner in which the contractor built the bridge, the county was not liable. Smith v. Wilkes and McDuffie Counties, 79 Ga. 125.

And building a road so as to obstruct a mill race gave no right of action. Swineford v. Franklin County, 78 Mo. 279; Walter v. Wicomico County Comrs. 35 Md. 385.

A county was not liable for a nuisance arising from the condition of a jail. Wehn v. Gage County Comrs. 5 Neb. 494, 25 Am. Rep. 497; Threadgill v. Anson County Comrs. 99 N. C. 353.

Nor for a nuisance resulting from a privy being out of repair. Mobley v. Carter County, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 604.

And an injunction was refused against a nuisance. L. R. A.

sance anticipated from erecting a jail. Burwell v. Vance County Comrs. 93 N. C. 73, 53 Am. Rep. 454.

Where a road was vacated no recovery could be had for injury to adjacent property, under Iowa Const. art. 1, § 18, providing that private property shall not be taken for public use without compensation. Brady v. Shinkle, 40 Iowa, 576; Ellsworth v. Chickasaw County, 40 Iowa, 571.

And where a road was vacated it was held that property was not "taken for public use." Coffey County Comrs. v. Venard, 10 Kan. 95.

Trespass in opening a road through plaintiff's land gave no right of action against the county. Hutchison v. Pulaski County, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 117.

A county was not liable for a barn damaged by fire through negligence of an employee of a county. Field v. Albemarle County (Va.) 20 S. E. 954.

Nor for fire started on the county poor farm. Symonds v. Clay County Supers. 71 Ill. 855.

In Fenton v. Salt Lake County, 3 Utah, 423, it was held that a county was not liable for injuries to land by the construction of canals diverting a watercourse, where the claim had not been presented to the board.

The cases affirming a liability for injuries to real property by reason of bridges, roads, ditches, and buildings, and for negligence of the county, will be found below under the appropriate subheads.

In SCHUSLER v. HENNEPIN COUNTY COMBS, a county was held liable for erecting a dam in a lake, destroying a mill dam without compensation.

And for flooding land by reason of bridge abutments, a county was liable under Cal. Const. 1879, art. 1, § 14, providing that private property shall not be damaged for public use without compensation. Tyler v. Tehama County, 109 Cal. 618.

And was liable for damages by building an abutment of a bridge in front of plaintiff's house, un-erection or repair thereof, the trustee of any township . . . may appropriate any part of the road-tax fund in the township treasury for that purpose, if he shall deem it right and expedient to do so." And § 11 (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2892; Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3282), provides that "the board of commissioners of such county shall cause all bridges therein to be kept in repair, and shall cause the township superintendent of the proper road district to keep in a conspicuous place, at each end of any bridge in his district whose chord is not less than 25 feet, the following notice in large English characters: 'One dollar fine for riding or driving on this bridge faster than a walk.' And if any person shall ride or drive over any such bridge faster than a walk, for any such offense he shall forfeit and pay $1, to be recovered by the proper town superintendent before any justice of the peace of the proper county, which shall be applied to the repairs of such bridge."

It will be seen from an examination of these sections, which must be construed together, that the power of the board of commissioners to appropriate the county funds for the repair of bridges is limited to certain cases. While the county is required by the 11th section to cause the bridges in the county to be kept in repair, the expense of the same under § 2, unless too great, must be borne by the road district alone, for the reason that the board of commissioners can only make an appropriation out of the county treasury to repair a bridge in cases where the estimates thereof exceed the ability of the road district, by application of its ordinary road work and tax, to perform. If the road district is able, by its ordinary road work and tax, to make the repairs, the board of commissioners has no power to appropriate the county funds to pay for repairing the same. In such a case the board is powerless. The supervisor of a road district is a township, not a county, officer, and is not under the control of the county commissioners. He is an independent agent, subject only to the control, in some degree, of the township trustee. Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 6818-6838. He does not represent the county, and the county is not responsible for his acts. Dooley v. Sullivan, 112 Ind. 451, 454, 455; Vigo Twp. v. Knox County Comrs. 111 Ind. 170; Abbett v. Johnson County Comrs. 114 Ind. 65. Neither has the board of commissioners any power to appropriate the road-tax fund or any other township fund in the hands of the county treasurer, township trustee, or supervisor to pay the expense of said repairs. Vigo Twp. v. Knox County Comrs. 111 Ind. 170. The board of commissioners might, perhaps, institute an action, and, by writ of mandamus, compel him to make such repairs. Certainly, the county would not be held liable for the failure of the board of commissioners to institute an action against such supervisor, and, by writ of mandamus, compel him to repair a bridge. Under § 8, the board of commissioners have no power to appropriate county funds for the repair of a bridge, unless they deem it of sufficient importance. If they do not deem such bridge of sufficient importance to make an appropriation out of the county funds for its repair, then they have no power der Pa. Const. 1874, art. 16, § 8, providing for compensation for property taken, injured, and destroyed in the construction of public improvements. Chester County v. Brower, 117 Pa. 647.

And trespass in opening a road through plaintiff's land was held to give a cause of action against the county. Coburn v. San Mateo County, 75 Fed. Rep. 520.

And an injunction would be granted in such a case where no compensation for the taking had been made. McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 121.

Where a flood injured a dam by reason of improper construction of a bridge abutment, a recovery was allowed. Riddle v. Delaware County, 156 Pa. 642.

Damages were given for a nuisance caused by sewage from a county farm, in Lefrois v. Monroe County, 48 N. Y. Supp. 519. (Pending in court of appeals.)

A county was liable for locating a bridge and constructing the same so that it was carried by a flood against a dam, injuring the same. Harford County Comrs. v. Wise, 71 Md. 43.

And was liable for trespass in removing a vault which was a fixture. Rhoda v. Alameda County, 69 Cal. 523.

b. By construction and operation of bridges.

In regard to injuries from locating and building a bridge under the Constitutions of California and Pennsylvania, a recovery has been allowed, and a recovery was allowed in Maryland and Pennsylvania on an implied liability, but it is generally held that a recovery cannot be had.

A county was liable for the construction of a bridge, the abutment of which turned the water against plaintiff's land, although it was claimed that the bridge was built, not upon the highway, but upon private property, and that the acts of the board of supervisors were unauthorized and unlawful. It was held that generally an action did not lie against the county, but Cal. Const. 1879, art. 1, § 14, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made, authorized a recovery. Tyler v. Tehama County, 109 Cal. 618.

In that case it was said that in Crowell v. Sonoma County, 25 Cal. 313, the county was not held liable, and under the old Constitution that was doubtless true, but the change in the Constitution from Cal. Const. 1849, art. 1, § 8, providing, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation, to Const. art. 1, § 14, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, created a clear distinction between damages to property and damages for personal injuries.

And a county was liable for consequential damages caused by the erection of the abutment to a county bridge some 14 feet above the grade of the street in front of plaintiff's house in the city, under Pa. Const. 1874, art. 16, § 8, providing that municipal corporations invested with the privilege of taking private property for public use shall make just compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed in the construction of their work, highways, or improvements, which shall be paid before such taking, injury, or destruction. It was said that prior to the adoption of the Constitution plaintiff would have been without remedy. Chester County v. Brower, 117 Pa. 647.

In an action for injury caused to a dam by a bridge being negligently constructed and located, it was held that a sketch and painting of the scene, showing the location of the bridge, the mill dam and county adjacent, made by an artist who never saw the bridge, was competent evidence, as the jury could have gone in person to inspect the locality. Harford County Comrs. v. Wise, 71 Md. 43.

to make the appropriation, and cannot rightfully do so. It certainly cannot be claimed that, under these sections, the board of commissioners have any general power to make appropriations of county funds for the repair of bridges. Such appropriations can only be made in certain cases and upon certain contingencies; and in cases where they cannot make such appropriation, no way is provided by which they can compel such repairs to be made by the road supervisors, except, perhaps by expensive and frequent litigation, which was certainly not the intent of the legislature.

This act was considered and construed by this court in Driftwood Valley Turnp. Co. v. Bartholomew County Comrs. 72 Ind. 226, which was an action on a contract made by the county to keep the approaches to a bridge in repair. Worden, J., speaking for the court, said: "The mode in which the county is bound to perform that duty is specifically pointed out by statute and a contract which contravenes that mode and substitutes another must be void. If the contract sued on is valid, and has been broken, the damages of the appellant must be paid out of the county treasury. But it was not contemplated that the expense of repairing bridges should be paid out of the county treasury, except upon a contingency. By the 1st section of the act above set out, when a bridge is to be repaired or built, the commissioners are to 'cause surveys and estimates therefor to be made, and direct the same to be erected.' Why were surveys and estimates to be made? The 2d section answers this question. It is because the appropriation from the treasury depends upon this question whether the estimate exceeds the ability of the road district, by the application to the work of the ordinary road work and tax of the district. It was not contemplated that the expense should be borne by the county treasury, except the excess beyond the ability of the road district. If this contract were to be held valid, the county would have to pay all the expense of the repairs, in the way of damages, no portion falling upon the road district. The contract is in violation of the provisions of the statute and void. The 11th section of the statute, making it the duty of the commissioners to cause all bridges in the county to be kept in repair, must be construed in connection with the 1st and 2d. While the commissioners must cause the bridges to be kept in repair, the expense must be borne by the road district, so far as it is able, according to the 2d section, and the residue by the county. The 3d section provides that the commissioners shall aid in the erection and repair of bridges, when of general importance, by advances from the

In an action for negligently constructing and locating a bridge evidence by an expert who examined the remains of the abutment and foundation and mortar, two years after the bridge washed away, in order to testify as to the material and care of the work, was competent. Harford County Comra. v. Wise, 71 Md. 43.

In that case it was held that skilful construction involved putting suitable materials together in the proper manner upon a site adapted to the structure built and the place where the bridge was built could not be disregarded; and a county was liable where a bridge above a mill was carried away by the flood and injured plaintiff's dam, where the location, condition, and construction of the bridge were negligent, and it was carried away for that reason, although the damage was caused by an unusual height of flood.

And a county was liable where a county bridge on a public highway was constructed so that the abutment interfered with the passage of water in time of flood and injured a mill dam, and it would have been practical to have provided for the flow of water. It was further held that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence in building a dam at that place, where it was built before any bridge was constructed. Riddle v. Delaware County, 156 Pa. 643.

Under N. J. Rev. p. 88, § 2, providing that when a township or county which is chargeable by law with the erection, rebuilding, or repairing of any bridge shall wrongfully neglect to erect, rebuild, or repair the same, by reason whereof any person shall receive an injury in his person or property, such person may have his action against such municipal body, a county was not liable where the owner of a mill dam depended upon the abutments of an approach to a bridge to retain water, and by reason of defective planking the earth washed away flooding his mill, but the bridge could still be used. Jernce v. Monmouth County Chosen Freeholders, 52 N. J. L. 553, 11 L. R. A. 416.

In Jernce v. Monmouth County Chosen Freeholders, 52 N. J. L. 553, 11 L. R. A. 416, the case of Ripley v. Essex & Hudson Counties Chosen Freeholders, 40 N. J. L. 45, was distinguished, as in that case the 39 L. R. A. bridge owed the duty of providing a sufficient draw for safe passage, but in this case the bridge merely rested upon a dam, and it was only incidentally obliged to maintain the dam far enough to secure its own stability, and the dam belonged to the mill owner.

A county was not liable for injuries caused by placing a bridge abutment so as to divert water and wash away land, under Cal. act 1855 (Wood's Dig. p. 1850), making it the duty of the board of supervisors to divide the county into road districts and to appoint a road overseer who shall cause bridges to be made when necessary, and to keep the same in good repair. It was said that if the bridge was unlawfully placed in the channel by the overseer, the remedy should be against him by whom the injury is committed. Crowell v. Sonoma County, 25 Cal. 313.

But there is now a liability under the present Constitution. See Tyler v. Tehama County, 100 Cal. 618.

And no recovery could be had for damages caused by an obstruction in the stream made by the contractor in building a public bridge. It was not the duty of the county authorities to supervise the work done by the contractor in building a free public bridge over a stream dividing two counties, and the counties were not liable to one having a mill on the stream which was damaged by an obstruction caused by the faulty manner in which the work was executed. Smith v. Wilkes & McDuffie Counties, 79 Ga. 125.

So, in the absence of statutory liability, a county was not liable for damages sustained by reason of negligence in the construction and maintenance of bridges, causing overflow of plaintiff's land. Davis v. Ada County (Idaho) 47 Pac. 93.

Under a statute making counties liable for injuries to travelers on account of bridges they were not liable for other injuries.

A county was not liable for injuries caused to stock running at large on account of a defective public bridge, under Ala. Code 1886, § 1546, and Code 1876, § 1082, requiring that bridges erected by contract with the county commissioners shall continue safe "for the passage of travelers and other county treasury. The contract cannot be upheld by virtue of this section. . . . The obligation to aid by advances from the county is not unconditional, as is seen by the proviso to the section. It depends upon whether or not the board of commissioners shall deem the bridge to be of sufficient importance to make an appropriation from the county treasury for the erection or repair thereof. The duty of the board in making or withholding advances from the county treasury involves a question of judgment as to the importance of the bridge, and this judgment must be exercised as to the importance of the bridge at the time an advance is made. The board could not, by a contract to make advances in the future, preclude itself or its successors from the right and duty to determine, at the time an advance is sought, whether the bridge has the importance required, in order to justify an advance from the county treasury."

It follows, therefore, that the board of commissioners can only cause bridges to be repaired by an appropriation of county funds to pay the expense when the road district is not able by its road work and tax to make the same, and the commissioners deem the bridge of sufficient importance to appropriate the county funds for that purpose, and in such case the expense must be borne by the road district so far as it is able, and the residue by the county. If this is a proper construction of said act,—and it was so decided in Driftwood Valley Turnp. Co. v. Bartholomew County Comrs. 72 Ind. 226,—the board can in no case pay for repairs out of the county treasury, unless the road district first applies its ordinary road work and tax in making the repairs. Then the board may, if it deem the bridge of sufficient importance, pay the residue out of the county treasury. So that, in all cases where there is a refusal to apply the ordinary road work and tax of the road district in repairing a bridge, the only way they can cause the repairs to be made is by compelling the road supervisors to make such repairs, and no power has been given or adequate means provided by which they can coerce him or any other officer to make such repairs. If it were conceded that when the duty is imposed upon boards of commissioners to cause all bridges to be kept in repair, and they have power to make the appropriations from the county treasury for that purpose, there is an implied liability to respond in damages for an injury resulting from a failure to discharge that duty, yet no such liability could be implied in this state, for the reason that the boards of commissioners have no power to appropriate the county funds for such purpose, except upon a persons." Lee County v. Yarbrough, 85 Ala. 500.

An action could not be maintained against the board of chosen freeholders for injuries sustained by a mill dam by reason of the fall of the county bridge under N. J. Laws 1850, chap. 219, § 21, providing that if any damage shall happen to any person by means of the insufficiency or want of repair of any bridge upon any public road the township or county in which the same shall be situated is or shall be liable to make all repairs, and the person sustaining such damage shall have the right to recover the same; as this act was only to secure the repair of roads and bridges for the benefit of travelers, and was not intended to include real estate. Livermore v. Camden County Chosen Freeholders, 29 N. J. L. 245, Affirmed 31 N. J. L. 507.

In New Jersey and Louisiana a county is held liable for negligence in operating a draw bridge, but this liability is denied in New York.

In Houston v. Police Jury, 3 La. Ann. 506, where the plaintiff had passed through a draw bridge controlled by the county, and was prevented from returning by the draw not being opened for the passage of plaintiff's boat, through negligence on the part of those for whose act the parish was responsible, the parish was bound to repair the damage caused thereby. It did not appear that the defendant assumed any right to interfere with or obstruct the navigation of the river, and the obligation to have the draw opened whenever necessary for boats to pass was recognized.

And the board of chosen freeholders of the counties E. and H. were liable for injuries caused to a vessel in not keeping a 'drawbridge in proper repair, thereby injuring a vessel, under N. J. act March 15, 1860 (Rev. p. 86, § 9), providing that where a township or board of chosen freeholders is chargeable with the erection, rebuilding, or repair of a bridge, any person injured may recover damages against said township or against said board of freeholders. Under act February 27, 1833, requiring the owner of a vessel to lower his sails when approaching a bridge, the jury were properly charged that it was the duty of the commander in approaching the draw to so control his sails—not to take them down, but to lower them—as to enable him to approach the bridge with such diminished speed as would permit the removal of the draw. Ripley v. Essex and Hudson Counties Chosen Freeholders, 40 N. J. L. 45.

39 L. R. A.

Where a steamer was detained upon a river in consequence of the defective construction of a bridge a county was not liable in the absence of any statute. Georgia Const. (Code, § 5152) providing that justices of the peace have jurisdiction over cases of injuries for damages to personal property, did not give jurisdiction to the justice in this case, as this was not damage to the property, but to the company. White Star Line S. B. Co. v. Gordon County, 31 Ga. 47.

And in an action against a county for obstructing navigation of the Tittabawassee river, it was held that the determination that it was necessary to build a bridge across that river, and the whole action of the board in relation thereto, were legislative, and whether any portion was usurpation or not, no action could be maintained against the county for any consequences resulting therefrom, and the same rule would apply as though the bridge was built by the legislature. Larkin v. Saginaw County, 11 Mich. 84, 82 Am. Dec. 63.

An action could not be maintained against a county for negligence in operating a drawbridge, by reason of which an approaching tug was injured. No new liability was created by N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 686, declaring counties to be municipal corporations, as under that law a county could only be sued upon a cause of action for which it was liable. Godfrey v. Queens County, 39 Hun, 18.

A county was not liable for injuries to a ferry franchise caused by building a bridge connecting another county, at the same place as the ferry, and placing an abutment in the line of the ferry, where there was no authority to build the bridge, under Ind. act May 14, 1869, providing for concurrent action of both counties to build a bridge, and one refused to co-operate. It was held that a county could not be held liable for an unauthorized action resulting in damages. Browning v. Owen County Comrs. 44 Ind. 11.

contingency over which they have no control, and then only when, in their judgment, the bridge is of sufficient importance. It was said in the case of House v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657, that "cities are held liable for failing to keep their streets in repair, though no statute expressly provides for such liability; and in our opinion the principles will apply as well to a county as a city." There is a wide difference, however, between the powers of boards of commissioners with reference to bridges and the powers of cities over the streets. Cities may ordain what improvements shall be made, and how the expense of the same shall be paid, and may choose the agents to make them. The city council may fix the date of its meetings, and may be called in special session by the mayor or five councilmen at any time. The city has officers whose duty it is to keep all the streets in repair, and who have ample authority at all times to act for the city in making such repairs, and who have constant supervision over the streets. The board of commissioners meet in regular session only four times a year,—in March, June, September, and December,—and have no power to meet at any other time except when called in special session by the county auditor, when the public interest requires it; and he is the sole judge of the necessity of such special sessions. Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 5736, 5737 (Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 7821, 7822). The auditor is an independent public agent, who does not act for or represent the county, and for whose conduct the county is in no way responsible. Vigo Twp. v. Knox County Comrs. 111 Ind. 170; Dooley v. Sullivan, 112 Ind. 451, 454, 455; Abbott v. Johnson County Comrs. 114 Ind. 65. So that whether the board shall meet in special session to cause a bridge to be repaired depends upon an officer who does not represent the county, and for whose acts the county is not responsible. A county board cannot make a valid contract for the repair of a bridge except when in legal session as a board. Their powers are created and defined by statute. They are agents with limited powers, and for any act done by them not within the scope of their powers the county is not liable. McCabe v. Fountain County Comrs. 46 Ind. 880, 383; Cass County Comrs. v. Ross, 46 Ind. 404; Campbell v. Brackenridge, 8 Blackf. 471; Potts v. Henderson, 2 Ind. 327; Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. S. They are authorized by statute to appoint a superintendent to erect a bridge, but

An action could not be brought against the board of county commissioners for injuring plaintiff by depriving him of a bridge and ferry franchise in laying off a public road on his land and erecting a bridge near where plaintiff's bridge was, as under Ga. Const. § 5222, providing that each county shall be a body corporate, and all suits by or against a county shall be in the name of the county, it was held that the action must name it, and not its agent, as defendant. Arnett v. Decatur County Comrs. 79 Ga. 732.

c. By roads.

Counties are not held liable for damages caused by vacating a public highway or for consequential injuries to a mill dam in building a road. As to whether a county is liable for trespass committed by a road officer, there is some conflict. A county is not held liable for damages for opening a shunpike road injuring a turnpike company.

Where the board of supervisors vacated a highway, an owner of land situated on the highway, but not upon the part vacated, which commenced about 30 rods from his farm, could not recover damages, under Iowa Const. art. 1, § 18, providing that private property shall not be taken for public use without first compensating the owner therefor. Iowa Code, §§ 941, 946, providing for establishing and vacating roads conditioned upon payment of damages, did not impose a liability as they simply prescribed the proceedings to recover. It was held that a citizen might not be deprived of the right to use an existing highway, but his right to its continuation would be held subject to the exercise of lawful authority, and the citizen had no right to the continuation of the road except such as he held in common with the public. Brady v. Shinkle, 40 Iowa, 576.

And in Ellsworth v. Chickasaw County, 40 Iowa, 571, it was held that an abutting owner could not recover in such a case.

Under Kan. Gen. Stat. (1888), 897, chap. 89, authorizing a county to vacate county roads, a county was not liable to a person who was injured by reason of the commissioners' vacating a county road, as neither the county nor its officers committed any wrong by so doing, nor did they take any person's property. Coffey County Comrs. v. Venard, 10 Kan. 96.

A county was not liable for injuries caused to the owners of a mill by reason of filling up a mill race which crossed a road, in order to prevent injury to the county road. Swineford v. Franklin County, 73 Mo. 279.

In Swineford v. Franklin County, 73 Mo. 279, the case of Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 313, was distinguished, as in that case the county had entered into a contract for the work which resulted in injury to the plaintiff; but if no contract had been made the county could not have been held liable in that case.

A county was not liable for injuries caused to a mill and dam from back water in building a road, where such road was built by a county from which the defendant had been detached, and there was no allegation that the defendant had notice to remove the nuisance or neglected or refused to do so. Walter v. Wicomico County Comrs. 36 Md. 385.

And no recovery was allowed for injuries caused to a mill and dam from back water by reason of a road being built below the same where there was no negligence in the care or construction of the highway, as, when necessary and proper repair on public highways is reasonably and judicially done, the counties are exempt from any action for consequential damages. Walter v. Wicomico County Comrs. 36 Md. 385.

And where damages resulted from the negligent construction of an embankment, in grading a highway, causing the water to overflow plaintiff's land, it was said that Ohio act March 30, 1868 (S. & C. 89), amending act March 12, 1863, § 7 (S. & C. 244), providing that the board of county commissioners may sue for damages done to the property of the county, does not give any liability, and a recovery was denied. Grimwood v. Summit County Comrs. 23 Ohio St. 600.

And a county was not responsible for a trespass committed by a surveyor appointed by the county court, where such surveyor opened a public road through plaintiff's land, throwing his fences, cutting his trees, and destroying his fruits. It was held that neither the state nor its integral counties could be sued for any trespass of their respective not to keep bridges in repair. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2888 (Rev. Stat. § 1894, § 3278). When the board is not in session, no one is or can be authorized, as the law now stands, to represent or act for or bind the county in keeping bridges in repair, or in contracting for the repair of the same. Driftwood Valley Turnp. Co. v. Bartholomew County Comrs. 72 Ind., on pages 239, 240; Potts v. Henderson, 2 Ind. 827; People v. St. Clair County Officers, 15 Mich. 85. So that, if the board of commissioners had the power to appropriate the county funds to pay for the expense of repairing bridges in all cases, without any limitations or conditions whatever, they could not exercise that power when not in session; and, as neither they nor anyone representing or acting for the county can call them in special session, most certainly it could not be said, even in that case, with all the powers named, that they had been given the power or provided with the means and instrumentalities necessary to keep the bridges of the county in repair, unless they also, at least, had the power to meet as a board at any time of their own volition.

The authority of the board of commissioners, acting as a board of turnpike directors, in respect to free gravel roads, is much more like the power cities have in regard to streets than is that of the board of commissioners in regard to bridges; and there is therefore much greater reason for holding that the doctrine of implied liability applies to counties with reference to free gravel roads than with respect to bridges. The board of commissioners is by statute constituted a board of turnpike directors, having exclusive management and control of the free gravel roads of the county. The board is required to divide the county into three districts, as nearly equal in number of miles of free gravel road as practicable; and each member is given personal control and supervision over one of such districts, and has the power to keep the same in repair, subject to the rules and regulations of the board. The board fixes the time of its meetings, and is empowered to appoint persons to superintend the work of repairs, and let contracts therefor,—contract for, or condemn and take material for, the repair of such roads, and issue certificates therefor; to cause to be levied and collected taxes to pay for the expense of keeping such roads in repair. These powers have been changed to some extent by the amendment of 1895. Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 6868-6875, 6912, 6933, 6935, 6950, 6958; Acts 1895, p. 303. Yet, as we have seen, officers. Hutchison v. Pulaski County, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 117.

An action would not lie against a county for damages sustained by a turnpike company in laying off a shun-pike public road, a nuisance to plaintiff's rights, the use of which was enjoined. Tenn. Code, § 403, providing that suits may be maintained against a county for any just claim, as against other corporations, did not create any liability, but simply provided the remedy if a liability existed. White's Creek Turnp. Co. v. Davidson County, 14 Lea, 73.

In White's Creek Turnp. Co. v. Davidson County, 14 Lea, 73, it was said that the intimation in Franklin & C. Turnp. Co. v. Maury County Ct. 8 Humph. 355, that an action would lie against a county court in case of a shun-pike, was only a dictum.

In Franklin G. Turnp. Co. v. Maury County Ct. 8 Humph. 342, which was an action for an injunction against a shun-pike, it was said that the county would be liable in damages for an action on the case on the part of the corporation.

But where a county claimed that a road had been opened through private property by prescription and use for forty years, and endeavored by the county records to make it of record a public road, and one of the board of supervisors committed trespass in tearing down plaintiff's gate and endeavoring to maintain a road, and the board of supervisors impliedly recognized his actions and approved them by afterwards at his instance declaring such road to be public, an injunction was granted against further trespass, and the county was held liable for damages. Coburn v. San Mateo County, 75 Fed. Rep. 520.

In this case the defendant denied that it had ever ratified the trespass, and the court held that it had, and in its opinion quotes the doctrine from another case that property cannot be taken without compensation, but the judgment is really for enjoining further trespass and for damages.

An injunction was granted against the opening of a road through plaintiff's property by the county, where no proceedings were taken to condemn the same. Cummings v. Kendall County, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 164.

In an action against a county for injury caused by the board of supervisors running a street or 89 L. R. A.

thoroughfare through plaintiff's property without making any compensation, which was an action for damages, and for injunction, it was held that under Cal. act March 20, 1855, providing that no person shall sue a county in any case unless his claim has been first presented to the board of supervisors, an action did not lie. It was further held that the claim for damages could not be joined to a bill for injunction. It was said that under the Constitution of California providing that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, an injunction might be granted. McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 121.

d. By ditches, canals, and dams.

In SCHUSSLER v. HENNEPIN COUNTY COMRS. where the county, by erecting a dam in a lake, destroyed the use of a mill, and pleaded that its acts were lawful under a power given by a special statute, and the attorney for the county claimed the act was unconstitutional, and that the acts complained of were ultra vires, but the board of commissioners upheld and ratified the acts from which the injury arose, the court declined to pass upon the unconstitutionality of the act, but based the opinion upon the concession of the defendant's counsel, and the county was held liable. The court says: "If valuable property rights can thus be taken, destroyed, diverted, and injured without compensation, there will be but little safety in the private ownership of property," and held that the county was liable where it had adopted, assumed, and ratified the act complained of, and granted a mandatory injunction lowering the dam, and a judgment for damages already accrued. This case can be sustained on the theory of liability for taking property without due compensation.

It is generally held that counties are not liable for damages to real property caused by ditches affecting adjoining property.

A county was not liable for damages from a ditch which had been abandoned and become a nuisance and caused overflow of plaintiff's land, which ditch was constructed under Iowa Code, § 1207, authorizing the construction of ditches whenever the same will be conducive to the public health and convenience or welfare. It was said that a county was not liable for negligently constructing or falling this court held in Cones v. Benton County Comrs. 137 Ind. 404, and we think correctly,—that there is no implied liability against the county in favor of one injured by reason of a failure to keep a free gravel road in repair. It is the duty of township trustees and road supervisors at all times to keep the bridges in repair, and protect them from injury, Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 6818, 6832-6838; Carroll County Comrs. v. Baily, 122 Ind., on pages 49, 50. They also have the power to construct bridges, Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 3276, 3277, 6838 (Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 2896, 2887); Acts 1885, p. 202, § 8. And the township trustee has the power to levy an additional road tax, and expend the same, as well as the ordinary road tax, in the construction and repair of bridges, Rev. Stat. 1894, § 6834; Acts 1885, p. 202, § 4. The township trustee had no power to levy an additional road tax to be used for the construction and repair of bridges until the act of 1885 was passed. Prior to that date, only the ordinary road tax was used for that purpose, Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 3276, 3277 (Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 2886, 2887). For each failure of the road supervisor to perform his duty as required by law, he is liable to a penalty of $10, to be recovered by the township trustee, and all sums are for the benefit of the road district for which he was supervisor. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 6838.

It will be seen by an examination of these statutes that subsequent legislation has somewhat enlarged the powers and duties of township trustees and road supervisors in regard to bridges, and thus to some extent removed the reasons upon which the case of House v. Montgomery County Comrs., and the cases following it were predicated. Carroll County Comrs. v. Baily, 122 Ind., on pages 49, 50. In the case last cited, Mitchell, J., speaking for the court, said: "The duty of erecting and repairing bridges over watercourses is imposed upon the board of commissioners, while the general duty of keeping highways and bridges in repair is laid upon township trustees and road supervisors." It is a principle established by all the authorities that, where a person or corporation is free from fault, there is no liability for the negligence of a person not voluntarily chosen by such person or corporation to perform an act. Dooley v. Sullivan, 112 Ind. 451, 454, 455; Abbott v. Johnson County Comrs. 114 Ind. 65. It is clear, however, from a consideration of all the statutes concerning the powers and duties of boards of commissioners and other officers, and especially those in re-to keep open a ditch constructed under that section, as the cost of the ditch was to be apportioned from adjoining owners and was not payable out of the general fund of the county. It was further held that the rule that has been held to apply to bridges would not be applied to ditches, as there was a clear distinction between the two. It was said that inasmuch as the ditch had been adjudged to be a nuisance, and the county ordered to abate the same by repairing or reconstructing, the plaintiff had the remedy to compel the levy of a tax for the purpose of having the ditch put in proper condition. Dashner v. Mills County, 88 Iowa, 401.

And where overflow of a public ditch injured an adjoining crop a county was not liable. The distinction was made as to the liability for negligence in the maintenance of county bridges, holding that the ditch was made for the benefit of abutting owners. Green v. Harrison County, 61 Iowa, 311; and in Nutt v. Mills County, 61 Iowa, 754, the opinion in Green v. Harrison County was adopted as the law in a similar case.

In Fenton v. Salt Lake County, 3 Utah, 423, a right of action for injuries to land caused by the construction of canals and diverting a natural watercourse was denied, where the claim had not been presented and audited under the statute.

A county was not liable for taking out a small culvert in the highway and substituting an insufficient drain, thereby causing a nuisance and overflow on plaintiff's land. Packard v. Voltz, 94 Iowa, 277.

In that case it was said that the rule announced in Wilson v. Jefferson County, 13 Iowa, 181, in regard to liability for bridges, has been doubted, and it was held not applicable to a defective drain causing overflow. The reporter's syllabus says that the Wilson Case was overruled, but the opinion simply refuses to apply the doctrine of liability for defective bridges, which is well recognized in Iowa, although the principle in that case is doubted.

e. By buildings.

Counties are not liable for injuries caused to real property on account of the condition of its buildings. But a county was held liable for nuisances on a farm connected with its buildings, where the farm was not essential to the management of a public institution.

So, a county was not liable for an injury resulting from the negligence of the county in failing to keep in repair a privy owned and kept by the county for public use. Mobley v. Carter County, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 694.

And for injuries to a resident caused by reason of the erection of a county jail in that vicinity, by reason of the jail being kept in such a condition as to become a nuisance, under Neb. act February 27, 1873, making it the duty of the board of county commissioners of each county to erect a suitable jail and to keep the same in repair, the county was not liable, as in building the jail the county simply obeyed the command of the law-making power of the state in a matter of public concern, and for which it could not be held liable. The court held that the liability was a personal one of the jailor if the jail was a nuisance. Wehn v. Gage County Comrs. 5 Neb. 494, 25 Am. Rep. 497.

And a county was not liable for injuries caused to adjacent property by the filthy condition of the jail, under N. C. Code, § 707, subs. 5, authorizing the county board to make such orders respecting the corporate property of the county as may be deemed expedient, and the complaint nowhere alleged that the board failed to use the means at their disposal to prevent the accumulation of filth. Threadgill v. Anson County Comrs. 99 N. C. 352.

And for injuries caused to property in unlawfully, carelessly, and negligently changing and obstructing a stream so as to flood plaintiff's premises, while the county was building a jail, a recovery was denied. Downing v. Mason County, 87 Ky. 208.

An injunction was refused against the erection of a county jail in the proximity of plaintiff's property, although it was alleged that its erection would injure the property by reason of the emission of noxious vapors and gases. Burwell v. Vance County Comrs. 68 N. C. 73, 53 Am. Rep. 454.

But in Lefrois v. Monroe County, 48 N. Y. Supp. 519, it was held that where the sewage from a farm used in connection with county buildings flowed into a stream injuring a dairy farm belonging to plaintiff, an injunction was granted, and damages were awarded as compensation. The distinction gard to bridges, that the same did not then, and do not now, give any support to the assumption in those cases that the board of commissioners had been given either the unconditional power to contract for the construction or repair of bridges, and appropriate the county funds to pay therefor, or provided with the means and instrumentalities necessary to cause or compel the same to be done. There is no provision in the statute which confers a right of action against the county for the negligent acts of the county or its board of commissioners in the management of the affairs of the county. No authority has ever been given the board of county commissioners to appropriate the county funds to pay damages in such cases, nor to levy and collect taxes for any such purposes. No fund has ever been provided, nor has any provision been made, for raising money, by taxation or otherwise, to pay such damages. Cones v. Benton County Comrs. 137 Ind., on page 408. The power to allow claims against the county, and pay judgments against the county, creates no liability, and gives no right of action to anyone. Such powers were given that the board of commissioners might pay just claims against the county, and not to create a liability in favor of anyone.

was made between the obligations incurred in the management of an alms house or other public institutions and those which are involved in the ownership of a farm, although the latter may be an adjunct or accessory to the former. It was held that for a tort committed upon premises which the county had acquired for its mere convenience, advantage, or profit, and not because their possession was absolutely essential to the proper discharge of a public duty, it was liable to an adjoining owner of land whose premises were injured thereby. In this case it was said that a county in the management and care of its paupers and criminals was engaged in the performance of a public duty delegated to officers, and consequently for an injury which resulted from their lack of skill, or even from their negligence while actually engaged in the performance of their duty, no action will lie against the county which they represented. (The cases cited by the court to sustain the liability in this case were those of torts on premises controlled by cities. This case is now in the court of appeals.)

IV. Other wrongful and negligent acts affecting persons or property.

a. Generally.

Generally a county is not liable for injuries caused by torts or negligence of its officers, and a recovery was refused for wrongful attachment. But it was held liable for damages on an injunction bond, and was liable for extorting money by sale of a ferry license; but this latter case may be sustained upon the principle of money wrongfully received for plaintiff's use.

So, a county was not liable where it sold by mistake or wrongfully a tract of land for taxes to the plaintiff, and he brought suit to recover 30 per cent penalty, which money he would have been entitled to if the sale had been valid and the land had been redeemed, as Iowa Rev. Stat. § 786, providing that where by mistake or wrongful act of the treasurer land has been sold on which no taxes are due, the county is to hold the purchaser harmless, by paying him the amount of the principal, interest, and cost, did not authorize a judgment for the penalty. Coulter v. Mahaska County, 17 Iowa, 92.

In the absence of any statute a county was not

The principle asserted in House v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657, and the cases following it, in regard to the implied liability of counties, cannot be reconciled with those cases, in this and other states, which affirm the rule that a county is a subdivision of the state for governmental purposes, and is not liable for the negligence of its officers, unless a right of action is expressly granted by the statute. But it is earnestly contended by appellee that, if the rule of implied liability declared in the bridge cases was erroneous, the doctrine of stare decisis should be invoked to protect it, and the same should only be changed by legislation. While the rule of stare decisis is a salutary one, yet it is not to be applied in all cases. If a decision or series of decisions are clearly incorrect, either through a mistaken conception of the law, or through a misapplication of the law to the facts, and no injurious results would follow from their overthrow, and especially if they were injurious or unjust in their operation, it is the duty of the court to overrule such cases. 6 Alb. L. J. 329; Church v. Brown, 21 N. Y. 395. But if a principle of law, doubtful in its character or uncertain in the subject-matter of its application, has been set-liable for the tortious acts of its officers in levying an illegal tax and selling plaintiff's property, causing a cloud on his title. Pitkin County Comrs. v. Ball, 22 Colo. 125.

And a county was not liable for negligence of the board of supervisors in failing to issue railroad bonds. It was said that for the neglect or refusal to perform a duty imposed on him by law a supervisor was made personally liable under Cal. Pol. Code, § 4088. Santa Cruz R. Co. v. Santa Clara County, 62 Cal. 180.

So, where a county failed to sell bonds, or to issue warrants, as required by law, it was held that it was not liable on account of such neglect, although it was a case of money "withheld by a reasonable and vexatious delay," and Mont. Comp. Stat. § 1237, provides in such a case for paying 10 per cent, but it was held that a county could not be held liable for a violation or neglect of duties by its officers, and it would not be responsible for a breach of duty imposed upon commissioners, or for their nonfeasance or misfeasance in relation to such duty. Territory v. Cascade County Comrs. 8 Mont. 396.

In Montgomery County Comrs. v. Fullen, 111 Ind. 410, where the question was as to the right of a county to make a further assessment for a gravel road after the original assessment proved to be insufficient, and the board had failed to ascertain the cost in advance, under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 5095, providing that no bid shall be accepted which exceeds the estimated cost, it was said that the commissioners were not acting as agents of the county while exercising their powers, and it was impossible to conceive any valid reason why the county should sustain any loss because of their errors, negligence, or wrongs, and the county would not be liable for the failure of the commissioners to do their duty in the first instance, but the cost should be paid from the property.

And a county was not liable to a party furnishing material for a bridge where the county failed by reason of negligence to require a bond from the contractor, under Ind. act March 14, 1877, providing that no bid for building or repairing a bridge or building shall be received unless such bid shall be accompanied by a good and sufficient bond, which shall guarantee that the contractor tled by a series of decisions, until it has become an established rule of property or the basis of contracts, it should not be overthrown except from the most urgent considerations of public policy. Hines v. Driver, 89 Ind. 389; Grubbs v. State, 24 Ind. 295; Harrow v. Myers, 29 Ind. 469; Rockhill v. Nelson, 24 Ind. 422, 424. To that extent only are courts ordinarily restrained from correcting mistakes which they may have made. It must not be understood, however, that a previous line of decisions affecting even property rights can in no case be overthrown. If the evil resulting from the principle so established is greater than the mischief to the community could possibly be from a disregard of former adjudications, they should be overruled, and a new rule declared. Boon v. Bowers, 80 Miss. 246, 64 Am. Dec. 159.

What was declared by this court on this question in Paul v. Davis, 100 Ind. 422, is applicable here. Elliott, J., speaking for the court, said: "A judicial decision does not make unalterable law, nor is it law in the sense that statutes are law. It was justly said by Senator Platt in Yates v. Lansing, 9 Johns. 415, 6 Am. Dec. 290, that 'the decisions of courts are not the law; they are only evidence of the law.'

shall promptly pay all debts incurred by him for labor and materials. Pike County Comrs. v. Norington, 82 Ind. 190.

In Isley v. Essex County, 7 Gray, 465, which was an action for tort under Mass. Stat. 1855, chap. 95, providing a penalty against a county in case the county commissioners shall neglect to erect bounds at the termination or angles of a county road for the space of one month after being notified so to do, a notice to the chairman of the board was held not sufficient.

The surety of a school-land mortgage was not released by reason of injury caused by the county court in bidding in the property without authority and then putting it up after it had decreased in value and selling it at a second sale. It was held that a county would not be liable for the negligence or omission of those to whom she was compelled to confide the management of her pecuniary concerns. Ray County v. Bentley Common School Fund, 49 Mo. 236.

And a county was not liable for damages arising from wrongful attachment to property in an action brought by the county, as the officers in the suit were engaged in the performance of those public duties which were enjoined on them by the direct authority of the state, and not undertaken for the private benefit or emolument of the county. Reed v. Howell County, 125 Mo. 58.

But where the plaintiff had a ferry license, and the county unlawfully gave notice that it would grant the ferry franchise to anyone donating the largest amount of money, and the plaintiff was required to advance $500 to retain his privileges under his license and the commissioners had no discretion except an annual tax on the ferry not exceeding $100, the amount thus illegally extorted could be recovered with interest. It was also held that plaintiff was not particeps criminis. La Salle County v. Simmons, 10 Ill. 530.

And where a county was entitled, under Miss. Code, § 897, to all actions and remedies to which individuals are entitled, it was held that it could not escape liability for costs and damages which it had caused by the wrongful suing out of an injunction. Freeman v. Lee County Supers, 66 Miss. 1.

And in People, Burrows, v. Orange County Supers, 17 N. Y. 235, the supervisors of a county 89 L. R. A.

In another case it was said: 'I hope we shall consider what a decision really is, and treat it accordingly; not as the law, nor as giving the law, but simply as evidence of the law; and not conclusive evidence, but only prima facie evidence of what the law is.' Henry v. Bank of Salina, 5 Hill, 535. Chancellor Kent says: 'Even a series of decisions are not always conclusive evidence of what is law; and the revision of a decision very often resolves itself into a mere question of expediency, depending upon the consideration of the importance of certainty in the rule, and the extent of property to be affected by a change of it.' Again he says: 'It is probable that the records of many of the courts in this country are replete with hasty and crude decisions; and such cases ought to be examined without fear, and revised without reluctance, rather than to have the character of our law impaired, and the beauty and harmony of the system destroyed by the perpetuity of error.' 1 Kent, Com. 477. The lord chancellor of England said to the House of Lords: 'You are not bound by any rule of law which you could lay down, if, upon a subsequent occasion, you should find reason to differ from that rule; that is, like every court of justice, and I regard this as a court of were compelled to levy a state tax where they had neglected and refused to levy the same, and claimed that N. Y. Laws, 1855, chap. 335, providing for such tax, was unconstitutional, under N. Y. Const. art. 7, § 13, providing that every law which imposes, continues, or revives a tax shall distinctly state the tax and the object, and it shall not be sufficient to refer to any other law to fix such tax. It was also held that the act was constitutional.

1. Affecting property.

Generally a county is not liable for injuries to property caused by wrongful acts of its agents, but there is a Michigan case which implies that a county would be liable where a county official returned to plaintiff a hog in a diseased condition, causing loss to his other stock.

So a county was not liable for damages for a horse killed from being overdriven while in the service of the county, as the judge of the superior court, or the sheriff, had no power to make the county responsible for the loss of a horse used by an officer. Dougherty County v. Kemp, 55 Ga. 252.

So, where injuries were caused to a horse by being overdriven by a sheriff who used the same in making an arrest, the county was not liable. Randles v. Waukesha County (Wis.) 71 N. W. 1084.

And where an employee of the county, who was working in repairing a road, occupied a barn of plaintiffs, and negligently destroyed the same by fire, no recovery could be had against the county. Fieid v. Albemarle County (Va.) 20 S. E. 954.

So, a county was not liable for damages where the agent of the poor farm in attempting to clear a portion of land, and in burning the brush, started a fire which ran onto other land, injuring other parties. It was held there was no liability in the absence of a statute imposing one. Symonds v. Clay County Supers, 71 Ill. 355.

A county was not liable generally for damages done to sheep by dogs, nor for neglect to levy a tax on dogs for the year 1893, where no such tax could be levied until an assessment of dogs should be made, as no special provision was made for assessments as a basis for levying taxes in and for the year 1893, under Pa. act May 25, 1893 (Pub. Laws, 138), providing for the taxation of dogs and protection of sheep. It was not shown that any money had been justice; it is inherent in the nature of every court of justice that it should have liberty to correct any error into which it may have fallen.' Bright v. Hutton, 12 Eng. L. & Eq. (vide p. 15). In the case cited the earlier case of Hutton v. Upfill, 2 H. L. Cas. 674, was overruled, although it was a case growing out of the same subject-matter, and involving the same principle and substantially the same interests. The law is a science of principles, and this cannot be true if a departure from principle can be perpetuated by a persistence in error. If it be correct to affirm that there can be no departure from former decisions, then it would be true, as it has been well said, that 'in such cases summum jus might be summa injuria.' Ram, Legal Judgm. 201. The supreme court of California, in discussing this general subject, said: 'But it is a solecism to say that causes should be tried upon wrong principles,—be decided against the law whether it be for the purpose of justice or not, so to decide them. The law is not so false to itself as to require its own permanent overthrow, unless the subversion be necessary to the public interests; and whether it be so necessary in a given case or not is for the court to decide, as a matter of legal discretion, whenever the rule is invoked.' Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 580 (vide opinion, 607). Consistency purchased by adherence to decisions at the sacrifice of sound principle is dearly bought. But we deem it unnecessary to further pursue this discussion, for we know quite well that there is not a court in England or America that has not corrected erroneous departures from the principles of justice by overthrowing previous decisions. . . . Much as we respect the principle of stare decisis, we cannot yield to it when to yield is to overthrow principle and do injustice. Reluctant as we are to depart from former decisions we cannot yield to them, if, in yielding, we perpetuate error and sacrifice principle. We have thought it wisest to overrule outright rather than to evade, as is often done, by an attempt to distinguish where distinction there is none. We have preferred the censure that sometimes falls upon us rather than undertake to distinguish, and thus make 'confusion worse confounded,' where there is no room to limit or distinguish."

The case of House v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657, and cases following, do not involve property rights, nor has the rule which they declare in any sense become a rule of property or a basis for conclaims to the county board. Rhoda v. Alameda County, 52 Cal. 350. But in Rhoda v. Alameda County, 69 Cal. 523, an amended complaint showing a compliance with the statute by the proper presentation of the claim to the commissioners of the county board stated a cause of action.

paid into the county treasury as a part of the county stock under said act. But the county was liable for injury done to sheep in 1893, where it was shown that a fund was raised and collected in 1894, although the 2d section of the act implies that the damages are to be paid only out of the taxes of the current year, where the act provides that it "shall annually levy a tax upon each dog so returned, and within the discretion so given to such commissioners, etc., to such an amount as will in their judgment create a sufficient fund from which all loss or damage caused to sheep within the respective counties or cities, by a dog or dogs, during each current year, may be paid, together with all necessary expenses incurred in the adjustment of claims as hereinafter provided." Section 5 provides for the payment of damages out of the fund raised or to be raised, and this does not limit the right of payment for such damage only out of the fund of any current year. Morgan v. Tloga County, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 246.

But where the plaintiff sued the superintendents of the poor of the county, and charged that by reason of their negligence a boar of the plaintiff became diseased and was returned to plaintiff in that condition, whereby other stock was injured, and the defendants objected to the introduction of any evidence, first, because an action against the superintendents of the poor in their name of office was in reality against the county, which was a quasi corporation; second, because the superintendents of the poor were in no sense agents of the county; and, third, because the superintendents of the poor were a quasi corporation for the benefit of the general public, and could not be liable because the declaration did not allege that the defendants were operating a county poorhouse in pursuance of their corporate duties, and did not state any facts which showed them liable in a corporate capacity or made the county liable for their acts or negligence,—it was held that the court erred in excluding the evidence offered, and the case was reversed for a new trial. Rowland v. Kalamazoo County Supers. of Poor, 40 Mich. 553.

A complaint alleging a trespass by the county in tearing down a wall and removing a vault was held defective in failing to show that plaintiff had complied with the statute in regard to presenting claims to the county board. Rhoda v. Alameda County, 52 Cal. 350.

But in Rhoda v. Alameda County, 69 Cal. 523, an amended complaint showing a compliance with the statute by the proper presentation of the claim to the commissioners of the county board stated a cause of action.

V. Infringement of patents.

The weight of authority is that a county is liable for infringement of a patent, but there are two cases to the contrary whose authority has been denied. Some cases require the claim to be presented to the county board for auditing before suit could be brought.

A county in Kentucky was held liable for an infringement of a prison device, as counties in that state are corporations and can contract and sue and be sued, and Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 23, art. 16, provides that county courts may erect and keep in repair county buildings, while art. 17 provides that the county court shall cause to be erected and keep in repair a good and sufficient jail. May v. Mercer County, 30 Fed. Rep. 246.

In May v. Mercer County, 30 Fed. Rep. 246, for the infringement of a patent in the use of an improvement in the construction of a county jail, a recovery was allowed under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4919, by an action on the case, and the complaint, whether called a declaration or a petition under the Code, containing all the allegations material to make an action on the case, would be sufficient.

In that case it was said that the reasoning in the case of Lawrence County v. Chattahoochee R. Co. 81 Ky. 225, to the extent that public buildings belong to the county as a corporation, and the county may sue for an injury done to them in an action on the case, implied that counties were liable for property taken and used in the erection of public buildings, even though the property was wrongfully taken.

So, a county was liable for an infringement of a patent under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4919, providing that damages for the infringement of any patent may be recovered by an action on the case in the name of the party interested, and a county is liable although it is only a quasi-municipal corporation and cannot be exempted by the statetracts. The overruling of those cases will not produce uncertainty in titles, or introduce doubt and confusion in questions of property or contracts. Under such circumstances, it is the duty of the court to correct its own errors, and the doctrine of stare decisis cannot be successfully invoked to perpetuate them. Paul v. Davis, 100 Ind. 422; Rockhill v. Nelson, 24 Ind. 422, 424; Hines v. Driver, 89 Ind. 339; Linn v. Minor, 4 Nev. 462; McDowell v. Oyer, 21 Pa. 423. This case is within the principle established in Hines v. Driver, 89 Ind. 339, and Paul v. Davis, 100 Ind. 422.

It is urged by appellee that, by holding the county liable in such cases as this, the boards of commissioners will be convinced that it is cheaper to keep the bridges in repair than to pay damages for injuries. The enforcement of the penal statutes, and the creation of personal liability, if it does not now exist, for injuries caused by neglect of official duty, would probably be more convincing to the officer than taking the public funds to pay such damages. While the doctrine declared in the bridge cases might be properly overruled on other grounds stated in this opinion, we prefer to base our action on the broad ground that counties, being subdivisions of the state, are instrumentalities of government, and exercise authority given by the state, and are no more liable for the acts or omissions of their officers than the state. The case of House v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657, and the cases following it, so far as they declare the doctrine of implied liability of counties for negligence of their officers in erecting or keeping bridges in repair, are overruled.

It follows that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint and the motion in arrest of judgment. There are other reversible errors in the record, but it is not necessary to consider them.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to sustain the demurrer to the complaint, and for further proceedings not in conflict with this opinion.

All concur.

from liability for infringement of letters patent. May v. Ralls County, 31 Fed. Rep. 478.

In May v. Johnson County, Fed. Cas. No. 9, 384, a county was held liable for an infringement of a patent in the construction of a jail. The liabilities of counties as such were not discussed, and do not seem to have been questioned, the court saying, however, that "if the subject-matter of a patent possesses the requisites of novelty and utility it is protected against the encroachments of society, and no one has the right to use it without paying for it."

And in May v. Fond du Lac County, 27 Fed. Rep. 665, a county was held liable for an infringement of a patent in the construction of a prison. No question seems to have been made as to the county's liability, but the question was as to the infringement, novelty, etc.

In May v. Logan County Comrs. 30 Fed. Rep. 250, and May v. Saginaw County, 32 Fed. Rep. 629, it was held that an assignment after an infringement of all right, title, interests, claims, and demands under a patent made by an administrator or patentee, approved by a court of competent jurisdiction, authorized a suit against the county by the assignee, for an infringement of the patent, denying May v. Juneau County, 30 Fed. Rep. 241, on the ground that the cases on which this decision was made do not sustain the doctrine deduced.

In May v. Logan County Comrs. 30 Fed. Rep. 250, Jacobs v. Hamilton County Comrs. 1 Bond, 500, was disapproved, and it was held that the state could not exempt counties from liability for an infringement of patents, nor has it attempted to do so, as the patentee's rights are defined by Congress, which has exclusive control.

In May v. Saginaw County, 32 Fed. Rep. 629, the cases of May v. Buchanan County, 29 Fed. Rep. 469, and May v. Cass County, 30 Fed. Rep. 763, were distinguished on the point that the remedy was by demand of the board of supervisors, under Michigan Constitution providing that exclusive power is vested in the board of supervisors to adjust all claims against their respective counties, and the sum so fixed shall be subject to no appeal, as this did not apply to torts and as the statutes in those cases were different.

But in May v. Buchanan County, 29 Fed. Rep. 469, it was held that Iowa Code, § 2610, providing presentation of claim to the board of supervisors before bringing an action, applied to a suit for infringement of a patent by a county, and a petition for an infringement should show such action. It was said that if the Iowa laws did not confer on the county the right to sue and be sued, the plaintiff would be without remedy.

So, in holding that a county was liable for the infringement of a patent in the use of an improvement in the construction of prisons, it was also held that the Iowa Code, § 2610, providing that before suit is brought upon an unliquidated claim the same must be presented to and demand for payment be made of the board of supervisors, should be enforced in United States courts, and a recovery could not be had where such claim was not so presented and acted on. May v. Jackson County, 35 Fed. Rep. 710; May v. Cass County, 30 Fed. Rep. 762.

But in May v. County of Juneau, 30 Fed. Rep. 241, it was held that a county was not liable for the infringement of a patent where its officers had no knowledge of any infringement, and the actual use did not occur until after the expiration of the patent. It was further held that the assignment in this case did not authorize a recovery for past infringements. It was said that the county would not be liable in any case, following Jacobs v. Hamilton County Comrs. 1 Bond, 500. But see May v. Logan County Comrs. 30 Fed. Rep. 250.

And in Jacobs v. Hamilton County Comrs. 1 Bond, 500, a county was not held liable in damages for infringement of a patent in the construction of a county prison. It was said that the contractor would be liable. But see May v. Logan County Comrs. 30 Fed. Rep. 250.

VI. Damages by defaulting officer.

It is generally held that a county is not liable for damages caused by a defaulting officer where the county has not received the benefit of the money or it has not been paid into the county treasury; but a county was held liable for money collected by its attorney authorized to collect taxes, and also in some cases arising under particular statutes.

So, a county was not liable for the tortious act of its treasurer in collecting excessive taxes from the plaintiff, and appropriating them to his own use. Estep v. Keokuk County, 18 Iowa, 199.

A county was not liable to a city for money collected and embezzled by the county treasurer where he acted as agent of the city in collecting such money. The court said that "it is intimated, but not proved, that he applied the moneys to county purposes, but it was conceded that he never

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Peter SCHUSSLER, Resp't.,
v.
HENNEPIN COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, Appls.

(.....Minn.....)

As a general rule, a municipal corporation is not responsible for the unauthorized and unlawful act of its officers, though done colore officii; but when such corporation itself expressly authorizes such act, or when done, adopts and ratifies it, and retains and enjoys its benefits, it is liable in damages.

(February 9, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Hennepin County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to re-accounted to the county, and was a defaulter for a large amount." Under Mich. Pub. Acts 1875, chap. 278, § 13, providing that all moneys collected by any treasurer under the liquor tax act except his fees shall be placed by him to the credit of the contingent fund of the township, village, or city from which the same was collected, the county treasurer was the agent of the municipalities, and not of the county. Marquette County v. Dillon, 49 Mich. 244.

*Headnote by BUCK, J.

When the owner paid, as he supposed, redemption money for his land to the treasurer, but the purchaser had repudiated the purchase, it was held that the nominal redemption to the extent of the amount due for taxes and penalty was in effect but a mere payment, and beyond this it was an unauthorized exaction, and was no claim against the county but against the treasurer. State, Myers, v. Richardson County Comrs. 11 Neb. 403.

And a county was not held liable for money paid to a county treasurer for redemption, where it was not shown that such money was paid into the treasury, 'as under Neb. Gen. Stat. § 66, the moneys are to be paid to the purchaser, his agent, or attorney, and no warrant of the county commissioner is necessary for its repayment where it was not paid into the county treasury. In this case the petition failed to show that any part of the money had ever been paid into the county treasury. Richardson County v. Meyer, 11 Neb. 357.

So, a county was not liable for money collected by a county treasurer for a redemption of land sold for taxes, under Neb. Rev. Stat. p. 329 (Revenue Law 1866, § 68) providing that on the redemption by an owner or occupant by payment to the county treasurer, he shall give receipt therefor to the person redeeming the same and file a duplicate with the county clerk, and hold the money paid subject to the order of the purchaser, his agent or attorney, where it was not shown that the money was paid into the county treasury. Eaton v. Cass County Comrs. 11 Neb. 229. In this case the plaintiff claimed that he was ignorant for several years that the money had been paid, and there evidently had been a change in the county treasurers.

And the sureties of a sheriff could not defend their bond in an action for a balance due from the sheriff by showing that after the balance was ascertained the county commissioners had given the sheriff checks to an amount exceeding the balance, as the public is not chargeable with the negligence of its officers in such cases, even as against sureties. Com. v. Brice, 23 Pa. 211, 60 Am. Dec. 79.

89 L. R. A.

cover damages for alleged wrongful interference with plaintiff's riparian rights. Affirmed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. H. Nunn, for appellants:

Lake Minnetonka is a navigable body of water. It is wholly within the state, and the state has exclusive sovereignty over it.

Those buying upon that lake buy subject to the superior rights of the sovereign to absolutely and at its pleasure control the waters within natural high-water mark, regardless of the effect it may have upon riparian owners.

Morrill v. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. 26 Minn. 222, 37 Am. Rep. 399; State v. Minneapolis Mill Co. 28 Minn. 231; Page v. Mille Lacs Lumber Co. 53 Minn. 500; Lamprey v. State, 52 Minn. 198, 18 L. R. A. 671; Falls Mfg. Co. v. Oconto River Improv. Co. 87 Wis. 134; Wisconsin River Improv. Co. v. Manson, 43 Wis. 255, 28 Am. Rep. 542; People, Loomis, v. Canal Appraisers, 38 N. Y. 461; Com. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 3 Cush. 53; Treat v. Lord,

A county was not liable where a judgment had been obtained against the sheriff in the name of the people for money belonging to the state which the county treasurer had received and neglected to pay over, and the treasurer gave a note to a bank and paid the proceeds over to the state. It was not shown that the county treasurer was in any manner authorized to borrow the money, and his contract for its repayment could not be binding upon the county. First Nat. Bank v. Saratoga County Supers. 108 N. Y. 488.

In Cedar Rapids, L. F. & N. W. R. Co. v. Cowan, 77 Iowa 538, which was an action on the treasurer's bonds for money belonging to a railroad company appropriated by him to his own use, it was said that the county was not liable for such money.

But in Conway County v. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. 30 Ark. 50, it was held that a county was bound by a payment made to an attorney employed by the county to collect taxes, where such attorney collected the same and never accounted to the county for the money. This liability was applied on the ground that a collection by an attorney who obtained the judgment was binding, and the further ground that where "one of two innocent parties must suffer by the acts of a third, he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must sustain it."

And under Ind. Stat. § 1 Gavlin & H. 113, providing that a county shall be liable for all losses to the state sustained by the default of the county treasurer, and such losses shall be added to the next year's taxes of such county, a county was required to add to the tax list an amount lost through the defalcation of a county treasurer. State, McCarty, v. Montgomery County Comrs. 28 Ind. 523.

Under Pa. act April 29, 1844, providing that the several counties of a state are liable for the state taxes assessed upon the property within them respectively, a county was held liable to the state where the county treasurer had defaulted. It was held that it was no defense that the bond taken from the county treasurer was approved by the court of quarter sessions where the same was insufficient, as the state would not be prejudiced by the neglect of the agents of the state, even if the judges in taking the bond acted as state agents, as full power was given to the county commissioners to enforce the giving adequate security. Schuylkill County v. Com. 36 Pa. 524.

VII. By misapplication, conversion, or taking property.

It is generally held that counties are liable where 42 Me. 552, 66 Am. Dec. 298; Fletcher v. Phelps, 28 Vt. 257; Gould, Waters, § 56; South Carolina v. Georgia, 98 U. S. 9, 23 L. ed. 783.

The county is not liable in damages on account of the acts of its officers.

Doodall v. Olmsted County, 30 Minn. 96, 44 Am. Rep. 185; Snider v. St. Paul, 51 Minn. 466, 18 L. R. A. 151; Gullikson v. McDonald, 62 Minn. 278; Altnow v. Sibley, 30 Minn. 186, 44 Am. Rep. 191.

The complaint failed to allege that the act was authorized by law, and the court expressly finds that the construction and maintenance of the dam were without authority. The county, therefore, is not liable for this act of its officers.

Kreger v. Bismarck Twp. 59 Minn. 8; Weltsch v. Stark, 65 Minn. 5; Pitkin County Comrs. v. Ball, 22 Colo. 125; Johnson County Comrs. v. Hemphill, 14 Ind. App. 219; Crandon v. Forest County, 91 Wis. 239.

There is no contention that the act of 1891, under which the commissioners of Hennepin county constructed and maintained the dam, they are benefited by misappropriation of money or property, as in an action of assumpsit for money had and received or for conversion. There seems to be an exceptional case in North Carolina, but in that case it was held that the treasurer was also the treasurer of plaintiff, and that he should have refused to honor the warrants of the county against the fund.

So, where a county treasurer misappropriated taxes assessed on a railroad corporation, and applied the same to the payment of county and state taxes instead of to the payment or redemption of bonds of a town, the county was liable in an action as for money had and received for the money so misappropriated. Strough v. Jefferson County Supers. 119 N. Y. 212.

And where the county unlawfully appropriated moneys collected from a town to its own use, it was required to refund them to the town in an action for money had and received. Bridges v. Sullivan County Supers. 92 N. Y. 570.

And under the Indiana Constitution, requiring counties to bear the expense of protecting, investing, and collecting the school funds, an action could be maintained against a county by the state for moneys paid out to its officers for managing the school fund. It was held the statute of limitations was not in defense, as it was for a trust fund. Rush County Comrs. v. State, Hord, 103 Ind. 497.

And a county was liable for township taxes received by the county treasurer and not paid to the township by the treasurer. It was held that the omission of the county to charge these taxes in the account with the treasurer did not release the county. Potter County v. Oswayo Twp. 47 Pa. 162, citing Lycoming County v. Huling, MSS.

Under N. Y. Laws 1874, chap. 63, § 1, amended by Laws 1892, chap. 60, § 3, providing that excise moneys received for license issued to the residents of a village shall be paid over to its treasurer to be used for the expenses of the village, a county was held liable to a town for such funds collected by the county treasurer and misappropriated by him to other county purposes. Port Richmond v. Richmond County, 11 App. Div. 217.

So, under N. Y. Laws 1869, chap. 907, § 4, amended by Laws 1871, chap. 283, providing that certain taxes assessed against a railroad in a town shall be paid to the treasurer of the county and used by him to purchase bonds, issued by the town in aid of the railroad, a county was liable to a town for moneys so collected by the treasurer and misappropriated conferred any authority or power upon the board. The act was unconstitutional.

The acts of the commissioners of Hennepin county done colore officii under this unconstitutional law were ultra vires and did not bind the county or render it liable in damages to anyone thereby injured. It is not different from any ultra vires act of a public board or officer.

Albany v. Cunliff, 2 N. Y. 165; Browning v. Owen County Comrs. 44 Ind. 11; Rowland v. Gallatin, 75 Mo. 134, 42 Am. Rep. 895; Spaulding v. Lowell, 23 Pick. 71; Schumacher v. St. Louis, 3 Mo. App. 297; Cuyler v. Rochester, 12 Wend. 165; Anthony v. Adams, 1 Met. 284; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 766-768; Haag v. Vanderburgh County Comrs. 60 Ind. 514, 28 Am. Rep. 654; Seale v. Deering, 79 Me. 343; Morrison v. Lawrence, 98 Mass. 219; Cushing v. Bedford, 125 Mass. 526; Lemon v. Newton, 134 Mass. 476.

Messrs. Young & Fish, for respondent:

There is a distinction firmly fixed by the decisions, but not well founded in reason, be-by him to other county purposes. Kilbourne v. Sullivan County Supers. 137 N. Y. 170; Vinton v. Cattaraugus County Supers. 89 Hun. 582; Crowninshield v. Cayuga County Supers. 124 N. Y. 583.

But the county was entitled to credit for any moneys paid to the railroad commissioners of the town during that time. Vinton v. Cattaraugus County Supers. 89 Hun. 582.

Where a special assessment for a gravel road was enjoined, the holders of bonds issued to pay for the road, who were not parties to the injunction suit, could maintain an action against a county for money received from the sale of bonds misappropriated to the use of the county. It was said that a county could not be made accountable for any loss resulting from the error or neglect of its officers; but this case was only to recover money which was alleged to have gone into the general fund of the county, and it should be applied to the payment of the bonds. Spidell v. Johnson, 128 Ind. 235.

A petition alleging that the county treasurer had wrongfully taken possession of money belonging to an insane person, and placed the same in the county treasury, that the county wrongfully accepted and received said money and converted the same to its own use, and still retained the same, stated a cause of action. It was further held that the county was liable for taxes illegally assessed, which were claimed in another paragraph of the complaint. Hennel v. Vanderburgh County Comrs. 132 Ind. 32.

Where an action was brought for taking dirt from plaintiff's land, and the plaintiff told the superintendent that if the dirt was taken he would claim pay for it from the county, and it was contended that an action could not be maintained as this was a tort, it was held that the tort could be waived and suit would lie as upon contract. It was further held that if the officers of the county committed a trespass whereby the county received certain benefits the county would be liable on an implied contract for the value of the dirt; and further, that a contract to donate and perform all labor was not an agreement to donate the dirt and would not prevent a recovery, but if it was the county could not go upon plaintiff's land against his will and take his dirt. Rush County Comrs. v. Trees, 12 Ind. App. 479.

But in Bladen County Bd. of Edu. v. Bladen Comrs. 113 N. C. 379, where the county commissioners misapplied a fund belonging to the board of ween municipal corporations proper and quasi-municipal bodies, such as towns, counties, school districts, etc., in respect to their liability for damages for mere negligence. The former are held liable, the latter are not.

Altnow v. Sibley, 30 Minn. 186, 44 Am. Rep. 191.

There is nothing in the decisions of this court necessarily committing it to any extension of this untenable distinction to wrongs other than negligence. Indeed, the tendency is the other way.

Peters v. Fergus Falls, 35 Minn. 549; Weltsch v. Stark, 65 Minn. 5; Woodruff v. Glendale, 23 Minn. 537; Thompson v. Polk County, 38 Minn. 130; Gould v. Sub-District No. 3, 7 Minn. 203.

Towns and counties are liable for the improper exercise of powers which are within the general scope of their duties, but not for mere negligence or failure to perform the duties imposed by law.

Altnow v. Sibley, 30 Minn. 186, 44 Am. Rep. 191; Snider v. St. Paul, 51 Minn. 466, 18 L. R. A. 151.

education by directing the disbursements under a mistake of the law, it was held that the county was not liable, as it would follow that the courts would be required to enforce a levy of a sufficient tax upon the property of the county to replace the amount belonging to the school fund, which had already been wrongfully but honestly expended for the support of the poor. It was further held that all the money collected for educational purposes should have been paid over by the sheriff to the county treasurer in his capacity as treasurer of the board of education, and held by him subject to the orders of the board, and he should not have paid out the fund on the order of a county commissioner; and it was held that the treasurer was the one who made the misapplication. It was said that a recovery could not be had even against him.

VIII. Presentation of claims before county board as a condition precedent to suit.

There is some conflict as to whether it is requisite that a claim for tort or negligence shall be presented to the county board for auditing before a suit can be maintained for damages, some cases holding that it is absolutely essential, and others holding the contrary, and that it would be improper to allow the county officials to pass on matters involving their own actions.

An action could not be maintained against a county for injuries from the falling of a public bridge, where the claim had not been presented to the county board for allowance, under Ala. Code 1876, § 2903, providing that suit must not be brought against a county until the claim has been presented to the court of county commissioners and disallowed or reduced, and § 827, requiring claims to be itemized and sworn to, and § 832, providing that claims not presented within twelve months after they accrue are barred. Schroeder v. Colbert County, 66 Ala. 137.

So, a county was not liable for damages from a defective bridge where the claim had not been presented to the county commissioners and disallowed under Ala. Code 1876, § 2903, providing for presentation of claims and demands to the commissioners' court. Such claim should be itemized and sworn to under § 827, prohibiting the commissioners from allowing any claims not itemized or sworn to. Schroeder v. Colbert County, 66 Ala. 137.

And a county was not liable for the falling in of

It has not been decided in this state that a town or county is not liable for damages arising from a trespass or other active wrong done by its official board colore officii.

Gould v. Sub-District No. 3, 7 Minn. 203, cited in Bank v. Brainerd School Dist. 49 Minn. 106; Dossall v. Olmsted County, 30 Minn. 96, 44 Am. Rep. 185.

In this case the county answers and avers that it has built and maintained the dam lawfully. The defense failing, it is certainly proper that the mischief which has been committed should be undone and its further commission restrained.

The county does not plead ultra vires as it might do if sued on an authorized contract. It ratifies and confirms the ultra vires acts of its official board and so becomes itself the aggressor. Salt Lake City v. Hollister, 118 U. S. 256, 30 L. ed. 176; Thayer v. Boston, 19 Pick. 511, 31 Am. Dec. 157.

The dam in question is a nuisance, and no sort of a municipal or public corporation has a right to maintain it.

a bridge where there was no evidence that the plaintiff ever presented his claim to the court of county commissioners to be passed upon or allowed by Ala. Code 1886, § 902, requiring presentation of claims. Roberts v. Cleburne County (Ala.) 22 So. 545.

And Ala. Code, § 775, 2141, providing that no action can be brought against the county until the claim or demand has been presented within twelve months after it accrues or becomes payable, applies to suits for damages for injuries from defective bridges under a statutory liability. Barbour County v. Horn, 41 Ala. 114.

And under Iowa Code, § 2810, providing that no action shall be brought against any county on an unliquidated demand until the same has been presented to the board of supervisors and payment demanded, where a claim had been presented to the county of $500 damages for injuries received on account of a defective bridge, and an action was brought for that amount and increased by an amendment, no recovery could be had for a greater amount than that presented to the board of supervisors. Marsh v. Benton County, 75 Iowa, 469.

Under Iowa Code, § 2810, it was sufficient if the board was informed of the amount of the claim and the grounds on which it was made, sufficiently to enable it to understand the claim. Dale v. Webster County, 76 Iowa, 379.

And under Iowa Code, § 2810, the plaintiff was not required to produce his evidence in making his claim before the county board, but it was sufficient if his claim was presented with sufficient clearness to enable it to investigate the facts. Homan v. Franklin County, 98 Iowa, 692.

And damages for future loss, pain, and suffering were properly allowed where the claim presented to the board stated that the plaintiff was seriously and permanently injured, and the petition was for permanent disability. Homan v. Franklin County, 98 Iowa, 692.

Where the petition alleged that the claim was duly verified and presented to the county board, it was held that under the general issue it was for the court to determine whether plaintiff had the right to bring an action, and it was not necessary to submit this to the jury. The presentation of the claim for injuries from a bridge to the county board was held to be a "demand," and that some of the injuries in the trial were a little greater than those in the statement was immaterial. Homan v. Franklin

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 374, note; Petersburg v. Applegarth, 28 Gratt. 321, 26 Am. Rep. 357; Brayton v. Fall River, 113 Mass. 218, 18 Am. Rep. 470; Harper v. Milwaukee, 80 Wis. 365; Franklin Wharf Co. v. Portland, 67 Me. 46, 24 Am. Rep. 1; Hannibal v. Richards, 82 Mo. 380; Wood, Nuisances, § 742.

Buck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The board of county commissioners of Hennepin county in the year 1893 erected a dam across Minnehaha creek, the natural outlet of Lake Minnetonka, and about 8½ miles below said lake, under the supposed authority of Special Laws 1891, chap. 381, for the purpose of raising and maintaining a uniform height of water in the lake, in aid of navigation. The plaintiff at the time of the erection of the dam, and for many years prior thereto, owned a piece of land about 8½ miles below this dam, upon which he had erected and used a grist-mill operated by the water of this stream; and, to this end, plaintiff had provided the necessary wheels, pond flumes, and raceway power, and, until interfered with by the defendant's erection of the dam, he was enabled to store and use the waters of this stream, by means of said pond and other facilities possessed by him, and whereby said mill was propelled and operated for his use and profit. The defendant erected said dam about 5 feet in height, and, ever since its erection, has maintained the same, whereby said stream has been obstructed and held back except at times when the stage of water in Lake Minnetonka is sufficiently high to flow over said dam. The dam so erected and maintained is 5 inches above the natural bed of the stream, and the sole purpose of defendant in erecting the dam and obstructing the natural flow of the stream was to hold back and retain the water in Lake Minnetonka for the purpose of increasing the volume of water therein, and maintaining a uniform quantity and stage of water in aid of navigation, the lake being an inland, navigable one. The action is one to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff by reason of the construction and maintenance of said dam, and for an injunction restraining and County, 98 Iowa, 692. See former appeal, 90 Iowa, 185.

Under Iowa Code, § 2610, providing for presentation of claims to the board of supervisors before bringing an action, a suit for an infringement of a patent was within the provisions of such section, and a demand was held to be a necessary condition precedent. May v. Buchanan County, 29 Fed. Rep. 469; May v. Jackson County, 35 Fed. Rep. 710; May v. Cass County, 30 Fed. Rep. 762.

And under Utah Sess. Laws 1878, p. 4, providing that no action shall be commenced against any county until the claim, demand, or right of action shall be disallowed, an action for injuries to land by constructing canals near the same and diverting a natural watercourse, and for equitable relief, was dismissed because it was not shown that the statute was complied with. Fenton v. Salt Lake County, 3 Utah, 423, 4 Utah, 469.

And under Cal. act March 20, 1855, § 24, providing that no person shall sue a county in any cause for any demand unless he shall first present his claim to the board of supervisors for allowance and the same shall be rejected, an action would not lie for extending a street through the land of plaintiff without providing any compensation unless the claim had been presented for auditing. McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 121.

And under Cal. Pol. Code, 4072, prohibiting the board of supervisors from allowing an account unless properly made out, itemized, and verified, where an action was brought against a county for tearing down an inner wall of plaintiff's building and severing from the same a permanent fixture, to wit, a metallic vault, the complaint was held defective in not alleging the manner in which plaintiff complied with this section of the Code. Rhoda v. Alameda County, 62 Cal. 360.

But in Rhoda v. Alameda County, 760 Cal. 523, an amended complaint showing a compliance with the statute by the presentation to the board of county commissioners stated a cause of action.

And Ind. act March 9, 1885 (Elliot's Supp. § 1948), providing that on the rejection of a claim by the board of county commissioners the plaintiff may apply or at his option bring an action against the county, applies to claims sounding in tort. Allen County Comrs. v. Creviston, 133 Ind. 39.

In Posey County Comrs. v. Stock, 111 Ind. App. 167, it was held that under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 7858, providing for an appeal on disallowance of 89 L. R. A.

a claim by the board of commissioners, the claimant might maintain an independent action without taking the appeal, but the complaint to recover for injuries caused by a defective bridge should show that the county had notice, prior to the time of the accident, that the bridge was unsafe.

In Jackson County Comrs. v. Nichols, 139 Ind. 611, which was an action for personal injuries sustained by a defective bridge, it was held that it was not necessary to prove that the plaintiff had filed a claim with the county board before he had filed the complaint in this case.

And it was not necessary for the plaintiff in an action for injuries from a bridge to show that his claim had been disallowed before bringing his action. Sullivan County Comrs. v. Arnett, 116 Ind. 438.

In Hancock County Comrs. v. Leggett, 115 Ind. 544, where the plaintiff stated that he had filed his claim before the board, and they had disallowed the same, and it was contended that his bill of complaint was insufficient, it was held that it was for the defendant to show whether or not the claim had been properly presented under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 5758-5760, providing that no court shall have jurisdiction of any claim against a county unless the claimant shall file his claim with the board of commissioners and have the same disallowed.

In Fulton County Comrs. v. Maxwell, 101 Ind. 288, where the county was sued for injuries caused by a defective public bridge on the highway, it was held that Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 5760 (Acts 1879, p. 106), providing for filing claims against counties and presenting the same to the board of county commissioners, and § 5760, providing that no court shall have jurisdiction of any claim against any county except as provided in this act, repeal Rev. Stat. 1881, § 5771 (act of 1852), providing for bringing an original action on disallowance of claim, instead of appealing.

After this case was reversed, and on the 27th of March, 1886, plaintiff began another action, and it was held that Ind. Acts 1885, p. 80, providing that if a claim is disallowed the party may appeal or bring an action, was not retrospective, and the only remedy for this plaintiff was to appeal from a disallowance of his claim by the commission. Maxwell v. Fulton County Comrs. 119 Ind. 20.

But in May v. Saginaw County, 32 Fed. Rep. 629, it was held that the Nebraska Constitution providing that exclusive power is vested in the board of enjoining the defendant from maintaining the same so as to interrupt the natural flow of the water in the stream mentioned. The trial court, among its other findings of fact, also found "that the plaintiff, by reason of the construction and maintenance of the dam as above stated by the defendant, and the consequent obstruction of and interference with the natural and customary flow of the waters of said Minnehaha creek, has been deprived of the natural use of said waters, and is thereby subject to hindrance and great inconvenience in and about the operation of his said mill, to his damage in the sum of $500. And as conclusions of law: (1) That the plaintiff is entitled to judgment herein for the abatement of said dam so erected and maintained by the defendant board, so far as said dam obstructs the natural flow of said stream. (2) For a perpetual injunction ordering and requiring defendant to lower said dam 5 inches from the top thereof, and for such a width as was the natural width of the original bed of said stream.

supervisors to adjust all claims against their respective counties, and the sum so fixed and defined shall be subject to no appeal, did not prevent an action against a county for infringement of a patent, as this provision had no application to claims for torts.

It was held that under Neb. Comp. Stat. 1889, chap. 18, § 37, providing for presentation of claims to the county, this claim was not required to be presented, as unliquidated demands from a tort did not have to be presented, as § 4 of the Statute of 1889, providing that the person sustaining a damage from a defective bridge may recover, and that action should be brought within thirty days, did not contemplate presenting the claim to the county board. Hollingsworth v. Saunders County, 36 Neb. 141.

And where an action for damages to realty was brought against the county within twelve months from the time the cause of action arose, the action was not barred because plaintiff failed to present the same for auditing. It was held that the bringing of the suit within the time limited was a sufficient presentation of the claim within the meaning of Ga. Code, § 507, providing that all claims against counties must be presented twelve months after they accrue or become payable, or the same are barred. Dement v. De Kalb County, 97 Ga. 733.

But in Maddox v. Randolph County, 65 Ga. 216, a county was held not liable for injuries received from a defective bridge, where the claim was not presented to the ordinary for auditing within twelve months from the time of entry, under a statute requiring all claims against counties to be presented within twelve months after they accrue or the same are barred.

In Dement v. De Kalb County, 97 Ga. 733, the case of Maddox v. Randolph County, 65 Ga. 216, was distinguished, as in that case the action was commenced after the expiration of the twelve months with no previous presentation of the claim, and this identical question had never been definitely decided by this court. It was said that Code, § 506 (act December 15, 1871), merely directed the county officials as to what they should do with such claims when presented, and did not change the pre-existing law contained in § 507, or impose upon claimants any additional burden.

In Arnett v. Decatur County Comrs. 75 Ga. 732 the court refused to decide whether or not an action was barred because of failure to present the claim to the board of county commissioners, under Ga. Code, § 507, providing for presentation of claims and barring the same unless suit is brought
89 L. R. A.

(3) For the recovery of $500 as damages, and for the costs and disbursements in this action."

While the plaintiff had no property interest in the water itself, he had an interest in it as it passed along through his land as it was wont to run, and a wrongful and unlawful interference so as to materially interrupt or diminish the natural flow of the stream to plaintiff's damage would constitute a cause of action. The county attorney, representing the defendant, conceded that the acts of the board were unlawful, and that the Special Laws of 1891 (chap. 381) relating to the improvement of the navigation of Lake Minnetonka, and establishing and maintaining a uniform height of water in said lake, under which they assumed to act, was unconstitutional, and insisted that such acts were ultra vires, and hence no action against the county could be maintained. Upon this concession of appellant's attorney, and certain allegations in the answer, the question to be determined is the liability of the defendant.

within twelve months, as that question was not passed upon by the court below.

Under Miss. Rev. Code, 419, art. 34, providing that any person having a just claim against any county which is disallowed may bring suit against the board of police, it was held that it was questionable whether a demand for damages arising out of a tort was "a claim" within the meaning of this section. Sutton v. Carroll County Bd. of Police, 41 Miss. 236.

In Brabham v. Hinds County Supers. 54 Miss. 363, 28 Am. Rep. 352, it was held that the Mississippi statute, providing for "demands," "accounts," and "claims" to be audited and allowed, were such liabilities of the county as were provided for by some statute.

In Chick v. Newberry & Union Counties, 27 S. C. 419, it was held that a claim for damages caused by the sinking of a county ferry boat was not such a claim as should first be presented to the county commissioners and then into court by means of appeal, as an action for damages for alleged negligence on the part of the county commissioners should not be left for them to be judges in their own case.

In Prady v. New York City & County Supers. 2 Sandf. 460, Affirmed in 10 N. Y. 260, it was said that 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 386, § 4, providing that accounts for county charges of every description shall be presented to the board to be audited by them, and 1 Rev. Stat. 384, tit. 3, § 1, providing that where any "cause of action" shall exist between a county and an individual such proceedings shall be had at law or in equity for trying and finally settling the same, in like manner and with like effect as in similar suits or proceedings between individuals and corporations, were "intended to provide a remedy against a county for such causes of action, and no other, as could not be presented to and examined and allowed by the board of supervisors, as county charges of this class would be claims for the malfeasancess of county officers and claims arising from torts for which the county may be liable."

In Newman v. Livingston County Supers. 45 N. Y. 689, it was said that claims growing out of malfeasancess of county officers and claims for which the county may be liable arising from torts are not necessarily to be presented for examination and allowance.

Where a county treasurer had misappropriated town moneys, and used the same for the benefit of the county, it was said: "While this has been styled an action for money had and received by the

The stream, dam, and property in question are all situated in the county of Hennepin, and whatever was done by the county commissioners was done in pursuance of apparent legislative authority, and under a legislative act in terms conferring the power to act in the manner admitted and proved. Some of these acts were done pursuant to legislative enactments prior to the passage of chapter 881, Special Laws 1891, but the dam in question was erected subsequent to the passage of that act, and by virtue of its apparent authority; and it is this act which appellant's counsel concedes to have been unconstitutional, and hence he asserts that, the acts of the board of county commissioners being tortious and unauthorized, the defendant is not liable in damages for whatever the members of the board may have done in the premises,—in other words, that Hennepin county had no right to build the dam in question, and therefore the county is not liable for the resultant damages. But this contention is inconsistent with defendant's defense as alleged in its answer. There it expressly affirms the doings of its official board; alleges that its acts were lawful, and that it did no more than it had a legal right to do, in the erection and maintenance of said dam. It not only fails to plead that the acts complained of were ultra vires, but it adopts, assumes, and ratifies the acts complained of, and, by its pleadings, insists that such acts were right, proper, and legal, and also insists that such acts were performed under a public necessity. This is therefore not a mere act of negligence of the board of county commissioners in the performance of an official duty, but an active and affirmative tort, done under claim of statutory authority and duty, and justified upon such ground by de-county to and for the use of the town it is really an action based upon wrong,—the misappropriation of the money by the county through its agent the treasurer;" and it was held that where a claim against a county is one based upon the wrong committed by or attributable to it, the claimant is not bound to submit it to the board of supervisors for audit and allowance. Kilbourne v. Sullivan County Supers. 187 N. Y. 170.

In McClure v. Niagara County Supers. 50 Barb. 594, which was an action under the statutory liability for damages by mobs, it was held that it was not necessary to present the claim to the board of supervisors of the county for allowance before the action was commenced.

In MARKET V. QUEENS COUNTY it was contended by the respondent that the claim should have been presented to the county for auditing before suit. The court of appeals did not refer to this question in the opinion, which denied any recovery for injury from a defective bridge.

But in Albrecht v. Queens County, 84 Hun, 399, it was said that if a claim for damages for a defective bridge could be maintained it should first be submitted to the board of supervisors, under N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 686, art. 2, § 12, subs. 2, providing that the board of supervisors shall annually audit all accounts and charges against the county.

IX. Summary.

In summarizing the foregoing cases it may be said that the weight of authority is conclusive against imposing any implied liability on counties for negligence in the construction, care, and use of public property, or for torts or negligence of county employees, and as the authorities are so many and set forth in the above note, they are not recapitulated.

The exceptional cases imposing implied liability for injuries caused by defective bridges may be resolved into those of four states, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Iowa, Indiana, but the recent Indiana cases have overruled all the former cases and are now in line with the weight of authority, and in Iowa the exceptional rule is not applied to small bridges.

In regard to roads, Maryland, which makes an exception and applies the same rule as that governing bridges, stands alone.

In regard to personal injuries from negligence of an employee, in a Missouri case, a liability was affirmed on the ground that the injury arose in discharge of a self-imposed duty not enjoined by any law, which is a very fine-drawn distinction.

For injury from operating a drawbridge we have a Louisiana case and a New Jersey case.

For injuries to real property from locating dams or bridges, there is some conflict. Some of the affirmative cases can be sustained on the theory of taking or damaging property without compensation.

For infringement of patent the weight of authority is in favor of imposing a liability, and this is worked out through the Federal statute.

The reasoning in the negative cases, which accept Russell v. Men of Devon as the leading case, generally is based on the doctrine that a county is a subordinate political division of the state, and stands in the same attitude as a state, which cannot be sued without a statute authorizing such an action. A distinction is also made in nearly all the cases between counties and cities by denying the same liability against counties that is applied to cities; but many cases, whilst following the rule denying a liability, affirm that there is no distinction in principle between the two corporations. Of course in this summary no attention is paid to cases where the liability is imposed by statute, and it may be said in conclusion, without admitting the soundness of the principle evolved in so many cases, that the mass of authorities deny the liability of counties for negligence or tort of its officials, and refuse to apply the same liability as in city cases.

The exceptional cases in the above note imposing an implied liability on counties for negligence or torts of counties are as follows:

For injuries to persons from defective bridges: Park v. Adams County Comrs. 3 Ind. App. 536; Morgan County Comrs. v. Pritchett, 85 Ind. 68; Pritchett v. Morgan County Comrs. 62 Ind. 210; House v. Montgomery County Comrs. 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657; Bonebrake v. Huntington County Comrs. 141 Ind. 62; Fulton County Comrs. v. Rickel, 106 Ind. 501; State, Roundtree, v. Gibson County Comrs. 80 Ind. 478, 41 Am. Rep. 421; Jackson County Comrs. v. Nichols, 139 Ind. 611; Vaught v. Johnson County Comrs. 101 Ind. 128; Gibson County Comrs. v. Emmerson, 95 Ind. 579; Patton v. Montgomery County Comrs. 96 Ind. 181; Sullivan County Comrs. v. Arnett, 116 Ind. 433; Knox County Comrs. v. Montgomery, 109 Ind. 66; Clark County Comrs. v. Brod, 3 Ind. App. 585; Spioer v. Elkhart County Comrs. 126 Ind. 399; Goshen v. Myers, 119 Ind. 196; Shelby County Comrs. v. Deprez, 87 Ind. 509; Wabash County Comrs. v. Pearson, 120 Ind. 426; Allen County Comrs. v. Bacon, 96 Ind. 81; Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 110 Ind. 479; Porter County Comrs. v. Dombke, 94 Ind. 72; Allen County Comrs. v. Crewiston, 133 Ind. 39; Sullivan County Comrs. v. Sleson, 2 Ind. App. 311; La Porte County Comrs. v. Ellsworth, 9 Ind. App. 596; Apple v. Marion County fendant, and that it was performed within the scope of the board's official duty. It comes into court, and, by its pleadings and evidence, attempts to uphold the wrongs it has done by its officials, and persists in the continuance of this wrong, but, by contention of counsel, insists that it is not liable in damages, because its acts were unconstitutional, unauthorized, and void. Not only this, but it insists upon retaining the benefits of the illegal acts of its officers. It is not willing that the wrong shall cease, but aggressively insists that it will make no reparation for its past tort, and that it has a legal right to enjoy in the future all the benefits secured through an unconstitutional law. If valuable property rights can thus be taken, destroyed, diverted, and injured without compensation, there will be but little safety in the private ownership of property. We may concede the general rule to be that the defendant would not be responsible for the unauthorized and unlawful acts of its officer, done colore officii; but when the defendant itself expressly authorizes such act, or, when done, adopts and ratifies it, and retains and enjoys its benefits, and persists in so doing, it is liable in damages. The law applicable to a case of this kind is well stated in the case of Thayer v. Boston, 19 Pick. 511, 31 Am. Dec. 157, as follows: There is a large class of cases, in which the rights of both the public and of individuals may be deeply involved, in which it cannot be known at the time the act is done whether it is lawful or not. The event of a legal inquiry, in a court of justice, may show that it was unlawful. Still, if it was not known and understood to be unlawful at the time; if it was an act done by the officers having competent authority, either by express vote of the city government, or by the nature of the duties

Comrs. 127 Ind. 553; Shelby County Comrs. v. Blair, 8 Ind. App. 574; Parke County Comrs. v. Wagner, 128 Ind. 609; Boone County Comrs. v. Mutchler, 137 Ind. 140; Reinhart v. Martin County Comrs., 9 Ind. App. 572; Madison County Comrs. v. Brown, 89 Ind. 48; Parke County Comrs. v. Sappenfeld, 10 Ind. App. 609. (But these Indiana cases were all overruled in the following cases: Johnson County Comrs. v. Hemphill, 14 Ind. App. 219; Cowan v. Adams County Comrs., 142 Ind. 699; JASPER COUNTY COMRS. v. ALLMAN; Montgomery County Comrs. v. Coffenberry, 14 Ind. App. 701.)

In other states the cases affirming liability are: Cooper v. Mills County, 69 Iowa, 360; Morgan v. Fremont County, 92 Iowa, 644; Ferguson v. Davis County, 57 Iowa, 601; Huff v. Poweshiek County, 60 Iowa, 529; Roby v. Appanoose County, 68 Iowa, 114; Davis v. Allamakee County, 40 Iowa, 217; Weirs v. Jones County, 80 Iowa, 351; Casey v. Tama County, 75 Iowa, 656; Krause v. Davis County, 44 Iowa, 141; Hughes v. Muscatine County, 44 Iowa, 672; Huston v. Iowa County, 43 Iowa, 456; Wilson v. Jefferson County, 18 Iowa, 181; Brown v. Jefferson County, 16 Iowa, 339; Albee v. Floyd County, 45 Iowa, 177; Moreland v. Mitchell County, 40 Iowa, 394; Van Winter v. Henry County, 61 Iowa, 684; Newcomb v. Montgomery County, 79 Iowa, 487; Nims v. Boone County, 68 Iowa, 642; Kendall v. Lucas County, 26 Iowa, 395; Homan v. Franklin County, 98 Iowa, 692; Kennedy v. Cecil County Comrs., 69 Md. 65; Baltimore County Comrs. v. Baker, 44 Md. 1; Eyler v. Alleghany County Comrs., 49 Md. 287, 33 Am. Rep. 249; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Alleghany County Comrs., 57 Md. 201, 40 Am. Rep. 430; Prince George's County Comrs. v. Burgess, 61 Md. 29, 43 Am. Rep. 88; Humphreys v. Armstrong County, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 49; Armstrong County v. Clarion County, 66 Pa. 218, 5 Am. Rep. 368; Shadler v. Blair County, 136 Pa. 439.

To travelers from defective roads: Harford County Comrs. v. Hamilton, 60 Md. 340, 45 Am. Rep. 799; Anne Arundel County Comrs. v. Duckett, 20 Md. 468, 38 Am. Dec. 557; Alleghany County Comrs. v. Broadwaters, 69 Md. 533; Calvert County Comrs. v. Gibson, 36 Md. 229; Kennedy v. Cecil County Comrs., 69 Md. 65.

To persons from condition of buildings:

Escape of prisoner: Brown County Comrs. v. Butt, 2 Ohio, 343; Richardson v. Spencer, 6 Ohio, 13. But these cases were overruled in Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109.

To persons from negligence or torts of employees: Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 313.

Injuries to real property:

From construction or use of bridge: Tyler v. Tehama County, 109 Cal. 618 (Const.); Chesler County, 39 L. R. A.

v. Brower, 117 Pa. 647 (Const.); Harford County Comrs. v. Wise, 71 Md. 43; Riddle v. Delaware County, 156 Pa. 643.

Injury to property from operating a drawbridge: Houston v. Police Jury, 3 La. Ann. 568; Ripley v. Essex & Hudson Counties Chosen Freeholders, 40 N. J. L. 45.

By roads and road officers:

Injunction and damages: Coburn v. San Mateo County, 75 Fed. Rep. 530; Cummings v. Kendall County, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 184; McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 121.

Injury to property from dam: SCHUSSLER v. HENNEPIN COUNTY COMRS.

Injury for sewage nuisance: Lefrois v. Monroe County, 43 N. Y. Supp. 519.

Infringement of patent: May v. Mercer County, 30 Fed. Rep. 246; May v. Rails County, 31 Fed. Rep. 473; May v. Johnson County, Fed. Cas. No. 9, 334; May v. Fond du Lac County, 27 Fed. Rep. 695; May v. Logan County Comrs., 30 Fed. Rep. 230; May v. Saginaw County, 32 Fed. Rep. 629; May v. Jackson County, 35 Fed. Rep. 710.

Tearing down building and taking vault: Rhoda v. Alameda County, 69 Cal. 523.

On dissolution of injunction: Freeman v. Lee County Supers., 66 Miss. 1.

Suffering hog to become diseased: Rowland v. Kalamazoo County Supers. of Poor, 49 Mich. 553.

Diverting water (not decided): Fenton v. Salt Lake County, 3 Utah, 423.

Under the statute of Winton, 13 Edw. I., providing that if the country does not apprehend the felons within forty days an action lies against the inhabitants of the hundred where the robbery was committed for the money or goods whereof the party was robbed, and under some other similar statutes making the hundred liable for destroying turnpikes, cutting hop binds or destroying corn to prevent exportation, for wounding officers of the customs, demolition of works, many cases are given in Comyn's Dig. title, Hundred, c. 2-5.

For liability of county for property destroyed by mob, see Glanfortone v. New Orleans (C. C. E. D. La.) 24 L. R. A. 562, note.

Cases in regard to counties like San Francisco and St. Louis counties, when the city and county are the same in territory, are omitted from this note.

This note is not intended to include injunction suits against counties for nuisances unless damages were claimed, or cases under eminent domain where proceedings were had but were void or irregular, or cases against counties for collecting an illegal tax.

I. T.

and functions with which they are charged, by their offices, to act upon the general subject-matter; and especially if the act was done with an honest view to obtain for the public some lawful benefit or advantage,—reason and justice obviously require that the city, in its corporate capacity, should be liable to make good the damage sustained by an individual in consequence of the acts thus done. It would be equally injurious to the individual sustaining damage, and to the agents and persons employed by the city government, to leave the party injured no means of redress, except against agents employed, and by what at the time appeared to be competent authority to do the acts complained of, but which are proved to be unauthorized by law. . . .

The court is therefore of opinion that the city of Boston may be liable in an action on the case, where acts are done by its authority which would warrant a like action against an individual, . . . or where, after the act has been done, it has been ratified by the corporation by any similar act of its officers."

We do not pass upon the constitutionality of chapter 381, Special Laws 1891, relative to the proceeding had by the board of county commissioners, but our opinion in this respect is based upon the concession of appellant's counsel. Points raised by counsel and not discussed in this opinion have been examined and considered, but are deemed immaterial.

Judgment affirmed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

R. T. SMITH, and Wife, Respts.,

v.

John H. ALLEN and Wife, Impleaded, etc.,
Appts.

(..... Wash.)

1. The legislative adoption of so much of the common law as is applicable to the condition of the state of Washington does not include vendor's liens.

2. A vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money does not arise by implication on a conveyance of land without creating a lien by any reservation in the deed or any agreement between the parties.

(October 6, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendants Allen and wife from a judgment of the Superior Court for Clallam County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to foreclose an alleged vendor's lien. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. C. Allen, for appellants:

The court should have granted the change of venue.

2 Hill's Code, §§ 158, 159, 161.

It was properly shown to the court that neither of the defendants resided in Clallam county, or had ever resided there, but that, on the contrary, all of the defendants were, and had for many years been, residents of Kings county.

Where property has been conveyed by deed, absolute upon its face, there is in this state no vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money, unless such lien is reserved in the deed, or by agreement of the parties.

Akrend v. Odiorne, 118 Mass. 261, 19 Am. Rep. 449; Simpson v. Mundee, 3 Kan. 176;

NOTE.—As to the adoption of the common law, see McKennon v. Winn (Okla.) 22 L. R. A. 601, and note; also Gatton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (Iowa) 28 L. R. A. 556; and Davis v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Wis.) 33 L. R. A. 664.

39 L. R. A.

Brown v. Simpson, 4 Kan. 76; Greene v. Barnard, 18 Kan. 518; Kauffelt v. Bower, 7 Serg. & R. 64; Heister v. Green, 48 Pa. 96, 86 Am. Dec. 569; Edminster v. Higgins, 6 Neb. 265; Philbrook v. Delano, 29 Me. 410; Peck v. Culberson, 104 N. C. 425; Richards v. Arms Shingle & Lumber Co. 74 Mich. 57; Dean v. Dean, 6 Conn. 285; Arlin v. Brown, 44 N. H. 102; Perry v. Grant, 10 R. I. 334; Wragg v. Comptroller General, 2 Desauss. Eq. 509; 2 Jones, Liens, §§ 1061 et seq.

While it is true a great many of the states have adopted the lien, most all of them in later cases have lamented the doctrine, and in a great number it has been abolished by statute.

Conover v. Warren, 6 Ill. 498, 41 Am. Dec. 196; Hammond v. Peyton, 34 Minn. 529; Porter v. Dubuque, 20 Iowa, 440; Bayley v. Greenleaf, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 46, 5 L. ed. 398.

Even Lord Eldon looked upon the doctrine with disfavor.

Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. Jr. 329.

Before a party can be sued and a judgment obtained against him for the contract price of real estate it must be made to appear that a deed to the property has been made and tendered. It is true that in the case at bar a conveyance had been made, but appellants contend that the deed at its inception was a mortgage; that it was executed by the plaintiff and accepted by Allen as security. If this is so, then no subsequent agreement, unless made by deed or in such a manner as would satisfy our statute, could change the nature of the conveyance.

1 Jones, Mortg. 4th ed. § 340; Henry v. Davis, 7 Johns. Ch. 40; Odell v. Montross, 68 N. Y. 500; Smith v. Brand, 64 Ind. 427; Hart v. Eppstein, 71 Tex. 752; 1 Dembitz, Land Titles, § 96, p. 780, note No. 125.

Mr. George C. Hatch, for respondents:

The grantor's implied lien for unpaid purchase money exists in this state by force of having incorporated into its law the common law of England.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, topic, Vendor's Lien.

Reavis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action instituted by plaintiffs (respondents) against defendants (appellants) to enforce a vendor's lien upon certain real property in Clallam county. In substance, the complaint is that respondents sold and conveyed by absolute deed to appellants 80 acres of land, situated in Clallam county, and that defendants promised and agreed to pay the sum of $1,000 in instalments from time to time, as they were able, and as plaintiffs needed the same; that the agreement to purchase was in writing; and that defendants paid on the contract the sum of $635.62, and refused to pay the balance. The complaint concludes with a prayer for judgment against the defendants for the balance of the sum alleged to be due on the purchase price of the land, and that it be declared a first lien on the premises, as a vendor's lien, and that the specified premises be sold to satisfy the same.

Defendants at the time of the commencement of the action were all residents of King county, and the defendants Allen each appeared and demurred to the complaint, and filed a motion to change the venue to King county. Sufficient affidavits showing the residence of all the defendants in King county, and also affidavits of merit, were at the same time filed. The superior court denied the motion for a change of venue on the ground that the suit was one to enforce a vendor's lien for balance due of the purchase price of the premises conveyed by respondents to defendant Allen. After the demurrer was overruled, the defendants answered, and a trial was had, and judgment for plaintiffs, with a decree establishing a vendor's lien, and ordering a sale of the premises before mentioned. The superior court evidently overruled the motion for a change of venue on the ground that the action was local, because of the enforcement of a vendor's lien. Sections 158, 159, 161, 2 Hill's Code, control the venue of the action. The defendants having at the proper time shown that they were residents of King county, the motion to change the venue was not addressed to the discretion of the court, but was a matter of right with the defendants.

The question of jurisdiction to try the action is determined, not by the remedy requested, but by what the facts alleged in the complaint entitle plaintiffs to receive; and thus the question presented for decision here is whether real property which has been conveyed by absolute deed is subject to a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money, where no such lien has been reserved by the deed or by any agreement between the parties. No case in this state has been called to our attention where the question has necessarily arisen and been decided heretofore. It is true, the expression "vendor's lien" has been used perhaps a number of times by the court, but where the lien itself, as the foundation of a right, was not necessarily involved. The policy deduced from the uniform course of legislation in this state relative to conveyances of real estate and the title thereto has been to enlarge the scope of the recordation of all instruments affecting real estate. Only conveyances by deed are recognized, and encumbrances are required to be placed on record. This is true of agreements subjecting real property to voluntary liens or encumbrances, as in the case of mortgages, and is also required in that large class of claims of lien which are authorized by statute. Evidently the policy of our registry acts is against secret liens. The vendor's lien, originally, as recognized in England, was devised by courts of equity, to enforce the rights of a grantor of real property against the grantee, who might remain in possession after the execution of an absolute deed, and yet refuse to pay the purchase price, or any balance remaining due thereon. The inability to subject land by process of law to execution for a simple-contract debt was recognized by the English chancellors as requiring a remedy. Hence the invention of a lien in favor of the vendor for the purchase price promised to be paid for land. The vendor's lien, at the time it originated and was enforced, was also less inconvenient and injurious against innocent purchasers or encumbrancers of land in England than in this country. The general policy of the law in England did not facilitate commerce in land, as here. The law there was rather favorable towards holding landed estates together, and did not assume to make transfers easy. Thus real estate was usually improved and regularly cultivated, the ownership long established and well known, and the transfers comparatively few, and usually better known than among our people. Here land is essentially a subject of trade and commerce, transfers are easy and simple, and purchasers and encumbrancers look to the record for their information. The vendor's lien in England seems to have been involved in some uncertainty, and its limitations not very well understood until the case of Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. Jr. 329, decided in 1808 by Lord Eldon. In this case the learned chancellor thought "the doctrine is probably derived from the civil law as to goods." The case, however, reviews the doctrine, and the source of its origin, and the reasons and authorities by which it is supported. The final grounds upon which it has been rested are natural equity, the supposed intention of the parties, and a trust arising out of the unconscientiousness of the vendee's holding the land without paying the price. Mr. Justice Gibson of Pennsylvania, in Kauffelt v. Bower, 7 Serg. & R. 64, meets this argument thus: "The implication that there is an intention to reserve a lien for the purchase money in all cases where the parties do not, by express acts, evince a contrary intention, is in almost every case inconsistent with the truth of the fact, and in all instances, without exception, in contradiction of the express terms of the contract, which purports to be a conveyance of everything that can pass." But the theory that a trust arises out of the unconscientiousness of the purchaser would construe the nonperformance of every promise made in consideration of a conveyance of property to the promisor into a breach of trust, and would attach the trust, not merely to the purchase money which he agreed to pay, but to the land, which he never agreed to hold for the benefit of the supposed cestui que trust. The earliest cases upon this subject in England were decided long after the first colonial settlements in this country. Lord Eldon, in Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. Jr. 829, himself said, "It has always struck me, considering this subject, that it would have been better at once to have held that the lien should exist in no case, and the vendor should suffer the consequences of his want of caution, or to have laid down the rule the other way so distinctly that a purchaser might be able to know without the judgment of a court, in what cases it would and in what it would not exist," but felt himself obliged to declare, as the result of all the authorities, that it was clear that different judges would have determined the same case differently. The most plausible foundation of the English doctrine would seem to be that justice required that the vendor should be enabled, by some form of judicial process, to charge the land, in the hands of the vendee, as security for the unpaid purchase money. The doctrine of vendor's lien has never been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, except where established by the local law. In Bayley v. Greenleaf, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 46, 5 L. ed. 893, Mr. Chief Justice Marshall observes: "It is a secret invisible trust, known only to the vendor and vendee and to those to whom it may be communicated in fact. To the world, the vendee appears to hold the estate, divested of any trust whatever; and credit is given to him in the confidence that the property is his own in equity, as well as law. A vendor relying upon this lien ought to reduce it to a mortgage, so as to give notice of it to the world. If he does not, he is, in some degree, accessory to the fraud committed on the public, by an act which exhibits the vendee as the complete owner of an estate on which he claims a secret lien." Says Mr. Justice Gray in Ahrend v. Odiorno, 118 Mass. 261, 19 Am. Rep. 449: "The decisions in the courts . . . in favor of the doctrine, which are collected in the notes to 2 Sugden on Vendors, 8th Am. ed. chap. 19, suggest no reasons and afford no grounds why we should now for the first time adopt in this commonwealth a doctrine which has never been supposed by the profession to be in force here; which would introduce a new exception to the statute of frauds; which, as experience elsewhere has shown, tends to promote uncertainty and litigation; and which appears to us to be unfounded in principle, unsuitable to our condition and usages, and unnecessary to secure the just rights of the parties. If no third person has acquired any rights in the land by bona fide attachment or conveyance, the original vendor may secure payment of the debt due him for the purchase money by the usual attachment on mesne process. If any third person has acquired rights in the property, there is no reason why equity, any more than the common law, should interpose to defeat them." Under our statutes the vendor may obtain his judgment for the purchase money, or any part thereof, which immediately becomes a lien of record upon the land sold, and under execution he may have the land sold in satisfaction of his judgment; and that, too, freed from any homestead or other claim of exemption. Thus, the reason for the maintenance of the lien of the vendor is gone, and the rule has never been applicable to our condition. The adoption of the common law of England by legislative enactment in this state adopts so much of that law as is applicable to our condition, and the lien devised in favor of the vendor by the English chancellors was inapplicable to the legislation and existing conditions in this state. Ahrend v. Odiorno, 118 Mass. 261, 19 Am. Rep. 449; Simpson v. Mundee, 3 Kan. 172; Brown v. Simpson, 4 Kan. 76; Greeno v. Barnard, 18 Kan. 518; Kauffelt v. Bower, 7 Serg. & R. 64; Heister v. Green, 48 Pa. 96, 86 Am. Dec. 569; Edminster v. Higgins, 6 Neb. 265; Philbrook v. Delano, 29 Me. 410; Peck v. Culbertson, 104 N. C. 425; Richards v. Arms Shingle & Lumber Co., 74 Mich. 57; Dean v. Dean, 6 Conn. 285; Arlin v. Brown, 44 N. H. 102; Perry v. Grant, 10 R. I. 384; Wragg v. Comptroller General, 2 Desauss. Eq. 509; Frame v. Sliter, 29 Or. 131, 84 L. R. A. 690; 2 Jones, Liens, § 1061.

The change of venue from Clallam to King county should have been granted the defendants. The cause is reversed, with directions to the superior court to proceed in conformity to this decision.

Scott, Ch. J., and Dunbar, Anders, and Gordon, JJ., concur.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

Marion DUCKETT et al., Appls.,
v.

NATIONAL MECHANICS' BANK of Baltimore et al.

(.....Md.....)

1. A check stating that it is "for deposit to credit of" a person named, without adding the word "Trustee" to his name, although it contains a further clause stating that it is "the balance of purchase money due him as [trustee]," does not impress the funds with a trust so as to prevent a bank in which he deposits it from crediting the check to his individual account.

2. A check stating that it is for "deposit to the credit of" a person named, with the word "Trustee" added to his name, is an explicit notification to the bank in which he deposits it that he is not the actual owner of the money, and if the bank credits it to his individual account, and loss ensues to the trust estate by reason of his drawing out the fund by checks on his personal account, the bank is liable for participation in the breach of trust.
3. A bank is not responsible for the use of trust funds made by a trustee unless it knowingly participates in the breach of trust, or profits by the fraud.
4. A ratification by a trustee of the act of a bank in placing to his individual credit a check which showed on its face that it was due to him as trustee cannot relieve the bank from liability to the trust estate if the funds are lost by his checking them out on his personal account.

NOTE.—As to the effect of depositing money in a bank in trust for third persons, see Cunningham v. Davenport (N. Y.) 82 L. R. A. 373, and note; and Bath Sav. Inst. v. Hathorn (Me.) 32 L. R. A. 377. 89 L. R. A.

5. A defense of the statute of limitations cannot be invoked by a participant in a breach of trust any more than by the trustee himself.

6. The statute of limitations must be invoked by plea or answer in order to be available as a defense.

(December 1, 1897.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Circuit Court of Baltimore City in favor of the defendant bank in a suit to hold it liable for participation in a misappropriation of trust funds. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Marion Duckett, Charles H. Stanley, and David S. Briscoe, for appellants:

Equity has a natural and primary jurisdiction superadded to any legal rights that the suitors may have, and concurrent with them, and it is no bar that an action at law may have been sustained on the same state of facts.

2 Perry, Tr. § 848; Swift v. Williams, 68 Md. 287; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54-63, 26 L. ed. 693-698; Stewart v. Baltimore Firemen's Ins. Co. 53 Md. 564.

The trustees must sue and not join the cestui que trust if the trust is alive.

Abell v. Brown, 55 Md. 217; Swift v. Williams, 68 Md. 237.

A participant in a breach of trust, or an ex maleficio trustee, cannot plead limitations against the rights of the rightful owner to recover trust property or trust funds, because he who is thus placed becomes a trustee, and not until fraud is discovered or the breach made known, if then, does the act of limitations begin to run.

2 Perry, Tr. §§ 828, 832, 840, 859, 861; Code, art. 57, § 18.

The true owner of a fund traced to the possession of another has a right to have it restored, not as a debt due and owing, but because it is his property wrongfully withheld from him.

Englar v. Offutt, 70 Md. 78; Swift v. Williams, 68 Md. 287; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693; Union Nat. Bank v. Goetz, 138 Ill. 127, 32 Am. St. Rep. 125, note; Englar v. Offutt, 70 Md. 78; Perchen v. Arndt, 46 Am. St. Rep. 603, see note, p. 608, 26 Or. 121, 29 L. R. A. 664.

Mingling the trust funds with his own is a breach of trust.

1 Perry, Tr. § 447 (1882).

A trustee has no power to sell and dispose of trust property for his own use and at his own mere will.

Third Nat. Bank v. Lange, 51 Md. 144, 84 Am. Rep. 804.

The insertion of the word 'trustee' after the name of a stockholder indicates and gives notice of a trust.

Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. 89 L. R. A.

Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693; Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 882, 1 Am. Rep. 115, 97 Am. Dec. 107; 2 Perry, Tr. 1882, p. 463, § 814, note 2; Stewart v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 53 Md. 578; Lowry v. Commercial & F. Bank, Taney, 330; Morse, Banks & Banking, § 604; Marbury v. Ehlen, 72 Md. 216; Jaudon v. National City Bank, 8 Blatchf. 430, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 165, 21 L. ed. 142.

A trustee cannot dispose of trust funds in his hands without an express and previous order of the court having jurisdiction over the trust estate.

Tilly v. Tilly, 2 Bland, Ch. 425; Third Nat. Bank v. Lange, 51 Md. 144, 84 Am. Rep. 804; Abell v. Brown, 55 Md. 223.

Messrs. Barton & Wilmer, James M. Ambler, and Randolph Barton, Jr., for appellees:

The rule that limitations cannot be pleaded by a trustee has a qualification that limits it to the case of an express or acknowledged trust, or a fraudulent collusion with a trustee.

Lewin, Tr. 9th ed. p. 983.

Limitations will bar as to trusts created by operation of law, though it may not as to express trusts.

McDowell v. Goldsmith, 6 Md. 319, 61 Am. Dec. 305; Re Leiman, 32 Md. 225, 3 Am. Rep. 182; Weaver v. Leiman, 52 Md. 708; Walker v. Manhattan Bank, 25 Fed. Rep. 255.

The mere fact that a trustee deposits and disburses a fund under his absolute control, as an individual, instead of as trustee, raises no presumption that his conduct is fraudulent or improper.

Kirby v. State, 51 Md. 383; Munnerlyn v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 88 Ga. 337; Bolles, Banks and Their Depositors, § 107, p. 111; Morse, Banks & Banking, 3d ed. § 317, p. 541; Goodwin v. American Nat. Bank, 48 Conn. 567.

Clagett had the power to place the fund to his individual account without any right or duty on the bank's part to protest; and his ratification of the bank's act is equivalent to a previous authority to the bank to so deposit the fund.

State Nat. Bank v. Dodge, 124 U. S. 346, 31 L. ed. 468.

Money is deposited in a bank by a trustee, or subject to his order, just as in the case of an individual, for safe-keeping and for convenience in handling, and not with the object of making the bank an overseer over the trustee and a guarantor of his fidelity.

Walker v. Manhattan Bank, 25 Fed. Rep. 255; Bolles, Banks and their Depositors, § 40c, p. 57; 1 Morse, Banks & Banking, 3d ed. § 317, p. 540; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 63, 26 L. ed. 698; Patterson v. Marine Nat. Bank, 130 Pa. 431; Easey County Chosen Freeholders v. Newark City Nat. Bank, 48 N. J. Eq. 53; State Nat. Bank v. Reilly, 124 Ill. 469; Swartwout v. Mechanics' Bank, 5 Denio, 555; Goodwin v. American Nat. Bank, 48 Conn. 567; Swift v. Williams, 68 Md. 252; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1612a; 2 Morse, Banks & Banking, § 432, p. 711; Munnerlyn v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 88 Ga. 336.

The simple case of a bank dealing with a trustee depositor and treating his rights over a trust deposit in his name just as those of an individual having an individual deposit, is, of course, to be distinguished from that of a bank attempting to assert a lien for a private debt due to itself from the trustee, against a fund known to be held by the trustee in a fiduciary capacity. For in such case the bank would be presumed to be a knowing participant in the profits of a fraud.

See Walker v. Manhattan Bank, 25 Fed. Rep. 255; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 64, 26 L. ed. 698; Union Stock Yards Nat. Bank v. Gillespie, 137 U. S. 421, 34 L. ed. 728; Bank of Greenboro v. Clapp, 76 N. C. 482.

If the trustee pays a private debt due the bank by a check upon a trust fund on deposit with it, the bank is not necessarily bound to presume that the payment is unlawful.

Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 63, 26 L. ed. 698; Loring v. Brodie, 134 Mass. 458.

The present case, moreover, is very different from that of a trustee offering for sale a note payable to him as trustee. Such a note is not negotiable and one buys it at his peril.

Third Nat. Bank v. Lange, 51 Md. 188, 34 Am. Rep. 304.

Or from the case of a trustee attempting to pledge trust property.

Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 1 Am. Rep. 115, 97 Am. Dec. 107; Loring v. Brodie, 134 Mass. 470.

Or from an attempted sale of stock standing in the name of a trustee.

Marbury v. Ehlen, 72 Md. 206; Stewart v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 53 Md. 564; Lowry v. Commercial & F. Bank, Taney, 810.

In the case of stock there is no presumption of the trustee's right to sell.

Marbury v. Ehlen, 72 Md. 217.

A bank account is meant to be checked against.

Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 64, 26 L. ed. 698.

Even in the case of stock, where the stock merely stands in the name of the holder as "trustee," with nothing else to indicate the name or nature of the trust, and no means of discovery, by any reasonable or ordinary inquiry, the purchaser will not be put upon inquiry.

Graffin v. Robb, 84 Md. 455; Albert v. Baltimore, 2 Md. 159.

The cases where the word "trustee" has been held to put purchasers of stock upon inquiry, have been those in which the name and object of the trust were easily ascertainable without inquiry from the trustee.

Marbury v. Ehlen, 72 Md. 206; Stewart v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 53 Md. 564.

Claggett knew of and approved the action of the bank in thus entering the deposits, and if he had complete power to direct the bank so to credit them, or so to transfer them when deposited, it can make no difference that he approved and adopted an act, which affected merely the form, and not the extent, of his control over the fund, instead of previously directing it.

2 Morse, Banks & Banking, §§ 440b, 471; Bolles, Banks and Their Depositors, § 86, § 41a, p. 54; McEwen v. Davis, 39 Ind. 112; State Nat. Bank v. Dodge, 124 U. S. 838, 334, 39 L. R. A.

81 L. ed. 458, 463; Neff v. Greene County Nat. Bank, 89 Mo. 581; Risley v. Phenix Bank, 83 N. Y. 328, 38 Am. Rep. 421.

Ratification is equivalent to a previous authority.

1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 818, p. 237.

McSherry, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These proceedings had their origin in a bill filed by the appellants against the appellees in the circuit court of Baltimore city. The appellants are trustees, who were appointed by an order of the circuit court for Prince George's county in the place and stead of Henry W. Claggett, the survivor of three trustees named in the will of John D. Bowling. To these latter—the testamentary trustees—certain funds were bequeathed by Mr. Bowling, to be held in trust for the purposes designated in the will; but as those purposes have no relation whatever to the questions presented on the record they need not be alluded to here. It is only necessary to state that the funds now in controversy formed part of the corpus of that trust estate. Upon the death of his associates Claggett became, under a decree of the circuit court for Prince George's county, sole trustee, and thereafter, having made default to the trust estate, was in due course removed, and the appellants were immediately appointed to discharge the trust created by the will of Mr. Bowling. Amongst the investments belonging to the trust estate in the hands of Claggett were two mortgages, each for $2,000, one due by Thomas S. Duckett and the other by Washington J. Beall. The mortgage given by Beall was foreclosed by Claggett after he became sole trustee, and the money realized from the sale was paid to him through Mr. Charles H. Stanley. The payment was made by Mr. Stanley's check which reads as follows:

Laurel, Md., February 13, 1892.

Citizens' National Bank:

Pay to the order of James Scott, cashier, $2,000, two thousand dollars, for deposit to credit of Henry W. Claggett, being the balance of purchase money due him as trustee from John R. Coale. C. H. Stanley.

When the Duckett mortgage matured the amount secured by it was paid to Claggett through Mr. Stanley by a check in these words:

State of Maryland.

Citizens' National Bank of Laurel, Laurel, Maryland, September 17, 1892:

Pay to the order of James Scott, cashier, $2,024.30, two thousand and twenty-four and thirty one hundredths dollars, to deposit to the credit of Henry W. Claggett, trustee.

C. H. Stanley.

Both of these checks were deposited in the National Mechanics' Bank of Baltimore where Claggett kept an individual or personal account and the proceeds of each were carried to his credit in that account. Claggett in his capacity as trustee had no account with the bank. The individual account of Claggett, including the proceeds of the two checks just transcribed, was drawn on from time to time by him, and after his removal as trustee it was discovered that these funds had been dissipated and spent. Clagett was and still is insolvent. The new trustees—the present appellants—made demand upon the National Mechanics' Bank for a restitution of the amount of the two checks, claiming that the bank was accountable therefor because it had wrongfully placed the proceeds thereof to Clagett's individual account instead of to his account as trustee, and had thereby aided and participated in his breach of trust; and to enforce that demand they filed the pending bill against the bank and Clagett. Upon final hearing the circuit court of Baltimore city decreed that the bank was not liable and dismissed the bill; whereupon this appeal was taken.

The ultimate inquiry is, whether under the circumstances stated the bank is liable to make good to the new trustees the amounts of these two checks. In addition, there are subordinate questions arising by way of defense, that will be disposed of after the main one has been dealt with.

There can be no dispute that as a general principle all persons who knowingly participate or aid in committing a breach of trust are responsible for the wrong, and may be compelled to replace the fund which they have been instrumental in diverting. Every violation by a trustee of a duty which equity lays upon him, whether wilful or fraudulent, or done through negligence, or arising through mere oversight or forgetfulness, is a breach of trust; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1079. There is in such instances no primary or secondary liability as respects the parties guilty of, or participating in, the breach of trust; because all are equally amenable. That a breach of trust was committed by Clagett does not admit of a doubt. The defaulting trustee was removed because he was a defaulter. He unquestionably received the proceeds of these two checks, and those proceeds formed part of the corpus of the trust estate which it was his imperative duty to preserve intact. Instead of performing that duty, he spent the funds—they have disappeared, and he has not explained what he did with them—and it can make no difference for what purpose he did spend them, if by spending them he impaired the corpus of the trust estate; and that he did impair the corpus of the trust estate no one pretends to deny. Whoever knowingly aided him, or knowingly participated with him in misapplying that fund, is, by reason of so aiding and so participating, equally liable with him to make the fund good by restoring it to the trust estate; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1079. If the bank knowingly aided and participated in Clagett's breach of trust, then the bank is, beyond dispute, as responsible to the new trustees as is the defaulting trustee himself. This liability of the bank depends, however, altogether upon the contingency that it knowingly aided the trustee, Clagett, to commit the default of which he was undeniably guilty. If without knowledge of Clagett's misconduct, or if without sufficient notice to put it on inquiry that would have enabled it to ascertain that Clagett was mingling with his individual deposits, and using as his own, money that the bank knew or had the means of knowing was trust money; or if it was merely the innocent agency through which, without fault or negligence on its part, Clagett depleted the trust estate, then it was not guilty of aiding him in misappropriating the trust fund, and is not liable to restore it. In seeking, then, to solve the principal inquiry, we must look to the record for the evidence which will fasten on the bank this knowledge or notice, if in fact it possessed such knowledge or notice.

At the outset it ought to be noted that there is a marked difference between the phraseology and the legal effect of the two checks already set forth. The one is payable to Scott, cashier, for deposit to the credit of Clagett personally—that is, not in his capacity as trustee—though there is a memorandum added of which we will speak in a moment. The other check is payable to Scott, cashier, “to deposit to the credit of Henry W. Clagett, trustee.” Apart from these two checks and the information which they themselves by their terms imparted, there is no pretense that the bank had any notice or knowledge that the funds collected on them belonged to or formed part of any trust estate, or were other than Clagett's own individual property. As a consequence we are restricted to the checks alone in determining whether the bank is liable.

It is true, undoubtedly, that a bank is bound to honor the checks of its customer, so long as he has funds on deposit to his credit, unless such funds are intercepted by a garnishment or other like process, or are held under the bank's right of set-off. It is equally true that whenever money is placed in bank on deposit and the bank's officers are unaware that the fund does not belong to the person depositing it, the bank, upon paying the fund out on the depositor's check, will be free from liability even though it should afterwards turn out that the fund in reality belonged to someone else than the individual who deposited it. It is immaterial, so far as respects the duty of the bank to the depositor, in what capacity the depositor holds or possesses the fund which he places on deposit. The obligation of the bank is simply to keep the fund safely and to return it to the proper person, or to pay it to his order. If it be deposited by one as trustee, the depositor, as trustee, has the right to withdraw it, and the bank, in the absence of knowledge or notice to the contrary, would be bound to assume that the trustee would appropriate the money, when drawn, to a proper use. Any other rule would throw upon a bank the duty of inquiring as to the appropriation made of every fund deposited by a trustee or other like fiduciary; and the imposition of such a duty would practically put an end to the banking business, because no bank could possibly conduct business if, without fault on its part, it were held accountable for the misconduct or malversations of its depositors who occupy some fiduciary relation to the fund placed by them with the bank. In the absence of notice or knowledge a bank cannot question the right of its customer to withdraw funds, nor refuse (except in the instances already noted) to honor his demands by check; and, therefore, even though the deposit be to the customer's credit in trust, the bank is under no obligation to look after the appropriation of the trust funds when withdrawn, or to protect the trust by setting up a jus tertii against a demand. But if the bank has notice or knowledge that a breach of trust is being committed by an improper withdrawal of funds, or if it participates in the profits or fruits of the fraud, then it will be undoubtedly liable. In support of these general principles, if support they need at all, we may refer to Munnerlyn v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 88 Ga. 333; State Nat. Bank v. Reilly, 124 Ill. 464; Essex County Chosen Freeholders v. Newark City Nat. Bank, 48 N. J. Eq. 51, all cited in 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 833, 834; Walker v. Manhattan Bank, 25 Fed. Rep. 255; 1 Morse, Banks & Banking, § 817; Swift v. Williams, 68 Md. 287.

As the bank, then, would not be responsible for the use made of the trust funds by the trustee unless it knowingly participated in a breach of trust or profited by the fraud, do the checks, as we have said, the only evidence in the record on this branch of the case, show that the bank is liable? As respects the first check representing the proceeds of the foreclosure of the Beall mortgage, we are of opinion that there is no liability on the part of the bank. It will be remembered that this particular check was not made payable to Clagett, as trustee, nor, being payable to Scott, cashier, were the proceeds directed to be placed to the credit of Clagett, trustee. In placing the proceeds to the individual credit of Clagett, the bank did just precisely the thing it was directed on the face of the check to do. In doing this, it violated no duty to anyone, unless the addition of the words "being the balance of purchase money due him as trustee from John R. Coale," controlled the explicit direction in the body of the check to deposit the fund to the credit of Clagett individually, and gave the bank notice that instead of doing what the check required should be done, it must do something it was not instructed to do at all, viz.: place the funds to the credit of Clagett, as trustee. Mr. Stanley's check was drawn, not on the National Mechanics' Bank, but upon the Citizens' National Bank of Laurel; and the memorandum descriptive of what the funds were or the source from whence they came was neither an instruction to the Mechanics' Bank, through which the check passed, as to the account in which these funds, when collected from the Citizens' Bank should be credited in the Mechanics' Bank, to Clagett; nor was it a notification to the Mechanics' Bank that the funds were impressed with a trust that would be invaded by their being carried to Clagett's individual credit. On the contrary, the specific instruction on the face of the check was to credit Clagett individually with the proceeds, whatever the origin or ultimate use of these proceeds might be. This memorandum imposed no duty on the Mechanics' Bank, and operated only to subvert the convenience of the drawer of the check. In the case of State Nat. Bank v. Dodge, 124 U. S. 833, 81 L. ed. 468, it appeared that the clerk of the United States district court for the southern district of Illinois deposited with the State National Bank the funds belonging to the registry of the court. Whenever a deposit was made it was accompanied by a deposit ticket, giving the number of the bankruptcy case to which the fund belonged, and a corresponding entry was made upon the books of the bank indicating that a particular deposit belonged to a particular case designated by its number. All this was fully understood by the officers of the bank. When checks signed by the clerk and countersigned by the judge were drawn upon this account, the number of the case to which the fund to be paid on the check belonged was written on the upper right-hand corner of the check, following the words "Case No." Numerous deposits were made in many cases, but each and every deposit showed the number of the case, and consequently identified the case to which each deposit actually belonged. Many checks were drawn upon and paid by the bank in cases in which no deposits had been made by the clerk at all and the checks themselves showed by the case numbers written on the top right-hand corners that no deposit belonging to those cases had ever been received, because there were no deposits credited to the cases bearing those numbers. In consequence of the bank having paid various checks bearing case numbers to the credit of which cases no deposits had ever been made, the entire sum of the credit of the whole account was checked out before Dodge, to whom several checks were given in the distribution of the assets of a particular estate, received his checks and presented them to the bank for payment. In the case in which Dodge was interested as a creditor of a bankrupt, there had been deposited, as shown by the deposit tickets and by the entry of the case number on the bank's books, more than sufficient to pay the checks held by Dodge, as well as all other checks delivered to other creditors of the same bankrupt; but because the bank had paid out the funds belonging to this case, on checks bearing the numbers of other and different cases, as to which latter cases there had been no deposits made at all, there were no funds in bank to the credit of the registry with which to pay the checks held by Dodge, and the bank refused to pay them. Dodge brought suit against the bank, and bases his claim to recover on the distinct ground that the bank had actual notice from its own books as to what estates had funds on deposit, and had actual notice on the face of every check drawn in a case from which no funds had been received, that there were no funds on deposit applicable to the payment of such checks, and that, consequently, when it paid those checks it paid them knowingly out of the funds belonging to other and different cases or estates, and was bound to honor the checks held by Dodge, as they were drawn against funds which had been actually deposited as part of the assets of the bankrupt estate of which he was creditor. But the supreme court held that, "no bank is bound to take notice of memoranda and figures upon the margin of a check, which a depositor places there merely for his own convenience, to preserve information for his own benefit; and in such case, the memoranda and figures are not a notice to the bank that the particular check is to be paid only from a particular fund. So, too, a mark on a deposit ticket, if intended to require a particular deposit to be kept separate from all other deposits placed to the credit of the same depositor, must be in the shape of a plain direction, if such a duty is to be imposed on the bank." The court likewise held that "the bank had a right to assume that these memoranda of numbers in the deposits and in the checks were merely for the convenience of the court and its officers." Dodge was accordingly denied a recovery.

Unless we give to the memorandum made by Mr. Stanley for his own convenience on the first check, an effect which the supreme court declined to give to a much more significant memorandum contained in the checks delivered to Dodge, we must hold that the Mechanics Bank, by carrying to the personal credit of Clagett, the proceeds of the check representing the avails of the Beall foreclosure did no act that made it liable to the Bowling trust estate for the misappropriation of those particular proceeds by the deposed trustee. And this is so because the memorandum could not operate to qualify the right of Clagett to receive the funds individually and the bank did no wrong in placing them to his credit in the capacity in which he was obviously authorized to receive them. The bank having, therefore, rightfully entered the proceeds of the first check to Clagett's individual credit, he was entitled to draw them out so far as the bank was concerned, and the bank was under no obligation and had no authority to interfere with him in doing so.

Precisely for the reasons that the bank is not responsible for the misappropriation of the proceeds of the first check, it is liable to the new trustees for the misapplication by Clagett of the fund collected by it on the second check. The second, or Duckett check, in terms directed the cashier of the Mechanics Bank "to deposit" the $2,024.30 "to the credit of Henry W. Clagett, trustee." This was an explicit notification to the bank that Clagett was not the actual owner of the money. Bundy v. Monticello, 84 Ind. 119; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 882. It was an equally explicit instruction to the bank not to place the funds to the credit of Clagett's personal account. It was consequently more than a mere memorandum made for the convenience of the drawer of the check. Knowing that the money was not Clagett's, but that it was payable to him, and to be deposited to his credit as trustee, the bank had no authority to place it to his individual credit (American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Loretta Gold & S. Min. Co., 165 Ill. 109); and if loss ensued by reason of Clagett drawing the fund out by checks on his personal account, the bank is liable to make restitution to the trust estate. The bank in the eye of the law participated in the breach of trust of which Clagett was guilty. In fact, the bank took the first step that ended in the spoliation of the trust. Its act in placing distinctly marked trust funds to the personal credit of Clagett was obviously wrongful, and it must bear the resulting consequences. It is no answer to say that had the bank obeyed the direction given to it, and had it opened an account in the name of Clagett as trustee, and credited that account with these funds, still Clagett could have withdrawn them on checks appropriately signed, and could then have misapplied the money without involving the bank in any liability. This is no answer, simply because what might have been done was not done. Had the bank opened the account for this fund in the name of Clagett, trustee, instead of entering the credit to his personal account, it would have done what it was its plain duty to do, and it would not have been guilty of the error which it did commit. Had it done its duty, and had Clagett afterwards withdrawn the money, as he might have done, and had he then misapplied it without the co-operation of the bank, there would have been no liability incurred by the bank at all. But this was not done, and the failure of the bank to do what it ought to have done cannot be treated as tantamount to the thing that it did do unless contraries are equivalent of each other. What it ought to have done is not what it did do, and it cannot escape liability upon the mere conjecture that what did happen to the funds might have also happened had the bank not been derelict in its dealings with those funds.

It has, however, been insisted that Clagett, knowing that the bank had wrongfully placed trust funds to his individual credit, ratified that wrongful act by his subsequent conduct, and as his ratification was equivalent to a prior direction to do what was done, the bank is not answerable. Both Clagett and the bank participated in the wrong with respect to the proceeds of the Duckett mortgage. Because they both did wrong they are both accountable for it. But the contention is, if one of two wrongdoers who reaps the fruits of the joint wrongful acts ratifies what his accomplice has done, that accomplice is thereby released and exculpated. This, of course, is not the bald form in which the rather ingenious argument advanced to support the contention is presented; but, reduced to its last analysis, it comes to that startling proposition. The wrong was done, not to the trustee, but to the trust estate. As between the bank and the trustee, his ratification of its act might bind him; but upon what principle can such a ratification bind the beneficiaries of the trust, who have been injured by the joint breach of trust on the part of the bank and the trustee? No ratification by the trustee of the bank's participation in the breach of trust can possibly affect in any way the bank's accountability to the new trustees.

As to the statute of limitations it is only necessary to say that a participant in a breach of trust cannot, any more than can the trustee himself, invoke that defense. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1080. Even if the statute applied, to be availed of as a defense it must be invoked by either as a plea or an answer. Allender v. Trinity Church, 8 Gill, 166. The answer of the bank relies on limitations only as against the claim for $2,000, which is not the claim for $2,024.30 collected on the check given in payment of the Duckett mortgage debt—and that is the claim for which we hold the bank liable. So in fact the statute is pleaded against the claim that the bank is not liable for and is not pleaded against the claim for which it is responsible.

We have made no allusion to a line of cases of which Third Nat. Bank v. Lange, 51 Md. 188, 34 Am. Rep. 304; Marbury v. Ehlen, 72

Md. 206, and Stewart v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 58 Md. 564, are illustrations; because the principles applied in that group of decisions have no relation to the questions involved in the record now before us. The sale of a promissory note payable to a trustee—and therefore a non-negotiable note—or the transfer of a certificate of stock, standing in the name of an individual as trustee, is quite a different thing from the payment of a check drawn by a trustee, on an account standing to his credit as trustee in a bank. Where certificates of stocks are held in trust, and on their face indicate that they are so held, the bank or other corporation, is bound before suffering them to be transferred on the books of the corporation, to know, or at least to use proper diligence to ascertain, that the trustee has authority to make the transfer; whereas in the case of a deposit the relation of debtor and creditor is created in the capacity in which the deposit is made, and the bank's duty is to pay out the fund to or upon the order of the person making the deposit when the check is properly signed, without looking to the application of the fund; and it incurs no responsibility by so doing unless it knowingly participates in a breach of trust or itself reaps the fruit thereof.

We hold, then, on the entire case, that the bank is accountable for the sum of $2,024.80—the amount of the check dated September 17, 1892, with interest thereon from the date of the deposit of the proceeds to the credit of Clagett's individual account, and that it is not liable for the proceeds of the other check.

The decree dismissing the bill of complaint will accordingly be reversed, and the cause will be remanded that a new decree may be passed conforming to this opinion.

Decree reversed with costs above and below, and cause remanded.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

TOPEKA WATER COMPANY, Plff. in Error,
v.

Kate J. WHITING.

(.....Kan.....)

- *1. The fact that a municipality confers upon a water company the right to place its hydrants in the streets, and to open them for the purpose of flushing its mains, gives the company no license or right to flush at such times and in such a manner as to unnecessarily impede travel or imperil the safety of those passing and repassing over the street.
2. The license to flush carried with it the obligation to do so with reasonable care and a due regard for the rights of others.
3. The testimony examined, and held, that it tends to show that an open hydrant, from which water was thrown about 10 feet into the street, with considerable noise and spray, is calculated to frighten ordinarily gentle horses.
4. In view of this fact it was the duty of the water company to adopt such precautions and exercise such care in flushing its mains as an ordinarily discreet and prudent person would adopt and exercise under like circumstances for the protection and safety of those traveling upon the street.
5. Ordinarily, it is a question of fact in each case whether the precautions taken and the care exercised are sufficient to warn and protect travelers who are using ordinary care.
6. Persons using a street which is in constant use, and when their attention has not been called to any obstructions or perils thereon, have a right to presume that the street is reasonably safe for ordinary travel. While they must act with reasonable care, they are not required to keep their eyes upon the pavement continuously, watching for obstructions or pitfalls.

7. Upon examination of the testimony it is held, that the question whether the plaintiff below was in the exercise of due care when her horse was frightened, and the injury inflicted, was fairly a question for the jury, and the finding in her favor upon the question is conclusive.

(November 6, 1897.)

ERROR to the District Court for Shawnee County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. W. Mulvane and N. H. Loomis, for plaintiff in error:

There was no negligence upon the part of defendant, and its demurrer to the evidence should have been sustained, and its request for an instruction in its favor should have been granted.

Morton v. Frankfort, 55 Me. 46; Macomber v. Nichols, 84 Mich. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 522; Conan v. Muskegon R. Co. 84 Mich. 588; Sinclair v. Baltimore, 59 Md. 592; Welsh v. Wilson, 101 N. Y. 254, 54 Am. Rep. 698; Dubois v. Kingston, 102 N. Y. 219, 55 Am. Rep. 804; Agnew v. Corunna, 55 Mich. 481, 54 Am. Rep. 838; Loberg v. Amherst, 87 Wis. 684; O'Rourke v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 520.

The plaintiff and her sister, who was driving, were both chargeable with contributory negligence.

Robb v. Connellsville, 187 Pa. 42; Barnes v. Sowden, 119 Pa. 58; King v. Thompson, 87 Pa. 365, 30 Am. Rep. 864; Dubois v. Kingston, 102 N. Y. 219, 55 Am. Rep. 804; Butterfield v. Forrester, 11 East, 60; Barker v. Savage, 45 N.

*Headnotes by JOHNSTON, J.

NOTE.—As to the liability for injuries caused by horses becoming frightened on a highway, see Bowes v. Boston (Mass.) 15 L. R. A. 365, and note; also Kieffer v. Hummelstown (Pa.) 17 L. R. A. 217. 39 L. R. A.

Y. 191, 6 Am. Rep. 66; Plymouth v. Milner, 117 Ind. 324; Evans v. Adams Exp. Co. 122 Ind. 362, 7 L. R. A. 678.

The court erred in instructing the jury that if plaintiff was chargeable with only slight negligence, and the defendant with gross negligence, a recovery could be had.

Kansas P. R. Co. v. Peavey, 29 Kan. 169, 44 Am. Rep. 690; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. O'Connell, 46 Kan. 581; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wells, 56 Kan. 222; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Winston, 56 Kan. 456; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hague, 54 Kan. 284.

Messrs. Waters & Waters, E. F. Hilton, and A. W. Dana, for defendant in error:

Even upon its own premises, the defendant would have been bound, in the flushing of its hydrant, to a due regard to the rights of others.

Central Branch Union P. R. Co. v. Henigh, 23 Kan. 358, 33 Am. Rep. 167; Kansas C. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 22 Kan. 691, 31 Am. Rep. 203; Culp v. Atchison & N. R. Co. 17 Kan. 477.

And if of necessity, in flushing it, defendant had to use a portion of the highway, it was still bound to take such precautions as should prevent injury to the traveler using ordinary care.

2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 342, 361; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, 247.

No use of a public highway can be allowed except its use for travel and transportation.

Mikecell v. Durkee, 34 Kan. 509; Smith v. Leavenworth, 15 Kan. 81.

Negligence is not imputable to a person for failing to look for a danger when, under the surrounding circumstances, the person sought to be charged with it had no reason to suspect that danger was to be apprehended.

Brown v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 31 Kan. 1; Moulton v. Aldrich, 28 Kan. 300; Central Branch Union P. R. Co. v. Henigh, 23 Kan. 358, 33 Am. Rep. 167; Langan v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 72 Mo. 892; Gray v. Scott, 66 Pa. 345, 5 Am. Rep. 371; Fowler v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 18 W. Va. 579; Dush v. Fitzhugh, 2 Lea, 307; Freer v. Cameron, 4 Rich. L. 228, 55 Am. Dec. 672, and note; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 38, 39; Deering, Neg. 16; 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 90; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 34, 35, and note.

Even though these parties had not become educated into a belief as to the safety of the highway, through an experience that left no suspicion of danger, they still had a right, from the very fact of its being a public highway, to presume it to be safe, and to regulate their conduct upon such presumption.

McGuire v. Spence, 91 N. Y. 303, 43 Am. Rep. 663; Wells v. Sibley, 81 N. Y. S. R. 40; Barry v. Terkildsen, 72 Cal. 256; Jennings v. Van Schaick, 108 N. Y. 530; Thompson v. Bridgewater, 7 Pick. 189; Gordon v. Richmond, 83 Va. 438; Davenport v. Ruckman, 37 N. Y. 573; Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 110 Ind. 483; Koch v. Edgewater, 14 Hun, 544; Indianapolis v. Gaston, 58 Ind. 225; Pennsylvania Canal Co. v. Bentley, 66 Pa. 33; Smith v. Sherwood Twp. 62 Mich. 159; Brown v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 31 Kan. 1.

If gentle or ordinarily well-broken horses would naturally frighten at an unattended hydrant under full flow, the defendant, as matter 39 L. R. A.

of law, is charged with the duty of operating it with such reasonable care that horses will not frighten. If the defendant had no license to operate the hydrant in the street it was a nuisance and an illegal obstruction, and it was negligence to operate it at all.

Yates v. Warrenton, 84 Va. 387; Cohen v. New York, 118 N. Y. 532, 4 L. R. A. 406; Clifford v. Dam, 81 N. Y. 52.

If defendant had a license it was a license only to operate it in an ordinarily careful way, and the negligent operation of it cannot be justified by its license.

Bordentown & S. A. Turnp. Road v. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. 17 N. J. L. 814; Moshier v. Utica & S. R. Co. 8 Barb. 427.

There is not an element lacking to make plaintiffs conduct that of ordinary care as the jury found.

Salina v. Troesper, 27 Kan. 562.

In a legalized obstruction the thing must be done in a reasonably careful way and not in a negligent way.

Russell v. Columbia, 74 Mo. 490, 41 Am. Rep. 325; Indianapolis v. Doherty, 71 Ind. 5.

Plaintiff was not bound to look out for an obstruction that she did not know existed, and could not reasonably anticipate.

Moulton v. Aldrich, 28 Kan. 300; Davenport v. Ruckman, 37 N. Y. 568; Barry v. Terkildsen, 72 Cal. 244; Kelly v. Blackstone, 147 Mass. 448; Indianapolis v. Gaston, 58 Ind. 224; Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 110 Ind. 479; McGuire v. Spence, 91 N. Y. 303, 43 Am. Rep. 668.

Johnston, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Near the noon hour on December 21, 1891, Kate J. Whiting, accompanied by her mother and sister, was driving upon one of the streets of Topeka, when their horse became frightened at the water spurting or flowing from an open hydrant in the street, and turned around suddenly, capsizing the buggy, and breaking Kate J. Whiting's arm, and otherwise seriously injuring her. The hydrant, which was upon a dead end of a main, was opened by an employee of the Topeka Water Company for the purpose of flushing the main, and relieving it of the stagnant and impure water therein. The plaintiff below alleged, and it is her contention, that the water company was culpably negligent in doing the flushing at the time when and in the manner in which it was done, and in failing to take due care for the protection and safety of those who were then passing along the street. The company, on the other hand, claims that, as the right to place hydrants upon the streets had been conferred on it, it was rightfully upon the street; that the flushing of the main at that point was necessary; and that it was done in the usual and ordinary way, and at a proper time. There was a further contention in favor of the company that the plaintiff below was negligent in failing to earlier observe the open hydrant, so that she could take greater care in controlling the horse, and avoiding accident or injury. It appears that the flow from the hydrant extended into the street for about 10 feet, and could have been seen by the Whitings, if their attention had been directed to it, for a distance of about 500 feet. Grace Whiting was driving the horse, and neither she nor the plaintiff below noticed the flowing hydrant until they were within 100 feet of the same, and just at that time and place the horse discovered it, took fright, and overturned the buggy. The trial resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff below in the sum of $5,000, and the principal contention of the company is that the testimony was insufficient to support the verdict, or to show culpable negligence on the part of the company.

That the company had the right to place its hydrants in the streets, and to flush them, is conceded; but it had no license or right to flush them at such a time, or in such a manner, as to impede travel, or imperil the safety of those passing and repassing over the street. The license to flush carried with it the obligation to do so with reasonable care, and a due regard for the rights of others. The primary purpose of streets is use by the public for travel and transportation, and, if the water company unnecessarily interferes with that use, or negligently flushes its mains, thereby causing injury to others, it is liable for the consequences of such negligence. The testimony abundantly shows that an open, flowing hydrant is calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness. Some of the witnesses said that the flowing water made a roaring noise; others, that it came with a great splash; while others said that there was a great deal of spray and froth. Experienced horsemen testified that gentle and well-broken horses were apt to be frightened at such objects; and it appears that, while the hydrant in question was only open for a few minutes, three driving horses were actually frightened by it. Whether an object is such as is calculated to frighten a gentle and roadworthy horse is usually a question of fact for the jury to determine. On these questions the findings of the jury are in favor of the defendant in error. The horse was gentle, the driver was experienced in handling horses, and the jury find that the manner in which the flushing was done had a peculiar tendency to frighten ordinarily gentle and well-broken horses. The water company was aware of this tendency, as the jury have found, and yet no precautions were taken to warn passers-by of the impending danger, or to protect them from injury. The employee who opened the hydrant was from 100 to 150 feet distant from the same when the horse took fright, and from his testimony it is evident that he was not endeavoring to warn or protect those passing along the street. It is said that the method of flushing in this instance was the usual and ordinary one which had been pursued, but this will not avail the company, as it cannot be sheltered from liability by frequent trespasses upon the rights of others, nor by the long continuance of negligent methods. What precautions should have been taken, and what degree of care should have been exercised? It is generally said that there should be that care and prudence which an ordinarily discreet and careful person would exercise under like circumstances. The protection and care which it is necessary to use in cases of this kind must be determined by the character of the risk and the nature of the threatened injury. It is claimed that the hydrants might have been opened in the night-time, when few, if any, persons would be passing along the street; and it appears that sometimes the flushing was done at night. It also claimed that employees might have been stationed at the open hydrant to shut off the water on the approach of frightened horses, or one stationed on either side of it to warn travelers of the danger. A flag signal or other object of warning might have been placed on either side of the hydrant to call the attention of travelers to the open hydrant, and thus enable them to better control their horses, or to turn aside, and pass over another street. Still another method is suggested, which appears to be quite practicable, and that is, to conduct the water from the hydrant through a suitable hose. Just what method should have been employed, and what precautions should have been taken, we need not determine; but certainly they should be sufficient to accomplish the purpose. It is a question of fact in each case whether the precautions taken and the care exercised are sufficient to warn or protect travelers who are using ordinary care; and, under the testimony and findings of the jury, it must be held that the company failed to use that care which the law required of them.

We are not favorably impressed with the contention that the plaintiff below and her sister, Grace, were guilty of contributory negligence. It appears that they were riding in a single-seated buggy, and that Grace, who was seated between her mother and the plaintiff below, was driving. They were talking about Christmas presents, which they were intending to purchase. The plaintiff below and her mother were not giving special attention to the street, or keeping a lookout for obstructions. Grace, however, was giving ordinary attention, and, as the jury have found, was exercising reasonable care. Although they had driven into and through the street frequently, they had never seen an open, flowing hydrant, and were not anticipating any danger from that source. It is true that the open hydrant was within range of their vision if their attention had been called to it, and it was discernible before it was discovered by them. They were not, however, required to keep their eyes upon the pavement continuously looking for obstructions and pitfalls. It was a street which was in constant use, and over which they had passed almost daily without encountering such a danger. While they must still act with reasonable care, they had a right to presume, and to act on the presumption, that the street was reasonably safe for ordinary travel. They were not required to use the wisest precautions nor extraordinary care, but only such as persons of common prudence ordinarily exercise under similar circumstances. Grace did discover the danger when within about 100 feet of it, and it appears from the testimony that others whose horses were frightened did not observe the danger until they were quite close to it. Under these circumstances it certainly cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff in error was guilty of contributory negligence. Whether she and her sister were in the exercise of ordinary care was fairly a question for the jury, and their finding in her favor is conclusive.

Complaint is made because the court, in its charge, remarked that slight negligence should not necessarily defeat a recovery by the plaintiff if the company was guilty of gross negligence. It is claimed that there was no averment or testimony which warranted the allusion to gross negligence. There is but little in the testimony tending to show gross negligence, but, as we have seen, the method used for flushing was calculated to frighten even gentle horses. The hydrant was opened in the daytime, when many persons were passing along the street. The jury found that the company was aware that the flowing hydrant had a tendency to frighten ordinarily gentle and well-broken horses, and yet, with this knowledge, it pursued the negligent method. Under the circumstances, we think the degree of negligence was a matter for the determination of the jury, and we cannot say that prejudicial error was committed by reference to gross negligence. When the trial court came closer to the facts in the case, he instructed that the company was required to exercise ordinary care, and also that the plaintiff below was held to the exercise of the same degree of care, and the jury have practically found that she exercised ordinary care. There are some other criticisms of the charge of the court, and also of its rulings upon the testimony and findings, but we find nothing substantial in them.

The judgment of the District Court will therefore be affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

City of MAYSVILLE, Appl.,

v.

George T. WOOD et al.

(.....Ky.....)

A municipal corporation cannot hold the title as trustee on a dedication of land for a church lot or for religious purposes.

(November 12, 1897.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Mason County refusing to declare void a judicial sale of certain property and to enjoin defendants from interfering therewith. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. N. Kehoe and W. H. Wadsworth for appellant.

Mr. E. L. Worthington, for appellees:

The state or any subdivision thereof may hold title to land in trust for such charitable purposes as are germane to the objects of its creation, such as for schools, poorhouses, hospitals.

The one thing under our system of government that the state and its subdivisions must keep their hands off is religion.

Const. § 5.

A grant, whether by deed, devise, or dedication to a municipal corporation in trust for religious purposes, is void, in so far as the title is attempted to be vested in the municipality.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 578; Jackson, Lynch, v. Hartwell, 8 Johns. 422; Franklin's Estate, 150 Pa. 437.

Property may be effectually dedicated without the legal title to it being transferred to anybody, or any corporation. In such a case it remains in the dedicator and his heirs, in trust for the particular portion of the public for whose use the dedication was made; and they are the proper parties to sue for any diversion of the dedicated property to other purposes.

Baptist Church v. Presbyterian Church, 18 B. Mon. 641.

White, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This action was begun in the circuit court of Mason county by the appellant, the city of Maysville, against the appellees, George T. Wood and others, by which the appellant sought to have a sale by the court's commissioner, made under an ex parte proceeding on behalf of appellees, Woods and others, declared void, and a nullity, and to enjoin said appellees from in any way interfering with a certain lot of ground in the said city of Maysville, and also sought to perpetuate said ground for the purposes for which same had been dedicated years before. The petition states that in the year 1818 one Samuel January owned the land in that part of the city of Maysville, and laid same off into streets and alleys and lots, and sold lots according to said plat, and had same recorded. The place was then called "Limestone," but was not an incorporated town. On this plat there is a lot of ground—the land here in contest—marked "Meeting-House Square." This ground was never sold, and has never been built upon. Some time after the year 1818 the said town of Limestone was incorporated as East Maysville, and in 1858 the trustees of said town of East Maysville by a regular deed of conveyance executed and acknowledged, deeded or undertook to convey to Shackelford, Anderson, and Spencer, as trustees for the Christian or Reform Baptist Church, and to their successors in office, this said ground known as "Meeting-House Square," providing that said trustees should take possession of same and inclose and improve same in conformity to the true spirit and intention of the original donor; the said deed reciting that, as the said Samuel January and his wife and eight out of their nine children were or had been members of the Christian or Reform Baptist Church, NOTE.—For municipal corporation as trustee of charity, see also Dailey v. New Haven (Conn.) 14 L. R. A. 66, and note.

39 L. R. A.

his charity—this lot—should be occupied by the church of which he and family were members. This deed was duly recorded in the clerk's office of Mason County. The petition also alleges that afterwards the said town of East Maysville became a part of the city of Maysville, and was such part at the filing of said petition. The petition states that at the September term, 1891, the appellees Woods, Williams, and Hall, acting as trustees of the religious denomination known as the "Maysville Christian Church," by an ex parte proceeding sought and obtained a decree of the circuit court of Mason county directing a sale of this lot known as "Meeting-House Square," and that under said decree the same was sold, and was bought by appellees Kackley and Trexel; that on the day of sale the said purchasers were notified of the fact that this appellant objected to the sale, and would contest the title of the purchaser; and that, on the report of sale being filed in said ex parte proceeding, this appellant appeared, and offered to file exceptions to the confirmation of the sale, but the court refused to permit same to be filed; and that appellant now brings this suit and asks that said sale be declared void, and that said lot of land be declared a dedication from said Samuel January to the use of the public to be used for the sole and only purpose of erecting thereon a house or houses of religious worship, which the petition alleges was the object and intention of said donor. The circuit court sustained a demurrer to this petition, and appellant, by leave, amended, and in the amendment the only change made is that it is alleged that said lot of land was by the said Samuel January dedicated to the public for use as a place of public resort or meetings of any and all legal character, and that the appellant had expended large sums of money on the streets adjacent to said property in grading and beautifying same. To this amendment, and the petition as amended, the court sustained a demurrer, and, appellant declining to plead further, the petition was dismissed, and from that action of the court this appeal is prosecuted.

The sole question to be determined on this appeal is, Did the petition of appellant, or the same as amended, present a cause of action in appellant? If that question be determined in the affirmative, the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed. In the amended petition filed the only change made from the original is the allegation that the city of Maysville had improved the streets around this "Meeting-House Square," and the allegation that in the dedication made by Samuel January the said donor intended "that said dedication was made for public meeting purposes generally, and intended as a place of public resort, where the public generally had a right to and could meet and transact any and all matters affecting the public generally." This amendment only states the conclusion of the pleader as to the intention of the donor, as he therein pleads the dedication by the express words of the plat, and makes same a part thereof. It seems to us that this conclusion is not warranted by the plat, which is the only evidence of the dedication. On this plat there are three squares set apart called respectively "Public Square," "Seminary Square," and "Meeting-House Square." The two latter are situated adjacent, with an alley only between. The public square was some squares away, and in seems to us that the only meaning that could be attached to the words "Meeting-House Square" is that given to same in the original petition; i. e., "for religious purposes and with a view of making it a place of religious instruction and worship." Now, this being the true meaning and intention of the donor in making the dedication, can the appellant, the city of Maysville, maintain this action? The question is not whether a lot may be dedicated for a church lot or for religious purposes—for it is now well settled that it can,—but whether a lot dedicated for religious or church purposes can be under the control of the municipal government, or whether the municipality can hold the title as trustee for the public so as to maintain an action for its preservation. In 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 573, the principle is stated, thus: "Municipal corporations cannot, for the same reasons applicable to ordinary corporations aggregate, hold lands in trust for any object or matter foreign to the purpose for which they are created, and in which they have no interest." To this principle we assent, and hold that municipal corporations cannot hold land in trust for religious purposes. It is clear that since the establishment of this government it has always been the intention of its citizens to entirely separate church and state. In all our constitutions such an intention is clearly expressed, and in the legal light of this history it is manifest that at no time was any municipal corporation ever organized in this state with any power or authority in matters affecting religious worship. We have said that land may be dedicated for church or religious purposes, but in no event can this dedication be to a municipal corporation as trustee. The duty of the corporation in regard to church property or religious worship is to guarantee the citizen his property or religious rights, and the free enjoyment of same. As the appellant, the city of Maysville, has no right of property in the lot in question,—all of which appears from the petition,—we are of opinion that the court did not err in sustaining the demurrers, and in dismissing the action, and the same is affirmed.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

Sadie J. LUTHER, Pff. in Err.,
v.

J. N. CLAY, Exr., etc., of Polly McWilliams.

(.....Ga.....)

- *1. Where, in the trial of a litigated case, a party procured from the presiding judge a ruling or decision that a given judgment was valid and legal, and, as a result, that case was adjudicated in favor of such party, he was, in subsequent litigation with the same adverse party, estopped from denying the validity or legality of the judgment in question.
2. Where a plaintiff had obtained a judgment, and, after the death of himself and his sole heir, an execution was issued in favor of the latter's legal representative, it was not, at the instance of a claimant of property levied on under such execution, a good ground of objection to its admissibility in evidence on the trial of the claim case that an order directing such execution to issue had been granted without service upon or notice to the defendant in the judgment.
3. An agreed statement of facts, upon which a case was tried by a judge without a jury, though not thereafter absolutely binding and conclusive upon the parties thereto in a jury trial of another case between them involving the same issues, was, in such trial, admissible in evidence at the instance of one against the other, subject to the latter's right to disprove, rebut, or explain any statement therein contained.
4. The rights of a mortgagee, who merely handed the mortgage to the mortgagor at his request, and for the purpose of inspection only, are in no way affected by the latter's secretly and fraudulently substituting in its place a copy thereof, abstracting the original, and forging upon it an entry of satisfaction, by means of which he procured the record of the mortgage to be canceled; it not appearing that the mortgagee, other than as above stated, reposed any trust or confidence in the mortgagor, or delegated to him the performance of any duty with respect to the mortgage, or had any reason to suspect the fraudulent design, or was negligent in not detecting the fraud at the time of its perpetration or thereafter. In such case, even a bona fide purchaser of the mortgaged premises, though he bought in the honest belief that the mortgage had been actually satisfied, took, nevertheless, subject to its lien.

(February 22, 1897.)

ERROR to the Superior Court of Fulton County to review a judgment overruling the claim of plaintiff in error to land upon which an execution had been levied to satisfy a judgment for the foreclosure of a mortgage which had been executed by R. H. Knapp to Robert McWilliams and the right to enforce which had finally vested in plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Candler & Thomson for plaintiff in error.

*Headnotes by CORB, J.

NOTE.—For estoppel to deny forgery, see note to Traders' Nat. Bank v. Rogers (Mass.) 36 L. R. A. 599.

89 L. R. A.

Messrs. Hillyer, Alexander, & Lambdin and J. N. Bateman, for defendant in error:

The claimant is estopped from attacking the judgment in this case. There having been two foreclosures of the mortgage in question, and the execution which issued on the last foreclosure having been previously levied on the property claimed in this case, and upon trial of the claim case thus made on a previous occasion the claimant having had the court to dismiss the levy on the ground that there was outstanding a former valid judgment foreclosing the same mortgage, she is now estopped from denying the validity of said former judgment.

Ga. Civ. Code, § 5150; Davis v. Wakelee, 156 U. S. 680, 89 L. ed. 578; Michels v. Olmstead, 157 U. S. 198, 89 L. ed. 671; Smith v. Sutton, 74 Ga. 531; Alexander v. Suthlive, 3 Ga. 27; Schnieitman v. Noble, 75 Iowa, 120; Knoop v. Kelsey, 102 Mo. 291; Crusselle v. Reinhardt, 68 Ga. 619; Miller v. Wilkins, 79 Ga. 678.

The order of court directing execution to issue in the name of Clay, executor of Mrs. McWilliams, on the judgment rendered during the life of the original mortgagee, her husband, and in his favor (she being his sole heir and the defendant being nonresident), was valid, even though made without notice to the defendant.

Ga. Civ. Code, §§ 3855, 5030; McElthaney v. Crawford, 96 Ga. 174; Towns v. Mathews, 91 Ga. 546; Rogers v. Truett, 73 Ga. 386; Johnson v. Champion, 88 Ga. 527.

The agreed statement of facts used in evidence on the trial of a case between the same parties about the same subject-matter on a former occasion was competent evidence on the trial of this case.

Crusselle v. Reinhardt, 68 Ga. 619; Anderson v. Clark, 70 Ga. 362; Cheney v. Selman, 71 Ga. 384; Miller v. Wilkins, 79 Ga. 678; Hyatt v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 662.

Neither forgery or theft can confer title even on an innocent purchaser.

Cole v. Levi, 44 Ga. 579; Blaisdell v. Bohr, 68 Ga. 56; Kerr, Fraud & Mistake, 315; Atlanta Nat. Bank v. Burke, 81 Ga. 597, 2 L. R. A. 96; Bangor Electric Light & Power Co. v. Robinson, 52 Fed. Rep. 520.

The principle that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third person he must bear the loss who put it in the power of such third person to do the wrong, is not applicable in this case,—because the act of Knapp in stealing the mortgage and forging the cancellation was not the proximate result of the mortgagee's allowing him to look at the mortgage for a few moments. These acts of Knapp were not an abuse of power, but were wholly unwarranted.

King v. Sparks, 77 Ga. 285; Smith v. South Royallton Bank, 32 Vt. 341, 76 Am. Dec. 182; Angle v. Northwestern L. Ins. Co. 92 U. S. 830, 23 L. ed. 556; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Davenport, 97 U. S. 369, 24 L. ed. 1047; Wood v. Steele, 78 U. S. 6 Wall. 80, 18 L. ed. 725.

No question of negligence or estoppel arose against the mortgagee on account of the way in which the mortgagor obtained possession of the mortgage and procured its cancellation on the records.

McGinn v. Tobey, 62 Mich. 252; Chandler v. White, 84 Ill. 435; Bigelow, Estoppel, 5th ed. pp. 657, 658; Meley v. Collins, 41 Cal. 663, 10 Am. Rep. 279.

Registration of a forged instrument or release has no effect on the title; even an innocent purchaser takes the risk of forgeries.

Warvelle, Vendors, p. 536; Haight v. Vallet, 89 Cal. 245; Reck v. Clapp, 98 Pa. 581.

Where a release of a mortgage is a forgery, an innocent purchaser buys subject to the mortgage.

D'Wolf v. Haydn, 24 Ill. 525; Lee v. Clark, 89 Mo. 553; Hagermann v. Sutton, 91 Mo. 533; Isaacs v. Skrainka, 95 Mo. 521; Smith v. Stark, 3 Colo. App. 453.

Cobb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

An execution in favor of J. N. Clay, executor of the will of Polly McWilliams, deceased, issued upon the foreclosure of a mortgage executed by R. H. Knapp to Robert McWilliams, was levied upon a certain described lot in the city of Atlanta, and a claim thereto was interposed by Mrs. Sadie J. Luther. On the trial a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in execution was directed by the court. The claimant made a motion for a new trial upon various grounds, and, the same having been overruled, she filed her bill of exceptions, alleging the refusal to grant a new trial as error.

The facts, as they appear upon the trial of the case, are as follows: On January 2, 1884, R. H. Knapp executed to Robert McWilliams a mortgage on certain land in the city of Atlanta to secure the payment of a note of even date. The mortgage was duly recorded on February 25, 1884, and McWilliams took the same to his home, inclosed in an envelop, and placed "it away among his papers or archives." In March, 1887, Knapp came to the house of McWilliams, who was a very old man (being nearly eighty years of age), and asked him whether the mortgage in question had ever been recorded, and requested that he be allowed to examine it, stating that he had made inquiry or examination at the record office, and had not found it. McWilliams took from his papers the envelop containing the mortgage, and handed it to Knapp, who received it, and was proceeding to examine, to see if the entry of recording was upon it, when McWilliams left Knapp for a few minutes. When he returned, Knapp handed him the envelop, stating that it was all right; and McWilliams, supposing that the mortgage was in it, placed it again among his papers, and did not examine it until some time afterwards, when Knapp had absconded. When McWilliams heard that Knapp had left the state, he went to his papers, to get the mortgage, and in the envelop which had contained the original he found only a copy. The only opportunity for the substitution of this copy was at the time above referred to. Upon investigation, the original mortgage was found on file in the clerk's office in Atlanta, and upon it was an entry of cancellation, purporting to have been signed by McWilliams, which had been entered upon the record on the 30th day of March, 1887. The entry of cancellation upon the mortgage was a forgery. Mrs. Luther purchased a part of the land described in the mortgage to McWilliams for value after the filing of the forged cancellation with the clerk, and before Knapp ran away. The purchase was made without notice of the fraud perpetrated by Knapp in obtaining possession of the mortgage and causing a forged cancellation to be filed and entered on the record, and after an examination of the record, and upon the honest belief that the cancellation was authorized and genuine. On May 2, 1887, Robert McWilliams filed his petition in the ordinary form in the supreme court of Fulton county, praying for the foreclosure of the mortgage. A rule absolute was granted on March 31, 1888. In October, 1888, Robert McWilliams filed another petition for the foreclosure of the same mortgage. The petition, in addition to the usual recitals, contained the following: "Petitioner further shows that on or about the 24th day of March, 1887, the said R. H. Knapp fraudulently got possession of said mortgage, and entered upon its face a cancellation of the same, with authority to the clerk of the superior court of said county to make the record of said mortgage satisfied and settled; the same having been entered of record in Book 1, page 488, of the Records of Mortgages in said clerk's office aforesaid. Petitioner avers that he had no knowledge of said mortgage at the time it was canceled and delivered to the clerk aforesaid, being in the hands of said R. H. Knapp; that the entry of settlement made thereon was not made or signed by petitioner, nor was it made or signed by his authority, or anyone authorized by him, and that said entry of settlement and cancellation on said mortgage is a forgery." Pending the foreclosure an order was passed reciting the death of Robert McWilliams, leaving his wife, Polly McWilliams, as his sole heir; that she had paid all of his debts; and ordering her made party plaintiff in the case. Judgment of foreclosure was entered in the usual form, reciting the death of McWilliams and the making of parties. J. N. Clay, as executor of the will of Polly McWilliams, filed his petition to the superior court of Fulton county, reciting the first foreclosure of the mortgage above referred to, and that on November 7, 1894, after the death of Robert McWilliams, the clerk, by mistake, issued an execution upon such foreclosure. It was alleged that Polly McWilliams was the sole heir of Robert McWilliams, that she paid all of his debts, and that J. H. Clay was her executor. The prayer was that the execution issued in the name of Robert McWilliams be quashed, and that a new execution in favor of Clay, as executor of Polly McWilliams, be issued in lieu thereof. Service of this petition was not made upon the defendant or any other person. On December 21, 1894, in term, an order was passed quashing the execution and granting "leave to the petitioner to sue out a fi. fa. in his name as such executor." An execution was duly issued under this order.

1. The execution issued upon the second foreclosure above referred to was levied upon the land embraced in the mortgage, and claims thereto were filed by Mrs. Luther and other parties to different parcels of the lot. The several claim cases were submitted to the judge without the intervention of a jury. Upon the trial, claimants objected to the introduction of the second foreclosure proceedings, and the execution issued thereon, on the ground that there had been a former foreclosure, and that the plaintiff had no right to proceed under the second foreclosure until the first foreclosure had been set aside. The court sustained the objection, ruled out the evidence, and dismissed the levies. The plaintiff in fi. fa. acquiesced in this decision, which had been made against him on the motion of the claimants, and proceeded to have the execution upon the first foreclosure issued under the circumstances above recited. When this execution was levied upon the mortgaged premises, claims were again interposed by the parties who were purchasers of the property. Upon the trial of the case now under consideration, in which Mrs. Luther was the claimant, objection was made to the introduction of the first foreclosure proceeding under which the levy in question was made, on the following grounds: First, because at the time of the foreclosure the original mortgage was not in the possession of the plaintiff, but was in the hands of the clerk of the court, marked "Canceled;" second, because the judgment of foreclosure was not made at the next term after that at which the rule nisi issued; third, because there was no legal service upon the mortgagor, in that he was not personally served, and there was no service by publication for four months next before the term at which said judgment was rendered. Under the view we take of the case, it is not necessary for these questions to be considered. Whether they would be well taken or not, if taken advantage of at the proper time, this claimant cannot now be heard to attack the regularity or validity of the first foreclosure. When this levy was made under the second foreclosure, it was upon motion of her counsel that such levy was held to be illegal, and dismissed. Having invoked a ruling from the court that the first foreclosure was valid, and this decision having been acquiesced in and acted upon by the party against whom it was made, she cannot be heard to attack the judgment which she obtained, and of which she took the benefit, although it may have been an erroneous one. In the case of Davis v. Wakelee, 156 U. S. 689, 39 L. ed. 584, where a question similar to the one under consideration was before the court, Mr. Justice Brown, in the opinion, says: "It may be laid down as a general proposition that, where a party assumes a certain position in a legal proceeding, and succeeds in maintaining that position, he may not thereafter, simply because his interests have changed, assume a contrary position, especially if it be to the prejudice of the party who has acquiesced in the position formerly taken by him." In the case of Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Howard, 54 U. S. 18 How. 386, 387, 14 L. ed. 169, 170, in delivering the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice Curtis says: "The plaintiff was endeavoring to prove, that the paper declared on bore the corporate seal of the Wilmington & Susquehanna Railroad Company. This being the fact to be proved, evidence that the corporation, through its counsel, had treated the instrument as bearing the corporate seal, and relied upon it as a deed of the corporation, was undoubtedly admissible.

The defendant not only induced the plaintiff to bring this action, but defeated the action in Cecil county court, by asserting and maintaining this paper to be the deed of the company; and this brings the defendant within the principle of the common law, that when a party asserts what he knows is false, or does not know to be true, to another's loss, and his own gain, he is guilty of a fraud; a fraud in fact, if he knows it to be false, fraud in law if he does not know it to be true." We are clearly of the opinion that the defendant cannot be heard to say that what was asserted on a former trial was false, even if the assertion was made by mistake. If it was a mistake, of which there is no evidence, it was one made by the defendant, of which he took the benefit, and the plaintiff the loss, and it is too late to correct it.

2. When the first foreclosure was had, the clerk failed to issue an execution as required by law, and after the death of the plaintiff one was issued in his name. After the claimant had succeeded in obtaining a judgment of the court that the second foreclosure was invalid and the first foreclosure was valid, this execution, issued in the name of the deceased plaintiff, was, upon the ex parte application of the executor of the wife and sole heir of such plaintiff, quashed, and a new execution, in his name as executor, issued. No notice or service of this application was made upon the defendant in the judgment, or any other person. Certainly no one was entitled to notice except the defendant. Ought he to have been served? The issuing of an execution is a mere ministerial act, and, while it is not necessary to decide in this case whether an execution issued upon a judgment in favor of the plaintiff after his death is valid, still, if the legal representative of the owner of the judgment sees proper to have, by an order of court, an execution framed in accordance with the peculiar facts of the case at the time it is issued, we see no reason why notice should be given to the defendant of an intention to apply to the judge for an order to the clerk to do that which it would seem the clerk would have authority to do without such order. In any event, the claimant will not be heard to object to the execution on the ground that it was issued by the order of the judge without notice to the defendant, unless she alleged some valid reason why the judge should not have passed the order. No such reason appears in the present case. Civ. Code, §§ 3854, 3855.

8. When parties to a case agree to submit the same for decision upon an agreed statement of facts, and nothing is said in the agreement to the contrary, each party is absolutely bound and concluded by the statements of fact thus agreed to, so far as the trial in which the stipulation is made is concerned. Where the agreement is not expressly limited to use in the trial in which it is made, it is admissible in evidence as an admission in any other trial or litigation between the same parties, where the same issues are involved; but it is not absolutely binding and conclusive upon the parties. When it is used against such parties in another trial of the same case, or in any other case, either party has the right to attack any statement of fact made therein either by disproving or rebutting the same or explaining it away. If parties enter into an agreed statement as to the facts in a case, and do not desire such statement to be used against them thereafter, they should distinctly stipulate to that effect. There being nothing in the agreed statement of facts which was introduced in this case to indicate that it was only intended to apply to the former litigation, the court did not err in allowing it to be introduced in evidence. Especially would this be no error in the present case, where there was no effort made to attack any statement of fact made therein, and the claimant's case absolutely depended upon facts set forth in the agreement.

4. The controlling question in this case arises out of the assignment of error which complains of the directing of a verdict for the plaintiff in execution. Was this erroneous under the facts as they appear in the record? The contest was between a mortgagee, who was the victim of a theft of the mortgage and a forced cancellation of the same, entered upon the record, and the purchaser, who bought in good faith, believing that the cancellation as it appeared of record was genuine and authorized. That title to property cannot be taken away by theft is a principle well settled. The seller can convey no greater title than he himself possesses. Civ. Code, § 3588; 2 Schouler, Pers. Prop. 3d ed. § 19. It is equally well settled that an owner of property will not be deprived of his right to the same by the commission of a forgery, and this is true even where the claimant under the forged instrument had no notice of the forgery, and honestly believed that it was valid and genuine. Sampeyreac v. United States, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 222-240, 8 L. ed. 665-671; Van Amringe v. Morton, 4 Whart. 382, 34 Am. Dec. 517; D'Wolf v. Hayden, 24 Ill. 525; Arrison v. Harmstead, 2 Pa. 191; Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 492; Gray v. Jones, 14 Fed. Rep. 83; Reck v. Clapp, 98 Pa. 581-586. In the case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Dartmouth, 97 U. S. 872, 24 L. ed. 1049, which was a suit in equity to compel the defendant, a corporation, to replace in the name of the appellants certain shares of capital stock alleged to have belonged to them, and to have been transferred, without their authority, on its books, to other parties, the transfer having been made under a forged power of attorney, Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the court, says: "In many instances they [officers of the corporation] may be misled without any fault of their own, just as the most careful person may sometimes be induced to purchase property from one who has no title, and who may perhaps have acquired its possession by force or larceny. Neither the absence of blame on the part of the officers of the company in allowing an unauthorized transfer of stock, nor the good faith of the purchaser of stolen property, will avail as an answer to the demand of the true owner. The great principle that no one can be deprived of his property without his assent, except by the processes of the law, requires in the cases mentioned that the property wrongfully transferred or stolen should be restored to its rightful owner. The maintenance of that principle is essential to the peace and safety of society, and the insecurity which would follow any departure from it would cause greater injury than any which can fall, in case of unlawful appropriation of property, upon those who have been misled and defrauded."

As the conduct of Knapp included both a theft of a mortgage and a forgery of the cancellation, it appears clearly from the authorities cited that by these wrongful acts on his part McWilliams, the true owner of the mortgage, was not deprived of his right of property therein. But it is contended that McWilliams was negligent in allowing Knapp to have possession of the mortgage, and that by his negligence, together with a failure on his part to examine the envelop after Knapp had returned it to him, he put it in the power of Knapp to perpetrate this fraud upon Mrs. Luther. The doctrine that, where one of two innocent persons must suffer, the loss must fall upon him who has placed it in the power of the wrongdoer to bring about the injury, is invoked for the protection of the claimant in this case. This doctrine is not applicable to cases of this character. Under the facts as they appear in the record, there was no such trust or confidence placed by McWilliams in Knapp in allowing him, in his absence, to have possession of the papers, as would authorize the application of the doctrine above referred to. There is nothing in the evidence to indicate that McWilliams was put upon notice of any fraudulent intent on the part of Knapp. There was no relation, confidential or otherwise, between McWilliams and Knapp, which could mislead anyone into the belief that Knapp was authorized by McWilliams to cancel the mortgage, and have the cancellation entered upon the record. It is simply a case of one person surreptitiously getting into possession of the paper of another, and using it in an unauthorized and unwarranted way, and perpetrating fraud upon the owner of the paper. The fact that another innocent person is also the victim of the fraud is no reason why the owner should be deprived of his property. In no proper sense did the conduct of McWilliams place it in the power of Knapp to commit a fraud upon Mrs. Luther, so as to estop him from enforcing the lien of his mortgage upon the property. Even if the act of McWilliams in allowing Knapp to inspect the mortgage was negligence, it was only negligence in that broad unrestricted sense in which the term is often used, and was not that character of negligence which would be the foundation of an estoppel. Wood v. Steele, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 80, 18 L. ed. 725; King v. Sparks, 77 Ga. 285.

In the case of Bangor Electric Light & Power Co. v. Robinson, 52 Fed. Rep. 520, where two persons, had a safety-deposit box in common, and one of them, without authority, abstracted therefrom a certificate of stock indorsed in blank, belonging to the other, and transferred it to an innocent purchaser for value, where the doctrine above referred to was invoked, Circuit Judge Putnam, in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The contest at bar relates to the mere negligence of the original holder, and how far this may prevent him from reclaiming his property. At first it occurred to the court that, inasmuch as Robinson had seen fit to leave this certificate in such condition as to indicate that somebody was authorized to acquire it and fill in the indorsement, he was barred; but the court is unable to find any authorities sustaining this suggestion, and is compelled to treat this certificate, indorsed in blank and stolen, as it would any other stolen property aside from strictly negotiable securities." In the case of Bazendale v. Bennett, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 525, the defendant gave H. his blank acceptance on a stamped paper, and authorized him to fill in his name as drawer and it was returned to the defendant with the blank unfilled, and was placed by him in an unlocked drawer of his writing table at his chambers, to which his clerk, laundress, and other persons coming there had access. From this place it was lost or stolen, and came into possession of C, who, without authority, filled in the blank with his name; and in this condition the bill came into the hands of the plaintiff, who was a bona fide purchaser for value, without notice of the fraud. The defendant was held not liable on the bill. Bramwell, L. J., in his opinion, says: "But a crime was committed in this case by the stealing of the document, and without that crime the bill could not have been complete, and no one could have been defrauded. Why is not the defendant at liberty to show this? Why is he stopped? What has he said or done contrary to the truth, or which should cause anyone to believe the truth to be other than it is? Is it not a rule that everyone has a right to suppose that a crime will not be committed and to act on that belief? Where is the limit if the defendant is estopped here?"

The defendant here has not voluntarily put into anyone's hands the means, or part of the means, for committing a crime. But it is said that he has done so through negligence. I confess I think he has been negligent; that is to say, I think that if he had had this paper from a third person, as a bailee bound to keep it with ordinary care, he would not have done so. But then this negligence is not the proximate or effective cause of the fraud. A crime was necessary for its completion." In the case of Van Amring v. Morton, 4 Whart. 382, 34 Am. Dec. 517, where it appeared that a deed executed and acknowledged by the grantor with a blank for the grantee's name was kept by the grantor locked in his drawer, and that he trusted his brother with the key, who, being induced by a third person, surreptitiously took out the deed, and filled up the blank, and in this condition a bona fide purchaser for value accepted the deed from the grantee whose name was thus inserted, it was held that the purchaser stood in no better position than the fraudulent holder, and that no title passed. In the case of Arri-son v. Harmstead, 2 Pa. 191, where a conveyance reserving a rent in fee was altered by the insertion of material words after delivery by the agent of the grantor, it was held that the effect of the fraudulent alteration was to avoid the covenants reserving rents, and to preserve the fee simple to the innocent grantee discharged from the covenants in the deed, and that the innocent purchaser from the fraudulent grantor would not be entitled to collect the rents reserved. Rogers, J., in the opinion, says: "It is said that Mrs. Lewis is a bona fide purchaser, without notice, and that the action may be sustained on that ground. But conceding that she is, her situation is no better than the fraudulent grantor's. Although the title of the grantor was, in its inception, good, it became absolutely void by matter ex post facto. At the time of the assignment, the title being avoided, the assignor had nothing to convey; of course nothing passed to the assignee. It may be, and perhaps is, a hard case. Fraud may be committed on an innocent purchaser, who may find it difficult to guard against imposition. This is conceded; but it is far better to encounter this risk, than to give the least countenance to any alteration whatever of a solemn instrument of writing, which would certainly be the result, if the guilty party could escape the consequences of his fraud by a transfer, real or pretended, to a person who might assume the garb of an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration. We cannot lay too many restraints upon trick, artifice, and fraud." This is no doubt a hard case upon Mrs. Luther. To hold that she is protected would be equally hard upon the estate of McWilliams. Under the view we take of the matter, McWilliams was not guilty of such negligence as would deprive him of any of his legal rights. Indeed, he seems to have done no more than an ordinarily prudent person would have done under similar circumstances; and, following the authorities which seem to be conclusive upon the subject, we hold that the purchaser from Knapp, although she purchased in good faith, without notice of the fraud and forged cancellation by him, and in the honest belief that the forged cancellation was valid, took the property subject to the lien of the mortgage.

Judgment affirmed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

John J. CARTER, Appt.,
v.
PRODUCERS' OIL COMPANY, Limited, et al.

(182 Pa. 551.)

A rule of a partnership association excluding the right of a member to purchase additional shares and exercise the rights of a member in respect of them until he shall be re-elected to membership in respect of those shares, is valid under the act of June 26, 1885, providing that interests in such associations shall be personal estate and transferred under such rules and regulations as the associations prescribe.

(October 11, 1897.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Court of Common Pleas for Warren County in favor of defendants in a suit brought to compel defendants to transfer to plaintiff certain stock which he alleged belonged to him. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the lower court, which was as follows:

"I have found as a fact that the plaintiff is the bona fide owner of the stock which he seeks by his bill to have transferred to him. In so doing, I have negatived so much of paragraph c of the defendant's 5th proposition of law as avers that the plaintiff has not overcome the responsive denial of the answer as to the bona fides of his ownership. The proof of ownership offered by the plaintiff consisted of the production of the certificates issued by the Producers' Oil Company, Limited, evidence establishing their genuine character, and the due execution by the holders thereof of the transfers printed on the back of the certificates. To this was added his own testimony that he purchased the shares from the National Transit Company, and paid for the same in cash with his own money, and that no other person had any interest therein. He produced the check by which payment was made, the receipt of the National Transit Company, and other documents corroborating his testimony. This was certainly enough, in the absence of countervailing proof, to establish his unqualified ownership against the general and vague denial of the answer. It was declared in Riegel v. American L. Ins. Co. 153 Pa. 184 (the present chief justice delivering the opinion), that an averment of a fact in an answer which could not, in the nature of the case, be within the personal knowledge of him by whom it is sworn, and which is no more than 'an expression of his strong conviction of its existence, or what he deems an infallible deduction from the facts which were known to him,' is not responsive in the sense that it is evidence in his favor, so as to put the plaintiff upon proof by two witnesses. But it is unnecessary to invoke this principle, for the proof was abundant and practically uncontradicted.

"The proposition, however, raises the question of the good faith of the plaintiff in bringing this suit, and this is a broader question. It is said that he is 'shown to be acting in conspiracy with the Standard Oil Trust, in furtherance of its interests and purposes, and not for the welfare of the defendant.' The findings of fact establish that the plaintiff, in purchasing the stock in question, sought to obtain the control of the company; that his avowed purpose is to change its policy, so as to make it unobjectionable to the Standard Oil Trust, and so that it will be against the wishes and purposes of the other members of the company; also, that the Standard Trust is engaged in the same business as the defendant company, and that, at the time the National Transit Company sold the stock to the plaintiff, its agents received assurances, not amounting to an enforceable contract, that his action would be such as they desired. In my opinion, the motives and intentions of the persons composing the Producers' Oil Company, Limited, in organizing that company, are not material, except so far as they are expressed in the contract which they made with each other. We deal exclusively with the means which they adopted to carry out their purposes, whatever they were. A large amount of testimony was given relating to the preliminary steps looking towards the organization of the company, but, as it failed to show an agreement between the body of subscribers to the capital, we give it no consideration. Its only relevancy, if fully proved, would be to show that the purpose in the minds of the promoters was to deprive the Standard Trust of the Producers' oil, and to furnish a competitive market for the same. These purposes are not unlawful, and, if the means adopted were adequate, might be accomplished. But whether accomplished or not must depend upon the adequacy or inadequacy of the means.

"Nor can I see my way clear to refuse the relief prayed for on the ground that the plaintiff's motives and intentions are at variance with the purpose and wishes of his fellow members. If what he desires and intends to do as a member of the company, controlling a majority in value of interest of its capital, is legally and equitably his right, the court cannot refuse to aid him because it may think he ought not so to act; and, if it is not legally or equitably his right, the power of the court may be invoked to prevent his abuse of his power, but it does not justify refusing him such rights as he clearly has. The action of the court is not invoked by reason of any supposed equity in the plaintiff, but by reason of an alleged deprivation of his legal rights as a member of an association over which the court is given, by express statute, the supervision and control. Nor does the fact, which is apparent, that the policy which the plaintiff desires to adopt is also desirable to the Standard Oil Trust, in my mind furnish a reason for refusing relief, since we are compelled to believe that, although agreeing with that organization in opinion and policy, the plaintiff appears in his own right as a bona fide owner of shares.

NOTE.—As to limited partnerships, see also the three cases immediately preceding this.

As to restrictions by by-laws on the right to transfer shares of a corporation, see New England 89 L. R. A.

Trust Co. v. Abbott (Mass.), 27 L. R. A. 271, and note; Ireland v. Globe Milling & Reduction Co. (R. I.), 29 L. R. A. 429; and Victor G. Bloede Co. v. Bloede (Md.), 33 L. R. A. 107.

"The cases cited for the defendant on this point are clearly distinguishable from the case in hand. Baker's Appeal, 108 Pa. 510, 56 Am. Rep. 231, and Gould v. Head, 41 Fed. Rep. 240, turned upon the fact that the plaintiff was not the real owner of the stock. Kenton v. Union Pass. R. Co. 54 Pa. 452, and Camblos v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 592, were cases in which it was attempted to control the action of a corporation by suits brought in the character of stockholders by persons who had bought stock for the mere purpose of bringing suit in the interest of outsiders. Foll's Appeal, 91 Pa. 484, 36 Am. Rep. 671, was a bill to compel specific performance of a contract to deliver stock in a national bank. The mere right of the plaintiff under his contract furnished no ground for the specific performance sought in equity, but the relief was demanded on the supposed equity arising from the fact that the plaintiff was already the owner of stock which with the stock contracted for would give him control of the bank, and enable him to elect himself and his friends directors and officers. Specific performance was refused, on the ground that the circumstances relied upon raised no equity in the plaintiff. It was said that the bank was a quasi-public corporation, and that it was against public policy that the control should be in the hands of a single individual. Gage v. Fisher, 5 N. D. 297, 31 L. R. A. 557, was similar, but there was only a contract to permit the plaintiff to control the stock without actually buying it. None of the cases cited involved the right of a stockholder to be recognized as such; nor do any of them involve the denial of the ordinary equitable remedies to one standing wholly upon a legal right. On the other hand, the case of Rice v. Rockefeller, 134 N. Y. 174, 17 L. R. A. 287, seems to me fully in point upon the present question; and Camden & A. R. Co. v. Atkins, 37 N. J. Eq. 273, furnishes even a closer analogy. If the plaintiff is the bona fide owner of the interest in the capital of the defendant company which he claims, and is entitled, under the laws and rules of the company, to represent that interest in the meetings of its members, it cannot be that any legal or enforceable equitable right of the company can be infringed by requiring it to recognize his title. If, by his action or attempted action, the rights, legal or equitable, of any other member are infringed, that action may be restrained or controlled. But no other member of the company is before the court as a party in that character. The real contention of the defendants seems to be, not so much that the company will suffer if the relief prayed for be granted to the plaintiff, as that other members in their individual character as producers of oil will be injured; and this is a controversy which we are manifestly unable to determine in this proceeding.

"I turn, therefore, to the question raised upon the undisputed facts by the plaintiff's 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 7th, 8th, and 10th, and the 39 L. R. A.

defendant's 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th, propositions of law. Under the law governing 'partnership associations' formed under the act of June 2, 1874, and its amendments, and the agreement, rules, and regulations governing the Producers' Oil Company, Limited, is a member of that company who purchases additional shares entitled to represent such additional interest in the capital in the meetings of the company, without being elected to membership in respect to such additional interest? The 4th section of the act of June 2, 1874, as amended by the act of 25th of June, 1885, provides as follows: 'Section 1. Interest in such partnership associations shall be personal estate, and may be transferred, given, bequeathed, distributed, sold, or assigned, under such rules and regulations as such partnership associations shall, from time to time, prescribe, by a vote of a majority of the members in number and value of their interests, and in the absence of such rules and regulations the transferee of any interest in any such association shall not be entitled to any participation in the subsequent business of such association, unless elected to membership therein by a vote of a majority of the members in number and value of their interests. And any change of ownership, whether by sale, death, bankruptcy, or otherwise, which occurs in the absence of any rules and regulations of such associations regulating such transfer, and which is not followed by election to membership in such association, shall entitle the owner or transferee only to the value of the interest of the date of acquiring such interest, at a price and upon terms to be mutually agreed upon, and in default of such agreement at a price and upon terms to be fixed by an appraiser to be appointed by the court of common pleas of the proper county, on the petition of either party, which appraisement shall be subject to the approval of said court.' The provisions of this section affecting the status of transferees of interests are only operative in the absence of rules and regulations prescribed by the association by a vote of a majority of the members in number and value of their interests. On June 5, 1894, over a year before the plaintiff purchased any of the shares involved in this controversy, the Producers' Oil Company, Limited, in the manner prescribed by the act, and also in conformity with the provision in the rules governing amendments thereto, adopted the amended rule set forth in the findings of fact. It is conceded that this rule, if valid, is conclusive against the rights claimed by the plaintiff in his bill. But it is contended that the rule is invalid, because no authority to make such a rule is given by the statute, because it is against the terms of the statute, and because it is in restraint of trade, in derogation of the rights of the members, and unreasonable in its provisions.

"The provision forbidding sales of shares except to a particular class of persons, and that requiring a member purchasing additional shares to be elected to membership in respect to such shares, are independent; either may stand though the other fall. The plaintiff, although he had never been lawfully expelled from membership in the P. O. A., was not at the time he purchased this stock qualified for membership therein by reason of his business associations with the Standard Oil Trust. But the first clause of this rule deals with the right of a member to sell, and not to buy. No member of the company sold his stock to the plaintiff; nor are we able to determine whether or not the persons to whom they did sell were or were not qualified under this clause. We pass it by, therefore, to consider the last paragraph of the rule, which specifically covers the case in hand. Many cases are cited for the plaintiff to show that the right of a corporation to make by-laws for the regulation or transfers of stock does not include the right to place restrictions upon transfers. For the protection of the corporation, its stockholders and creditors, it may prescribe, by by-laws, the mode of transfer; but it cannot, without express authority in the charter, impose restrictions upon the free alienability of its shares, which is an incident of such property. The argument, however, fails when it is attempted to apply it to a 'partnership association;' for it is quite clear that the rules and regulations authorized by the act of 1885 are intended to govern more than the mere mode of transferring shares, and to embrace the status of a transferee in respect to the association. The language is: 'Interests may be transferred, given, bequeathed, distributed, sold, or assigned under such rules and regulations as such partnership association shall from time to time prescribe.' And as the act prescribes, not the manner of registering transfers, but the status of a transferee who has become the owner of an interest in the capital by gift, bequest, distribution, sale, assignment, or other mode of transfer, only in the absence of rules and regulations, it is necessarily implied that these rules and regulations, which are to take the place of the statutory provisions, may cover the same subject; and this is precisely what the first sentence of this section declares. If the association may not make rules and regulations covering the status of transferees as well as the manner of transfer, it follows that, in every association having rules and regulations governing the formal transfer of interests, any transferee becomes immediately a member without election, for the statute operates only in the absence of rules and regulations. Every association, if this be a correct construction of the law, will be required to choose between doing business without any rules at all governing the transfer of shares and the loss of all control over the membership through the adoption of such rules.

"It is quite too clear for argument that the power of partnership associations under the statute to make rules and regulations extends to the general subject of the status of transferees, and the manner in which they may become members, as well as to the mode of transfer; and the question is therefore narrowed to this: Is the provision requiring members of the company purchasing additional shares to be re-elected in respect thereto within this general power, or is it void as against the spirit and intention of the law? Whether the partnership association ought to be classified by the professor of legal science as a species of the genus corporation, or the genus partnership, or whether it should be set apart as a new genus, seems to me unimportant. If a corporation, it is so peculiar in its features that the general law of corporations cannot be applied to it without important modifications; if a partnership, it so differs from the common type that the general law of partnerships is but slightly applicable. Both the law of corporations and the law of partnerships are to be resorted to in the absence of statutory regulations, the choice being determined by the nature of the feature under consideration. In the present case we derive little assistance from either. The general rule of corporations invoked by the plaintiff has been laid down to meet the conditions existing in corporations in which the ownership of stock carries with it ipso facto membership in the corporate body. If there are corporations in which the conditions are different, it is manifest that the rule is inapplicable to the extent of the difference.

"The delectus personarum, as it exists in partnerships, grows out of the contract of the partners to be associated with each other, and with no others. The reason for it is found in the right of each partner to act as agent for all the others, the liability of each for the partnership obligations, and the right of each to contribution from the others. None of these conditions exist in partnership associations. The case of a transfer of interest from one partner to another is not analogous to the case in hand, for the dissolution is caused in such a case, not by the addition to the interest of one of the partners, which adds nothing to his power, but by the dropping out of the assigning partner, whose continuance is necessary to the partnership existence. A partnership association differs from the common type of partnerships in that the members vote and do not act with the powers of partners, and in that they are subjected to no joint liability. It differs from the common type of corporations in that the members have a right to admit or refuse membership in the company to the transferee of the interest, as well as in some other particulars. In determining whether the act of 1885 should be strictly construed against the power of the association to limit the right of one of its members to acquire control by increasing his interest, we ought to look to the spirit and intention of the act. The peculiar form of delectus personarum, so carefully guarded in partnership associations, cannot be based upon the same consideration which gives rise to the common form in partnerships, for there is no mutual agency, no joint liability. Looking at the general scheme of the act, it seems apparent that it was intended to enable persons desiring to combine their capital in any business enterprise to do so without incurring, on the one hand, the general liability of partners, or, on the other, the risk of having the business taken out of the control of those in whom it was originally placed without their consent, which exists in ordinary corporations. If this be true, it is manifest that transfers of interests from one member to another are within the mischief sought to be prevented, for the member's vote by value of interest as well as number upon most important questions.

"If the case of a member transferee is not included within the provisions of the statute, it is not because the letter of the law does not include it, but because the court is moved by the context to limit its literal meaning. 'Interests,' the act declares, without indicating any exception, 'may be transferred . . . under such rules and regulations as such partnership association shall from time to time prescribe,' etc. 'Any change of ownership which occurs in the absence of any rules and regulations of such associations regulating such transfer . . . shall entitle the owner or transferee,' etc. But the term 'election to membership' is not happily chosen to express the consent of the members to the acquisition of a greater interest by one of their number. One who is already a member cannot be, in any proper sense of the term, elected to membership. The broad and general terms used in the act, together with the use of this phrase, inappropriate to the case of transfer between members, indicate that the particular case of such transfer was not present in the legislative mind. Had it been, the general terms would have been modified if it were intended to exclude it, and some modification of the term 'elected to membership' would have been made had the intention been specifically to include a transfer to one already a member. We can only ascertain the legislative will in a particular case by determining whether or not it falls within the general intention expressed in the law. And, while my mind inclines to the belief that such a case was not within the intention of the legislature, it is not without much doubt and some hesitation that I so decide. But it seems clear to me that the power of the association to regulate the status of transferees of interests in capital is not limited by the regulations prescribed by the act. In conferring upon the association authority to legislate for itself, it is implied that it may make rules which differ from those prescribed in the act. If the case of a transfer to one already in the membership be not included in the terms of the act, it is, at most, an omitted case, which the association itself may provide for. The rule adopted by the defendant is not against the terms of the act, for, at best, the act does not cover it at all. Nor is it unreasonable, for it is in line and harmony with the general spirit and intention of the act. Nor does it infringe any right of the members, for the owners of the shares may still freely sell them to whom they please, the only difference being that a sale to a member is put in the same category as a sale to other persons. No member can claim a vested right to a greater voting power than was given him by the articles of association. The full value of the interest is guaranteed to the purchaser in any event.

"Thus far we have considered the rules and regulations of the defendant as mere by-laws, imposed by a majority under the authority of the statute. The original rules were, however, agreed to and signed by all the members at the time the company was organized, and as part of its organization. They have therefore the effect of articles of association additional to the certificate filed as required by law. The plaintiff had notice of them, both actual and constructive. He is therefore bound by this agreement, and one of its provisions is that it may be altered by a vote of the majority of the members in number and value of their interests. It was so altered long prior to his purchase of the shares in question, no vote being against it except his own. Conceding that the authority thus given to alter cannot be carried so far as to permit a change in the general scope of the instrument; that no change can be made against the mandate of positive law, or contrary to the certificate of association, or which is unreasonable or oppressive,—still, I think, this alteration is not an undue exercise of the power, for the same reasons which have been already adverted to, and which, considered in this aspect, are still more forcible and cogent.

"Being of opinion that the last clause of rule 25, which excludes the plaintiff from participation in the business and profits of the defendant in respect to the shares purchased by him until he shall be elected to membership in respect to such shares by the majority of the members in number and value of their interests, is valid, it follows that he is not entitled to the relief prayed for in his bill. His counsel in the argument distinctly disclaimed any desire to have the stock transferred upon the books of the company unless such transfer carried with it the right to vote and participate in the profits; and hence we do not consider the question whether so much of the relief prayed for might not properly be granted on the facts disclosed.

"It remains to consider the case for affirmative relief presented by the defendants upon their cross bill. At the time the plaintiff presented the certificates for 18,013 shares to the secretary of the company, and had new certificates issued to himself for the same, he was not in fact the owner of the interest represented by the certificates. He, in effect, represented himself to be owner by presenting them indorsed as they were in the usual form, and demanding the transfer to himself. But he is not the owner of the same shares by a subsequent purchase. And the National Transit Company, which was at the time owner, is clearly estopped by its own acts from asserting the ownership as against the defendant. We are required to note a difference here between partnership associations and ordinary corporations. In the latter the transfer of stock on the books invests the transferee with the full rights of a stockholder, including the right to vote the stock and to receive the dividends. In the former this right does not follow the transfer on the books, which is a merely ministerial act of an officer or clerk, but is obtained only by election to membership by the members of the company. We have held in the principal case that the plaintiff cannot participate in the business or profits of the defendant company as to purchased stock without re-election, and it follows that no clerk or officer can confer that right upon him by permitting a transfer upon the books. Apart from membership, and pending the appraisal of the value of the interest, or the sale of it to another who may be acceptable to the remaining members, it may be important, and it seems to me it is quite proper, that the interest should stand on the books of the company in the name of the true owner, both for its protection and his own. If we now grant the relief prayed for in the cross bill, we shall restore the interest owned by the plaintiff on the books of the company to the names of the original members, and invest them with an apparent right to dividends and participation in the business to which they are not entitled, and which might be an injury to all concerned. The books of the company defendant do not show that the plaintiff is entitled to vote or participate in profits in respect to these shares, and it can therefore suffer no injury from an unauthorized transfer. Let a decree be drawn dismissing both the plaintiff's bill and the cross bill filed by the defendant, at the costs of the plaintiff; and, at the time of settling the decree, the court will hear either party upon any exceptions to the findings of fact or of law which they may file, respectively, within ten days after notice of the filing of this opinion."

Messrs. Knox & Reed, Hinckley & Rice, Weil & Thorp, and Roberts & Carter, for appellant:

The Producers' Oil Company, Limited, has no power or authority to adopt by-laws.

If such corporations are not quasi corporations, but unincorporated associations, with all the powers and liabilities of general partnerships, except as modified by statute or the articles of association, they then have no power to adopt by-laws unless given by statute or by the articles of association. The latter are silent on the subject, and no statute gave such authority until the act of June 9, 1895.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, N. S. p. 1060; Livingston v. Lynch, 4 Johns. Ch. 578; Thomas v. Ellmaker, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 98; Niblack, Mut. Ben. Soc. § 16; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 491.

If such associations are quasi corporations, with all the powers incidental thereto, except as modified by statute or the articles of association, then they have the power to adopt by-laws, and of course are governed by the laws relating to corporations with reference to such by-laws, which laws declare this by-law to be void.

These associations are quasi corporations.

Oak Ridge Coal Co. v. Rogers, 108 Pa. 147; Stevens v. Philadelphia Ball-Club, 142 Pa. 52, 11 L. R. A. 860; Patterson v. Tidewater Pipe Co. 12 W. N. C. 452; Hill v. Steller, 127 Pa. 161; Whitney v. Backus, 146 Pa. 29; Brier Hill Coal & I. Co. v. Atlas Works, 146 Pa. 290; Laftin & R. Powder Co. v. Steyler, 146 Pa. 484, 14 L. R. A. 690; Billington v. Gautier Steel Co. 19 W. N. C. 839; Com. v. Sandy Lick Gas, Coal, & Coke Co. 16 Phila. 599.

Associations with the powers of the Producers' Oil Company, Limited, are held to be corporations by the Federal Supreme Court.

Liverpool & L. Life & F. Ins. Co. v. Oliver, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 566, 19 L. ed. 1029.

As corporations, whether quasi or in fact, no good reason can be shown why they should not be governed by the analogies of corporation law, by whatever name the association may be called.

Waterbury v. Merchants' Union Exp. Co. 50 Barb. 157; Rice v. Rockefeller, 134 N. Y. 174, 17 L. R. A. 237.

No such by-law can be adopted by any corporation without express authority of the clearest and most unequivocal kind, and such authority must be contained in the charter or the statute.
89 L. R. A.

Re Klaus, 67 Wis. 401; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 408; Bank of Attica v. Manufacturers' & T. Bank, 20 N. Y. 501; Brinkerhoff-Farris Trust & Sav. Co. v. Home Lumber Co. 118 Mo. 447.

There is a distinction between "by-laws" and "rules and regulations" recognized by all law-writers. By-laws are intended to control the action of the corporation. "Rules and regulations" are intended to control the conduct of third persons dealing with the corporation.

Waterman, Corp. § 77; 1 Morawetz, Corp. § 501; Boisot, By-Laws of Priv. Corp. § 5; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 937; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 705.

The words of both the act of 1874 and 1885 apply, not to restrictions upon transfer, but to the formal requisites to make a transfer effectual, to the formalities of transfer.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 64, citing Chouteau Spring Co. v. Harris, 20 Mo. 882; Peckheimer v. National Exch. Bank, 79 Va. 80; Johnston v. Laftin, 108 U. S. 800, 26 L. ed. 582; Moore v. Bank of Commerce, 52 Mo. 377; Com. v. Gill, 8 Whart. 228; Victor G. Bloede Co. v. Bloede, 84 Md. 129, 83 L. R. A. 107; Driscoll v. West, B. & O. Mfg. Co. 4 Jones & S. 488, 59 N. Y. 96; Bank of Atchison County v. Durfee, 118 Mo. 481.

Only one restriction is anywhere provided for by the act, that is, election to membership of transferees not already members, in the absence of rules and regulations doing away with such election, and therefore no other restriction can be added. By implication all other restrictions are excluded.

Coast-Line R. Co. v. Savannah, 80 Fed. Rep. 649; Diligent Fire Co. v. Com. 75 Pa. 291; Raynor v. Beatty, 9 W. N. C. 201.

Having authorized the adoption of rules and regulations for some purposes, power to adopt them for other purposes is excluded.

Ang. & A. Corp. § 875; Child v. Hudson Bay Co. 2 P. Wms. 207; Ireland v. Globe Milling & Reduction Co. 19 R. I. —, 29 L. R. A. 429.

The alleged by-law or rule and regulation is void, because not within the scope of subjects to be controlled by by-laws or rules or regulations.

Taylor, Priv. Corp. § 7; 1 Bl. Com. 475; Waterman, Corp. §§ 72, 88; Ang. & A. Corp. §§ 325, 345; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 491; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 700A; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 985; 2 Kyd, Corp. 122; Taylor v. Griswold, 14 N. J. L. 227, 27 Am. Dec. 83.

The right to vote upon stock cannot be denied or abridged because of alleged wrongful motives influencing the holder in buying and holding the stock.

1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 618, citing Pender v. Lushington, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 70; Re Stranton, Iron & S. Co. L. R. 16 Eq. 859; People, Barker, v. Kip, 4 Cow. 388, note; State v. Smith, 48 Vt. 290; Moffatt v. Farquhar, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 591; Camden & A. R. Co. v. Elkins, 37 N. J. Eq. 273; Rice v. Rockefeller, 134 N. Y. 174, 17 L. R. A. 237; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. New York & N. R. Co. 150 N. Y. 410, 34 L. R. A. 76.

Messrs. Watson & McCleave and Samuel S. Mehard, for appellees:

The plaintiff cannot extend his membership in the defendant company from the one three-hundredth part to over a majority of its capital, without a novation of the contract under which the company was formed, and this can be effected only by the mutual consent of the parties.

The defendant company was formed by the contract of its members.

The relation of members in such an association results entirely from the contract entered into by them in forming the company, whether it be viewed from the standpoint of a partnership or from that of a corporation.

Lindley, Partn. *1; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 1st ed. §§ 2, 3, 12, 27-31, 126-135.

The contract whereby the defendant company was formed cannot be changed save by the mutual consent of the parties.

Stone v. Miller, 16 Pa. 450; Potter v. McCoy, 26 Pa. 458; Hartley v. Kirlin, 45 Pa. 49; Kemmerer's Appeal, 102 Pa. 558; Walstrom v. Hopkins, 103 Pa. 118; 1 Parsons, Contr. *220; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 1st ed. § 321.

The contention of the plaintiff involves a material change in the contract under which the defendant company was formed.

The statutes under which the defendant company was organized do not involve consent to an extension of membership without further action of the parties.

Eliot v. Himrod, 108 Pa. 569.

Words are generally to be understood in their usual and most known signification; not so much regarding the propriety of grammar, as their general and popular use.

Bl. Com. *59; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 4; Black, Interpretation of Laws, 35; Bradbury v. Wagenhorst, 54 Pa. 180; Allegheny County v. Gibson, 90 Pa. 897, 35 Am. Rep. 670; Pittsburgh v. Kalchthaler, 114 Pa. 547.

A construction which would leave without effect any part of the language of the act is a most improbable one.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, 23; Com. v. Shopp, 1 Woodw. Dec. 128; Packer v. Sunbury & E. R. Co. 19 Pa. 211; Howard Assn.'s Appeal, 70 Pa. 344.

The spirit and reason of the statutes likewise forbid an extension of plaintiff's membership without the consent of his fellows.

1 Bl. Com. *61.

If the meaning of the statute is doubtful as to rule governing transfers to members, the construction must follow the common law, which requires the express consent of all the partners to an enlargement of a partner's membership.

Black, Interpretation of Laws, 110; Arthur v. Bokenham, 11 Mod. 148; Doner v. Stauffer, 1 Penr. & W. 198, 21 Am. Rep. 370; Baker's Appeal, 21 Pa. 76; Cooper's Appeal, 26 Pa. 262; Vandike's Appeal, 57 Pa. 9; Parsons, Partn. §§ 106, 108; Cochran v. Perry, 8 Watts & S. 262.

The rules of the common law have been applied to partnership associations formed under the act in question, except where expressly changed by the provisions of the act by this court in numerous cases.

39 L. R. A.

Maloney v. Bruce, 94 Pa. 249; Hill v. Stetler, 127 Pa. 145; Vanhorn v. Corcoran, 127 Pa. 255, 4 L. R. A. 886; Lennig v. Penn Morocco Co. 16 W. N. C. 114; Crowther v. Upland Industrial Co-Op. Assn. 1 Del. Co. Rep. 264; Small's Estate, 151 Pa. 5; Eliot v. Himrod, 108 Pa. 569; Ames v. Downing, 1 Bradf. 321; Jaffe v. Krum, 88 Mo. 669; Allen v. Long, 80 Tex. 261; Imperial Refining Co. v. Wyman, 38 Fed. Rep. 574, 3 L. R. A. 508; Carnegie v. Hulbert, 10 U. S. App. 454, 58 Fed. Rep. 10, 8 C. C. A. 391; Chapman v. Barney, 129 U. S. 682, 32 L. ed. 801; Robbins v. Butler, 24 Ill. 387; Dennis v. Kennedy, 19 Barb. 517; Taft v. Ward, 106 Mass. 518.

The rule was authorized by the statute.

Lafin & R. Powder Co. v. Steytler, 146 Pa. 484, 14 L. R. A. 690; Ang. & A. Corp. 11th ed. § 342.

The purpose of the plaintiff to gain control of the defendant company, and to so manage its affairs as to supply the Producers' oil to the Standard Oil Company is wrongful, and aid will not be given by a court of equity to enable him to carry it out.

Forrest v. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. 4 De G. F. & J. 126; Rice v. Rockefeller, 134 N. Y. 174, 17 L. R. A. 287; Foll's Appeal, 91 Pa. 484, 36 Am. Rep. 671.

McCullum, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We think the court below entered the proper decree in this case. The plaintiff filed his bill to compel the defendant company to concede to him the rights of a member as to shares of which he was merely a transferee. The shares so held by him, together with the shares he subscribed for, represented a clear majority of the capital of the company. On payment of his subscription in accordance with its terms, he was duly elected to membership in the company, and he then received from it a certificate for 800 shares of its capital, of the par value of $10 each, that being the number of shares for which he had subscribed. Afterwards, and prior to the institution of this suit, he purchased from the National Transit Company 29,764 shares, and from other persons 181 shares, making in all 29,875 shares in addition to his original 800 shares. The shares thus purchased by him were shares which members of the defendant company had sold, and which the parties from whom he had purchased had bought. The National Transit Company was then one of the companies affiliated with the Standard Oil Company and controlled by what is known as the "Standard Oil Trust," in which the plaintiff was a shareholder at the time of his purchase. His avowed purpose in making the purchases mentioned was to obtain control of the defendant company, and change its policy from what he characterized as "gad fly" competition with the Standard to such competition as he believed would be unobjectionable to it. There is reason to believe that he could not have obtained the stock but for the assurance that he would use the power he supposed it would give him to accomplish his declared purpose. While it is probable the accomplishment of his purpose would be advantageous to him, it is very clear that the other members of the defendant company regarded his scheme as fatal, if carried out, to the principal object intended to be achieved by the organization of the company, and as destructive of their interests in it. The principal and controlling question raised by the bill and answer is whether the plaintiff is entitled, by reason of his election to membership in the defendant company, on payment of his subscription, to have transferred to him on the books of the company and to vote the shares purchased as above stated. The plaintiff contends that he is, and the defendant company contends that he is not. The arguments in support of and against their respective contentions are exhaustive and able, but an extended review of them is not deemed essential to a proper determination of the question we have to consider.

It is conceded that the plaintiff has no right to vote the shares he purchased as above stated if the rule of June 5, 1894, is valid. It appears from the tenth finding of fact that the rule was adopted by the vote of a majority in number and value of interests of the members of the defendant company. To determine whether it was in the power of the company to establish the rule, we must look to the statutes under which it was organized. As bearing on this question it is sufficient to refer to the act of June 25, 1885 (Pub. Laws, 182), which is amendatory of the 4th section of the act of June 2, 1874 (Pub. Laws, 271). It is as follows: "Interests in such partnership associations shall be personal estate, and may be transferred, given, bequeathed, distributed, sold, or assigned under such rules and regulations as such partnership associations shall from time to time prescribe by a vote of the majority of the members in number and value of their interests; and in the absence of such rules and regulations the transferee of any interest in any such association shall not be entitled to any participation in the subsequent business of such association, unless elected to membership therein by a vote of a majority of the members in number and value of their interests. And any change of ownership, whether by sale, death, bankruptcy, or otherwise, which occurs in the absence of any rules and regulations of such associations regulating such transfer, and which is not followed by election to membership in such association, shall entitle the owner or transferee only to the value of the interest so acquired at the date of acquiring such interest, at a price and upon terms to be mutually agreed upon, and in default of such agreement, at a price and upon terms to be fixed by an appraiser to be appointed by the court of common pleas of the proper county, on the petition of either party, which appraisal shall be subject to the approval of said court." It will be observed that the statute makes no distinction between a transferee who is a member of the partnership association and a transferee who is not a member of it. The language of the statute fairly excludes such distinction, and there is nothing in the articles of association which warrants it. It is a distinction which, if made, would enable a member of the association to obtain a controlling interest in it by a purchase of a sufficient number of the shares to defeat the controlling purpose of its organization, and to impair, if not absolutely destroy, the interests of the other members. If the legislature had intended to make this distinction, it could and presumably would have done so in a few words. The absence of anything in the statute indicative of a purpose to make it tends to confirm the view that members who purchase shares sustain the same relation to them as purchasers who are not members. Of what avail is it to deny to a stranger who buys shares of the capital of the association the right to vote them without its consent, manifested by his election to membership therein, while a member of the association who desires to obtain control of it, to defeat the purpose for which it was organized, and to change its policy, in the interest of a rival company, is allowed to vote without its consent the shares he has purchased? It seems to us that a construction of the statute which admits of such results is opposed to the spirit as well as the letter of it, and that so much of the rule of June 5, 1894, as puts the member who purchases shares on the same footing with respect to them as the strangers who purchase shares is in clear accord with and authorized by it. We cannot assent to the plaintiff's claim that the defendant company is a corporation, and restricted in the adoption of by-laws, rules, and regulations for its government to such as it is within the power of the latter to prescribe. It may be conceded that the defendant company has some of the qualities of a corporation, but it is nevertheless a partnership association, governed by the statutes and articles under which it was organized, and the rules and regulations it may prescribe in execution of the powers with which the statutes have invested it. We concur in, and need not add anything to, what the learned judge of the court below has so well said on this point, and in respect to the agreement or understanding between the parties when the company was organized. In accordance with the views expressed in this opinion, we overrule the specifications of error.

39 L. R. A.

Decree affirmed and appeal dismissed, at the cost of the appellant.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

H. M. BENTON et al., Respts.,
v.
Philip A. JOHNCOX et al., Appts.
(17 Wash. 277.)

1. The common-law rights of riparian proprietors are incident to the estate of settlers upon public lands who acquire title from the government as against subsequent appropriators of the waters.
2. The riparian rights of a patentee of the government attach by relation at the very inception of his title, and will be protected as against subsequent appropriation of the water naturally flowing over the land.
3. Existing riparian rights are not affected by Laws 1873, p. 520, regulating irrigation and water rights.
4. The doctrine of appropriation of water applies only to public lands, and not to lands which have become private property.
5. The common-law doctrine of riparian rights is not inapplicable to an arid region in which irrigation is necessary to make the land productive.

(July 2, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Yakima County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to enjoin defendants from interfering with plaintiffs' alleged rights in a stream flowing through their property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James B. Reavis and Ira P. Englehart, for appellants:

This case is one of first impression in the appellate court.

In Thorpe v. Tenem Ditch Co. 1 Wash. 566, the court says: "It is the opinion of the court that the prior appropriator of the flow of any water over the public lands of the United States has a vested right therein."

In Ellis v. Pomeroy Improv. Co. 1 Wash. 572, it was there decided: "Watercourses on the public lands of the United States are subject to appropriation by use in accordance with local customs and laws; and vested rights so acquired cannot be divested by relation back of a patent granted."

In Geddis v. Parrish, 1 Wash. 587, it was held: "Where one has appropriated the waters of a stream flowing across public lands, by erecting on his own land a ditch, one acquiring title from the United States takes subject to such appropriation."

Cook v. Hewitt, 4 Wash. 749, and Rigney v. Tacoma Light & W. Co. 9 Wash. 576, 26 L. R. A. 425, are not from the arid district.

In Isaacs v. Barber, 10 Wash. 124, 30 L. R. A. 665, it was held that "the right to prior appropriation of water upon the public domain for mining and other beneficial purposes has been established by a custom so universal that courts must take judicial notice thereof."

NOTE.—For rights of prior appropriators of water as affecting the subject of riparian rights, see Isaacs v. Barber (Wash.) 30 L. R. A. 665, and note.

89 L. R. A.

The common-law right to running water is that every proprietor of lands on the banks of a river has naturally an equal right to the use of the water which flows in the stream adjacent to his lands, as it was wont to run (currere solebat) without diminution or alteration.

3 Kent, Com. *489; M'Calmont v. Whitaker, 8 Rawle, 84, 23 Am. Dec. 102; Brown v. Bush, 45 Pa. 66; Van Hoesen v. Coventry, 10 Barb. 518; Moffett v. Brewer, 1 G. Greene, 848; Tillotson v. Smith, 32 N. H. 94, 64 Am. Dec. 355; Bealey v. Shaw, 6 East, 208; Davis v. Getchell, 50 Me. 602, 79 Am. Dec. 636.

But in England and in all the older states irrigation was unknown as a reasonable use of running water.

Angell, Watercourses, 7th ed. § 120.

In Evans v. Merriweather, 4 Ill. 496, 38 Am. Dec. 106, the court says irrigation is by no means essential, and cannot therefore be considered a natural want of man.

The use of water from the lands and running streams by miners and irrigators grew into customary law without legislation, either congressional or local, and valuable properties were created before the act of 1866, the substantial provisions of which act have been placed in the Revised Statutes of the United States as § 2339.

Atchison v. Peterson, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 507, 22 L. ed. 414; Basey v. Gallagher, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 670, 22 L. ed. 452; Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S. 762, 24 L. ed. 813; Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S. 453, 25 L. ed. 240; Broder v. Natoma Water & Min. Co. 101 U. S. 274, 25 L. ed. 790.

This act of Congress merely confirmed and established the customary local law.

The common-law doctrine of riparian rights, that every riparian owner is entitled to the natural flow of the stream through his land as it is wont to run, is not applicable to the streams in Yakima and Kittitas counties, but rights should be determined by the doctrine of prior appropriations.

The common law was made for man, not man for the common law.

The colonists brought with them the common law of England so far as it was applicable to their new conditions.

The common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States and the organic act and laws of Washington territory, shall be the rule of decision in all the courts of this territory.

The question whether the use of water in any particular locality is necessary to man's existence is a question of fact, and not of law.

Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. 142.

Much of the confusion and uncertainty existing on the water question arises from a failure to distinguish what is law and what is fact in the application of the common law.

Vansickle v. Haines, 7 Nev. 249; Luz v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255; Com. v. Knowlton, 2 Mass. 534; People, Loomis, v. Canal Appraisers, 33 N. Y. 482.

The common-law doctrine of riparian rights is unsuited to the condition of our state, and this case should have been determined by the application of the principle of prior appropriation.

Reno Smelting, M. & Reduction Works v. Stevenson, 20 Nev. 269, 4 L. R. A. 60; Drake v. Earhart, 2 Idaho, 716; Stowell v. Johnson, 7 Utah, 215; Moyer v. Preston (Wyo.) 44 Pac. 845; Clough v. Wing (Ariz.) 17 Pac. 458; Trambley v. Luteran, 6 N. M. 15; Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, § 106.

Legislation confirms the custom of appropriation, and abrogates riparian rights in Yakima county.

Laws 1873, p. 520; Laws 1895-96, 508; Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, §§ 106-108, 113.

Messrs. D. J. Crowley and Whitson & Parker, for respondents:

Under the common-law rule the riparian owner might make reasonable use of flowing water for the purpose of irrigation.

Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, §§ 150, 151, 153, 155, 157; Luz v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255; Jones v. Adams, 19 Nev. 78; Vansickle v. Haines, 7 Nev. 286; Union Mill & Min. Co. v. Ferris, 2 Sawy. 199; Washb. Easements & Servitudes, 2d ed. p. 240; Elliot v. Fitchburg R. Co. 10 Cush. 194, 57 Am. Dec. 85; Swift v. Goodrich, 70 Cal. 108. See also Blanchard v. Baker, 8 Me. 253, 23 Am. Dec. 504; Gillett v. Johnson, 80 Conn. 180; Farrell v. Richards, 80 N. J. Eq. 511; Tolle v. Correth, 31 Tex. 362, 98 Am. Dec. 540; Stanford v. Felt, 71 Cal. 249; Gould v. Stafford, 77 Cal. 66; Rhodes v. Whitehead, 27 Tex. 304, 84 Am. Dec. 681; Anaheim Water Co. v. Semitropic Water Co. (Cal.) 30 Pac. 623.

Water for irrigation in arid countries is a natural want.

Evans v. Merriweather, 4 Ill. 492, 38 Am. Dec. 106; Kinney, Irrigation, §§ 157, 158.

The right of appropriation exists so long as the lands are the public lands of the United States; whenever the government parts with its title it grants to its patentee, as an incident, any water flowing over it which had not been appropriated prior to the inception of his title.

Basey v. Gallagher, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 670, 22 L. ed. 452; Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 541, 33 L. ed. 761; Union Mill & Min. Co. v. Ferris, 2 Sawy. 176; Union Mill & Min. Co. v. Dangberg, 2 Sawy. 451.

The history of legislation and constitutional enactment in this state has conclusively recognized the riparian doctrine.

Wash. Const. art. 21; Acts 1889-90, p. 719, §§ 44, 46, 48, 57; 1 Hill's Code, §§ 1761-1763, 1765, 1774, 1787; Thorpe v. Tenem Ditch Co. 1 Wash. 566; Isaacs v. Barber, 10 Wash. 133, 80 L. R. A. 665; Crook v. Hewitt, 4 Wash. 749; Rigney v. Tacoma Light & W. Co. 9 Wash. 576, 26 L. R. A. 425.

No court where the other view has been taken has ever answered satisfactorily the comprehensive and able arguments contained in Vansickle v. Haines, 7 Nev. 249.

See also Luz v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255; Kinney, Irrigation, §§ 191, 208; Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, 145, 150, 158; Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. 136; Lehigh Co. v. Independent Ditch Co. 8 Cal. 323; Cole v. Logan, 24 Or. 304.

The doctrine of appropriation applies only to public lands.

Gould, Waters, § 240; Black's Pomeroy, 39 L. R. A.

Water Rights, § 30; Curtis v. LaGrande Hydraulic Water Co. 20 Or. 84, 10 L. R. A. 484.

When a patent issues the title relates back to the initiatory act, viz., the date of settlement.

Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 541, 33 L. ed. 761; Kinney, Irrigation, § 210; Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 837, 23 L. ed. 426; Stark v. Starr, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 418, 18 L. ed. 929; Union Mill & Min. Co. v. Dangberg, 2 Sawy. 450; Larsen v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 19 Or. 240; Cole v. Logan, 24 Or. 304; Faull v. Cooke, 19 Or. 455.

Oregon has the same statute substantially as Washington on condemnation of riparian ownership, quoted at § 499, Kinney on Irrigation. That court has steadily maintained the doctrine of riparian ownership.

Oregon Iron Co. v. Trullinger, 8 Or. 1; Taylor v. Welch, 6 Or. 199; Shively v. Hume, 10 Or. 76.

In Kansas the doctrine of riparian rights is upheld, although the statutes of that state seem to recognize as fully as those of this state the taking of water by appropriation.

Kinney, Irrigation, §§ 427, 442.

In North Dakota the riparian doctrine is recognized.

Kinney, Irrigation, § 467.

So also in South Dakota,

Kinney, Irrigation, § 477.

Anders, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

An action was instituted in the superior court of Yakima county by the plaintiff Benton, a riparian proprietor on the Ahtanum river, in said county, to restrain certain of the appellants from diverting the waters of said stream, and conducting the same to and upon their land, situated at a distance therefrom, for the purposes of irrigation. Three separate actions were also commenced by other parties, seeking similar relief, and by stipulation of all the parties, and an order of the court, all of those causes were consolidated and tried in this action. Many riparian owners became parties by intervention, and joined the plaintiffs in claiming the relief sought by them, and the defendants in the several causes were all made defendants in the consolidated case. The complaint in each case, briefly stated, alleges riparian ownership on the part of the plaintiff, and appropriation of the water, and the date thereof, and the use of the water for irrigation, and its diversion by the defendants. Each of the nonriparian landowners alleges ownership of lands, and appropriation and use of the water for irrigation, and date of such appropriation, and the making of valuable improvements on the land. And each party to the action avers that his land, without artificial irrigation, is arid and unproductive, and prays that he may be decreed entitled to a certain specified quantity of water for the purpose of irrigating his premises. The action involves the rights of a multitude of farmers located on the banks of the river, as well as those of a great number of nonriparian landowners. The evidence preserved in the record is exceedingly voluminous, but the facts deduced therefrom and stated by the court are so satisfactory to counsel that we have been relieved of the labor of examining it in detail. Of the ninety-one findings of fact made by the court, none of any special importance is disputed by counsel for appellants. The trial court awarded a perpetual injunction restraining each and every of the nonriparian owners of land from diverting or interfering with the water of the river. Appellants excepted to the conclusions of law as announced by the court, and to the whole decree, as founded on erroneous conclusions of law, and here insist that the rights of all parties should be determined by this court by the application of the doctrine of appropriation, in accordance with the facts found by the superior court. It may be stated generally that the court found from the evidence the date when each party settled upon his land and took the initiatory step in the acquisition to title thereto, as well as the date at which he appropriated the water for agricultural purposes. While the court recognized the existence in this state of the doctrine of prior appropriation, it nevertheless held that the plaintiff and plaintiff interveners, who settled upon their respective lands, and acquired their title thereto by complying with the laws of the United States, and appropriated and used the water of the stream for irrigation and domestic purposes, prior to the diversion by appellants, were entitled to have the stream continue to flow as it naturally flowed through or by their lands at the time their possessory rights attached. In other words, the court held that the respondents were entitled to the common-law rights of riparian proprietors, as against subsequent appropriators of the water, from the date of their occupancy, with intent to acquire the title of the government in pursuance of law. And this ruling of the trial court was not at variance with the rule repeatedly announced by this court, and the territorial supreme court except upon the question as to the date at which riparian rights become vested in lawful occupants of public land. That such rights, as well as the right of prior appropriation, have hitherto been recognized in the decisions in this state, will be disclosed by an examination of the following cases: Thorpe v. Tenem Ditch Co. 1 Wash. 566; Ellis v. Pomeroy Improv. Co. 1 Wash. 572; Geddis v. Parrish, 1 Wash. 587; Crook v. Hewitt, 4 Wash. 749; Rigney v. Tacoma Light & W. Co. 9 Wash. 576, 26 L. R. A. 425; Isaacs v. Barber, 10 Wash. 124, 30 L. R. A. 665. Nor did the legislature disregard the rights of riparian owners in the general act of 1890 relating to appropriation of water for irrigation. 1 Hill's Code, § 1718 et seq. On the contrary, §§ 1761 and 1774 of that act especially recognized the existence of riparian rights, and we do not see anything in that statute or the subsequent act of 1891 evincing an intention on the part of the legislature to disregard such rights.

But it is most earnestly insisted by the learned counsel for appellants that the common-law doctrine touching riparian rights is not applicable to the arid portions of the state, and especially to Yakima county; and this court is now urged to so decide, notwithstanding anything it may heretofore have said to the contrary. The legislature of the territory of Washington in the year 1868 (Laws 1868, p. 68) enacted that "the common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the Constitution and laws of the United States and the organic act and laws of Washington territory, shall be the rule of decision in all the courts of this territory." The language of this provision was changed by the state legislature in 1891 by omitting the words "of England," substituting the word "state" for "territory," and inserting the clause, "nor incompatible with the institutions and condition of society in this state." Code Proc. § 108. But the meaning remains substantially the same. It thus appears that the common law must be our "rule of decision," unless this case falls within the exceptions specified in the statute. Now, the common-law doctrine declaratory of riparian rights, as now generally understood by the courts, is not, in our judgment, inconsistent with the Constitution or laws of the United States or of this state. Nor is it incompatible with the condition of society in this state, unless it can be said that the right of an individual to use and enjoy his own property is incompatible with our condition,—a proposition to which, we apprehend, no one would assent for a moment. It is held by practically all the better authorities that the right of the riparian owner to the natural flow of the stream by or across his land in its accustomed channel is an incident to his estate, and passes by a grant of the land, unless specially reserved. It is not an easement in or an appurtenance to the land, but, as Angell says, is as much a part of the soil as the stones scattered over it. Angell, Watercourses, § 5.

"By the common law," says the court in Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, "the right of the riparian proprietor to the flow of the stream is inseparably annexed to the soil, and passes with it, not as an easement or appurtenance, but as part and parcel of it. Use does not create the right, and disuse cannot destroy or suspend it. The right in each extends to the natural and usual flow of all the water, unless where the quantity has been diminished as a consequence of the reasonable application of it by other riparian owners for purposes hereafter to be mentioned." And one of the purposes thereafter mentioned was irrigation. In Washburn on Easements & Servitudes, 4th ed. pp. 316, 317, the learned author says: "The right of enjoying this flow, without disturbance or interruption by any other proprietor is one jure natura, and is an incident of property in the land, not an appurtenance to it, like the right he has to enjoy the soil itself, in its natural state, unaffected by the tortious acts of a neighboring landowner. It is an inseparable incident to the ownership of land, made by an inflexible rule of law an absolute and fixed right, and can only be lost by grant or twenty years' adverse possession." (In this state, by statute, an adverse possession for ten years would destroy the right.) And the law on this subject is laid down by Prof. Pomeroy in language equally clear and explicit. He says: "The use of the stream, and of the water flowing through it, forms a part of the rights incident to and involved in the ownership of the lands upon its borders. This is the principle recognized by the common law, and which should be recognized by any auxiliary legislation. It is, moreover, a natural law, an inevitable fact, which no legislation can change. Any statute denying this fact simply attempts an impossibility." Pom. Riparian Rights, § 152.

While the doctrine announced by the foregoing authorities has never, so far as we are advised, been directly denied, it has been apparently ignored by the courts in some of the Pacific states and territories, on the theory that the principles and rules of the common law respecting the rights of private riparian owners were inapplicable to the condition and necessities of the people of the particular localities where the causes of action arose. Coffin v. Left Hand Ditch Co. 6 Colo. 446; Drake v. Earhart, 2 Idaho, 716; Stowell v. Johnson, 7 Utah, 215; Moyer v. Preston (Wyo.) 44 Pac. 845; Clough v. Wing (Ariz.) 17 Pac. 453; Trambley v. Luterma, 6 N. M. 15. But the legislatures of those states and territories have attempted to abolish the common-law doctrine relative to private property in watercourses and to riparian rights generally. Pom. Riparian Rights, § 106. And the decisions above cited are presumably in accordance with the local statutes, though some of them, it appears, were grounded solely on the assumption that the rules of the common law were inapplicable by reason of the aridity of the soil and the consequent necessity for extensive irrigation. But how it can be held that that which is an inseparable incident to the ownership of land in the Atlantic states and the Mississippi valley is not such an incident in this or any other of the Pacific states, we are unable clearly to comprehend. It certainly cannot be true that a difference in climatic conditions or geographical position can operate to deprive one of a right of property vested in him by a well-settled rule of common law. The mere fact that the appellants will not be able to occupy or cultivate their lands as they heretofore have done unless they irrigate them with water taken from the Ahtanum river is no sufficient reason for depriving the respondents, who settled upon that stream in pursuance of the laws of the United States, of the natural rights incident to their more advantageous location. The necessities of one man, or of any number of men, cannot justify the taking of another's property without his consent, and without compensation. If it be true, as claimed by appellants, that, if the judgment of the court below is affirmed, their land will again become a barren waste, and cease to "blossom as the rose," it is equally true that, if the waters of the river are diverted from its channel, the premises of the respondents will become unproductive and utterly worthless. "The aridity of the soil and air being made the test, the greater the aridity the greater the injury done to the riparian proprietors below by the entire diversion of the stream, and the greater the need of the riparian proprietor the stronger the reason for depriving him of the water. It would hardly be a satisfactory reason for depriving riparian lands of all benefit from the flow that they would thereby become utterly unfit for cultivation or pasture, while much of the water diverted must necessarily be dissipated." McKinstry, J., in Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255. The question of the applicability of the common law in controversies respecting water rights in the mineral districts of California was lucidly discussed by Chief Justice Sanderson in Hill v. Smith, 27 Cal., at page 482. With reference to the charge of the trial court, which seemed to be based on an erroneous view of the law with respect to the rights of miners and ditch owners using the water of a stream for mining purposes, the learned chief justice said: "This is due in a great measure, doubtless, to the notion, which has become quite prevalent, that the rules of the common law touching water rights have been materially modified in this state, upon the theory that they were inapplicable to the conditions found to exist here, and therefore inadequate to a just and fair determination of controversies touching such rights. This notion is without any substantial foundation. The reasons which constitute the groundwork of the common law upon this subject remain undisturbed. The conditions to which we are called upon to apply them are changed, and not the rules themselves. The maxim, Sic utere tuo, ut alienum non laedas, upon which they are grounded, has lost none of its governing force; on the contrary, it remains now, and in the mining regions of this state, as operative a test of the lawful use of water as at any time in the past, or in any other country. When the law declares that a riparian proprietor is entitled to have the water of a stream flow in its natural 'channel,—ubi currere solebat,—without diminution or alteration, it does so because its flow imparts fertility to his land, and because water in its pure state is indispensable for domestic uses. But this rule is not applicable to miners and ditch owners, simply because the conditions upon which it is founded did not exist in their case. They seek the water for a particular purpose, which is not only compatible with its diversion from its natural channel; but more frequently necessitates such diversion, and moreover does not require the water in a pure state in order to insure its reasonable and beneficial use." In Atchison v. Peterson, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 507, 22 L. ed. 414, the Supreme Court of the United States stated, as claimed by appellants, that, as respects the use of water for mining purposes, the doctrines of the common law declaratory of the rights of riparian owners were, at an early day after the discovery of gold, found to be inapplicable, or applicable only in a very limited extent, to the necessities of miners, and inadequate to their protection. That action was brought by parties who were ditch owners, for an injunction to restrain the defendants from carrying on certain mining operations on Ten-Mile creek, in Montana, and the question of riparian rights does not seem to have been involved therein. In fact, in the course of the opinion it is observed that "the government being the sole proprietor of all the public lands, whether bordering on streams or otherwise, there was no occasion for the application of the common-law doctrine of riparian proprietorship in respect to the waters of those streams,"—meaning the streams on the public lands, the waters of which were subject to appropriation and use under the customs obtaining among miners. In Basey v. Gallagher, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 670, 22 L. ed. 452, the question on the merits in the case, as stated by the court, was whether a right to running waters on public land of the United States for the purposes of irrigation could be acquired by prior appropriation, as against parties not having the title of the government, and the court held that it could. But the question of riparian rights was not in the case, and the court said that "neither party has any title from the United States; no question as to the rights of riparian proprietors can therefore arise. It will be time enough to consider those rights when either of the parties has obtained a patent of the government. At present both parties stand upon the same footing; neither can allege that the other is a trespasser against the government without at the same time invalidating his own claim." But in the later case of Sturr v. Beck, 138 U.S. 541, 33 L. ed. 761, the question as to the rights of the riparian proprietor as against an appropriator of the water did arise, and was determined by the court. The facts were that one John Smith settled on a tract of government land in the territory of Dakota in March, 1877, and continued to reside thereon until he sold and conveyed it by warranty deed to one Beck. He made his homestead application or entry on March 25, 1879, and his final proof May 10, 1883, and received a patent from the United States. The waters of a certain creek flowed in its natural channel across Smith's homestead, and in May, 1880, Sturr went upon that homestead, located a water right thereon, and constructed a ditch by which the waters of the creek were diverted to his own land. Beck went into possession under his deed from Smith, and in 1886 notified Sturr to cease diverting the water and maintaining the ditch, whereupon Sturr commenced an action to enjoin Beck from interfering with his alleged water right and ditch, and the use of the water of the creek. Sturr claimed the right to divert and use the waters of the stream for the purposes of irrigation by virtue of a prior appropriation, and Beck defended and asked affirmative relief on the ground of riparian ownership. It will thus be seen that the question there raised was identically the same as that which is presented for determination here. In that case it appeared that neither Smith nor his grantee, Beck, had ever diverted the waters of the creek from the natural channel prior to the location of the alleged water right by Sturr; but the court unanimously held that Smith's patent related back to the date of his homestead filing, and cut off completely the alleged claim of Sturr. The learned chief justice, in delivering the opinion of the court, after referring to the act of Congress of July 26, 1866 (Rev. Stat. § 2339), and the amendatory act of 1870, and quoting from the opinion in Atchison v. Peterson, 87 U.S. 20 Wall. 507, 22 L. ed. 414, said: "When, however, the government ceases to be the sole proprietor, the right of the riparian owner attaches, and cannot be subsequently invaded. As the riparian owner has the right to have the water flow ut currere solebat, undiminished except by reasonable consumption of upper proprietors, and no subsequent attempt to take the water only can override the prior appropriation of both land and water, it would seem reasonable that lawful riparian occupancy with intent to appropriate the land should have the same effect."

39 L. R. A.

And after quoting certain sections of the Civil Code of Dakota, and setting out the local custom of diverting and appropriating the waters of flowing streams for the purpose of irrigation, he concluded the opinion in the following language: "The question is not as to the extent of Smith's interest in the homestead as against the government, but whether, as against Sturr, his lawful occupancy under settlement and entry was not a prior appropriation which Sturr could not displace. We have no doubt it was, and agree with the brief and comprehensive opinion of the Supreme Court to that effect." It seems to us that the soundness of that decision can scarcely be doubted. While the court fully recognized the doctrine of prior appropriation of water on the public lands, in accordance with the local customs, laws, and decisions of courts, it announced and established the just and equitable rule that the riparian rights of a patentee of the government attach, by relation, at the very inception of his title, and will be protected as against subsequent appropriation of the water naturally flowing over the land. That case, it would seem, settles the law adversely to the contention of the appellants in this case. The doctrine that the rights of a patentee or grantee of the government relate back to the first act of the settler necessary in the proceedings to acquire title is also announced in the following cases: Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U.S. 330, 23 L. ed. 424; Larsen v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 19 Or. 240; Faull v. Cooke, 19 Or. 455. See, also Kinney, Irrigation, § 210; Union Mill & Min. Co. v. Dangberg, 2 Sawy. 450.

The trial court in this case followed the rule laid down in the case of Sturr v. Beck, and other cases above referred to, and, in so doing, we think, committed no error. But it is claimed by appellants that the act of the territorial legislature entitled "An Act Regulating Irrigation and Water Rights in the County of Yakima, Washington Territory" (Laws 1873, p. 520), fully authorized them to divert and use the waters of the Abtatum river as they had done. It is perhaps sufficient to say with reference to that act that the rights of many of the respondents who own riparian lands had attached, under the law as announced in the Sturr Case, prior to its passage, and were therefore in no wise affected by it. And besides by the first section of that act the respondents were entitled to the use of the water for the purpose of irrigating their lands "to the full extent of the soil thereof." Moreover, the doctrine of appropriation applies only to public lands, and when such lands cease to be public, and become private, property it is no longer applicable. Gould, Waters, § 240; Pom. Riparian Rights, § 30; Curtis v. La Grande Hydraulic Water Co. 20 Or. 34, 10 L. R. A. 484. It was for the purpose of protecting the rights of appropriators of water for beneficial uses on the public lands which had vested and accrued, by virtue of local customs, laws, and decisions of the courts, that the 9th section of the act of Congress of July 26, 1866, the substance of which is included in § 2339 of the Revised Statutes, was enacted. It was apparent to Congress, and, indeed, to everyone, that neither local customs nor state laws or decisions of state courts could vest the title to public land or water in private individuals without the sanction of the owner, viz., the United States. The government, being the sole proprietor, had the right to permit the water to be taken and diverted from its riparian lands; but, when it disposed of land without reserving the water, the latter passed to its grantee free from interference thereafter by the grantor. "The object of the section [Rev. Stat. § 2339] was to give the sanction of the United States, the proprietor of the lands, to possessory rights, which had previously rested solely upon the local customs, laws, and decisions of the courts, and to prevent such rights from being lost on a sale of the lands." Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S. 456, 457, 25 L. ed. 241, 242.

It is suggested on behalf of the appellants that the use of water for irrigation was practically unknown to the common law. But, while it may be true that it is seldom necessary or desirable to irrigate land in England by artificial means, yet it appears that a reasonable use of running streams for that purpose by riparian proprietors is recognized by the courts of that country. It is expressly so stated in Gould on Waters (§ 217), where a number of English cases are cited; and in Pomeroy on Riparian Rights (§ 125) it is declared that the common-law rule that every riparian proprietor has an equal right to the use of water as it is accustomed to flow, without diminution or alteration, is subject to the well-recognized limitation that each owner may make a reasonable use of the water for domestic, agricultural, and manufacturing purposes; and the author there cites several English and many American decisions in support of that declaration. See also 2 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. pp. 387, 388; Gould, Waters, § 205; Luz v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, and cases cited; Union Mill & Min. Co. v. Ferris, 2 Sawy. 177.

A careful consideration of all the questions raised on this appeal discloses no error and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

Scott, Ch. J., and Gordon, J., concur. Dunbar and Reavis, JJ., being disqualified, did not sit in this case.

Rehearing denied.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Theodore P. SIDDALL, Jr., by Next Friend, Appt.,

v.

Egbert L. JANSEN et al.

(168 Ill. 43.)

1. The facts may be reviewed by the supreme court of Illinois to the extent of ascertaining whether or not there was such evidence tending to establish plaintiff's declaration as should have been submitted to the jury, where error is assigned to the giving or refusal of an instruction to find for the defendant.
2. An ascending and descending cage of an elevator is such an attraction to children that an unguarded or open door, or one which may readily be opened from the outside, may constitute negligence on the part of the owner when children are allowed to play where they may be injured by it.
3. Failure to comply with the provisions of an ordinance respecting the doors of elevators will render the owner liable for an injury received in consequence by a child which was rightfully at the place of the injury.
4. Whether a child five years of age is a trespasser or not when playing near an elevator in a store, used by employees and reached through open doors from the main floor of the store in which the father of the child was employed, is a question for the jury, if the child was rightfully in the store by invitation of the father.

(November 1, 1897.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Superior Court for Cook County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Phillips, Ch. J.:

This was an action brought by Theodore P. Siddall, Jr., by his next friend, against Egbert L. Jansen and others, composing the firm of Jansen, McClurg, & Co., wholesale and retail booksellers and stationers, in Chicago, to recover damages for an injury received by being struck by a descending elevator of the defendants. The father of plaintiff was an employee of defendants, and the plaintiff, then about five years of age, was playing around the store. In the temporary absence of the parent the child was attracted to an elevator shaft, the door of which was unfastened, and was severely bruised and mangled by the descending cage. The negligence alleged in the declaration charges the defendants with negligently permitting to continue open and unguarded the doorway of the elevator shaft, and the partitioned inclosure surrounding it, and in failing to place fastenings upon the elevator door, so they could be opened only from the inside, and thus be under the entire control of the elevator operator, as is provided by a city ordinance of Chicago. A judgment for $10,000, rendered November 15, 1889, was reversed by the appellate court (41 Ill. App. 279), and on appeal here the judgment of the appellate court was reversed, with directions to find facts, or remand the case (143 Ill. 537). The appellate court remanded the NOTE.—As to liability for maintaining dangerous attractions for children, see Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Edwards (Tex.) 32 L. R. A. 825, and other cases cited in footnote thereto; also some cases in note to 89 L. R. A.

Chicago City R. Co. v. Robinson (Ill.) 4 L. R. A. 127. See also Moran v. Pullman Palace Car Co. (Mo.) 33 L. R. A. 755, and cases there cited.

case (51 Ill. App. 74), and on another trial, May 6, 1896, the superior court, pursuant to the first opinion of the appellate court, directed a verdict and entered judgment for the defendants, which the appellate court affirmed in the following opinion: "Ryan v. Armour, Siddall v. Jansen. Per Curiam. Each of these cases, with the names of the parties reversed, has been here before. 61 Ill. App. 314; 51 Ill. App. 74; 41 Ill. App. 279. The cases have now been again tried in accordance with the views of this court heretofore expressed, and still entertained, and therefore the judgments are now affirmed." 67 Ill. App. 102. A certificate of importance was granted by the appellate court, and by appeal the case comes to this court.

Messrs. F. W. Becker and Dale & Francis, for appellant:

The store was a "public place." No effort was made by appellees on the trial to limit or restrict the publicity of the place. What is a "public place?" Ex vi termini, a place for all, for the old and young—like the public streets, which are open to the use of the entire public without regard to what may be the lawful motives and objects of those traversing them.

Chicago v. Keefe, 114 Ill. 222, 55 Am. Rep. 860.

This court found no trouble in implying an invitation when one of the defendants entered the Beaurivage Flats, as a visitor merely upon an occupant and not upon the owner, and without any business with the owner, and who while there was injured in an unguarded elevator.

Fisher v. Jansen, 30 Ill. App. 91.

The most that can be said is that the father's negligence contributed to the injury, or, rather, that the concurring negligence of the father and the defendants produced the injury, which is no defense (Carterville v. Cook, 129 Ill. 152, 4 L. R. A. 721), and especially is this the rule where the injury, as here, is the result of an unlawful act—the violation of an ordinance, in which case the original wrongdoer will be held responsible, although other causes may have subsequently arisen and contributed in producing the injury.

Weick v. Lander, 75 Ill. 93; Laflin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney, 131 Ill. 322, 7 L. R. A. 262.

The ordinance, its violation, and resulting injury, presented, at least, a prima facie case, which could not be withdrawn from the jury, for the statute of Westminster gives a remedy by an action on the case to all who are aggrieved by the neglect of any duty created by statute.

Couch v. Steel, 3 El. & Bl. 802; St. Louis, J. & C. R. Co. v. Terhune, 50 Ill. 151, 99 Am. Dec. 504; Mechanicsburg v. Meredith, 54 Ill. 84; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Gillis, 68 Ill. 317; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Goyette, 133 Ill. 21.

The duty is due, not to the city as a municipal body, but to the public, considered as composed of individual persons, and each person specially injured by the breach of the obligation is entitled to his individual compensation and to an action for its recovery.

Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 28 89 L. R. A.

L. ed. 410; Parker v. Barnard, 135 Mass. 116, 46 Am. Rep. 450.

The defendants owed it to the public, whom they invited to their premises, to keep those premises reasonably safe.

Hart v. Washington Park Club, 157 Ill. 9, 29 L. R. A. 492.

Can it be said that the conduct of the defendants was so clearly and palpably correct that all reasonable minds would so pronounce it without hesitation or dissent?

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Johnsen, 135 Ill. 641.

Messrs. Mason Brothers, for appellee:

The decision of the appellate court is a finality.

Great Western R. Co. v. Haworth, 39 Ill. 846; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Bonifield, 104 Ill. 228; Rogers v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 117 Ill. 115; Practice Act, chap. 110, Ill. Rev. Stat. § 88; Brown v. Aurora, 109 Ill. 165; Neer v. Illinois C. R. Co. 138 Ill. 29; Jones v. Fortune, 128 Ill. 518.

Appellees were not guilty of negligence.

Murray v. McLean, 57 Ill. 378; Gibson v. Seiepienski, 37 Ill. App. 601; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Lammert, 12 Ill. App. 408.

Appellant was himself guilty of negligence.

Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Jacobs, 20 Ill. 478; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lee, 68 Ill. 580; Abend v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 111 Ill. 202, 53 Am. Rep. 616; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Murray, 62 Ill. 326; Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox, 138 Ill. 370, 21 L. R. A. 76.

Appellant was in the immediate custody and control of his father, and the father's negligence will defeat appellant's action. The father is the cause of the accident.

Chicago v. Starr, 42 Ill. 176, 89 Am. Dec. 422; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Grable, 88 Ill. 443; Tyler, Infancy & Coverture, 200; Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox, 138 Ill. 370, 21 L. R. A. 76; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Stratton, 78 Ill. 88.

The damages awarded in the circuit court are excessive.

Peoria Bridge Asso. v. Loomis, 20 Ill. 285, 71 Am. Dec. 263; Joch v. Dankwardt, 85 Ill. 331; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Hazzard, 26 Ill. 373; Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. McKean, 40 Ill. 218; Chicago City R. Co. v. Henry, 62 Ill. 145; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Jackson, 55 Ill. 492; Decatur v. Fisher, 53 Ill. 407; Bloomington v. Goodrich, 88 Ill. 558; Andrus v. Boedecker, 17 Ill. App. 213; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ebert, 74 Ill. 401; Chicago West Div. R. Co. v. Hughes, 87 Ill. 94.

Phillips, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We are authorized to review the facts in this case, to the extent of ascertaining whether there was, at the close of the plaintiff's testimony, evidence tending to show the acts of negligence charged in his declaration, for the reason that at the close of such testimony the trial court, at the request of defendants, gave to the jury a peremptory instruction to find for the defendants. The rule is that where an instruction is offered, at the close of plaintiff's testimony, to instruct the jury to find for the defendant, and error is assigned on the giving or refusal to give such instruction, this court may review the facts, to the extent of ascertaining whether or not there was such evidence tending to establish plaintiff's declaration as should have been submitted to the jury. Cicero & P. Street R. Co. v. Meisner, 160 Ill. 320, 31 L. R. A. 331; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 59, 30 L. R. A. 38; Wenona Coal Co. v. Holmquist, 152 Ill. 581, 18 L. R. A. 215; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242; Purdy v. Hall, 184 Ill. 298; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dunleavy, 129 Ill. 182; Bartelott v. International Bank, 119 Ill. 259; Simmons v. Chicago & T. R. Co. 110 Ill. 340. The rule is, also, that an instruction taking the case from the jury, and directing a verdict for the defendant, should only be given where the evidence, with all the legitimate and natural inferences to be drawn therefrom, is wholly insufficient, if credited, to sustain a verdict for plaintiff. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 59, 30 L. R. A. 38.

The first count of the declaration charges negligence of the defendants in permitting to continue open and unguarded the doorway of an elevator shaft, and the door to the partitioned inclosure surrounding it, on their premises, whereby plaintiff (being of the age of five years) was seriously injured by a descending cage of the elevator. To the entire declaration the plea of the general issue was interposed. It is urged by appellees this elevator shaft was not in a public place in their store, but was secluded, and was not intended as a passenger elevator, and that plaintiff was a trespasser. This court has held, in Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 27 L. R. A. 206, that the general rule relieving a private owner of property of liability against injuries sustained by strangers or trespassers from the unsafe condition of his property is not applicable to children of tender years, who may be attracted thereon by such conditions or surroundings as may appeal to childish curiosity. An ascending and descending cage of an elevator might be said to be of such a character, and to hold out an implied invitation to a five-year-old child to approach it and satisfy his childish curiosity. An unguarded or open door, or one which might readily be opened from the outside, might in such cases, as to a child, be fraught with great danger, and constitute negligence on the part of the person permitting such conditions to exist. It was a question which should have been submitted to a jury to say whether or not there was negligence under this count.

Another of the counts of plaintiff's declaration was based on the alleged negligence of defendants in not complying with a certain ordinance of the city of Chicago relating to elevators of the character which injured plaintiff, and which ordinance is as follows: Section 1056, art. 9, chap. 15: "Hoistways, in which an elevator shall be used, shall have a fire-proof shaft, starting at the lowest part reached by such elevator, and from such point extended up through and 6 feet above the roof." Section 1057: "Doors in such shaft shall be made of metal, and the catches or fastenings upon such doors shall be so placed that they can be opened only from the inside of the shaft, and entirely under control of the elevator operator."

39 L. R. A.

The evidence produced by the plaintiff below tends to show that there was not, on the part of the defendants, a compliance with this ordinance. A peremptory instruction having been given to the jury to find for defendants, there was consequently no evidence produced by them. As there was evidence tending to show there was no compliance with the provisions of this ordinance, and that plaintiff was rightfully at the place of the injury, it was a question which should have been submitted to the jury. Whether or not plaintiff was a trespasser was also a question of fact for the jury, where there was evidence tending to show he was not. The evidence does show that near the location of this elevator in appellees' store it was not infrequent that children of other employees and of customers were seen. While the elevator was not, as it appears, a regular passenger elevator, it was used by employees who desired to ascend to the upper floors. The elevator, together with the inclosures around it, was but a short distance from the main floor, and was connected by open doors. To this main floor the general public had constant access, and were there by the invitation of the firm engaged in business. Plaintiff was there by invitation of his father, who was an employee of this firm, and in charge of one of its departments. It was not uncommon for other employees to have their children at the store. If the father had any right to invite plaintiff, then the invitation to a child of five years, the age of this plaintiff, would, in its ordinary sense, have given him the right to be in those places where his father was. In Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 27 L. R. A. 206, this court, after referring to the general rule that a private owner of property is under no obligation to strangers or trespassers to keep his premises in safe condition, against those who come upon such premises without invitation, said (p. 147): "An exception, however, to this general rule exists in favor of children. Although a child of tender years, who meets with an injury upon the premises of a private owner, may be a technical trespasser, yet the owner may be liable if the things causing the injury have been left exposed and unguarded, and are of such a character as to be an attraction to the child, appealing to his childish curiosity and instincts. Unguarded premises which are thus supplied with dangerous attractions are regarded as holding out implied invitations to such children." Without passing on the weight of the evidence on this particular branch of the case, or the liability of appellees, as it must again be submitted to a jury, we hold that there was sufficient evidence that appellant was not a trespasser to submit the question to a jury.

We hold that it was error for the trial court, under the circumstances, to give the peremptory instruction on behalf of the defendants; and the judgment of the Appellate Court of the First District, and of the Superior Court of Cook County, are each reversed, and the cause remanded to the Superior Court of Cook county for a new trial in conformity with the views in this opinion.

Bernard IAGO, Appt.,
v.
Selina IAGO.

(168 Ill. 330.)

1. The insanity of a defendant in a divorce suit does not prevent maintaining a writ of error from a decree against him.
2. The next friend of an insane person in a writ of error is not necessarily the same person who represented him as guardian ad litem in the lower court, since the incapacity of the insane person to change his representative does not prevent the court from making the change.

(November 1, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, dismissing a writ of error to review a decree of the Circuit Court for Cook County granting a divorce. Reversed.

—Statement by Boggs, J.:

This was a bill in chancery filed in the circuit court of Cook county by Selina Iago, defendant in error, against Bernard Iago, her husband, for divorce. It appeared to the circuit court that the said Bernard Iago was insane, whereupon the court appointed one H. T. Aspern as guardian ad litem for the defendant. Such proceedings were had in the circuit court as that a decree of divorce was entered in favor of the wife, the defendant in error. On the application of the husband, by Annie Brock, his next friend, a writ of error to reverse the decree was sued out in the appellate court of the first district. On motion of the defendant in error, the writ was dismissed (66 Ill. App. 462); hence this appeal.

Messrs. Haley & O'Donnell for appellant.

Messrs. F. A. Denison and J. E. White for appellee.

Boggs, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The ground of the motion to dismiss was that the plaintiff in error was an insane person at the time the writ of error was sued out, and, by reason of such insanity, was incapable to elect whether he would remain married or become single, and no one can elect for him. It seems well settled that the right to sue for an absolute divorce is a personal right, and requires the intelligent action of the injured party, for which reason it has been frequently held that a guardian or next friend of an insane person cannot maintain a suit for absolute divorce for his ward. It is also well settled in this state that a writ of error is a new suit. The reasoning of the appellate court is that an insane person, being incapable in law of instituting and maintaining a bill for divorce, is likewise incapable of maintaining a writ of error for the purpose of questioning the regularity and legality of a decree of divorce entered against him in a proceeding instituted after he became insane. We are unable to assent to this view. Actions for divorce may be instituted against insane defendants for a cause of divorce committed before the period of insanity. When such an action is begun, a court of equity, in view of the peculiar duty of such courts to protect the personal and property rights of lunatics, will appoint some discreet and proper person to conduct the defense. The power possessed by the courts of equity to provide that such defense shall be made is not exhausted by the appointment of a conservator ad litem or next friend to defend in the trial court, but may be exercised in courts of review, and further defense of the action for divorce prosecuted by any remedy provided by law whereby reversal of a decree of the trial court may be obtained. A writ of error is a new suit, but at the same time, when brought to review a decree for divorce, is but a step in defense of the relief sought to be obtained by the complainant in the original bill. In Bradford v. Abend, 89 Ill. 78, 31 Am. Rep. 87, a bill in chancery filed by the conservator of an insane wife to set aside a decree of divorce was entertained by the circuit court; and its decree vacating a decree of divorce was affirmed by this court. It is true that in that case the bill for the divorce was filed in the name of the wife, while she was insane, and that the principle that an insane person cannot maintain a bill for divorce was applied by this court, in support of the decree of the circuit court, in vacating the decree for divorce. But it is further true that the insane wife was equally incapable of electing whether she would remain married or single as was the plaintiff in error in the case at bar, yet the aid of the court against the decree of divorce was fully recognized and enforced. In the case cited the ground of attack upon the decree could not be availed of in a writ of error, and for that reason resort was had to an original proceeding in the trial court. Had such ground been apparent from an inspection of the record, no reason is perceived why the relief might not have been had through the medium of such writ. Though an insane person may be incapacitated from maintaining an action for divorce, still it by no means logically follows that no legal remedy can be availed of to remove a decree of divorce entered against the person so unfortunately afflicted.

It is not essential that the same person who represented the insane party as guardian ad litem in the circuit court should appear as next friend in a writ of error. Ames v. Ames, 148 Ill. 321. True, as suggested, the insane person has not capacity to consent to a change of the representative, but it is within the power of the court to appoint or accept another person to act in that capacity. Rev. Stat. 1898, Lunatics, chap. 86, § 13.

We think no sufficient reason appeared for dismissing the writ. The judgment of the Appellate Court is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded to that court, with directions to overrule the motion.

NOTE.—As to the effect of insanity of husband or wife on the right to a divorce, see Mohler v. Shank (Iowa) 34 L. R. A. 161, and note.

39 L. R. A.

J. N. DIXON, Appl.,
v.
PEOPLE of the State of Illinois.

(108 Ill. 179.)

1. No compensation for expert testimony other than ordinary witness fees can be required as a condition of giving an opinion as an expert when the witness has been properly subpoenaed.
2. A physician duly subpoenaed and interrogated as an expert witness can be punished as for contempt if he refuses to testify without receiving compensation other than ordinary witness fees.
3. The property of an expert witness is not taken without just compensation by requiring him to give his opinion as an expert without other compensation than ordinary witness fees.
4. The duty of an expert witness to testify is the same in a suit between private parties as it is in a suit between the state and an alleged criminal, if he is properly subpoenaed and paid ordinary witness fees.
5. The ordinance of 1787, passed by the Congress of the Confederation for the government of the Northwest Territory, has no force in Illinois except so far as its principles are embodied in the state Constitution.

(November 1, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Appellate Court, Third District, affirming an order of the Circuit Court for Sangamon County adjudging him guilty of contempt in refusing to answer a question propounded to him as an expert witness, in the case of Purdy v. Springfield. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Conkling & Grout, for appellant:

In a civil suit for damages, a physician, who knows nothing of the facts, and who is called as an expert only, to answer a hypothetical question, the answer to which calls for a professional opinion based on his experience and study, and who refuses to answer because no compensation for testifying, other than ordinary witness fees, has been promised or provided for, but which has been expressly refused, cannot be compelled to so testify, nor should he be held to be in contempt of court for so refusing.

An expert is one who is skilled in any particular art, trade, or profession, being possessed of peculiar knowledge or experience concerning the same.

Rogers, Expert Testimony, § 1; Century Dict.; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 491; 1 Rice, Ev. chap. 9, § 194; Anderson, Law Dict.; Reynolds, Ev. § 52, citing Stephens, Ev. art. 49; Best, Ev. § 518; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 440, 440a; Taylor, Ev. § 1274-1281; Carter v. Boehm, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 7th Am. ed. 618, 628, 644.

Study of standard authorities, as well as experience or observation, may give the special knowledge required.

Citizens Gaslight & Heating Co. v. O'Brien, 15 Ill. App. 400, 19 Ill. App. 281, 118 Ill. 174.

It is enough that the matter is a subject of which the witness possesses a special knowledge not possessed by the jury or by persons in general.

James v. Johnson, 12 Ill. App. 286.

Opinions of witnesses are not competent where inquiry is into a subject-matter, an understanding of the nature of which does not require any peculiar habit, study, or scientific knowledge.

Linn v. Sigsbee, 67 Ill. 75; Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Reich, 101 Ill. 157; Pennsylvania Co. v. Conlan, 101 Ill. 98; Wight F. Proofing Co. v. Poczekai, 180 Ill. 139; Illinois O. R. Co. v. People, 143 Ill. 449, 19 L. R. A. 119; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 491; Rogers, Expert Testimony, p. 18; Hopkins v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. 78 Ill. 32; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Moranda, 108 Ill. 577; Hamilton v. Des Moines Valley R. Co. 36 Iowa, 31; Muldoney v. Illinois C. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 462; Citizens Gaslight & Heating Co. v. O'Brien, 15 Ill. App. 400; Pennsylvania Co. v. Conlan, 101 Ill. 98; 1 Rice, Ev. chap. 9, § 195.

But when there is a question as to any point of science or art, the opinions upon that point of persons specially skilled in any such matter are deemed to be relevant facts.

Stephens, Ev. § 49; 1 Rice, Ev. chap. 9, § 192.

NOTE.—Right of state to require service of witnesses without compensation.

- I. Inherent right to command service.
- II. Application of constitutional provisions.
- III. The rule as applied to expert testimony.
- IV. General rules with relation to civil cases.
 - a. Necessity of payment or tender.
 - b. Sufficiency of payment or tender.

I. Inherent right to command service.

The state in the exercise of its sovereignty may require the service of its citizens as witnesses without compensation. Bennett v. Kroth, 37 Kan. 236, dictum.

Or without compensation first paid or tendered. Dills v. State, 59 Ind. 15, dissenting opinion.

The administration of justice being a source of mutual benefit to all the members of a community, each is under obligation to aid in furthering it as a matter of public duty, and every competent citizen may be summoned by due process of law to appear and render personal services in court without right on his part to a special compensation for 39 L. R. A.

so doing. His time is claimed by the public as a tax paid by him to that system of law which protects his rights as well as those of others. Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 389, 25 Am. Rep. 611, quoting from Ordronaux, Medical Jurisprudence, 1890, p. 128. And see DIXON v. PEOPLE.

And a witness is bound to obey the process of subpoena in a criminal prosecution without payment or tender of fees on behalf of the defendant as well as on behalf of the state. West v. State, 1 Wis. 209.

By the common law no fees were fixed for witnesses, but they were commanded by the King's writ subpoena ad testificandum to lay aside all pretenses and excuses and appear at the trial to testify under the penalty of a certain sum. Dills v. State, 59 Ind. 15, dissenting opinion; DIXON v. PEOPLE.

And in England after the recognition of the right of the prisoner to have witnesses sworn and examined on his behalf, it was held that a witness subpoenaed by the defendant in a criminal case was bound to appear and testify, although no

In Alabama the practice of the trial courts is to require an expert to testify as an ordinary witness, or be held to be in contempt.

Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 389, 25 Am. Rep. 611.

In Arizona there is no distinction made by statute between the two classes of witnesses, but an expert by custom can claim for services or refuse to testify.

In Arkansas the statute makes no distinction between different classes of witnesses.

The supreme court holds that an expert who testifies for the state in a criminal case cannot demand compensation in addition to the usual fees allowed witnesses.

Flinn v. Prairie County, 60 Ark. 204, 27 L. R. A. 669.

But the United States court refused to compel a physician, called as an expert, to testify, and declined to regard the refusal of the witness to testify as a contempt of court.

United States v. Howe (Ark.) 12 Cent. L. J. 193.

In California there are no statutes nor decisions on the subject.

In Colorado the statute makes no distinction between the different classes of witnesses.

An expert physician, called for the state in a criminal case, who testifies voluntarily, cannot recover for so testifying.

Larimer County Comrs. v. Lee, 8 Colo. App. 177.

In Connecticut there are no special statutes nor decisions.

In Delaware there is no statute. In criminal prosecutions, expert witnesses are commonly paid by a special allowance granted by the levy court of the county, but this is voluntary on the part of the levy court.

In District of Columbia there are no statutes nor decisions.

In Florida there is neither statute nor decision.

In Georgia there is no statute and no decision.

In Idaho there are no statutes nor decisions.

In Illinois there are no statutes except §§ 6 and 29 of chap. 85, which allow a physician when acting as commissioner to make inquest in lunacy the sum of $5 per day and traveling expenses.

Wright v. People, 112 Ill. 540, under peculiar circumstances holds that an expert witness must testify, and Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 152 Ill. 847, holds that the fees of an expert in a certain case could not be charged against the losing party.

In Indiana, Rev. Stat. 1888, § 504, provides: "A witness who is an expert in any art, science, trade, profession, or mystery may be compelled to appear and testify to an opinion, as such expert, in relation to any matter without payment or tender of compensation other than the per diem and mileage allowed by law to witnesses.

Prior to the passage of the statute, physicians and surgeons could not be compelled to perform service by giving opinions without being paid.

Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 1, 26 Am. Rep. 75.

In Indian territory there is no statute nor decision on the subject.

In Iowa, McClain's Code 1888, p. 1493, title 28, chap. 3, § 5090, says: "Witnesses called to testify only to an opinion founded on special study or experience in any branch of science, or to make scientific or professional examinations, and state the result thereof, shall receive additional compensation to be fixed by the court."

In Kansas there are no statutes nor decisions.

In Kentucky there are no statutes nor decisions.

In Louisiana Acts No. 19 of 1884, p. 25, provides that witnesses called to testify in court only to an opinion shall receive additional compensation.

In Maine there is no statute nor decision.

In Maryland, in the absence of statute or decisions, expert witnesses are treated in this respect as ordinary witnesses.

In Massachusetts the court cannot allow expenses and fees of experts not appointed by the court.

Atty. Gen., Petitioner, 104 Mass. 537.

In Michigan there are no statutes nor decisions.

In Minnesota, Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 70, § 8, pp. 774, 775, provides "that the judge of any court of record in this state, before whom any witness is summoned, or sworn and examined, as an expert in any profession or calling, may, in his discretion, allow such fees or compensa-fees had been paid or tendered him. West v. State, 1 Wis. 209, citing 1 Starkie, Ev. 85; 2 Hawk P. C. chap. 46, § 172; Rex v. Ring, 8 T. R. 586; 2 Russell, Crimes, 948; Rex v. Cooke, 1 Car. & P. 321.

And in this county the state frequently brings witnesses into court in certain causes where it is a party without becoming liable to them in any event for witness fees. Bennett v. Kroth, 87 Kan. 225; Ex parte Chamberlain, 4 Cow. 49.

The court will not declare that a witness shall give his time and liberty, however, to any person without compensation, in the absence of express legislative authority. Morris v. Rippy, 4 Jones, L. 533, dictum.

And the right of a witness residing out of the county where he is to give testimony, to a tender or payment of his traveling expenses in going to and returning from the place where he is summoned to testify, is not taken away by Ky. Civil Code, Prac. § 594, which only intimates that when a witness lives in an adjacent county he can be compelled to attend, and he is not guilty of contempt in disobeying a summons until such payment is made. Thurman v. Virgin, 18 B. Mon. 785.

39 L. R. A.

But the common-law rule that a witness's expenses should be tendered before he can be compelled to attend court is abrogated by Tenn. Act 1798, chap. 1, § 29, providing that every witness being summoned to appear in any court shall appear accordingly, and continue to attend from term to term until discharged, and such witness is bound to attend and give evidence when subpoenaed, though the party summoning him did not tender or offer him his necessary expenses. Smith v. Barger, 9 Yerg. 322.

And witnesses subpoenaed in an action brought by a person in forma pauperis in North Carolina are bound to attend and give their testimony without having expenses previously paid or tendered, but if they can recover for their attendance from the pauper in the mode provided by law they are at liberty to do so, or they may file their tickets and have them collected from the defendant in the event of the plaintiff's success. Morris v. Rippy, 4 Jones, L. 533.

So, under the South Carolina statutes the defendant in a case of felony is entitled to like process as tion as, in his judgment, may be just and reasonable."

In Mississippi there is no statutory regulation as to the compensation of expert witnesses.

In Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, and New Mexico there are no statutes nor decisions.

In New York there is no statute.

It is the practice for district attorneys in criminal cases to employ and pay extra compensation to expert witnesses in professional life.

People v. Montgomery, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 288.

In North Carolina § 8756 of the Code, vol. 2, p. 562, provides for per diem and mileage allowed witnesses generally, and a proviso is added to the section as follows: "Provided further, that experts, when compelled to attend and testify, shall be allowed such compensation and mileage as the court may in its discretion order." (Laws 1871.)

In North Dakota Sess. Laws 1887, chap. 61, § 8, provides that physicians shall receive $10 as witness fees per diem when called to testify.

In Ohio, Oklahoma, and Oregon there are no statutes nor decisions.

In Pennsylvania the General Statutes make no distinction between witnesses. Special statutes allow extra compensation in certain cases.

In Rhode Island, judiciary act May 19, 1893, chap. 24, allows the reasonable fees of experts according to the character of the service to be performed, to be fixed by such justice.

In South Carolina, Rev. Stat. 1893, p. 882, § 2566, chap. 102, vol. 1, contains some regulation of the subject.

In South Dakota and Tennessee there are no statutes nor decisions.

In Texas there is no statute. A physician when called by the state in a criminal case to testify concerning a post mortem examination made by him must testify.

Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 865, 32 Am. Rep. 573.

In Utah and Vermont there are no statutes nor decisions.

In Virginia there is no statute, except the act of March 5, 1888, which allows physicians attending before a commission of lunacy extra fees.

the state to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and the witnesses so secured are entitled to be paid in the same manner as the state's witnesses, and such provisions are not limited to cases of capital felony. Eustace v. Greenville County, 42 S. C. 190.

And in New York in prosecutions for felony witnesses are compellable to attend without fees, the distinction lying between a felony and a misdemeanor; in case of a misdemeanor the defendant must tender the witnesses their fees as in civil cases. Ex parte Chamberlain, 4 Cow. 49.

II. Application of constitutional provisions.

The services of witnesses in criminal cases are not particular services within the meaning of a constitutional provision that no man's particular services shall be demanded without just compensation, but are of the class of general services which every man in the community is bound to render for the general as well as his own individual good. Israel v. State, 8 Ind. 466; Daly v. 89 L. R. A.

In Washington there are no statutes nor decisions.

In West Virginia, chap. 161, § 4, has some provisions on the subject.

In Wisconsin there is no statute.

In Wyoming, Rev. Stat. § 1200, p. 344, provides: "Any physician or surgeon who may be called upon to testify as an expert before a coroner, or other officer, shall be entitled to a fee of $5 for half a day or less, and for more than half a day $10.

It seems to be almost universal practice for parties calling expert witnesses to pay them extra compensation as for professional services.

The Roman law permitted the use of experts to inform the judge on physical laws or phenomena.

Enderman, 248.

In England the statute of 5 Eliz. chap. 9, doubtless formulated a pre-existing custom, and provided that witnesses should be paid, according to their countenance and calling, a reasonable sum.

Buckley v. Thomas, 1 Plowd. 125.

The skill and professional experience of a man are so far his individual capacity and property that he cannot be compelled to bestow them gratuitously upon any party. On the witness stand, precisely as in his office, his opinions may be given or withheld at pleasure, for a skilled witness cannot be compelled to give an opinion, nor committed for contempt if he refuses to do so.

Ordronaux, Medical Jurisprudence, pp. 138-142; 1 Whart. Ev. § 880; Stat. 5 Eliz. chap. 9; 2 Phillips, Ev. 4th Am. ed. p. 828.

An expert witness, called to testify his opinion, is entitled to compensation over and above the fees allowed other witnesses by law.

Underhill, Ev. p. 277; 1 Redf. Wills, note 44, § 81, p. 154; 1 Rice, Ev. chap. 14, § 197.

The English practice is now settled that extra compensation to scientific witnesses may be taxed.

Lawson, Expert Ev. citing Bailey v. Kynock, L. R. 20 Eq. 632; Re Laffitte, L. R. 20 Eq. 650; Taylor, Ev. § 1126; Moore v. Adam, 5 Maule & S. 156; Willis v. Peckam, 1 Brod. & B. 515; Serern v. Olive, 3 Brod. & B. 72; Webb v. Page, Multnomah County, 14 Or. 20. And see principal case of STATE v. HENLEY.

And Oregon Sess. Laws 1885, p. 10, providing that in all criminal actions and proceedings witnesses residing within 2 miles of the place of trial, or place where they are required to appear and testify, shall not be entitled to receive their fees or mileage, is not in conflict with Oregon Const. art. 1, § 8, providing that the particular services of any man shall not be demanded without just compensation. Daly v. Multnomah County, 14 Or. 20.

And calling upon a physician to testify as an expert in answer to hypothetical questions is not calling for particular services within the meaning of a constitutional provision that if public exigencies make it necessary for the common preservation to demand any man's particular services full compensation shall be made therefor. DIXON v. PEOPLE.

So, a constitutional provision guaranteeing compulsory process to everyone charged with crime does not extend to requiring the payment by the state of the fees of the witnesses for the defendant;

1 Car. & K. 23; Betts v. Clifford, 1858, Warwick Lent Assizes; Parkinson v. Atkinson, 31 L. J. C. P. N. S. 199; Turner v. Turner, 5 Jur. N. S. 889.

To compel a person to attend, merely because he is accomplished in a particular science, art, or profession would subject the same individual to be called upon in every case in which any question in his department of knowledge is to be solved. Thus the most eminent physician might be compelled, merely for the ordinary witness fees, to attend from the remotest part of the district, and give his opinion in every trial in which a medical question should arise.

Re Roelker, 1 Sprague, 276; Atty. Gen., Petitioner, 104 Mass. 537; 12 Cent. L. J. p. 194 (1881) Current Topics; Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 1, 26 Am. Rep. 75.

Mr. James M. Graham, for the People: Contempt of court is a disobedience to the rules or orders of the court which interferes with the due administration of the law.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 777.

A court of record has power to punish, for contempt, a witness who refuses to answer a question determined by the court to be proper.

Whart. Crim. Ev. § 450; Bishop, Statutory Crimes, 2d ed. 187.

And the exercise of this power is entirely in the discretion of the court, and will not be re-examined, except when the proceedings are so grossly defective as to be void.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 800.

If an expert claims that he is exempt from the general rule concerning witnesses, the burden is on him to establish the exception.

Rogers, Expert Testimony, 2d ed. 427.

At common law no witness fees were paid, and in the absence of a statute authorizing it, no fees can now be taxed as costs, or recovered.

Fish v. Farwell, 33 Ill. App. 244; Constant v. Matteson, 22 Ill. 560; Eimer v. Eimer, 47 Ill. 375; Smith v. McLaughlin, 77 Ill. 597; Atty. Gen., Petitioner, 104 Mass. 542; Larimer County Comrs. v. Lee, 3 Colo. App. 177.

Statutes allowing costs, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 387; Cadwalader v. Harris, 76 Ill. 870.

the state guarantees to him the use of all its power in bringing them into court, but goes no further. Bennett v. Kroth, 37 Kan. 235; State v. Waters, 39 Me. 54; Avery v. State, 7 Baxt. 331. And see principal case of STATE v. HENLEY.

And a statute thereunder providing that the state or county shall pay the proper costs accrued in behalf of the state applies to costs of the state only, and not to the cost of subpoena for the defendant's witnesses, which are defendant's costs. Avery v. State, 7 Baxt. 331.

The constitutional provision that the accused shall have the right of having compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor simply means that he shall not be debarred the right of issuing subpoenas for his witnesses as in civil cases.

The rule has been laid down, however, that a fair construction of a constitutional provision that the accused in a criminal prosecution shall have a compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor would be that he has not only the right to process to compel the attendance of all classes of

Until the matter is settled by statute the practice which has hitherto prevailed in Illinois must continue, as no principle is better established than that all merely private interests are subordinate to the public welfare.

Metropolitan City R. Co. v. Chicago West Div. R. Co. 87 Ill. 318.

It is of vital interest that the tribunals which pronounce judgments shall have power to coerce the production of any relevant evidence existing within the sphere of their jurisdiction requisite to prevent them from falling into error.

Ex parte Dement, 58 Ala. 389, 25 Am. Rep. 611; Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 377, 32 Am. Rep. 573; Dilla v. State, 59 Ind. 15.

The ordinance of 1787 was superseded by the adoption of the Constitution.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 677, note 4; Strader v. Graham, 51 U. S. 10 How. 94, 13 L. ed. 342; Permoli v. Municipality No. 1, 44 U. S. 3 How. 610, 11 L. ed. 748; Willamette Iron Bridge Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 9, 31 L. ed. 632; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 671, note 4; Sands v. Manistee River Improv. Co. 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149.

The power to suppress a contempt by an immediate offender results from the first principles of judicial establishments, and must be an inseparable attendant on every superior tribunal.

Anderson, Law Dict.; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 790, note 2; Stuart v. People, 4 Ill. 395; People v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 197, 16 Am. Rep. 528; 2 Bishop, Crim. L. 8th ed. 243.

Summary punishment for contempt is not an infringement of the constitutional right of trial by jury.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 791, note 2, also p. 795; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 49(1), p. 50, note 1.

Property in its legal sense is not the thing itself, but certain rights in and over the thing, these rights being: (1) user; (2) expulsion; (3) disposition.

Lewis, Em. Dom. § 54; Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Englewood Connecting R. Co. 115 Ill. 875, 56 Am. Rep. 173; East St. Louis v. O'Flynn, 19 Ill. App. 64; Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 68; Munn v. People, 69 Ill. 89.

Appellant's skill and knowledge do not fit these conditions. He could not divest himself witnesses on his behalf, but also the right that they shall be compelled to testify. Dilla v. State, 59 Ind. 15, dissenting opinion; State v. Hornsby, 8 Rob. (La.) 554, 41 Am. Dec. 305; State v. Waters, 39 Me. 54.

And that a constitutional guaranty that an accused person shall have the right to compulsory process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his own behalf without the advancement of money or fees can only be satisfied by the production of the witnesses in court without the payment of fees or mileage in advance. State, Thurston County, v. Grimes, 7 Wash. 445.

In Kansas, pursuant to the constitutional provision guaranteeing compulsory process to everyone charged with crime, it is provided by statute that inability of the defendant to pay his witness fees in advance shall not impair his means of defense. Bennett v. Kroth, 37 Kan. 235.

And in Wisconsin the defendant in a criminal prosecution is entitled to compulsory process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf of his skill and knowledge. He could not dispose of them in the sense here intended. He could not give a purchaser either title or possession. He could not possibly dispose of his skill and knowledge so that he would not still have them.

Even where the expert has a special contract to get more than the statutory witness fees, he cannot recover on the contract.

Walker v. Cook, 83 Ill. App. 563; Smith v. McLaughlin, 77 Ill. 596; Collins v. Godefroy, 1 Barn. & Ad. 950.

A professional witness in the discharge of his duty as a good citizen is, like any other person, whether he be laborer, merchant, broker, manufacturer, or banker, compellable to attend in obedience to process, and to testify as to what he may know whether it be observed facts or accumulated knowledge acquired by study and experience.

Larimer County Comrs. v. Lee, 3 Colo. App. 177; Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 389, 25 Am. Rep. 611; Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 865, 32 Am. Rep. 573; State v. Teipner, 36 Minn. 535; Flinn v. Prairie County, 60 Ark. 204, 27 L. R. A. 669; Vise v. Hamilton County, 19 Ill. 78; Edgar County v. Mayo, 8 Ill. 83; Wright v. People, 112 Ill. 540; Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 152 Ill. 347.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the January term, 1895, of the circuit court of Sangamon county, the case of Oliver Purdy against the city of Springfield was on trial. It was a suit for damages for injury caused by a defective sidewalk. The appellant, Dr. J. N. Dixon, was called as an expert witness on the part of the city, and testified that he was a physician and surgeon; that he had practised as such twenty-one years, and nineteen of them in Springfield; that he was surgeon for five railroads running into said city, and had been such surgeon from two to seventeen years; and that he was a graduate of regular schools of medicine, and had been practicing general surgery for eighteen years. The witness was then asked this question: "Dr. Dixon, suppose a patient, a woman forty-five years of age, who had been married seventeen years, had one child twelve years ago, and a miscarriage ten years ago, never pregnant since, living with her husband all the time, doing her own work as a housewife, enjoying perfect health, should, when walking at a moderate gait, trip on the sidewalk, by reason of the end of the board tipping up, and should thereupon fall forward on her hands and knees, with such force as to make a slight abrasion on her knee, and felt no other immediate injury, but in two or three days thereafter should claim that she had falling of the womb, and that her breast, stomach, and spine had been injured by reason of said fall; what would you say as to such injuries being the probable results of such fall?" This question the witness declined to answer, stating the following as his reason for so declining: "On the ground that an expert witness is entitled to a different and greater compensation than an ordinary witness is allowed, and that an expert is not required to give expert testimony without compensation as an expert, unless a reasonable compensation shall have been paid or provided for. My reasonable fee for an expert or professional opinion in this case is $10. I have not been paid nor offered anything for compensation for my expert or professional opinion in this case, nor has said compensation been in any way promised to me or provided for. On the contrary, it has been expressly refused. Therefore I decline to testify until such fee is provided for." It was conceded that the witness knew nothing about the facts of the case, and was called as an expert only. It was also conceded that the charge of $10 as a fee, if a legal one, was reasonable, but that the city had no means provided for paying such fee, and had not promised to pay the same. The witness was brought into court by a regular subpoena, the same as any ordinary witness. The witness again stated, in answer to a question by the court, that he declined to answer because he had received no fee, nor any promise of a fee, as an expert. Thereupon the court stated to the witness that he was not entitled to receive any such fee, but that it was his duty to testify as an expert witness. In answer to a further question by the court the witness stated that he was not willing to testify, although informed by the court that it was his duty to do so, and the witness refused to answer the question. The clerk was then directed to docket a case without prepayment or tender of fees. West v. State, 1 Wis. 209.

So, requiring a citizen to attend and testify in a criminal prosecution without the prepayment or tender of fees does not constitute taking private property for public use without compensation. West v. State, 1 Wis. 209.

And in Neely v. State, 4 Baxt. 174, a constitutional provision that no man's particular services shall be demanded, or property taken or applied to public use, without consent or just compensation, was held not to apply to services as juror, the court saying that it is one of the implied and necessary conditions upon which men form governments, that sacrifices must sometimes be made by individuals for the common good, for which no compensation can be claimed.

See also Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 365, 32 Am. Rep. 573; and Buchman v. State, 69 Ind. 1, 26 Am. Rep. 75, 25 Am. Rep. 619, note, supra, III.

III. The rule as applied to expert testimony.

The duty of a person to give evidence material to the issues in a pending case devolves upon him as a citizen in view of the protection which he receives from the laws of the country in the matter of his personal liberty and of the protection of his property, and such duty devolves as much upon a physician who is required to testify as an expert in answer to hypothetical questions as it does upon the ordinary witness testifying to facts within his knowledge. DIXON v. STATE; Flinn v. Prairie County, 60 Ark. 204, 27 L. R. A. 669; Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 389, 25 Am. Rep. 611. And see dissenting opinion in Dills v. State, 69 Ind. 15.
39 L. R. A.

An expert witness who is called upon to answer an hypothetical question involving a special knowledge peculiar to his calling is merely required to do what every other good citizen is required to do in behalf of public peace and good order and in promotion of public good. DIXON v. PEOPLE.

And a medical practitioner called upon to attend a person injured, and who makes a post-mortem examination, cannot decline to state the cause of the man's death upon a prosecution for his mur-against the witness for contempt, and the court stated to the witness that it was the order of the court he should answer the question, and he still declined to do so. Thereupon the court found him guilty of contempt, and for such contempt fined him in the sum of $25. This order fining the witness was excepted to, and his counsel made a motion for remission of the fine, which motion was overruled by the court. To the order overruling the motion, exception was taken, and an appeal was brought to the appellate court. The appellate court has affirmed the judgment of the circuit court, and given a certificate of importance. The present appeal is prosecuted from such judgment of affirmance so entered by the appellate court.

The question in this case is whether a physician, who has been subpoenaed and is interrogated as an expert witness only, can be punished as for a contempt for refusing to testify, when no compensation greater than that allowed to an ordinary witness has been paid to him, or promised to him. The question here involved has never been directly decided by this court. In Wright v. People, 112 Ill. 540, a physician, before appearing as a witness, had visited a patient professionally, and had stated while testifying as a witness, without any objection on his part, the condition of the patient whom he had thus visited. He was then asked his opinion as to the cause of the symptoms he had thus discovered to exist, but refused to answer without a professional fee being paid or secured to him therefor. In that case it was held that the witness could not refuse to state the cause of the symptoms he had discovered to exist, upon the ground that such statement was pertinent to the subject about which he had already testified voluntarily. But no opinion was there expressed concerning the precise question here involved. In Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 152 Ill. 347, the question arose whether a court of equity had a right to compel payment for the services of the solicitor of a guardian ad litem of an infant defendant, and for the time and services of two physicians who were expert witnesses for said guardian ad litem. In that case we said (p. 354): "The general rule that prevails in this state is that solicitors' fees and experts' fees cannot be taxed as costs against unsuccessful litigants in chancery suits, and that the discretion of the chancery courts in awarding costs in such cases is confined to statutory allowances."

The ruling in the Hutchinson Case, however, is not decisive of the question which is presented in the case at bar. At common law no witness fees were paid. Costs are a creature of the statute, and, in the absence of a statute authorizing it, no fees can now be taxed as costs, or recovered. 8 Bl. Com. 369; Constant v. Mat-teson, 22 Ill. 560; Eimer v. Eimer, 47 Ill. 373; Smith v. McLaughlin, 77 Ill. 596; Larimer County Comrs. v. Lee, 32 Colo. App. 177.

Section 47 of chapter 53 of the Revised Statutes of this state provides that "every witness attending in his own county upon trials in the court of record, shall be entitled to receive the sum of $1 for each day's attendance, and 5 cents per mile each way for necessary travel." There is also a provision for paying witnesses from a foreign county in criminal cases. As, therefore, such fees only can be taxed as costs as are provided for in the statute, and as only such witness fees as are specified in said § 47 are provided for in the statute, it is manifest that no extra compensation for the services of an expert witness, testifying to a matter of opinion, can be taxed as costs against the defeated party. Many of the cases in England which are referred to as sustaining the doctrine that such expert witness may be allowed an extra fee for his services are based upon the statute of 5 Eliz. chap. 9, which enacted that the witness must "have tendered to him, according to his countenance or calling, his reasonable charges." Mr. Greenleaf, in his work on Evidence (15th ed. § 310), says that "in this country these reasonable expenses are settled by statutes, at a fixed sum for each day's actual attendance, and for each mile's travel, from the residence of the witness to the place of trial and back, without regard to the employment of the witness, or his rank in life." Our statutes treat all witnesses alike, regardless of their "countenance or calling," whether they be physicians or lawyers or ordinary citizens, so far as the question of the taxation of their fees as costs is concerned. Witnesses are not entitled to special privileges on account of their rank or employment. Mr. Best, in his work on Evidence (8th ed. p. 112 der, upon the ground that his knowledge was obtained by professional skill and from the deductions of experience which were his own property, and for which the county refused to pay. Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 365, 32 Am. Rep. 573.

And the right to compel an expert witness to testify as such, and to give his professional opinion without compensation other than the ordinary witness fee, is not affected by the fact that he is called upon in a civil action. DIXON v. PEOPLE.

The rule has been laid down, however, that the skill and professional experience of a man are so far his individual capital and property that he cannot be compelled to confer them gratuitously upon anyone, and that neither the public nor any private person has a right to extort services from him in the line of his profession without adequate compensation. Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 1, 26 Am. Rep. 75, 25 Am. Rep. 619, note, quoting Ordronaux, Medical Jurisprudence, §§ 114, 115.

And that while a witness called upon to depose to facts which he saw is bound as a matter of public duty to speak to such facts, as without such testimony the course of justice must be stopped, one who is called in an action to depose to a matter of opinion depending upon his skill in a particular trade is under no such obligation, and has a right before being examined to demand from the party calling him a compensation for his loss of time. Webb v. Page, 1 Car. & K. 23.

As to right to compel experts to testify without compensation other than that allowed to witnesses in general, see also Flinn v. Prairie County (Ark.) 27 L. R. A. 669, and note.

IV. General rules with relation to civil cases. . .

a. Necessity of payment or tender.

While the rules laid down in the preceding subdivisions are applicable alike to civil and criminal proceedings, it is to be observed from an examination of the cases that they have been adopted and acted upon almost exclusively with relation to criminal matters. With reference to civil cases and proceedings the general and common-law rule which in a number of instances has been adopted.

note 8), refers to a passage in the work of Jeremiah Bentham, and puts the following illustration: "Were the Prince of Wales, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the lord high chancellor to be passing in the same coach while a chimney sweeper and a barrow woman were in a dispute about a half-penny worth of apples, and the chimney sweeper and the barrow woman were to see proper to call upon them for their evidence, could they refuse it? No! most certainly not!" Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 390, 25 Am. Rep. 611. It follows that in this case the court could not fix a compensation to be paid to appellant, nor order his fee of $10 to be taxed as costs, nor order the party calling the witness to pay or secure to him compensation. It is claimed, however, that in a civil suit a witness, who is called to testify as an expert only, should not be punished for contempt in refusing to testify because no compensation is provided for his professional opinion, other than ordinary witness fees. The power to compel the production of testimony necessary to the decision of issues involved in pending lawsuits is one of the rights and powers which is inherent in the very organization of courts of justice. Contempt of court is a disobedience to the rules or orders of the court, which interferes with the due administration of the law. 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 777. The refusal of a witness to answer any question which he may be lawfully required to answer is a contempt of court, and, if he persists in his refusal, he may be punished accordingly. Samuel v. People, 164 Ill. 885.

The grounds upon which the right to such extra compensation on the part of expert witnesses has been sustained have generally been three in number:

The first ground is that the time of the expert witness is more valuable than the time of ordinary men, and that, by attendance at court to give his testimony, such a witness meets with a loss of time. The better and more recent authorities, however, both in England and this country, now unite in the view that the right to such extra compensation cannot be properly rested upon loss of time, as a basis. In Loneragan v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co. 7 Bing. 729, Chief Justice Tindal said: "There is no reason for assuming that the time of medical men and attorneys is more valuable than that of others whose livelihood depends on their own exertions." In Collins v. Godefrey, 1 Barn. & Ad. 950, Lord Tenterden, Ch. J., said that "a party cannot maintain an action for compensation for loss of time in attending a trial as a witness." Moor v. Adam, 5 Maule & S. 156; Larimer County Comrs. v. Lee, 8 Colo. App. 177; Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 389, 25 Am. Rep. 611. Loss of time, as a ground for claiming extra compensation for services as a witness, applies as well to all ordinary witnesses as to expert witnesses. It is conceded that when any witness, whether he is an expert witness or not, is acquainted with any facts which bear upon the matter in controversy in a litigation, he is obliged to testify; and a distinction is drawn between the testimony of an expert witness who is acquainted with the facts about which he testifies, and an expert witness who is called upon to give his opinion, in reply to a hypothetical question, without any knowledge of facts. Manifestly the witness who goes to court and testifies as to the facts of which he knows is subjected to a loss of his time as much as a witness who goes there to testify as an expert upon a mere matter of opinion.

The second ground upon which the claim for such extra compensation is based is that the skill and accumulated knowledge of the expert are his property, and that a man's property should not be taken without just compensation. Various definitions have been given of property. Webster defines property to be "the exclusive right of possessing, enjoying, and disposing of a thing." This court has adopted this definition in Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Englewood Connecting R. Co. 115 Ill. 375, 56 Am. Rep. 173. Blackstone says, "Property consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all his acquisitions, without any control or diminution, save only by the laws of the land." 1 Bl. Com. 138. It has also been said that property, in its legal sense, is not the thing itself, but certain rights in and over the thing, those rights being: (1) user; (2) exclusion; (3) disposition. Lewis, Em. Dom. § 54. This court has also said, in discussing the right to make and enforce contracts as being included in the right to acquire property, that labor is property, and that the laborer has the same and confirmed by statutory enactment is that a witness is entitled to demand his fees and mileage before he obeys a subpoena. Young v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 273. And see cases cited below.

And that a witness is not bound to attend court or remain in attendance unless his fees and expenses have been paid or tendered. Atwood v. Scott, 99 Mass. 177, 96 Am. Dec. 728; Brocas v. Lloyd, 28 Beav. 129, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 758.

And that a witness will not be punished for contempt for failure to attend as a witness in a civil case unless his fees have been paid or tendered. Bonner v. People, 40 Ill. App. 628; Bliss v. Brainard, 42 N. H. 255.

Within this rule a witness cannot be deemed to have been lawfully subpoenaed for the purpose of punishment for nonattendance unless the fee be paid or tendered, where the statute expressly requires that the fee shall be paid, fixing the amount. Ogden v. Gibbons, 5 N. J. L. 513.

And a witness who was called by one party to an action and testified on his behalf, and then departed, cannot be attached by the opposite party as an absent witness where he had not subpoenaed him or paid or tendered him fees as required by statute; the witness should have been duly subpoenaed by him if he wished to avail himself of his testimony. Beaulieu v. Parsons, 2 Minn. 26.

And the party on whose behalf a witness gives evidence, if required by the other side to produce him for cross-examination, is bound in the first instance to pay him his reasonable expenses though he may be out of the jurisdiction. Richards v. Goddard, L. R. 17 Eq. 238, 43 L. J. Ch. N. S. 144, 22 Week. Rep. 204, 29 L. T. N. S. 884.

So, a party made a witness by his adversary is as much entitled to fees as a condition precedent to create a duty to attend as a third person. Bonner v. People, 40 Ill. App. 628; Anderson v. Johnson, 1 Sandf. 713; Hewlett v. Brown, 1 Bosw. 555.

And when such fees are not paid he could not be punished for a contempt for not attending unless first brought up on attachment or served with an order to show cause. Hewlett v. Brown, 1 Bosw. 555.

right to sell his labor, and to contract with reference thereto, as has any other property owner. Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79. Labor is defined by Webster to be "physical toil or bodily exertion," and also to be "hard muscular effort directed to some useful end, as agriculture, manufactures, and the like." He also defines labor to be "intellectual exertion; mental effort, as the labor of compiling a history." It is not exactly accurate to say that the mere abstract knowledge acquired in the study of a special employment is of itself property. It is the right to apply that knowledge to the accomplishment of a particular result which constitutes property. For instance, if the appellant had been required to answer a question put to him with a view of prescribing a remedy for the relief of Mrs. Purdy, the plaintiff in the suit in which he was called to testify as a witness, then it might be said if he was not offered any compensation, that he was deprived of a property right. But where a physician is asked a hypothetical question and is called upon to give his opinion upon the facts stated in the hypothetical question while he is testifying as a witness in court, he is not thereby required to practise his healing art. He is merely making a statement, not for the purpose of effecting a cure, or relieving a patient, but for the purpose of enabling the court and the jury to understand correctly a case which is before the court. There is no infringement here of a property right. It may be conceded that in a certain sense the knowledge of the physician, acquired by special study, is property; but the question here is, not, so much whether certain knowledge is property, as whether the requirement that he shall answer a hypothetical question is a taking of his property. Where he is required to make an application of his knowledge to a particular case, so as to secure a particular result,—such as, for instance, the curing of a disease or the healing of a wound,—then he would undoubtedly be entitled to compensation. A physician or surgeon cannot be punished for a contempt for refusing to make a post-mortem examination unless paid therefor; nor can he be required to prepare himself in advance for testifying in court, by making an examination, or performing an operation, or resorting to a certain amount of study, without being paid therefor. But when he is required to answer a hypothetical question, which involves a special knowledge peculiar to his calling, he is merely required to do what every good citizen is required to do in behalf of public peace and public order, and in promotion of public good. Counsel for appellant states that many of the cases which have held that expert witnesses can be required to testify without being paid are criminal cases, where the interest of the state and the interest of the public demand of the physician that he should yield up something of his knowledge for the benefit of society at large. This position, however, is inconsistent with the contention that when an expert witness is required to testify without compensation his property right is interfered with. A man's property cannot be taken from him by the state without compensation. It makes no difference whether it is to be taken for the good of the public or for the benefit of a private individual, so far as the right to compensation is concerned. It is true that private property cannot be condemned by the state for a private purpose. Private property can only be taken for a public purpose. But in either case it must be paid for. To concede, therefore, that in a criminal prosecution conducted by the state a physician may be required to testify without compensation, because it is for the public good, is to concede that his knowledge may be made use of by a court of justice without his being paid therefor. We conceive, however, that it can make no difference whether the suit in which the witness is called upon to testify is a suit between private parties, or is a suit between the state and an alleged criminal. In either case the object is to promote public justice, and to aid the due administration of justice. It is just as important to the peace and good order of society that private controversies should be settled upon correct proofs, and in accordance with truthful testimony, as that criminals who violate the laws of the state should be punished. It is the duty of the ordinary witness and of the expert witness to testify as to facts within his knowledge which bear upon the decision of controversies in the courts. Such duty de-

And when a party is compelled to attend court and be examined in behalf of a co-plaintiff or a co-defendant as to any matter in which he is not jointly interested or liable, he is entitled to pay as a witness. Penny v. Brink, 75 N. C. 68.

The rule that a witness may refuse to be sworn unless the expenses of his attending the assize, as well as his traveling expenses, were paid him when he was summoned, however, does not apply where the witness was a party to the action, who was present necessarily for the purpose of his defense, and not merely under the subpoena of the other party. Reed v. Fairless, 3 Fost. & F. 268, 8 L. T. N. S. 858.

And a party testifying before an auditor is not entitled to fees as a witness in New Hampshire, whether testifying in his own favor or for his adversary, and he cannot refuse to testify because such fees have not been paid. Whitney v. Pierce, 40 N. H. 114.

So, one who is present in court may be compelled to testify without the payment of his fees, under Wis. Rev. Stat. § 4057, providing that no person 89 L. R. A.

shall be subject to attend as a witness unless his fees are paid or tendered him. Rozek v. Redzinski, 87 Wis. 525.

And it has been held generally that if a witness be in court, having come there on other business, he cannot refuse to be sworn, though his expenses were not tendered. Blackburn v. Hargreave, 2 Lewin, C. C. 206; Rex v. Sadler, 4 Car. & P. 218. But the contrary was held in Hurd v. Swan, 4 Denio, 75.

And in Bowles v. Johnson, 1 W. Bl. 36, it was held that the service of a subpoena without the tender of expenses is not sufficient to bring a witness into contempt though he comes to court and refuses to be sworn.

So, an action for a penalty may be maintained against a witness for nonattendance though his fees had not been paid, where he had expressly waived such payment. Hurd v. Swan, 4 Denio, 75.

It is to be observed, however, that some of the states have made provision in specified cases for the payment of fees and expenses of witnesses by the county on proof of service as a witness, or for volves upon him as a citizen, and in view of the protection which he receives from the laws of the country, in the matter of his personal liberty, and in the matter of the protection of his property, this duty devolves as much upon a physician who is required to testify as an expert witness in answer to hypothetical questions as it does upon the ordinary witness testifying to facts within his knowledge. In Vise v. Hamilton County, 19 Ill. 78, we held that an attorney appointed by the court to defend a criminal could not recover for his services from the county in which the prosecution was conducted, and that a court might compel an attorney, as one of its officers, to defend a prisoner, in case of his inability to employ counsel. It has never been supposed that to require the performance of such professional services without compensation was the taking of property without just compensation. If the precedent is once established that expert witnesses must be paid a reasonable compensation for their testimony, then it will not be long before such testimony will be offered to the highest bidder. The temptation will be to give opinions in favor of that party to the suit who will pay the highest price. The testimony of expert witnesses will thus become partisan and one-sided. The theory upon which such witnesses are required to testify in cases like this is that they are amici curiæ, and that, testifying under the sanction of an oath, they do so, not with intent to take the part of either contestant in the suit, but with a view to arriving at the truth of the matter, and for the purpose of aiding the court to pronounce a correct judgment. In Redfield on the Law of Wills (marginal page 155, § 15, note 46), it is said: "It being purely a matter of conventional arrangement between professional experts and those who desire to employ them as witnesses, both in regard to their acting as such, and also their making preparations to enable them to give such testimony, it virtually places a price upon such testimony in the market, and its price is likely to range somewhat according to its ability to aid one or other of the parties litigant. The tendency of this is to render it partisan and one-sided, as a general thing." Moreover, if a physician is to be allowed extra compensation as an expert witness, then men pursuing other occupations which require special experience will have the same right to demand extra fees. A banker will claim that he has earned extra compensation, a merchant will make the same claim, and so with men engaged in other branches of business. It will be easy to say in such cases that the testimony called for is the result of special knowledge and acquired skill, and therefore should be paid for. Almost every lawsuit involves testimony which is in the nature of opinion, in addition to testimony which speaks of the mere facts within the knowledge of the witness. For instance, A sells B a certain quantity of wheat, and delivers the same, and sues for the price of the wheat. One witness testifies as to the contract, which he heard the parties make. Another testifies to the delivery of the wheat, which he saw delivered. These witnesses testify to actual facts heard and seen. But still another witness, who may know nothing about the facts, may yet be required to state the value of the wheat at the time of the contract, or at the time of the delivery; and he may be required to testify from his knowledge of the market prices of wheat, as given in the market quotations. Such a witness, however, as to the value, and as to market prices, is not regarded as an expert witness who is entitled to extra compensation.

Counsel for appellant also claim, as a third ground, that the accumulated knowledge and skill of the expert witness may be treated, if not as property, yet as "particular services." This contention is based upon the reasoning of the court in the case of Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 1, 26 Am. Rep. 75, which is the leading case upon the subject in opposition to the views here expressed. That case proceeds mainly upon the ground that the services called for are included within "particular services," as those words are used in the Constitution of Indiana. Section 21 of the Indiana Bill of Rights provides that "no man's particular services shall be demanded without just compensation." The Indiana court there held that the services of an expert witness were "particular services," and their collection by methods other than prepayment by the party calling the witness. Under such provisions it is obvious that prepayment could not be demanded as a condition precedent to attendance and service. But the cases decided under such provisions have turned upon other points, and have therefore been omitted.

For an example or illustration of such provisions, see Smith v. Barger, 9 Yerg. 322, and Morris v. Rippey, 4 Jones, L. 583, supra, 1.

In the courts of the United States witnesses are obliged to obey a subpoena to attend as a witness if they have the means to travel, and attend whether the fees are advanced or not, and are liable to punishment for contempt for failure to do so. Norris v. Hassler, 23 Fed. Rep. 581; United States v. Durling, 4 Biss. 500.

And if a witness has not such means it is the duty of the proper officer of the government to furnish him with them, and an attachment will issue and the court will punish him where he could pay his expenses and would not come because the money was not tendered. United States v. Durling, 4 Biss. 500.

89 L. R. A.

But a person subpoenaed as a witness in a civil cause pending in a United States court who demands his traveling fee and fee for one day's attendance at the time, which are not paid, is not subject to attachment for contempt for failing to obey the writ where the statute of the state in which the action arose provides that a witness who makes such a demand is not obliged to obey in case of refusal. Re Thomas, 1 Dill. 420.

b. Sufficiency of payment or tender.

An attachment will not issue against a witness for failure to attend court in response to a subpoena where the payment or tender of fees and expenses was insufficient. Horne v. Smith, 6 Taunt. 9; Chapman v. Pointon, 2 Strange, 1150; Brocas v. Lloyd, 23 Beav. 129, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 758.

Thus, a witness who is paid his traveling fee for one day's attendance, and attends on that day, must be tendered his fees for each succeeding day if he is wanted for a further day; but it is not necessary that he should be served with a subpoena each time, where the statute makes no express pro-that, therefore, under the Constitution, they should be paid for. No such provision as the one referred to as being contained in the Constitution of Indiana exists in the Constitution of Illinois. Counsel for appellant say, however, that article 2 of the ordinance of 1787 provided as follows: "No man shall be deprived of his life, liberty, or property but by the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land; and should the public exigencies make it necessary for the common preservation, to take any man's property, or to demand his particular services, full compensation shall be made for the same." It is to be here noted that by the use of the expression, "to take any man's property, or to demand his particular services," the article seems to draw a distinction between property and particular services. Therefore, if the knowledge of the expert witness is included within the meaning of particular services, it cannot be regarded as property. However this may be, the ordinance of 1787 is not in force in the state of Illinois. In the recent case of People, Woodyatt, v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451, this court held that the ordinance of 1787 was passed by the Congress of the Confederation for the government of the Northwest Territory, and has no force in Illinois, except so far as its principles are embodied in the state Constitution. In that case the whole subject is elaborately discussed, and many authorities are referred to, sustaining the position there taken. The decision in Buchman v. State, supra, was rendered by a divided court, consisting of five judges. Two of the judges (Chief Justice Biddle and Judge Niblack) dissented from the opinion in that case. The views of the dissenting judges are given in the case of Dills v. State, 59 Ind. 15, and the reasoning there is cogent and convincing; and the opinion adopts the views of the supreme court of Alabama, as announced in the case of Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 889, 25 Am. Rep. 611. The latter case is the leading case in this country in favor of the views herein expressed, and its line of reasoning is substantially adopted in what has been here stated. The case holds that the law allows no excuse for withholding evidence which is relevant to the matters in question before its tribunals, and is not protected from disclosure by some principle of legal policy; that, the administration of justice being a source of mutual benefit to all the members of the community, each is under the obligation to aid in furthering it, as a matter of public duty, and that "the same principle which justifies the bringing of the mechanic from his workshop, the merchant from his store-houses, the broker from his 'change, or the lawyer from his engagements, to testify in regard to some matter which he has learned in the exercise of his art or profession, authorizes the summoning of a physician, or surgeon, or skilled apothecary, to testify of a like matter, when relevant to a cause pending for determination in a judicial tribunal," and that "a physician, like any other person, may be called to testify as an expert in a judicial investigation, whether it be of a civil or criminal nature, without being paid for his testimony as for a professional opinion, and upon refusal to testify is punishable as for a contempt." This decision of the supreme court of Alabama has been followed and adopted in the following cases: State v. Teipner, 36 Minn. 535; Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 365, 32 Am. Rep. 573; Larimer County Comrs. v. Lee, 8 Colo. App. 177; Flinn v. Prairie County, 60 Ark. 204, 27 L. R. A. 669. Upon this subject, Mr. Rogers, in his able and exhaustive work on Expert Testimony (2d ed. p. 424, § 188) says: "There can be no doubt that professional men are not entitled, in this country, to claim any additional compensation when testifying as ordinary witnesses to facts which happened to fall under their observation. But another question arises when they are summoned to testify as to facts of science with which they have become familiar by means of special study and investigation, or to express opinions based upon the skill acquired from such researches, as to conclusions which ought to be drawn from certain given facts. Whether they can be compelled to testify in such cases, when no other compensation has been tendered than the usual fees of witnesses testifying to ordinary facts, is a point upon which the cases are not in harmony. In this country vision for such a case. Mattocks v. Wheaton, 10 Vt. 498.

And a witness subpoenaed and paid for one day's attendance who attends on the day named and then applies to the party subpoenaing him for further payment of fees, which is refused, and he thereupon leaves court, does not incur the statutory penalty for nonattendance. Courtney v. Baker, 3 Denio, 27.

And a capias will not issue where the witness had been in attendance the day before and had been paid his fees for that day, and had not been paid or tendered any fees for further attendance, though he had not asked for them. Atwood v. Scott, 99 Mass. 177, 98 Am. Dec. 728.

So, a witness who is subpoenaed to attend court on Tuesday, and is paid his per diem fees from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive, who returns to his home and is offered 60 cents on Saturday evening as his per diem for the next Monday, which he refuses, and neglects to appear on Monday when the cause is tried, is not subject to the penalty imposed by law for nonattendance, as he is entitled to a tender of his fees for attendance on Sunday as 39 L. R. A.

well as other days of the week during the sitting of the court. Muscott v. Runge, 27 How. Pr. 85.

In Holden v. Shove, 1 R. I. 287, however, it was held that a witness upon whom subpoena was served and fees paid him for one day only, who does not attend when the case is reached about a month later, may be attached, as he is bound to attend at the trial unless he has given notice that he will refuse to appear without payment of the fees due to him, but that in case of such notice his fees must be paid up to and including the time when his testimony is required.

In England an attachment will not be granted against a witness for not obeying a subpoena to attend at a trial unless the whole expenses of the journey and of the necessary stay at the place of trial be tendered at the time of serving the subpoena. Fuller v. Prentice, 1 H. Bl. 49; Ashton v. Haigh, 2 Chitty, 201.

And a witness is entitled to her reasonable expenses for traveling in the mode suited to her station of life, and the particular circumstances in which she may then happen to be placed. And where such witness has a sick child which is obliged the cases are nearly balanced, and the question must be regarded as still an open one although the weight of authority rather inclines to the theory that the expert may be required to answer the question without additional compensation." As has already been stated, we prefer to adopt the views announced by the supreme court of Alabama, and in the cases following the Alabama decision. We cannot close this opinion without quoting and indorsing the following views expressed by the Texas court of appeals in Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 365, 32 Am. Rep. 578: "It is to be regretted that a member of a profession so distinguished for liberal culture and high sense of honor and duty should refuse to testify in a cause pending before the courts of his country, involving the life or liberty of a fellow being and the rightful administration of the laws of a common country. Dr. Spohn has doubtless been misled, in taking the position he did, by the misconceptions of certain writers on medical jurisprudence."

For the reasons above stated, we have arrived at the conclusion that the judgments below were correct. Accordingly the judgments of the Appellate Court and of the Circuit Court are affirmed.

Boggs, J., having passed upon the case in the appellate court, took no part in this decision.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Tennessee

John HENLEY et al.

(98 Tenn. 665.)

1. The legislature has unlimited power to act in its own sphere of legislation except so far as restrained by the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the state.
2. A statute which does not violate some provision of the Constitution cannot be annulled by the courts whether its provisions are wise or unwise, or whether its operations be hurtful or beneficial.
3. Ordinary services such as may be required of all citizens or officials by general or valid special laws are not particular services within the provision of Const. art. 1, § 21, providing that no man's particular services shall be demanded without the consent of his representatives, or just compensation.
4. The constitutional guaranty of compulsory process to require witnesses to attend court and give evidence does not require the state to provide for the expense of obtaining their attendance.
5. A statute providing that the state or county will pay costs of criminal prosecution only in certain classes of cases is not partial or class legislation.

6. A statute denying fees and costs or mileage to witnesses who reside within 5 miles of the place at which attendance is required, while allowing them in other cases, is not so unreasonable and capricious a classification of witnesses as to make the statute partial and unconstitutional.

7. The right to a fair trial, involved in the constitutional provision for trial by jury, is not infringed by a statute making the costs and fees payable to officers and witnesses in a criminal case depend on conviction, where this provision does not apply to the jury and applies to a justice of the peace only in cases where his power is merely to bind over the accused for trial in a tribunal in which the justice has no voice.

8. Reference to laws repealed is not necessary in a statute which repeals them only by necessary implication.

(Snodgrass, Ch. J., dissents.)

(May 29, 1897.)

A PPEAL by the state from a judgment of the Criminal Court for Shelby County taxing costs to the clerk, sheriff, justice of the to travel with her she must be tendered a sufficient amount of money to pay for the conveyance of the child in the manner required by its condition, as well as for her own conveyance. Dixon v. Lee, 1 Cramp. M. & R. 645, 5 Tyrw. 180, 8 Dowl. P. C. 259.

And a witness who is served with a subpoena, and given conduct money only, no tender of a reasonable amount for her expenses in going back having been made, who goes to the place where the court is sitting without making any further demand, but refuses to proceed to the court-house unless such expenses are paid, is not subject to attachment for disobedience to the subpoena. Newton v. Harland, 1 Scott, N. R. 502, 1 Mann. & G. 968, 9 Dowl. P. C. 16, 1 Wollaston, P. C. 63, 4 Jur. 992.

So, a witness who is paid a shilling upon being summoned as a witness, and receives a promise to pay as much more as would be required when the witnesses came, is not bound to attend, under the English statute providing that the person summoning the witnesses shall pay sufficient charges for travel according to the distance, as the witness is not bound to accept such promise. Goodwin v. West, Cro. Car. 540.

And a witness is justified under 5 Eliz. chap. 9, in refusing to give evidence before the examination unless he was first paid for his attendance at the rate of one guinea a day, and an attachment against a witness for not obeying a subpoena will not be granted under that act, unless the whole of the necessary expenses of going to the place of trial and of returning from it, and also during the stay there, has been tendered him together with one guinea a day for expenses of living. Re Working Men's Mut. Soc. L. R. 21 Ch. Div. 581, 51 L. J. Ch. N. S. 850, 80 Week. Rep. 938.

An attachment against a witness for nonattendance pursuant to the command of a subpoena will not be denied, however, on the ground that no conduct money was tendered, where the witness resided at the place where the cause was to be heard. Jacob v. Hungate, 8 Dowl. P. C. 456.

peace, and witnesses in a proceeding against defendants for grand larceny, of which charge they were acquitted. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. G. W. Pickle, for the State:

No right to costs existed at common law. Costs are a purely statutory creation.

Mooney v. State, 2 Yerg. 578; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Pl. & Pr. 110; Morgan v. Pickard, 86 Tenn. 208.

As regards the state's or government's liability for costs, the strictest rule prevails.

State v. Odom, 98 Tenn. 446.

The general government and the states are exempt from the payment of costs, or suit or judgment for same, except where costs shall be given as a matter of grace and favor the statute.

8 Bl. Com. 899; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 314, 316, 828; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Pl. & Pr. 151, 152; United States v. Barker, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 395, 4 L. ed. 271; The Antelope, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 546, 6 L. ed. 723; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 161.

A statute making the state liable for all costs of criminal cases is construed to mean only state costs, and not to embrace defendant's costs.

State v. Barton, 3 Humph. 18; Prince v. State, 7 Humph. 137; Tucker v. State, 2 Head, 556.

The counties share the rights and exemption of the state in this respect.

State v. Blackburn, 61 Ark. 407.

Courts have nothing to do with the mere policy, or impolicy, of any legislation.

Sutton v. State, 96 Tenn. 698, 33 L. R. A. 589; Ballentine v. Pulaski, 15 Lea, 684; Lynn v. Polk, 8 Lea, 229; Peck v. State, 86 Tenn. 262; Williams v. Nashville, 89 Tenn. 488; Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls, 90 Tenn. 481; Davis v. State, 3 Lea, 378; McGinnis v. State, 9 Humph. 47, 49 Am. Dec. 697.

The legislature has unlimited power of legislation, except so far as it is constrained by the Constitution.

Davis v. State, 3 Lea, 377; Hope v. Deaderick, 8 Humph. 8, 47 Am. Dec. 597; Bell v. Bank of Nashville, Peck (Tenn.) 269; Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 89 Tenn. 497, 12 L. R. A. 70.

That construction of constitutions and statutes will be favored which will sustain the validity of the latter.

And a witness who receives a shilling upon being summoned to attend at a place other than his residence, admitting that he had received a guinea from the opposite party, and that the shilling was a reasonable sum, is bound to attend, and will be held liable in an action for not obeying the subpoena. Betteley v. M'Leod, 3 Bing. N. C. 405.

So, an attachment will issue against a witness who positively refused to attend, where he was regularly summoned and money tendered him for his expenses, which he did not object to on account of insufficiency. Andrews v. Andrews, Coleman, 119, 2 Johns. Cas. 109.

And it is not necessary to an attachment against a witness for failure to attend court in response to a subpoena that the sum tendered by way of expenses was insufficient where the witness made no objection on that ground at the time, but offered to pay his own expenses. Goff v. Mills, 2 Dowl. & L. 23, 18 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 227, 8 Jur. 758.

39 L. R. A.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Crider, 91 Tenn. 506; Horne v. Memphis & O. R. Co. 1 Coldw. 74; Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls, 90 Tenn. 486; Meyer v. Berlanti, 39 Minn. 438, 1 L. R. A. 777.

The statutes are not declared invalid unless their unconstitutionality appears beyond any reasonable doubt.

Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls, 90 Tenn. 466.

Mere ordinary services, such as are or may be required in due and regular course of administration of the laws and of the public service, of all citizens or officials, or of such classes as may be designated by general or valid special laws, are not "particular services."

Neely v. State, 4 Baxt. 179; House v. Whitis, 5 Baxt. 690; Wright v. State, 3 Heisk. 256.

The question is not one to be settled by consideration of the hardship that may result. It is a question of constitutional power, not a question of policy or expediency.

Avery v. State, 7 Baxt. 328.

The power to disallow costs and fees, even of innocent persons, has been freely exercised by the courts when required for the protection of the public.

Daly v. Mulnomah County, 14 Or. 20; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 806; Vise v. Hamilton County, 19 Ill. 78; Rove v. Yuba County, 17 Cal. 61; Huntingdon County v. Com. 72 Pa. 80; Posey v. Mobile County, 50 Ala. 6; Arkansas County v. Freeman, 31 Ark. 266; Johnston v. Lewis & Clarke Counties, 2 Mont. 159.

The "particular services" clause of the Indiana Constitution has been invoked successfully in behalf of expert witnesses.

Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 1, 26 Am. Rep. 75; Dills v. State, 59 Ind. 15.

The Indiana decisions as to experts stand alone, and are opposed to the entire current of recent decisions.

Ex parte Dement, 58 Ala. 389, 25 Am. Rep. 611; Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 365, 32 Am. Rep. 573; State v. Teipner, 36 Minn. 535; Larimer County Comrs. v. Lee, 3 Colo. 177; Flinn v. Prairie County, 60 Ark. 204, 27 L. R. A. 669.

Ordinary services of nonexpert witnesses are not "particular services."

Israel v. State, 8 Ind. 467; Washington v. Nashville, 1 Swan, 177; Rogers, Expert Testimony, 2d ed. 425; Bennett v. Kroth, 37 Kan. 235; Avery v. State, 7 Baxt. 331.

The legislature determines for itself, and:

And see dictum in Hurd v. Swan, 4 Denio, 75, citing Goodwin v. West, Cro. Car. 540, to the same effect.

Professional witnesses have a right, under 15 & 16 Vict. chap. 78, providing for a scale of allowances to different witnesses according to their station in life, to demand compensation for loss of time at the rate of a guinea a day before they submit to be examined, although they reside in the town in which the examination was conducted. Clark v. Gill, 1 Kay & J. 19, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 711, 2 Week. Rep. 652, L. R. 2 Eq. 1108.

And an auctioneer summoned as a witness in the chancery division is entitled to one pound and one shilling a day for his loss of time, together with first-class return railway fare from his place of abode, and he may refuse to give evidence until this amount is tendered him. Re Working Men's Mut. Soc. L. R. 21 Ch. Div. 861, 51 L. J. Ch. N. S. 850, 30 Week. Rep. 938.

F. H. B.

conclusively, whether a law is good or bad, and whether it is "contrary to the public good."

Sutton v. State, 96 Tenn. 698, 38 L. R. A. 589; Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 89 Tenn. 511, 12 L. R. A. 70; Davis v. State, 8 Lea, 377.

Fair and impartial trial is to be understood in a practical, not an Utopian, sense.

The Constitution requires the preservation of jury trial in its essential elements, such as its composition of twelve men, unanimity of verdict, etc., in all cases where it existed at the formation of the Constitution.

McGinnis v. State, 9 Humph. 47, 49 Am. Dec. 697; Trigally v. Memphis, 6 Coldw. 382; Hogan v. Chattanooga, 2 Tenn. Legal Rep. 12; Eason v. State, 6 Baxt. 475; Cooley, Const. Lim. 390, note.

Statutes which by direct enactment make reasonable regulations as to evidence do not violate the right of trial by jury.

State v. Yardley, 95 Tenn. 563, 34 L. R. A. 656; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Crider, 91 Tenn. 506.

In the matter of the qualification of jurors, number of challenges, etc., the power of the legislature is unlimited, except by the requirement as to an "impartial jury."

Burke v. State, MSS. (Jackson, 1875); Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578.

Mr. James M. Greer, also for the State: The legislature is supreme on any question of policy.

Washington v. Nashville, 1 Swan, 181; Barrow v. Page, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 97.

When an emergency exists which threatens the life of the community the executive may demand a particular service from or seize the property of the individual member of the community.

Washington v. Nashville, 1 Swan, 180; Wright v. State, 3 Heisk. 256; House v. White, 5 Baxt. 692; Neely v. State, 4 Baxt. 174.

An act which lays down a new rule, as the Jarvis law does as to fees, however much this rule may conflict with existing laws, is valid.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Crider, 91 Tenn. 506.

Messrs. Vertrees & Vertrees, for appellees:

This Jarvis law is unconstitutional and void, because it deprives accused persons of a fair and impartial trial.

The Constitution of 1796 provided that all laws then in force in the territory should continue in force until altered or repealed.

Const. 1796, art. 10, § 2; Schedule, § 1.

The "law of the land" in existence when a Constitution is adopted, is the existing statute law, as well as the existing common law.

Mauldin v. Greenville, 43 S. C. 298, 27 L. R. A. 284.

The right of trial by jury, mentioned in article 6, must be understood to be the right, as it existed when the Constitution was adopted.

Trigally v. Memphis, 6 Coldw. 382.

The right of trial by jury, as ordained and secured by American Constitutions, is not the right known to the common law as administered in brutal ages by Kings.

The question is, What is now the right of trial by jury under the Constitution of a free republic?

The Bill of Rights was not made for men, 39 L. R. A.

but for man. It was not made for the majority, but for the minority.

Anderson, Const. Law, 87.

The right of trial, secured by the Bill of Rights, is the right to a fair and impartial jury trial.

Clapp v. State, 94 Tenn. 186; Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 298, 36 L. ed. 441; Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244; State v. Poe, 8 Lea, 654; People v. Murray, 89 Mich. 276, 14 L. R. A. 809; Staples v. State, 89 Tenn. 231; Walker v. State, 7 Tex. App. 245, 32 Am. Rep. 595; Stokes v. State, 5 Baxt. 619.

This right of trial by jury is this: The right to a fair and impartial jury trial from start to finish.

Stokes v. State, 5 Baxt. 619, 30 Am. Rep. 72; Clapp v. State, 94 Tenn. 186.

Under this act the witness gets nothing unless the accused be convicted. Compensation surely follows every conviction.

The man who is taken from his business to testify for the state feels that he ought to be paid. The judgment of the people hitherto has been that he ought to be paid; for he has been paid.

When it is considered that the average man is poor, and needs to be paid; and feels that it is just and right that he should be paid; and knows that he will not be paid if the accused is acquitted; and knows that he will be paid if the accused be convicted,—the constant presence of a temptation dangerous to the accused cannot be denied.

This act tempts the honest, but poor or needy, witness to be silent when he should speak. It threatens, as he enters the witness box, to turn him empty away if he speaks that which will acquit the accused. It hires every bad-hearted witness to convict.

Nor is this all. It tends to convert the clerks and sheriffs into auxiliaries of the attorney general.

When the sheriff has a pecuniary interest in the conviction of an accused person, that person has not had a fair and impartial trial.

Clapp v. State, 94 Tenn. 186.

A man does not have a fair and impartial trial in a civil case where the juror's fees are taxed to the losing litigant.

Neely v. State, 4 Baxt. 174.

A juror pecuniarily interested in the result, however little, is not an "impartial" juror in the constitutional sense.

Davis v. Allen, 11 Pick. 466, 22 Am. Dec. 886; Com. v. Brown, 9 Am. St. Rep. 748, note, 147 Mass. 585, 1 L. R. A. 620.

This is true even where the interest is incidental and contingent.

Smull v. Jones, 6 Watts & S. 122; Com. v. Brown, 9 Am. St. Rep. 748, note, 147 Mass. 585, 1 L. R. A. 620.

No man can have a fair and impartial trial where, by terms of law, the witnesses against him go supererogatory to bed upon his acquittal, but return home rewarded with money upon his conviction.

Pecuniary interest in the result of any proceeding affects the judgment, and influences the conduct of most of the actors in that proceeding.

1 Gilbert, Ev. 242.

Statutes which make arbitrary classifications violate the "law of the land," and are therefore void.

It must be so framed as to embrace, equally, all persons who are or may be in the like situation or circumstances. The classification must be natural and reasonable, not arbitrary or capricious.

Sutton v. State, 96 Tenn. 696, 33 L. R. A. 589; Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 89 Tenn. 500, 12 L. R. A. 70; Dugger v. Mechanics' & T. Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 245, 28 L. R. A. 796.

The classification must rest upon some reason which can be defended—some "sound and legal reason."

Dugger v. Mechanics' & T. Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 256, 28 L. R. A. 796; Cooley, Const. Lim. 390.

A law is not always general because it operates upon all within a class. There must be back of that a substantial reason why it is made to operate upon a class, and not generally upon all.

Ex parte Jentsch, 112 Cal. 468, 32 L. R. A. 664; Bank of the State v. Cooper, 2 Yerg. 600, 24 Am. Dec. 517; Anderson, Const. Law, 37.

A statute wanting in either of the "two indispensable qualities" above mentioned is void, for the reason that it violates the "law of the land."

Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 89 Tenn. 542, 12 L. R. A. 70; Knob v. State, 9 Baxt. 202; State v. Staten, 8 Coldw. 233.

Whether the nature of the crime, or its effects upon the public, or the degree of punishment, be considered, the classification is arbitrary, indefensible, and absurd.

A law which compels a freeman to attend court as a witness for the state exacts from him that which has three elements of value. It takes from him his time—time which would otherwise be employed in acquiring the means of support. It demands his labor, for he cannot attend the court without effort. It takes from him his money, for he must pay his fares, tolls, ferrriages, and feed and hotel bills.

The right to labor is property.

Prentice, Pol. Powers, 306; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 101, 29 L. R. A. 79; Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 32 L. R. A. 663; Ex parte Jentsch, 112 Cal. 468, 32 L. R. A. 664.

The property which a man has in his own labor, as it is the original foundation of all other property, so it is the most sacred and inviolable.

State v. Goodwill, 83 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621.

It is true that in the time of Henry I., and even thereafter, English jurors were not paid any fees; but it is also true that in the territory south of the river Ohio, and in the early days of the Republic, jurors in criminal cases were paid.

Acts 1803, chap. 2, § 6, p. 27; 1 Haywood & Cobb, 211; Acts 1811, chap. 72.

There is a power of sovereignty not limited by, and superior to, any written Constitution. It is the power of state preservation. It, so far, has found expression only in the assertion and exercise of those powers known as war powers, police powers, taxation, and eminent domain.

Randolph, Em. Dom. § 8.

39 L. R. A.

The police power is above the law of eminent domain.

Prentice, Pol. Powers, § 6; Mills, Em. Dom. 2d ed. § 9.

Animals infected with deadly contagious diseases may be killed. Even healthy animals which have been exposed may be killed to prevent the spread of the contagion; but they must be paid for, as the peril is not "imminent."

Miller v. Horton, 152 Mass. 540, 10 L. R. A. 116; Randolph, Em. Dom. § 23.

Persons infected with contagious diseases may be forcibly taken to a pest-house or hospital.

Tiedeman, Pol. Powers, § 42.

A building may be taken for a pest-house, but it must be paid for.

Markham v. Brown, 37 Ga. 277, 92 Am. Dec. 73; Randolph, Em. Dom. § 9.

Taxation is another extraordinary power. It is in the form of taxes that every man contributes his share of the public expense.

Randolph, Em. Dom. § 24.

The war power may demand personal service, or food and supplies; the police power may burn and destroy, to prevent the spread of pestilence and death; the taxing power may demand money in ruinous sums, but, after all, it is sovereignty asserting one of its inalienable powers, under overruling necessity. It is not a case where one of the powers of government is being exercised in the ordinary administration of the public business or affairs.

Using the words "sovereignty" and "government" to express the distinction above made, we would say that the "government" is always bound by the Constitution, while "sovereignty" is not.

Witness-service is a government, not a sovereignty, service. It is therefore to be performed under the Constitution, not under the "reserved power" of the state.

As a contributor, B, who now does witness service for nothing, contributed precisely like A formerly did when he paid a tax to be used to compensate C for witness-service. The burden, however, is not the same. Citizen A now bears it all, whereas it was then borne by A and all other citizens equally and alike.

He who performs witness-service for the state without pay bears an unequal share of the public expense. Inequality is unlawful.

Messrs. C. R. Barteau and Peter Turney also for appellees.

Wilkes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question involved in this case is the validity and constitutionality of the act of the general assembly of Tennessee passed February 8, 1897, commonly known as the "Jarvis Law." The contest arises upon motions made in the criminal court of Shelby county to tax against the state certain costs, which motions were allowed, and the costs taxed, upon the ground that the act referred to is unconstitutional and void. The state has appealed. The act in question is in the words and figures following:

An Act to Regulate and Restrict the Payment of Costs and Fees in Criminal Prosecutions.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Tennessee, that neither the state of Tennessee, nor any county thereof, shall pay or be liable in any criminal prosecution for any costs or fees hereafter accruing except in the following classes of cases:

(1) Cases of homicide, rape, robbery, burglary, arson, embezzlement, incest, or bigamy, when the prosecution has proceeded to a verdict in the circuit or criminal court.

(2) Cases under the small offense law where the defendant has submitted before a justice of the peace and been sent to the workhouse; and,

(3) All cases where the defendant has been convicted in the court of record and the execution issued upon the judgment against the defendant has been returned nulla bona; provided,

That neither the state of Tennessee, nor any county thereof, shall be liable for, or pay any costs in any criminal case where security has been accepted by the officer taking the security, and an execution afterwards returned nulla bona as to the defendant and his securities.

Provided, that the compensation for boarding prisoners, expenses of keeping and boarding juries, compensation of jurors, costs of transcripts in cases taken to the supreme court by appeal or writ of error, mileage and legal fees for removing or conveying criminals and prisoners from one county to another, or from one jail to another, and compensation or mileage of witnesses for the state duly subpoenaed and required to attend before any court, grand jury, or magistrate in a county other than that of their residence, and more than 5 miles from such residence, and where any witness for the state shall be confined in jail to await the trial in which he is to testify, shall be paid in all cases as heretofore.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, that neither the state of Tennessee, nor any county thereof, shall pay or be liable in any criminal case or prosecution for the fees, costs, or mileage which may hereafter accrue in favor of any witness who shall, at the time of his attendance as such witness, before any court, grand jury, or magistrate, reside within 5 miles of the place where he attends as such witness.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, that this act take effect from and after its passage, the public welfare requiring it.

Passed February 2, 1897.

After the passage of this act and while it was in force, on the 17th of March, 1897, John Henley and others were indicted in the criminal court of Shelby county for grand larceny, and were tried and acquitted. If the defendants had been convicted, officers and witnesses who rendered services in the case, but received no compensation under the act, would have been entitled to fees or compensation as follows:

Hunter, the clerk of the court, $4.30.

Carnes, the sheriff of the county, $5.

Taylor, a justice of the peace, who bound the defendants over for trial, $2.65.

Witnesses for the state.

Marlet, fees and mileage, $6.

Wilkins, fees and mileage, $6.

Shore fees and mileage, $6.80.

Hall, fees and mileage, $6.80.

Kelley, fees and mileage, $6.96.

Battle, fees and mileage, $6.80.

It is said the act in question is unconstitutional and invalid, because it demands the particular services of individual citizens as officers and witnesses, and takes their property for public use without compensation; that the law is partial in its application, and not a general law of the land; that it deprives persons accused of a fair and impartial trial; and that it amends or repeals quite a number of former acts, but does not, in its body or caption, recite or refer to such acts. To be more explicit as to the grounds of objection, it is said that witnesses and officers are required to give their time and services and to pay their own expenses upon the trial of certain cases, and are refused any fees therefore. It is insisted that time and labor and money expended by witnesses while at trial or en route represent just so much property which is thus taken without compensation, and the officers and witnesses are in this way required to give to the state, without pay, that which is valuable to themselves, and necessary to their families, while other citizens of the state in such cases are required to contribute nothing. It is urged with much earnestness and force that the services and property of the citizen are protected by the same section of the Bill of Rights, and that under it his time and services can no more be taken without compensation than can his farm or his flocks, and it is tersely said that the state has no more right to require an individual's time and services to make a convict, without compensation, then it has to take the same individual's corn or wheat without pay to feed the convict after he is made, and that such requirement violates the rights of the individual, even though it may be a benefit to the public. It is further insisted that when the Bill of Rights was declared, in 1796, the common law in America was that witnesses for the state should be paid for their services, and the Constitution provides that the laws then in force should be preserved and remain in existence as though the Constitution had not been framed. It is conceded that there is a sovereign power to the Constitution, and not limited by it, and that it is the prerogative, as well as the duty, of this sovereign power to preserve the state in great emergencies, and, if necessary, to take the property, time, and services of individuals for this purpose, and, if need be, without compensation. To illustrate: A man's property, time, and services, it is said, may be required without pay in case of war or invasion, or an individual may be placed in quarantine, and temporarily deprived of his liberty, if the public safety demand; but these, it is argued, are emergencies, and not matters arising in the ordinary administration of the government. In the ordinary conduct and operation of the government no such emergencies can arise, and in the usual course of administering the affairs of the state no such demands can be made of the citizen. It is insisted that if a justice of the peace, or sheriff, clerk, or witness is required to render service for the state without compensation, it is, to that extent, taxing his property and labor, and requiring him thus to bear an unequal part of the burden of the public expense, and that inequality in burdens, whether in the shape of taxes imposed, services required, or property taken, is contrary to the letter and spirit of the Constitution, and to the genius of our government. Again, attention is called to the fact that it is claimed by the state that it is the object and purpose of the law to relieve the state from the immense burden of criminal costs, and it is said that, while this is a laudable purpose, and may result in the relief of the state to the extent of many hundreds of thousands of dollars now annually paid out for the prosecution of criminals, still the act is so framed as to operate unjustly, inasmuch as it does not prevent or extinguish these costs, but simply shifts the burden of bearing them from the body of taxpayers onto the shoulders of the few who, from locality, situation, or other circumstances and conditions, are required to bear them. In other words, the argument is that costs remain the same as heretofore, but they are required to be borne by the few whose time and services are taken without pay, while the many, who contribute neither time nor service, can give the proceeds of their labor to their own advancement, and the benefit of their estates and families, relieved of all burdens. Again, it is insisted that the law is partial in its application and operation, and not the law of the land, which affects all individuals alike. It is said there is a discrimination made between witnesses and officers that is arbitrary, and based upon no legal or reasonable ground. To illustrate: In eight named felonies witnesses are paid whenever trial is had, no matter what the result may be, but, unless a verdict is reached, there is no compensation. Attention is called to the fact that a prosecution for one of these offenses may be pending for a time, and costs may accrue. It may then be terminated by death, or by the state refusing to further prosecute. In these contingencies witnesses receive no pay, while, if, the case had proceeded to verdict, they would be paid. At the same time they have no voice in saying whether the case shall proceed or not; but in each case they are compelled to give the same time and service, and incur the same expense, during the trial or trials. Again, in other cases witnesses are paid only in the event the accused is convicted. To illustrate: When trials are had, but no convictions result, if the crime is rape, the witness is paid; if it is attempt to rape, he is not paid. In bigamy he is paid; in attempt to poison he is not paid. In embezzlement he receives pay; in fraudulent breach of trust he does not. As a summary, it is stated that in homicide, rape, robbery, burglary, arson, embezzlement, incest, bigamy, witnesses and officers are paid if a verdict is reached, no matter what that verdict may be; but in horse stealing, masked marauding, corrupting jurors, suborning witnesses, bribe taking, railroad wrecking, and a large number of other felonies, embracing the great body of criminal offenses, costs are not paid by the state unless the defendant is convicted, and the costs cannot be made out of him. Again, it is said a witness who attends court from another county than that in which the prosecution is had receives his per diem, but, if from the same county, he receives nothing. It is insisted that the discrimination between witnesses is thus made to turn upon the result of the trial or the local situation of the witness, whether in or out of the county, and not upon the legal nature of the offense, nor, in every case, upon the magnitude of the crime; and the argument is that the inevitable tendency is to prejudice the accused in his trial, and lead to his conviction. So, also, as to the fees of justices of the peace, the contention is that they are dependent upon the final conviction of the accused. But conviction cannot result unless the accused is bound over for trial upon the merits, and hence the justice is interested to the extent of his fees in binding the accused over to trial, and securing his conviction. And the same rule applies, as to sheriffs and clerks, inasmuch as their compensation depends upon conviction. It is therefore argued that the justice's court cannot be an impartial tribunal, since his own interest always weighs in the balance in favor of the guilt of the accused. So also with clerks and sheriffs; to the extent of their influence and opportunity they will be tempted to use them to secure the conviction of the defendant, inasmuch as their compensation depends upon it. Again, it is said the act inevitably operates to prevent a fair and impartial trial of the accused. The argument is that under its provisions officers and witnesses are, to the extent of their compensation, interested in the conviction of the accused in a large number of cases, since it is only in the event of conviction they can obtain any compensation. It is argued that not only is this true, but, as to witnesses especially, they are compelled to bear their personal expenses while attending court, and can only look for reimbursement of actual outlays if the accused is convicted, and thus their money is required without any compensation or reimbursement. It is urged with great earnestness that the result is to make officers and witnesses alert to secure convictions, and thus to prejudice the accused upon his trial. Finally, it is said also that the act is in conflict with many other laws standing upon the statute books, and yet these conflicting laws are not repealed, modified, or even referred to in the act, and it is insisted that for this reason the act is imperative, unconstitutional, and void, under article 2, § 17, of the Constitution, which provides that all acts which repeal, revive, or amend former laws shall recite, in their caption or otherwise, the letter or substance of the law repealed, revived, or amended.

We have thus briefly gone over the several objections which have been urged to the constitutionality and validity of this act, but we have not dwelt upon the details, nor referred to the many able arguments and reasons, which have been urged in support of the views advanced. Some of them will be referred to in the further discussion of the matters involved, but all of them cannot be presented in any reasonable space of time. We are admonished by the subject-matter of the act of its extreme importance. We are cognizant also of the intense public interest which hangs upon the decision of the case. We approach its consideration with a due sense of the responsibility which rests upon us. With the wisdom, propriety, desirability, and policy of the act this court can have nothing to do. These are matters which appeal to the intelligence, patriotism, and discretion of the general assembly, and upon that department of the government rests the responsibility for the wisdom and sound public policy of the law. That body is composed of representatives fresh from the bosom of the people, and charged by the people with the duty of providing such legislation as will correct the abuses of the body politic, and at the same time provide wise measures for the benefit of the state. These representatives are, or should be, in touch with the people; should know their wishes, their burdens, their plans for relief; and this court, in passing upon an act designed to affect the whole people, and to correct what is said to be a great public evil, can question the act only so far as it touches the fundamental law, and measure it by the provisions of that law, and determine whether it has in any particular passed the limits placed upon the power and discretion of the legislature by the Constitution. Mr. Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, says: "Except where the Constitution has imposed limits upon the legislative power, it must be considered as practically absolute, whether it act according to natural justice or not in any particular case. The courts are not the guardians of the rights of the people of the state, except as those rights are secured by some constitutional provision which comes within the judicial cognizance. The protection against unwise or oppressive legislation, within constitutional bounds, is by an appeal to the justice and patriotism of the representatives of the people. If this fail, the people in their sovereign capacity can correct the evil, but courts cannot assume their rights. The judiciary can only arrest the execution of a statute when it conflicts with the Constitution. It cannot run a race of opinions upon points of right, reason, and expediency with the law-making power. Any legislative act which does not encroach upon the powers apportioned to the other departments of the government, being prima facie valid, must be enforced, unless restrictions upon the legislative authority can be pointed out in the Constitution, and the case shown to come within them. . . . The moment a court ventures to substitute its own judgment for that of the legislature, in any case where the Constitution has vested the legislature with power over the subject, that moment it enters upon a field where it is impossible to set limits to its authority, and where its discretion alone will measure the extent of its interference." Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 200, 201. Our own decisions are thoroughly in accord with this view: McGinnis v. State, 9 Humph. 47, 49 Am. Dec. 697; Washington v. Nashville, 1 Swan, 180; Davis v. State, 3 Lea, 378; Baillentine v. Pulaski, 15 Lea, 634; Lynn v. Polk, 8 Lea, 229; Peck v. State, 86 Tenn. 262; Williams v. Nashville, 89 Tenn. 488; Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls, 90 Tenn. 481; Sutton v. State, 96 Tenn. 698, 33 L. R. A. 589. It is the settled rule in Tennessee and in the United States generally that the legislature has unlimited power to act in its own sphere of legislation, except so far as restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and the Constitution of the state. Bell v. Bank of Nashville, Peck (Tenn.) 269; Hope v. Deaderick, 8 Humph. 8, 47 Am. Dec. 597; Davis v. State, 3 Lea, 377; 39 L. R. A.

Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 89 Tenn. 497, 12 L. R. A. 70; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 689. If the act, therefore, does not violate some provision of the Constitution, this court has no jurisdiction or power to lay hands upon it, and arrest its execution, whether its provisions are wise or unwise, whether its operation be hurtful or beneficial. If, in the opinion of this court, however, it does in any material respect violate the fundamental law of the land, it is the duty of this court to so declare and prevent its enforcement. This court does not exercise arbitrary powers in construing either statutes or Constitutions. Ordinarily, it will indulge every reasonable intendment favorable to the constitutionality of a statute passed with the required formalities, and a law upon trial for its constitutionality is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt. State, Morrell, v. Fickle, 3 Lea, 81; Garvin v. State, 13 Lea, 162; State v. Yardley, 95 Tenn. 550, 34 L. R. A. 656; Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls, 90 Tenn. 466; Ellis v. State, 92 Tenn. 93; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 218; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 678, 674; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 382. Not only is this so, but that construction will be favored which will sustain the law, if it admits of question and doubt. Horne v. Memphis & O. R. Co. 1 Coldw. 74; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Crider, 91 Tenn. 506; Ellis v. State, 92 Tenn. 93; Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls, 90 Tenn. 466; State v. Yardley, 95 Tenn. 546, 547, 34 L. R. A. 656. Hence it is the settled rule of this court that he who insists upon the unconstitutionality of an act must point out the specific provision of the Constitution which it expressly or by unavoidable implication violates. It cannot be annulled upon supposed natural equity, the inherent rights of freemen, or upon any general or vague interpretation of a provision of the Constitution beyond its plain and obvious import. Davis v. State, 3 Lea, 377; Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 89 Tenn. 497, 12 L. R. A. 70. Mr. Cooley tersely says: "Nor are the courts at liberty to declare an act void, because in their opinion it is opposed to a spirit supposed to pervade the Constitution, but not expressed in words." Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 204. And whether a statute is contrary to the genius of a few people is a question for the legislature, and not the courts. As bearing upon this question, we cite: Bell v. Bank of Nashville, Peck (Tenn.) 269; Hope v. Deaderick, 8 Humph. 8, 47 Am. Dec. 597; Demonville v. Davidson County, 87 Tenn. 220; Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 89 Tenn. 511, 12 L. R. A. 70; Reelfoot Lake Levee Dist. v. Dawson, 97 Tenn. 159, 34 L. R. A. 725; Davis v. State, 3 Lea, 377; Luehrman v. Shelby County Taring Dist. 2 Lea, 438.

It is insisted that the act violates § 21, art. 1, of the Constitution, which is in these words: "That no man's particular services shall be demanded or property taken or applied to public use without the consent of his representatives or without just compensation being made therefor." It is evident that the term "particular services," used in this section, must be given some significance and meaning. It will be noted also that a distinction is made between "particular services" and "property," or both would not have been mentioned in the same connection. This provision has been debated before us in the main as though it read that particular services should not be demanded without both the consent of the representative and just compensation, and we will so treat it in the disposition of the case. It will be noted, however, that the disjunctive conjunction "or" is used, and a plausible, if not the natural, construction would be that either the consent of the representative or just compensation would warrant the taking of such services. It is not, however, desired to place the determination of the case upon such construction. We have not had the opportunity to trace the history of this phrase "particular services," in order to ascertain its origin or its primary application. It is found in identically the same language in the Constitutions of 1796, 1834, and 1870. It comes first into our judicial history with the ordinance of the Continental Congress passed in 1787, for the government of the territory northwest of the Ohio river, and in 1790 was extended to the territory southwest of that river. It was not carried into the Federal Constitution, and has been inserted, so far as our investigation has gone, into the Constitutions of only three states,—Tennessee, Indiana, and Oregon. Particular services must mean peculiar services, limited services, not ordinary or general services of an individual. It is not an easy matter to draw the distinction between particular and ordinary services in every instance; still some general rules may be given to mark the line. It seems clear that ordinary services, such as may be required of all citizens or officials by general or valid special laws, are not particular services. A single illustration may suffice: A physician cannot be required to give his time and services and skill and scientific knowledge in making an examination to qualify him to speak as an expert witness. If, however, the same physician may have already made an examination, and come into the possession of facts material to be disclosed to attain justice and administer the law, he may be required to testify to them as any other witness may. In Indiana, the constitutional provision is: "No man's particular services shall be demanded without just compensation." Ind. Const. art. 1, § 21. In Israel v. State, 8 Ind. 467, it was held that the services of witnesses in criminal suits were not "particular services," within the meaning of the provision, but were general services, such as every individual was bound to render when called upon for the public welfare as well as his own individual good. In Oregon, the constitutional provision is: "Nor [shall] the particular services of any man be demanded without just compensation." Or. Const. Bill of Rights, art. 1, § 18. In the case of Daly v. Multnomah County, 14 Or. 20, this provision was construed. An act was passed to prescribe the fees of witnesses in Multnomah county, and it provided that in all criminal proceedings and actions witnesses residing within 2 miles of the place of trial, when they were required to appear and testify, should not have either witness fees or mileage. Or. Sess. Laws 1885, p. 10. It was contended this was contrary to the provision of the Constitution. The court held, in the language of the Indiana case above cited, that, "It is as much the duty and interest of every citizen to aid in prosecuting a crime as it is to aid in subduing any domestic or foreign enemy; and it is equally the interest and duty of every citizen to aid in furnishing to all, high and low, rich and poor, every facility for a fair and impartial trial when accused; for no one is exempt from liability to accusation and trial. These are matters of general interest and public concern—are vital, indeed, to the very existence of free government, and render the services of witnesses on such occasions matters of general public interest, and not 'particular' in the sense of the Constitution." This construction is approved also in the cases of Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 12, 26 Am. Rep. 75, and Dills v. State, 59 Ind. 18. In our own state we have the case of Washington v. Nashville, 1 Swan, 180. In it the laying of a sidewalk in front of his own property was refused by Washington, upon the ground that it was the "taking of his particular services" without compensation. The court held the contention not maintainable, and said: "The principle upon which this power of legislation is exercised is that plain and universal one, indispensable in the administration of government, that the public has a right to the contributions of the money and personal service of all its citizens, whenever the public interests and exigencies may demand it, in consideration of the protection it affords to life, liberty, reputation, and property." In Wright v. State, 3 Heisk. 256, it was held that the services of an attorney might be required to defend a prisoner, and without compensation, and this was reaffirmed in House v. Whitis, 5 Baxt. 692, where the court says: "The principle of the organic law which forbids the demand of any man's particular services . . . has no application to such a case. . . . Where a lawyer takes his license he takes it burdened with these honorary obligations. But it is said that attorneys are officers of the court, and for this reason their services can be required. So, also, are sheriffs and clerks officers of the court, and, upon principle and analogy, service may be required of them also. If the lawyer takes his license burdened with the obligation to defend pauper prisoners, so the sheriff and clerk must take their offices burdened with similar conditions and requirements. In Neely v. State, 4 Baxt. 174, it was held that service upon the jury was not a "particular service" for which compensation might be demanded or the service refused. The court in that case said: "It is one of the implied and necessary conditions upon which men form governments, that sacrifices must sometimes be made by individuals for the common good, for which no compensation can be claimed. Such sacrifices of time or personal service, or of property, are compensated for in the protection which the government furnishes for their rights of person and of property. Hence, whenever, in the judgment of the legislature, it becomes necessary to require the services of jurors in carrying on the courts, their services may be required, and, if need be, even without compensation; but this must be required in pursuance of laws enacted for that purpose by the legislature." Citizens may be required to work on the public roads, were required to serve in the militia, to serve as officers at elections, witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify for insolvent suitors, clerks may be compelled to issue process in such cases, a sheriff may be compelled to execute such process, jurors may be compelled to serve for a day. In all such cases the only compensation received is that benefit which results to the community at large. There are numerous other cases in which officers and witnesses are denied compensation out of the public treasury for their services. A witness who is a prosecutor in a misdemeanor case is allowed no compensation. Shannon's Code, § 7600. Witnesses are allowed for only one day before the grand jury, and for only a prescribed number of days and cases at the same term. District attorneys are allowed only half fees when paid out of the county treasury upon conviction and return of nulla bona. Id. § 6379. They get no fees upon a nolle prosequi of a misdemeanor, or when the indictment is ignored, or the prosecution fails by their fault. Id. §§ 6380, 6383, 7590. Only half fees are allowed on acquittals. Id. § 6376. And numerous similar instances may be cited.

But there is another view of this matter of costs against states and counties that must be considered. The right to costs is not a common-law right, but depends wholly upon statute. The rule was that the King should neither pay nor receive costs. The former was his prerogative, and the latter beneath his dignity. The same rule is applied to the United States in suits, either civil or criminal, in which the Federal or state governments, including county and municipal corporations, when acting as an arm or agency of the state, are parties; and they are accordingly only liable for costs when the lawmaking power by statute has made them so. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Pl. & Pr. 151. Hence a court cannot ex officio give costs for or against anyone. Mooneys v. State, 2 Yerg. 578; Morgan v. Pickard, 86 Tenn. 208. And in all cases the strictest rule prevails in construing the liability of the state therefor. State v. Odom, 93 Tenn. 446. And the same rule applies in regard to counties. State v. Blackburn, 61 Ark. 407. So a statute making the state liable for all costs of criminal cases is construed to mean only state costs and not costs of defendant. State v. Barton, 3 Humph. 18; Prince v. State, 7 Humph. 137; Tucker v. State, 2 Head, 556. And a statute giving costs in general terms, though unqualified, will not make the state liable therefor. 3 Bl. Com. 399; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Pl. & Pr. 151, 152; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 314, 316, 323; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 161. The courts and legislatures have always treated the granting of costs against the state and county as a matter of purely legislative discretion and policy, and not a matter to be left to the courts except as to their apportionment between the parties in equity cases. As to what costs shall be allowed against the state and county is a matter which addresses itself solely to the wisdom and discretion of the general assembly. It is true, costs have been allowed by statute from time to time until it is asserted a vast system has grown up and settled down upon the public treasury until, in the opinion of the legislature, the payment has become burdensome, and a menace to the interests of the public. It was this 89 L. R. A. condition of affairs which prompted the passage of the act in question by which the legislature in effect refuses to pay costs, or allow judgments, or appropriate money for such purposes out of the public treasury, in certain cases. The Constitution (art. 2, § 24) provides that no money shall be drawn from the state treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law, and it is further provided that the state shall be liable to suit only in such manner and in such courts as the legislature may direct. Const. art. 1, § 17. Under this provision of the Constitution it is held that, even if the state consent to suit, she may withdraw that consent, even while the litigation is pending. State v. Bank of Tennessee, 8 Baxt. 393; State, Bloomstein, v. Sneed, 9 Baxt. 479. The state has accordingly refused to allow herself to be sued, even upon her solemn bonds, impressed with her great seal, and containing upon their face a pledge of the faith and credit of the state, and this court has upheld the law. Lynn v. Polk, 8 Lea, 121. It may result in an apparent or real hardship to officers and witnesses to be denied fees; still it is not a question of constitutional authority, but of legislative policy and wisdom. In Avery v. State, 7 Baxt. 331, Judge McFarland said: "There is an apparent hardship in requiring the clerk to perform services for which he may, in the event the defendant is insolvent, and in other events, receive no compensation, as there is in requiring a defendant who is found not guilty to defend himself at his own expense; but so the law is written, and there are, perhaps, other equally hard cases for which the law makes no provision." The legislature has from time to time attempted to check the evil of excessive costs. By the Code of 1858, "officers are forbidden under severe penalties to demand fees when not authorized by law." Section 4517. In no case are they entitled to payment from the state or county unless expressly allowed. Id. § 5561. One article of the Code of 1858 was entitled "Provisions to Prevent the Accumulation of Costs" in criminal cases. It required the court to designate a day for the call of the state docket, and to adopt rules that would "tend to diminish the costs of such cases." The attorney general is required to have indictments ready, and "to so manage the state's business as to detain witnesses only one day to go before the grand jury." The clerk is forbidden to issue subpoenas for state witnesses, except upon the written order of the attorney general. Witnesses are allowed only one day's attendance before grand jury, "unless longer retained by order of the court." The judge and attorney general are required to examine and certify all bills of costs, and the controller and chairman of the county court are forbidden to pay except upon such certificates, and are also required to examine the bills. These provisions and others of a like character indicate that even prior to 1858 there was some appreciation of the difficulties of keeping this matter of criminal costs within due bounds. Code 1858, §§ 5594, 5604.

But the provisions of the Code of 1858, stringent as they were, proved ineffectual to protect the public treasury against the payment of unjust, excessive, and fraudulent bills of cost. To remedy or mitigate this evil, several statutes have been enacted since 1858. Only the more important of these will be noticed. Acts 1879, chap. 210, undertook to discourage the accumulation of costs by making it a misdemeanor to speculate in witness's or officer's fees, except "witness fees traded for merchandise or hotel bills." The constitutionality of this act was promptly and vigorously assailed. This court, at its December term, 1879, sustained the act, saying that the argument impeaching it was "made to turn on general principles, rather than on any specific provisions of the Constitution." Of the object of the act the court says: "The legislature intended to break up a particular kind of speculation in these fees, which it thought detrimental to the public interests," etc. "Of the wisdom of the legislation, the lawmaking power is the exclusive judge." Davis v. State, 3 Lea, 376. While this act continued in force, the occupation of the speculator in fees was gone. Professional witnesses, unable to get ready cash for their fees, were greatly discouraged. This act was, however, repealed by Acts 1881, chap. 51, having been in operation about two years. Acts 1889, chap. 189, was afterwards enacted, authorizing and requiring the judges and attorney generals whose duty it is to certify justice's bills of costs for payment to go behind the justices' certificates as to their correctness, and to examine and inquire into such bills fully, and to disallow them if it should appear that the prosecution "is frivolous, malicious, or commenced to procure fees." This statute, it is alleged, was brought about by the acts of justices and constables and witnesses who, in many instances, it is charged, had conspired together to defraud the state and oppress the people for the selfish, mercenary purpose of gain. This act met with vigorous opposition. It was not strictly enforced. Finally, however, it came before the supreme court at Knoxville, and this court approved and sustained the act. Upon authority of this opinion many thousands of dollars of costs was stricken out in Knox county alone. By Acts 1891, chap. 22, Ex. Sess., another advanced step was taken in this matter by the legislature. This statute changed from the state to the county the costs of the prosecution of felonies when the cases were disposed of before trial. The striking reform features of the act, however, were that it authorized and required the judges and attorney generals to examine all bills of cost in criminal cases, and to disallow any that might be "illegally or wrongfully taxed against the state or county," and authorized and required the controller and judge or chairman of the county court to examine into all certified bills of cost, and to disallow any that had been "illegally or wrongfully taxed against the state or county," and provided finally that "the state controller and judge or chairman of the county court may disallow any and all cost taxed against the state or county on account of malicious, frivolous, or unnecessary prosecution, in the event the judge or attorney general, by mistake or otherwise, approved any of such bills." This act has been before this court more than once for construction, and its validity has never been seriously questioned. Stout v. State, 91

Tenn. 405. The next in order of time is the act of 1895, defining larceny, and making the counties liable for costs of prosecution for that offense. Acts 1895, chap. 205. This act was declared unconstitutional on account of a defective caption. Shelton v. State, 96 Tenn. 521. This was the last effort of legislation to suppress the growing evil of criminal costs before the passage of the present act. Every act passed by the general assembly to prevent the accumulation of unnecessary and improper costs has been upheld by this court, if the act was passed with the formalities required by the Constitution, and without any question as to its wisdom. The necessity of some further legislation appears from the fact that all former efforts seemingly well directed to remedy the evil and diminish criminal costs had failed in a large measure of the desired results. In the arguments we are furnished the following table, prepared by the state controller, which indicates the extent of the state's liability for costs of criminal prosecution:

Table of Amounts Paid for Criminal Prosecutions from 1876 to 1894, Inclusive.

Dec. 20, 1876, to Dec. 19, 1878..	$893,406 71
Dec. 20, 1878, to Dec. 19, 1880..	399,443 20
Dec. 20, 1880, to Dec. 19, 1882..	357,895 15
Dec. 20, 1882, to Dec. 19, 1884..	373,255 89
Dec. 20, 1884, to Dec. 19, 1886..	385,112 69
Dec. 20, 1886, to Dec. 19, 1888..	378,181 11
Dec. 20, 1888, to Dec. 19, 1890..	398,708 82
Dec. 20, 1890, to Dec. 19, 1892..	415,214 11
Dec. 20, 1892, to Dec. 19, 1894..	490,680 40
Dec. 20, 1894, to Dec. 19, 1896..	417,615 34

The above does not embrace salaries of judges or prison expenses. The cost paid by the counties is a little more than double the amount paid by the state.

In a recent case of Leary v. State, this court disallowed fifty-eight out of sixty-eight bills of cost sent up by a justice of the peace from Knox county to the county judge of that county. The cases were declared frivolous, and the entire bills of cost, amounting to thousands of dollars, including fees of witnesses even, disallowed. The protection of the public from improper costs was a paramount consideration, and this was done by this court in pursuance of statutes enacted by the legislature. The constitutional guaranty of compulsory process to require witnesses to attend court and give evidence does not require the state to provide for the expenses of obtaining their attendance. Avery v. State, 7 Baxt. 331. And witnesses may be compelled by the state to attend and give evidence without compensation. Bennett v. Kroth, 37 Kan. 235. If it be conceded that there is an absolute obligation to give compensation, it is equally imperative that such compensation be just. And yet it is well known that the service of one witness may be worth many times that of another. The service of any expert in one department is much more costly than that of another in a different department.

It is said the act is a revenue measure. This is not correct. It is not a mode of taxation. It is a measure, not to collect money, but to protect that which has already been collected from the taxpayers. There is also a marked difference between taking the services of an individual and taking his property under the law of eminent domain. Taylor v. Chandler, 9 Heisk. 380. It is proper to remark also that there is nothing in the act in question that requires any service of certain officers or witnesses. The act nowhere provides that witnesses shall attend or that officers shall do service of any kind. These matters are all provided by other acts which are not brought in question in this suit, but none of them are required by the terms of this act. No officer or witness has declined to render service, and the question is not presented whether such witness or officer can be required to render service where he will not receive compensation. When some officer or witness does refuse such services, the question may arise whether they can be required in view of the fact that they will not or may not receive compensation. Here the service has been rendered without protest or objection, and the only question is whether the state shall be required to pay for such service contrary to the provisions of this act. But it is said the act is not general, and thus made the "law of the land," but is partial in its operation, and limited to classes, and these classes are not marked by natural and reasonable lines, but by tests which are arbitrary and capricious. "The law of the land" is defined to be a law which embraces all persons who are already or who may thereafter come into similar situations, conditions, and circumstances. Alexandria v. Dearmon, 2 Sneed, 104; State v. Rauscher, 1 Lea, 97; Davis v. State, 3 Lea, 376; Maney v. State, 6 Lea, 221; Hatcher v. State, 12 Lea, 371; Woodard v. Brien, 14 Lea, 523; Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 89 Tenn. 499, 12 L. R. A. 70. It is also held that if a law is intended to affect particular classes only it must, in order to be valid, not only apply to all persons who are or may be in like circumstances, situations, or conditions, but the classification must be natural and reasonable, not arbitrary and capricious, and must rest upon some sound and legal ground. Bank of the State v. Cooper, 2 Yerg. 600, 24 Am. Dec. 517; State v. Staten, 6 Coldw. 233, 245; Knox v. State, 9 Baxt. 202, 207; Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 89 Tenn. 542, 12 L. R. A. 70; Dugger v. Mechanics' & T. Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 245, 258, 28 L. R. A. 796; Sutton v. State, 96 Tenn. 696, 710, 33 L. R. A. 589; Anderson, Const. Law, 37; Cooley, Const. Lim. 390; Ex parte Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 468, 32 L. R. A. 664; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 697. These cases lay down the general rules of law relating to the matter of classification. It is difficult to see how these cases or the matter of classification can apply in this case. The law already provides that neither the state nor county is liable for any costs unless the legislature has so provided. It is therefore simply a question whether the state and county will pay costs for certain services, and is not a matter of partial or class legislation. But, if it were, from the very nature of the case, the general assembly must to a very large degree be the judges as to whether the classification adopted is reasonable or capricious. That body, more than others, is acquainted with the evils and abuses which it is desired to correct, and with the ways and means at their command to remedy such abuses and evils. Its members come from every section of the state and can take a wider view of the entire situation than can be taken by the courts. So it may, in its wisdom, deny costs altogether, or allow in such cases, and to such extent as it may deem best in the exercise of sound public policy. While, therefore, it is not incumbent on this court to critically question the classification adopted, and it would be improper to do so, still it is easy to see the general idea and system which have been adopted, and the reasons for the discriminations made. It is the evident general purpose to insure the vigorous prosecution of the eight principal felonies named, because they are the most heinous crimes, and at the same time offenses in which frivolous and unfounded prosecutions are most rarely met with. In regard to the small felonies and misdemeanors, the evident purpose is to discourage and prevent the large number of frivolous and groundless prosecutions which have caused such a burden of expense on the state and county.

89 L. R. A.

This evil of frivolous prosecutions for misdemeanors and the smaller felonies, it is claimed, has gone to an enormous extent, and it is stated that they are not, in a majority of cases, prompted by any other motive than a desire to tax up fees and costs, and to certify them for payment to the treasurer of the state and counties; and, while it is conceded that abuses may result from the operation of the act in question, it is maintained that they cannot reach such proportions as now obtain in the unfounded prosecutions set on foot and pressed, not for the public good, but to create fees for officers and witnesses.

The classifications of the law in regard to the compensation of witnesses are likewise based upon what is called the attendance and service of professional witnesses. It is alleged that there is a class who make a business of giving testimony, especially in minor criminal offenses. These are found residing around the court-houses and places of trial, and hence the law provides no fees, costs, or mileage for a witness who resides within 5 miles of the place when he attends as a witness. In case of such witnesses when worthy of any fees, attendance is not such a burden as it is when he lives more remote, or beyond the limits of the county. Whether the classifications as to the witness and as to crimes may prove the best that can be made, may admit of question: at any rate they are not without grounds and reasons which the legislature deemed sufficient.

We come now to inquire whether the law deprives a man of a "fair and impartial trial." It seems to have been assumed in many quarters, but not in argument, that the Constitution provides that every accused person shall have a "fair and impartial trial." The Constitution does not contain such provision. Its provisions are that the accused shall have the right to trial by a jury, and that right shall remain inviolate. In what does the right consist, and what is its extent, so far as the Constitution goes? Is it that the trial shall be speedy and public, that the jury shall be impartial, that the accused shall have the right to compulsory process for his witnesses to have them present in person at the trial to meet them face to face, that he shall have the right to be heard by himself and counsel, and that he should not be compelled to testify against himself, and that he shall have a copy of the accusation against him. There is no provision for impartial sheriffs or impartial clerks or impartial witnesses. Indeed, such a requirement would go beyond the power of the legislature. It is true that our cases speak of "fair and impartial trial," but these are at best but comparative terms. It is beyond the reach of legislature to secure a trial absolutely fair and impartial, and when the term is used it means a trial under the Constitution and according to law. Clapp v. State, 94 Tenn. 186. Let us look for one moment at this matter of an impartial trial as it affects the witnesses in a case. It is a matter of common observation that witnesses are partisan, prejudiced, and often directly interested, either in conviction or acquittal of the accused. To such an extent is this true that the principal office of counsel is to point out the untrue, biased, and prejudiced statements of witnesses, and one of the chief difficulties in reaching justice is in penetrating their evasions, deceptions, and prevarications. Every charge to the jury warns them to be aware of this interest and bias of witnesses. No constitutional convention or general assembly ever supposed for a moment that witnesses could, by any legislative means, be rendered impartial. On the contrary, under the law defendants are allowed to testify in their own cases when it is evident that their evidence cannot be impartial. So, also, the prosecutor is allowed to testify when, in a large number of cases, he cannot, while smarting under the wrong inflicted on him, and in his desire to bring the accused to punishment, be impartial. It is said, however, that a moneyed inducement is offered to officers and witnesses to convict the defendant: in other words, it is only in cases of conviction that fees and compensation can be secured. If we grant this to be true, still it is a matter which addresses itself to the wisdom and discretion of the general assembly. Grundy County v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. 94 Tenn. 295. It cannot be denied that designing men can prostitute almost any proceeding to selfish, improper and corrupt purposes. The state is as much interested, and even more concerned, in preventing the annoyance and vexation of the citizen by unfounded and frivolous prosecutions, as she is in bringing real offenders to trial and punishment. If the new law says, in effect, "Convict, and you shall be paid," the old law says, "Prosecute, and you shall be paid whether you convict or not." If the new law offers an inducement to convict, the old law offers a still more potent and ready inducement to prosecute whether there is or is not ground for it. It is placing a low estimate upon the integrity of the citizen to assume that for a paltry sum he will be willing to perjure himself and do injustice to his fellows, and the general assembly may have acted upon this view and been content to trust the honor and integrity of the people, as it must do in every law and under every emergency. It is claimed that under the existing system abuses of gigantic magnitude have sprung up, and have grown and flourished and fattened upon the public treasury. We are told that this has gone to such an extent that speculation in prosecutions has become a business in the cities and towns. Whether it is a greater evil to incur the remote probability that some innocent man may be convicted from mercenary motives, or to encourage the present wholesale bringing of trivial and baseless charges and prosecutions in order to obtain fees, can hardly admit of question. It will be noted that the act guards the jury from any supposed improper influence by providing for its payment in any event, as heretofore. Also as to justices of the peace it is evident that the influence supposed to operate upon them is quite remote and indefinite. In the event of submission,—which is the only case in which the justice disposes of the matter finally,—provision is made for his fees. In all other cases he has power only to bind over the accused to be tried in another tribunal, and in that tribunal the justice has no voice. It is evident that under this act the court and jury are left impartial as before,—nothing that affects them is left to depend upon the result of the trial. The fees of the sheriff or other officers for summoning and attending upon the jury are still paid out of the treasury, and not taxed as costs in the cases tried. Sherman's Code, § 6403, subs. 10, 11, 25, § 6410, subs. 8. The clerk is but an amanuensis of the court to enter its orders. If any officer is disqualified because of interest, his place may be supplied as was indicated in the Clapp Case. It will thus be seen that the act jealously guards the prisoner's right to a fair and impartial jury.

The voice of this act is not, we think, one of temptation to bribery, but one of caution and warning. To officers and witnesses it utters salutary words. In effect it says: "Beware that you do not set on foot frivolous, vexatious, or malicious prosecutions that burden the public with costs, and oppress and annoy the citizens. The name and funds of the state must not be used for this end. Bring only just and substantial and well-founded charges into courts,—such as will not only secure a favorable judgment before the committing magistrate, but before the grand jury, and before the trial jury. If you oppress and annoy the citizen with charges that are dismissed by the committing magistrate, or ignored by the grand jury, or dismissed without a trial, or cannot be sustained on a trial, then you lose your time and labor. The state and county will refuse to pay you for the fruitless and oppressive business. An exception will be made, however, as to acquittals of the eight principal felonies, as it is of great public concern that they should be prosecuted, and as they are seldom the subject of frivolous prosecution, and from their character cannot be." Justly construed in the light of the true situation, this is the meaning of the act in question. It is true, as stated by counsel, that when the Constitution of 1796 went into effect, officers and witnesses were entitled under the law theretofore existing to receive pay for their services, and it is also true that that instrument provided that all laws in force when it was adopted should remain in force, and rights then existing should continue as though no Constitution had been made; but it is also true that the same section provides that all such laws might be altered, amended, or repealed by subsequent legislation. Const. 1796, art. 10, § 2, Schedule, § 1. When by § 6 of article 1 it was declared that the right of trial by jury should remain inviolate, it did not mean that no law should in the future be passed to regulate such trials, and prescribe the practice in such cases, but that the right should not be denied to the citizen, with its material and substantial benefits. Eason v. State, 6 Baxt. 475; McGinnis v. State, 9 Humph. 47, 49 Am. Dec. 697; Trigally v. Memphis, 6 Coldw. 882; Hogan v. Chattanooga, 2 Tenn. Legal Rep. 12. Accordingly it has been held that statutes which by direct enactment make reasonable regulations as to evidence do not violate the right of trial by jury. Yardley Case, 95 Tenn. 563, 34 L. R. A. 656; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Crider, 91 Tenn. 489. New classes of witnesses—for example, parties in civil suits and defendants in criminal cases—are admitted, and this does not violate the Constitution in letter or spirit. The witness at best has but a scintilla of interest, and this goes to his credibility. The right of trial by jury was not violated by the act prescribing that parties must demand it in order to obtain it. No one questions but that the accused is entitled to a fair and impartial trial, but it equally means a trial under the Constitution and law.

It is also true that the entire body of the common law as it existed when the Constitution went into effect was made the law of the land by that instrument. McGinnis v. State, 9 Humph. 43, 49 Am. Dec. 697; Trigally v. Memphis, 6 Coldw. 882; Neely v. State, 4 Baxt. 180. But it was never for a moment supposed that these laws could not be altered, amended, repealed, or added to by subsequent legislation, as they, in their wisdom, might deem best; the only restrictions being those thrown around such legislation by the Constitution.

Again, it is said the act is unconstitutional, because it is amendatory of the general law on the subject of fees and costs, and yet does not refer to the laws thus amended. This is not an amendatory act. It is a new and original law. If it can be held to be a repealing law or an amending law, it is so only by necessary implication, and in such cases the acts repealed or amended need not be referred to in the caption or certificate of the new law. Home Ins. Co. v. Shelby County Taring Dist. 4 Lea, 660; Maney v. State, 6 Lea, 218; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Crider, 91 Tenn. 506; Knoxville v. Lewis, 12 Lea, 181; State v. Yardley, 95 Tenn. 548, 559, 34 L. R. A. 656; Ballentine v. Pulaski, 15 Lea, 633; Poe v. State, 85 Tenn. 495; Hunter v. Memphis, 93 Tenn. 571. We are of opinion, therefore, that the act in question is free from constitutional objection, and this court has no power to refuse its enforcements, whether it is wise or unwise, whether hurtful or beneficial, in its tendencies and operations.

The judgment of the court below is therefore reversed, and the costs allowed are stricken out as unwarranted against the state and county, and the parties interested therein will pay the 39 L. R. A.

costs of this proceeding in this court and in the court below.

Judges Caldwell, McAlister, and Beard concur in this opinion. Chief Justice Snodgrass does not concur, and states the grounds of his dissent.

Snodgrass, Ch. J., dissenting:

Aware of the careful and painstaking consideration this case has received, and with profound respect for the opinion of the majority, I most earnestly dissent from its conclusion that the act under consideration is a constitutional law. No less than any one of them do I respect the expression of legislative will, and recognize the freedom of that department (so far as the policy of legislation is involved) from judicial interference. I have as little inclination as anyone to invade the legislative province, or to assume the power to do so. The people have trusted the legislature as the residuary depositary of public wisdom, and, except in those constitutional restrictions which the people have themselves imposed as permanent barriers against the possibility of improbable mistakes by the legislature, and those natural barriers of reason against impossible legislation, and arbitrarily capricious exercise of conceded authority, the legislature is supreme. There is no power to question its motive, its policy, or its wisdom. I recognize the fact that a legislature without constitutional control would be practically omnipotent. But the people did not turn loose any such unrestrained agency without guarding carefully its power to do irreparable injury or monstrous injustice to the individual citizen. They realized that, while all legislatures are presumptively wise and conservative, some would in fact be no wiser than other ordinary mortals, and no more conservative than the temper of the times might permit, or the hasty determination of great questions occasion; and therefore limitations on legislative power were in great numbers adopted in our organic law. These limitations in the Constitution of 1870 were not experiments. In the main they were reproductions of similar checks on legislative power embodied in the Constitutions of 1834 and 1796, and correspond substantially with those ingrafted in the Constitutions of other states, older and younger, and are the safeguards which human wisdom taught, and experience has proved necessary to the preservation of the rights of the citizen against the haste, the unwisdom, the caprice, or the folly of temporary authority, lodged though it be in the selected legislative agents of the people themselves. Our theory of government in different departments as arranged in the Constitution is a theory of checks and balances on power in favor of the liberty and highest rights which can be accorded to the individual. To carry out its purpose, therefore, it is essential that no restraint be put by the judicial department on the legislative not demanded in our organic law, and none can be relaxed which is so demanded.

The two departments, legislative and judicial, have their well-defined limitations and powers. The limitations on legislative action were made a subject of judicial power, for these limitations are only to be declared and enforced by that department, speaking through the Constitution, but for the public, and for the ultimate public purpose, as it is the controlling and final one. Too much stress is often put upon the phrase "the people speaking through their representatives" in reference to legislative action. It is true that they so speak, but it is equally true that they speak through every other department of the state government, and that the final expression of their will is made in the determination of the validity, interpretation, and construction of law by their judicial representatives. All the power exercised by the courts is that of the people vested in them by the same Constitution, which, for wise purposes of government, limits the scope of legislation and the power of their legislative representatives. In respect to the declaration of law, the people, therefore, speak first through the legislature, and last through the courts, as it is in them they have vested the power, not only of construing acts of the legislature, but of the Constitution itself, and enforcing through judicial process the observance of their thus permanently declared will. What dire and disastrous results would have happened in this country in national and state legislation without constitutional restrictions, and courts wise enough and independent enough to enforce them, need not be elaborated here. The courts have stood always above the work of hate and haste, excitement, passion, sectional animosity, oppression, and folly, and limited its operation within the bounds of justice and conservatism.

To them we owe the fact that since the late war we had neither executions nor confiscations; that social as well as civil equality was not forced upon a prostrate section of our country, and the rights of the states destroyed; and it is to the same limitations and restrictions of state institutions thus protected that the people of this state owe their escape from the enthrallment which would have followed legislation to fund in full the overwhelming debt fastened upon us by a rule not our own, which, when we were represented in a legislature of our own choosing was made obligatory and payable, and secured by a first lien on public taxes. It is the fashion now to forget these things after they are accomplished, to trust and exalt the Constitution when we have no other protection, and to revile it when we think it stands in the way of legislation in which it is unwisely supposed we are selfishly interested. If it appear, as in the case at bar, that the legislation was intended or calculated by any means, however oppressive on other individuals, to reduce expense upon that proportion of our people who are taxpayers, the appeal to the Constitution is treated with contempt by a large and respectable element of the public. The assumption is indulged that, as it is less expensive, it is necessarily valid, and that any suggestion to the contrary is merely hostility to reform. Even here arguments are made and tables exhibited showing, or supposed to show, that the abuses under existing laws have, in special instances, swelled the volume of costs enormously in favor of certain individuals in particular counties. What this can mean is a constitutional argument I do not know, unless it be intended to indicate that present expense of administering the criminal law on account of these abuses is so great as the law now is, or was at the time, and for many years before, the passage of this bill, that any substitute is lawful. I beg to say that I take no stock in such arguments or tables. I have no reason to assume their correctness, but, so assuming, it only appears that there are abuses which need suppression, and which can be and should be suppressed. The law was ample for this purpose when they are said to have originated, and therefore the act under consideration was not required as a remedy. There is no reason why like abuses may not originate under it. The truth is, and it would best be stated plainly, the object of the law was not the correction of abuses (though incidentally it might render some of those enumerated unavailing for selfish practices), but it was to take the expense of criminal prosecutions in the main off of the state as such, and devolve it upon a special body of its citizens,—those who might hold subordinate places connected with the administration of the criminal law, as clerks, sheriffs, magistrates, constables, etc., and those who might chance to have observed the commission of crime, or be aware of such facts in relation to it as would make them witnesses. I earnestly favor an exacting and economical enforcement of law, now ample to suppress all grievances complained of, but I cannot reconcile it with my view of the constitutional rights of the great body of the people included in this classification to devolve on them individually this burden of service and expense throughout the state, and for all the people of the state, because professional witnesses in our larger cities have succeeded in fooling the constituted authorities out of a few hundred or a few thousand dollars. In the great number of counties of the state no such abuse exists, or is even alleged to exist. Their witnesses get only the poor pittance of their actual dues, and their officers earn barely living salaries while doing faithful service to the public. The conditions of abuse (doubtless much less objectionable than they are made to appear) are, at worst, exceptional. They are special, and such as always, in some form, exist under the best laws in great or rapidly growing cities, and need special correction where they exist, rather than by sweeping and oppressive general legislation which deprives the honest officers and the nonprofessional witnesses throughout the state of all expense and compensation. It must not be forgotten that the professional witness abuse, so loudly complained of, is found in only a few of the larger cities of the state. He is a pest practically unknown in the numerous country counties, and because he exists elsewhere is no reason why they should be made to bear this great burden.

Referring to it in another aspect, I think proper to call attention to the averment that this law operates as a saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars. While this is greatly exaggerated, yet let it be admitted to the full amount claimed; it only proves that so great a burden has been taken off of the taxpaying part of the public and put upon a number of individuals poorly able to bear it, and no more than all other citizens justly subject to do so. It appears in fact, however, that for several years the average state cost per year on this account is a little over $200,000, and it is worthy of special emphasis here that the passage of this law was followed, wonderful to relate, not by a diminished, but by an increased rate of taxation! The amount saved to the treasury by loading this great public burden on a few of its needy poor (who, in the main constitute the witness class and to a large extent the subordinate office holding class) is, it would thus appear, devoted to other and supposed better uses. I cannot speak of this great wrong, which, in my judgment, it is, in terms of patience. When I contemplate a condition under which the poorest citizens throughout the state may be summoned and dragged by compulsory process from remotest limits of their own counties and from all adjacent ones to the distance of 5 miles from place of trial, and from term to term, without money or allowance by law to defray expenses, and yet compelled to incur them in order that the miserable pittance heretofore paid them by a great state for that purpose,—in order, forsooth, that this fund may be used for other and better purposes,—I bitterly regret to realize that a Constitution which has been pronounced by the most eminent of statesmen as the best in the republic, and which I have always revered as such, is powerless to prevent it. I have never believed it, and, though forced to realize it now I cannot permit that construction to go unchallenged. I am of the opinion, yet unshaken by argument and the ably expressed view of the majority, that this particular service and expense cannot be devolved upon individual officers and witnesses; that it is a taking of their particular services and of their property for expenses, in violation of the Constitution.

An analysis of the act under consideration (act February 3, 1897) shows that all fees and expenses of certain officers and witnesses (compelled to attend trials, incur expense, and render services for the state) are disallowed in the great majority of criminal cases, felonies, and misdemeanors, and before both courts and magistrates. In making this general statement and before proceeding to a more specific analysis and discussion of the act, it is essential to notice here two general propositions in the opinion of the majority. The first is that the act does not compel the service or the incurring of expense on the part of officers and witnesses, and the second that the magistrate's relation to a criminal case is such that he is not an important factor, and that the denial of his fees, so far as they are denied, or the allowance thereof, so far as they are allowed, and without regard to the terms upon which they are allowed, can work no injustice to a defendant. The first proposition results from assuming that this law is to be treated as a distinct and independent law, enacted alone, and standing alone. The obvious answer is that it is but an addition or amendment to existing laws left intact, and which become parts of it if it stands. It can no more be valid if their existence is destroyed than it could be if the courts were destroyed, for there would be nothing left to effectuate its operation. It is precisely therefore, as if the legislature had re-enacted all the existing provisions of the law relating to officers, witnesses, and magistrates except that covering fees, and then inserted this in lieu of all legislation on that subject. Indeed, elsewhere in the opinion the majority so declares for, as to the objection that this law is a direct repealing and amending statute and does not refer to the laws repealed or amended, it states that the act is "a new and original law," and cites a number of cases on that point showing that such a law but supercedes all others on the same subject inconsistent with it, and takes their place amid and as a part of the other statutes; thus, with them, making up the whole body of the law. As to the second proposition, concerning the magistrate's inconsequential relation to criminal trials, the majority assumes this because it is only in submissions he acts finally, and when he binds over to court, in that tribunal he has no voice. The answer to this is equally obvious and I think equally destructive. The magistrates get their primary fees only upon submissions, it is true; and if we assume that this will never be made an oppression to the poor and hopeless by bringing about submissions through deception or duress, still it is ignored by the majority that the magistrates are the preliminary triors of those bound over. They do not bind over merely upon a charge, but, if there is no submission, hear the evidence, and bind over or not, as they think proper. This affords the chance and the temptation for oppression. But passing this also with a bare notice and coming to the proposition that they have "no voice" in the trial court, I deny wholly that they are not factors, and affirm that they can (and the effect of this law is to induce them to do so) make themselves most important factors in conviction in a large proportion of criminal cases, because they (assembled in county court) select the men who compose the grand juries which find all indictments and presentments, and the traverse juries which try all the misdemeanors, and which, as a rule, are tendered along with others in nearly all special venirens ordered from which the felony juries are made up.

Having disposed of these two points, I return to a specific analysis of the act for more particular application, and to serve as a basis for such argument as I wish to make against its constitutionality, a clear understanding of it being necessary to proper appreciation of the objections on that ground. It is entitled "An Act to Regulate and Restrict the Payment of Costs and Fees in Criminal Prosecutions," and has three sections. Taking them up in inverse order, and beginning with the second (for the third contains nothing but a provision that the act take immediate effect), we find in it a sweeping and general disallowance of fees, costs, and mileage to all witnesses for the state, in all cases, and without regard to county of residence, where the witnesses reside within 5 miles of the place where attendance is required. The 1st section declares that no fees or costs shall be allowed against the state or any county in favor of anyone (including here, or course, both witnesses and officers) except as therein after classified, and in the classification provides for payment of costs of prosecution in all cases of conviction, saving two exceptions,—one already stated in the analysis of § 2, denying costs to witnesses within 5 miles; and the other where defendant, on conviction has given security for the costs, and it cannot be made out of him and his sureties on execution. It provides further, for payment of costs in eight felony cases,—homicide, rape, robbery, burglary, arson, embezzlement, incest, and bigamy,—where the prosecution has proceeded to a verdict, whatever the verdict may be, whether of conviction or acquittal, and whether there was or not a judgment pronounced upon it (this, of course, subject to exception of § 2). It also provides for payment, as heretofore of the compensation for boarding prisoners, expenses of keeping and boarding juries, compensation of jurors, costs of transcripts in cases taken by appeal or writ of error to the supreme court, mileage and legal fees for removing or conveying criminals from one county to another, or from one jail to another, and compensation and mileage of witnesses for the state required to attend as such outside of their county where they reside more than 5 miles from the place of attendance, and for compensation to state witnesses when confined in jail to secure their attendance.

Having analyzed this act and stated its effect in the order in which I wish to consider it, I return to the consideration of the constitutional objections to its validity. Though quoted by the majority, I deem it necessary to restate in part, in connection with the views I desire to express, the constitutional provisions assumed to be violated. The Bill of Rights (art. 1, § 21, of the Constitution) declares "that no man's particular services shall be demanded or property taken or applied to public use without the consent of his representatives or just compensation being made therefor." The "consent of his representatives" here can only mean the consent of anyone authorized to represent him in yielding such service or property to any demand or taking which may by law be made. It cannot mean, I think, as may possibly be implied from a statement in this connection in the majority opinion (though nothing was predicated of it), the consent of his "legislative" representatives, because the section is itself a limitation on legislative power. If it had been intended to mean unless "demanded or taken by the legislature," it would have been useless and meaningless, and in lieu of it the provision would have been, "shall not be demanded or taken unless the legislature demands and takes it." But it is useless to argue this proposition. If any one question has been settled, it is that the legislature cannot demand and take particular services or property (of any kind) for public use without consent, or just compensation, and cannot take for private use at all. See cases collected in note to this section in Shannon's Code, p. 48. There is as little difficulty in determining the meaning of the conjunction "or," used in the phrase "consent of his representatives, or just compensation being made therefor." It is the disjunctive, to indicate that the services may be demanded free, or the property taken without charge, if the person to be affected by it, or any representative authorized to act for him, consent, but that, if he does not consent, or refuses to consent, they may be demanded or taken upon just compensation being made therefor. Properly elaborated and changed to an affirmative, the section would read: "The state may, by act of the legislature, demand for public use the particular services of any person free, or take and apply his property to public use without compensation, if he, or any person representing him, authorized to do so, consent; and it may so demand such services, and take and apply his property to public use without consent, or against refusal of consent, upon payment of just compensation." In this view it would seem plain that the services involved in attending court, performing duties required, and giving evidence could not be demanded by the state without compensation, or, to state it more accurately, denying compensation by express provision of law. This under the particular service clause. It would also seem equally clear that, in addition to this objectionable demand of time and service, the money which the officers and witnesses must pay for fare if transported by another, for pikeage and ferriage if they ride or walk, and for expense of boarding themselves during the service demanded, which is their property, could not be taken and applied to public use without compensation. We need not stop here to consider the fact that time and labor are property. This is too well settled for controversy. But, if they were not, the constitutional clause quoted includes both by apt words (for no services can be performed without time), and protects them equally and alike against taking by the state without compensation.

It would appear, therefore, that by the unqualified language used as to taking property for public use, and by the natural construction of the phrase "particular services" as applied to the services which may be exacted of individuals, that both are protected by the plain terms of this provision. But it is said that there is something in the meaning of the word "particular," used in connection with "services," which must be held to disentitle these citizens suing in this case to this protection, because the "services" they rendered are not the "particular" services intended to be protected; that the services of officers and witnesses, "such as may be required of all citizens or officials by general or valid special laws," are "ordinary" and not "particular," and may be taken without compensation. This is illustrated by the case of a physician, who, it is said, may be compelled to testify without compensation, but cannot be compelled to examine into the matter inquired about, and then testify; and, indeed, just such a case in Indiana actually arose, and was so decided. But in my judgment, speaking with due respect for that court, it frittered away a great constitutional principle over a controversy about nothing, for the court finally held, in effect, that the clause did not cover services which might be demanded under the police or sovereign power of the state, and that witnesses' services were such because they were "such as any individual was bound to render when called upon for the public welfare." If their theory be true, their conclusion was erroneous, because under that power any services may be demanded, and any property taken or destroyed, without compensation. As justly said by counsel for defendants: "Strange as it may appear to some, there is a power of sovereignty not limited by and superior to any written Constitution. It is the power of state preservation. It, so far, has found expression only in the assertion and exercise of those powers known as war powers, police powers, taxation, and eminent domain." Randolph, Em. Dom. §§ 8, 9, 23, 24; Prentice, Pol. Powers, § 6; Mills, Em. Dom. 2d ed. § 9; Miller v. Horton, 152 Mass. 540, 10 L. R. A. 116; Tiedeman, Pol. Power, § 42; Markham v. Brown, 37 Ga. 277, 92 Am. Dec. 73. These are the great reserved powers of the state. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. State, Omaha, 47 Neb. 549. Not uncontrollable or despotic, but practically controlled alone by the wisdom and justice of the judges, "subject to the discretionary coercion of courts (1 Vent. 66) to the judicial determination of its appropriate limits." People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 15, 5 L. R. A. 559. Like the attempt to define "due process of law," it comes at last to the gradual process of judicial inclusion and exclusion. Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97-104, 24 L. ed. 616-619. This is a well-recognized power, and nowhere more fully than in this state (Theilan v. Porter, 14 Lea, 626, 52 Am. Rep. 173), but it is a distinction and not an exception to the constitutional inhibition we are considering. It is not a question of what services, "particular" or otherwise, may be taken under these sovereign powers outside and above the Constitution. It is a question of what the purpose of the taking is. So, in the case cited (Theilan v. Porter, 14 Lea, 626, 52 Am. Rep. 173) it is said: "But this inhibition has no application as a limitation of the exercise of those police powers which are necessary to the safety and tranquillity of every well-ordered community, nor of that general power over private property which is necessary for the orderly existence of all governments." This was a case of the destruction of private property without compensation, because it was unhealthy and a nuisance, and the state's right to do it or permit it to be done by a municipality was upheld and justified upon authority. It was rested upon the principle announced by Chief Justice Shaw, and his opinion quoted to this effect: "Every holder of property, however absolute his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use of it shall not be injurious to others, nor to the rights of the community. If it be hurtful, he is restrained, not because the public makes any use of it, or takes any benefit or profit from it, but because his own use would be a noxious use." Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 84. It cannot be doubted that in such a case physicians could have been compelled to examine it, and furnish evidence of its condition for the public good. So, I think, it clearly appears that the Indiana court, in holding that such services could not be taken because "particular" or "extraordinary," misconceived and misapplied the rule relating to sovereign power. That court assented to the taking of the witness's service—"ordinary service"—under the rule suggested, but denied its application to the very act to which, as to all others, it did apply,—to the taking of extraordinary or special service. With such a misconception I respectfully insist they misapplied the rule in the leading case cited by the majority,—Israel v. State, 8 Ind. 467. There it was held directly; but in holding it the court stated the rule regarding sovereign power, and justified its decision in this language: "It is as much the duty and interest of every citizen to aid in prosecuting crime as it is to aid in subduing any domestic or foreign enemy; and it is equally the interest and duty of every citizen to aid in furnishing to all, high and low, rich and poor, every facility for a fair and impartial trial when accused; for none is exempt from liability to accusation and trial. These are matters of general interest and public concern,—are vital, indeed, to the very existence of free government, and render the services of witnesses on such occasions matters of general public interest, and not particular, in the sense of the Constitution." The other Indiana cases cited followed this, and were based upon it.

The Oregon court, in the case cited by the majority (Daly v. Multnomah County, 14 Or. 20), in a brief opinion simply adopted the view of the Indiana court, and in the exact language of its expression, thus practically making but one judicial exposition of the law; and this demonstrably, if not confessedly, upon the application of a principle wholly outside of the constitutional clause under consideration.

These precedents, I respectfully insist, therefore, go for nothing. There are no others. The question was not involved in the Tennessee case cited (Neely v. State, 4 Baxt. 174), which uses somewhat the same language, for there the point in judgment was whether the legislature could pass a constitutional law taxing the losing party with jury fees. It was held it could not. What was said outside of this was pure dictum, was not matter involved, argued, or considered, and is entitled to no weight as authority. The other Tennessee cases were not in point. Washington v. Nashville, 1 Swan, 180, was a case involving the police power of the state, and the cases in 3 Heisk. [Wright v. State, 256], and 5 Baxt. [House v. Whitis, 690], were sui generis, to which no law in particular was applied. They were cases holding that a lawyer might be required to defend a prisoner or act as guardian ad litem for a minor without compensation, and put upon the ground that "where a lawyer takes his license he takes it burdened with these honorary obligations." It was expressly held that the constitutional clause we are considering had no application, and it was not pretended that the service was demanded under the sovereign power. It seems to have been assumed to be an obligation of honor and duty resting on him as an officer of the court to obey its orders to defend the helpless. The majority, putting it this way, say: "As sheriffs and clerks are officers of the court, so may they be required to render services, and so do they take their offices (as the lawyer takes his license) burdened with similar conditions and requirements." This view is erroneous in several respects: First. They are not required by this law to render similar services; they are not to defend a few of the helpless, but to aid in the prosecution of nearly all criminals without compensation. It cannot be doubted that lawyers could not be required to perform such services without compensation. Second. They are not officers of the court in the sense that lawyers are. They do serve before courts, it is true; they are officers, and, in a sense, are officers of court; but they are constitutionally elected officers of the counties in which they serve, and are given by law and by constitutional requirement fees of office; for when the election of these officers was provided for by the Constitution without fixing salaries it was implied that they were to hold them substantially as they had always been held, and to render service in them with their general functions and the material, if not particular, amounts of compensation unimpaired. Legislative acts are void which attempt to take from constitutional officers defunctions or the substantial emoluments of office. State, Kennedy, v. Brunst, 26 Wis. 412, 7 Am. Rep. 84; King v. Hunter, 65 N. C. 608, 6 Am. Rep. 754; Pope v. Phifer, 3 Heisk. 682; Warner v. People, 2 Denio, 272, 43 Am. Dec. 740. I regret that the length to which this opinion must be extended forbids quotation of these cases. They should be read in connection with it, to appreciate the full force and merit of the proposition they are cited to sustain. Compensation to these officers was always a matter of legal provision and of right. The lawyer's compensation was never a matter of legal provision, and only of later years a matter of right. He once took his license burdened with the "honorary obligation" of rendering all service free. It is no great deprivation that his present right and custom to charge for his services should remain yet burdened by the obligation to serve the helpless free when ordered to do so by the courts. But if the case was authority for depriving clerks and sheriffs of their fees, and taking their services without compensation, it avails nothing as an authority in this case. If the decision needs the support of this authority, it must fall, because, confessedly, justices of the peace and witnesses are not officers of the court, and the principle could not sustain the law construed, because that law deprives these also of compensation.

Nor do the cases holding that citizens may be compelled to serve in the militia or work on public roads without compensation help the decision. The right to the first service without compensation is clearly a right of sovereignty under the war power. If the citizen can be compelled by the state to serve in war, he may be required to prepare for such service in peace; and the right to the second was probably asserted on the same principle. When first this service was required, the country was a wilderness, and its inhabitants, without roads, were beset by foes, native and foreign. The object of opening and guarding a great highway through this territory (now state) from Clinch Mountain to Nashville was made the subject of legislation by North Carolina in 1786, and a battalion organized for this purpose among others. N. C. Acts 1786, chap. 1, § 15. In this and like manner originated the work of building, guarding, and working roads, when the country was new. It was freely accepted as proper then. The system, with modifications, continued, and became an unquestioned one. The emergent sovereign necessity long since ceased, but the system was established, and continues without objection. The necessity having passed, it is no longer justifiable, perhaps, but it is recognized and continued. Properly, now, it is supported by no well-recognized principle. It is certainly not to be extended or used as a precedent for innovations upon the Constitution, or infractions of settled limitations on legislative power.

After all, the validity of the law involved in the case before us must depend on whether the services demanded are such as may be demanded under any sovereign power suggested, or whether they are particular services, which cannot be demanded for public use under the Constitution. The majority treats the word "particular" as "peculiar" or "extraordinary." That it should have this or any other meaning is, as I think has been shown, wholly immaterial, but I most earnestly insist that this is an erroneous interpretation of the word as used in the Constitution. Its primary meaning in single words, as defined by Mr. Webster, is "separate," "sole," "single," "individual," "specific." Its secondary signification of "peculiar," adopted by the majority, is not "peculiar" in the sense of "extraordinary," implied by them, as illustrated by reference to ordinary and extraordinary services of physician. Mr. Webster does, indeed, give this as one of its secondary meanings, but in this connection: "Of or pertaining to a single person, class, or thing; belonging to one only; not general; not common; hence, personal, peculiar, singular. 'Thine own particular wrongs.'"

In this sense "peculiar" is made to mean "one's own," and this, too, is the primary meaning of "peculiar" as he elsewhere defines this word. Why shall we look for secondary meanings at all, and why is it necessary to give such secondary meaning another not allowable its own primary definition, to destroy the application of this beneficent constitutional provision. It must mean, and in my opinion it can mean, nothing, in the place employed, but individual, specific, and separate service, in contradistinction to that general service which might be required of all citizens under the sovereign power,—say, in case of insurrection or invasion. The limit must be placed, the line of distinction drawn, somewhere. If not here, where can it be? If the view of the majority be correct, that it means any service to the state in the way of witnesses, jurors, etc., then it extends to all service the state requires, including the highest as well as subordinate official service; and every citizen may be required to serve the state in every capacity without compensation, and not only to serve the state, but to bear his own expenses while doing so.

The fundamental error in the majority opinion is in classifying the service of officials and witnesses as "sovereign" instead of "government service;" as service required in emergent conditions of the government's life, and therefore belonging to the sovereign, instead of service performed in the usual administration of public affairs, and therefore to be performed only under the Constitution, and only to be required under the Constitution and upon its terms, and not under the reserved power. If this be not true, what is the meaning of the phrase, "applied to public use" in the provision declaring that "particular services shall not be demanded or property taken or applied to public use" without compensation? It was not to guard against its application to private use. It cannot be taken for private use at all. It was to provide against its taking for public use, and it does so in the most express terms possible. To give the phrase any meaning, it must be held to prevent the "application" of individual services or property to the ordinary service of the government, and such unquestionably is its prosecution of criminals,—its administration of law. These, indeed, are the ordinary purposes for which government is organized. They are public, important, necessary purposes, it is true, but at last they are but the usual and ordinary purposes of government. They are not emergent, they are not like, they do not belong to the class relating to war, famine, pestilence, and other extraordinary conditions, when the necessity of the government, like it is said of necessity in the abstract, "knows no law." It is true it is a public purpose to convict a criminal, but it is equally true it is a public purpose to keep a criminal in confinement as a punishment for crime, and to protect the community. If the services of the citizen can be taken to convict, they may be taken to guard and keep, the prisoner; and, indeed, they may be taken for all public purposes, and the constitutional provision made a mockery. The only rule that can save it is that which holds it applicable to all usual, ordinary government service, and inapplicable when those extraordinary emergencies arise which call for the resistless power of sovereignty over and above any law, when, as in case of troubles like that of war, all laws are silent.

But, again, if there was any controversy as to the services which can be taken because of the use of a qualifying word, there can be none as to the "property." The language of the Constitution in reference to it is not "particular" property, but "property," any property, in reference to the taking of which this inhibition speaks. So the cases on the construction of the word "particular" could not support the opinion, because this law takes not only the services, but the money, of officers and witnesses required to pay their traveling and boarding expenses while attending court and rendering the services taken, whether they be "particular" in the sense used in the majority opinion or not. If the act, therefore, was not invalid because of taking the services, it would be on account of taking the property, for, to be valid at all, it must be valid against both inhibitions.

So far I have been considering this constitutional provision in disconnection from all others but, if both propositions maintained here are erroneous, and such services and property as are involved in this case might be taken by a proper law under this clause of the Constitution, or despite its prohibition, if it stood alone, then I insist that they could not be taken by this act, because the taking and application thereof on its terms violate other provisions of the Constitution preserving and guaranteeing to a defendant the right of inviolate trial by an impartial jury. In other words, if the state can demand and take such services and property as has been done here absolutely and without compensation, and apply them to the public use, without more,—as, for illustration, if it can require all officers and witnesses to serve the state in such capacity, and pay their own expenses, without compensation in any or all cases,—it cannot do it on terms of this law, which offer a compensation for such service and property only to accomplish, and when it accomplishes a conviction, and thus encumber and embarrass the right of trial by jury with conditions which, in their practical operation, impair or violate that right, or obstruct its free and full enjoyment. This court, in construing another constitutional provision involved in this case, and to be considered later on, said: "Another essential to the validity of every legislative classification, whether it be made under art. 11, § 8, or under art. 1, § 8, is that it must not violate any other provision of the Constitution, whether such provision be expressed or implied." Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 89 Tenn. 535, 12 L. R. A. 70, that is, that though an act might be valid per se, if authorized by one provision, it would not be valid, though so authorized, if not framed to be unobjectionable under every other.

The only answer to all this which we find in view of the majority is that there is no provision in the Constitution for impartial officers and impartial witnesses. Granted; but this is not the question for determination. It is freely conceded that there may always exist partiality in both, as a natural human sentiment; but what I am combating is the constitutional right of the legislature to make them so by terms of law,—to provide for it in the face of the constitutional provision for an impartial trial. Heretofore, when any special reason for partiality appeared in an officer, it was held that the constitutional provisions, followed in legislative acts, were ample to exclude him from acting; and in the Clopp Case [94 Tenn. 183], it was held that where the sheriff was interested in the result (as an accident) the defendant's right to a fair and impartial trial was violated, and there was in the meaning and spirit of these provisions of the Constitution abundant power to declare it, and protect the defendant. Now, when made interested and partial by terms of law, we hold that defendant is not entitled to protection. The same argument applies in respect to witnesses. I am not contending that the Constitution or any former laws made impartial witnesses. The law never did create or require impartial witnesses. But what I am contending is that the Constitution does not permit, in fairness and justice to the citizen, that the legislature shall make them partial by terms of law by bidding for the service of conviction. This point has been expressly decided. In the case already referred to, in which it was said, but not decided, that a juror could be compelled to serve without compensation, it was directly held that this could not be done upon conditions which impaired the right to such a trial. I quote from that case: "The Bill of Rights [article 1 of the Constitution] guarantees to all citizens the right of trial by jury, unimpaired and without violation. This manifestly means that the right shall never be embarrassed or encumbered with conditions which, in their practical operation, may impair or violate the free and full enjoyment of the right." Neely v. State, 4 Baxt. 184. This was on the point in judgment, and the only one for which the case is authority. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Davidson County Ct. 1 Sneed, 639, 695, 62 Am. Dec. 424. The guaranty to the citizen that the right of jury trial shall remain inviolate, and that he has the right to be heard in his case by himself and counsel, before an impartial jury, would be a hollow mockery if it did not, by unavoidable implication, express that he was guaranteed such a hearing and such an inviolate trial by such a jury as was itself, in its formation, in all the elements, and in all the conditions of its relation to results, fair and impartial; and so I deny that the expression in the Clapp Case (which is but a reiteration of similar expressions scattered through all preceding opinions), that a fair and impartial trial is guaranteed to a defendant under the Constitution and the laws (meaning laws whose enactment was compelled by its provisions) is a misuse of terms, or expresses more strongly than the Constitution itself does this precise proposition. It is but the formulation, in other words, of exactly the same meaning of that guaranty of a fair and impartial trial which the Constitution makes; and I most earnestly dissent from any interpretation or construction which denies for any purpose of argument or decision that our Constitution does not expressly and without the aid of any "law" or "laws" secure such primal and inestimable right of freemen in their litigations with the state or between each other. The right of a fair and impartial trial, said this court in the Neely Case, already quoted, is one which can "never be embarrassed or encumbered with conditions which, in their practical operation, may impair or violate the free and full enjoyment of the right." In that case—and I am pleased to select it because it is the principal Tennessee case on which the majority relies—it was held that the taxation of jury costs against the losing party violated the citizen's right to a fair and impartial trial. What have we here under terms of the law we are considering? The state arranges the machinery for the trial of a defendant. It gets in readiness to secure him that fair and impartial trial; how? First. By directing the sheriff (who has arrested defendant, and lodged him in prison, or taken his bond for appearance, summoned the witnesses, and thus accumulated costs in the officer's favor) to summon this (to be) impartial jury. Second. By devolving upon the clerk (who has issued the warrant and subpoenas, and entered essential orders relating to the case, whereby costs have accumulated in his favor) the duty of making provision for drawing this impartial jury, and making all the entries in respect thereto down to final judgment. Third. By turning this jury over to an officer to be attended from day to day until verdict, who may also have costs dependent upon the result of the trial. Fourth. By bringing all state witnesses before the court from every quarter of the county in which the trial is had and 5 miles beyond, to give evidence, and then "by terms of law" assuring them all that for their services in the case upon conviction they shall be specially compensated,—if they convict they shall be paid; if they acquit they shall not only not be paid, but shall be denied expenses. Thus, by a state reward, is leagued against a defendant the men who summon and guard his jury, who provide for its drawing and keep the record of his trial, and who give evidence against him, and whose combined fees and expenses in particular cases may, and often do, amount to hundreds, and sometimes thousands, of dollars.

39 L. R. A.

The state says: "I summon you to trial. I invite you to a fair and impartial trial. Behold the sheriff who arrested and committed you, who summoned the witnesses and the panel from which you are to select your triors,—the final judges on whose decision hangs your liberty or life,—the clerk and the officers of court and the witnesses. I have promised them all payment only on condition that they convict you. Take your seat. If you think, against the facts of the case, against the usual human bias in disfavor of a man or woman charged with a criminal offense, in the distress oftentimes of poverty and friendlessness, the embarrassment and odium of imprisonment, you can defeat this combination of selfish interest and law-created league against you, proceed to do it, and attest, with constitutional reverence, that, considering your desperate chances, you have had a fair trial,—as fair, at least, as that of running the gauntlet."

In this connection I note that the majority lays special stress in favor of the fairness of the trial under the present law, because the sheriff's fees for summoning the special panel are not taxed to the defendant, but are paid out of the treasury. It is true that under that act of 1882 such cost is taxed to the county. Whether, under the general provisions of the act under consideration, providing that in the majority of criminal cases no costs shall be taxed to the state or county, and only as a result of verdict of conviction in others, this law of 1882 is repealed, it is not necessary to determine here. Let it be granted that it is not affected by the act we are construing, and that this part of the sheriff's costs is not dependent upon the result of the prosecution; this is the smallest item in his account in such cases. The act of 1882 gives only 5 cents for the summoning of each juror ordered in special venire, while for all other services in the case a much larger charge is provided for, and expressly the compensation for these services is so dependent. If the law would be objectionable with that in it, as seems to be implied from the reference to it in the majority opinion, it is impossible to see why it is not so with the more largely compensated service in the case so dependent. The same suggestion is made as to the officer attending the jury. The majority assumes this is paid as heretofore, because the expenses of "keeping and boarding" juries is provided for in the act. I think it clear that this expression has reference only to payment of jury expenses proper,—that is, if they are but supplied with food, their "boarding" expenses are paid; if they are kept and furnished lodging, this expense of "keeping" too is paid; and hence the entire expense of "keeping and boarding" is provided for. This is demonstrated by an examination of former statutes on subject of jury board.

The first used the term "boarding and finding." Code, § 4032. In the others the word "keeping" is used as the term for "boarding." Mill. & V. Code, § 6454. This was the act of 1859-60, chap. 6, p. 4, § 2, and was amended by an act which in its caption used only the term "boarding," and in the body, as expressing it, the word "keeping." In the succeeding section the bill of person authorized to receive it was to be for "boarding." Shannon's Code, §§ 7607, 7608; Acts Ex. Sess. 1885, p. 76. The officer attending them never was paid under any fee-bill head of "keeping" a jury, which he in no sense does, unless he should happen to be an innkeeper, or temporarily act as such. His compensation has been paid heretofore for attending and waiting on the jury under the fee bill in favor of officers for "attendance on court" (Code, § 4564, subsec. 26; Shannon's Code, § 6402, subsec. 25) and "for attending on grand jury and waiting on court" (Code, §§ 4571, 4572, subsec. 9; Shannon's Code, §§ 6409, 6410, subsec. 8). It is under these sections the compensation is provided for, and it is these, and these only, which fix the amount. There is no distinct fee for waiting on a "trial jury" in these terms, but such fee has been paid by accepted construction because in such service the officer is, in a proper sense, in "attendance on" and "waiting on court." These are the only statutes governing this matter. The item of cost is in the regular fee bill. No reason is perceived why this fee paid heretofore by the public is not now eliminated by the general implied repeal of this statute, under which all charges except those provided for in the act are swept away.

But, again, it is to be observed that the officer may be the sheriff himself, or a deputy, who has other costs in the case, or a constable, who may have earned preliminary costs in it before a justice; and, whether this special cost of attending the jury be dependent upon the result or not, he may be otherwise more interested in other costs; so that to save this point is not to help the opinion. If it needed to be saved, the remaining costs leave a remaining interest, which would vitiate equally without this as with it. Here, however, we are told that if any such officer be interested he may be objected to, as was done in the case of Clapp v. State.

This will not answer to help the law, for it must be remembered that the sheriff's interest in that case was held to be a special one of fact which the law would not tolerate in an officer who might influence the jury. Under the construction given to the act here involved, it is held that the interest it vests in officers to fees upon conviction will not affect them, or be objectionable by defendant; and this holding is a necessity to sustain the law, because these officers are interested in all cases, and if upon defendant's objection they could be disallowed to serve in the cases their whole service would be rejected. The very act, therefore, which is upheld because the services can be unobjectionably performed, would be made to mean that they were objectionable, and should not be performed if objected to. I cannot, therefore, understand what meaning under this law is to be given to the suggestion in the opinion, "that if any officer is disqualified because of interest, his place may be supplied, as was indicated in the Clapp Case, 94 Tenn. 186." It cannot mean that the allowance of cost in case of conviction shall disqualify the officer, for the whole opinion is devoted to combating the idea that there is anything wrong or illegal in this. As applied therefore in connection with the suggestion of the majority that "it will thus be seen that the act jealously guards the prisoner's right to a fair and impartial jury," I must confess my inability to see how any exception on the grounds implied can be made, or, if made, how it could be sustained, without abrogation of the law. I therefore most earnestly deny that it can "thus" or otherwise "be seen that the act jealously guard's the prisoner's right to a fair and impartial jury."

The various cost statutes to which the majority refers, which are supposed to help in establishing the validity of this law, I need not discuss. It is sufficient to say that no other statute, valid or invalid, just or unjust, to the citizen, can afford any aid to this act on the constitutional questions involved. Nor need I discuss the state's abstract right to disallow taxation of costs against itself or its counties, its various divisions of sovereignty, where that power is exercised, or its right of denial of suit to its wronged citizens. It can be readily admitted that the last three propositions, in the abstract, are true, and then as readily proved that it cannot do so if in the same act or by pre existing act, it provides for demanding the particular services or taking the property of the citizen for a public use without compensation, if that compensation depends upon taxation of costs or right of suit against the state, in which event the refusal to allow such taxation and the denial of suit would be admitted by the courts, but the right to demand the service or take the property would be denied; as, for instance, if the state should be without a capitol, and provide by law for suit or condemnation to take from an owner such property as it preferred for that purpose without providing for payment, and in the same act, or by pre-existing act, declare that in such suit no costs should be taxed to the state, and no suit (or remedy) given to the owner for obtaining compensation, the right not to be taxed with costs without its consent would be conceded, the right to deny its liability to suit would be confessed, but the right to take property and force the owner to incur costs in such a suit would be denied, because of the constitutional provision we have been considering. These propositions, I think, are not relevant. I am presenting specific objections to the validity of this law. It is no more valid if other statutes are invalid than invalid if they are valid. Each must stand on its constitutional merit. Some of them perhaps have as little as this, but want of time and space to me, even more than irrelevancy in them, forbid extending this opinion for their analysis and discussion..

I wish to present one more constitutional objection to this act, and that is, that it is class legislation arbitrarily capricious, and therefore void. Article 1, § 8, of the Constitution declares that "no man shall be taken or imprisoned, or disseised of his freehold, liberties, or privileges, or outlawed, or exiled, or in any manner destroyed or deprived of his life, liberty, or property, but by the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land." Under this provision it has been held that an act is not the "law of the land" when the classification upon which it is based is unnatural, arbitrary, and capricious. Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 89 Tenn. 541, 12 L. R. A. 70. Whether the statute be public or private, general or special in form, if it attempts to create distinctions and classifications between the citizens of this state, the basis of such classifications must be natural and not arbitrary. If the classification under this section is made for the purpose of subjecting a class to the burden of some special disability, duty, or obligation, there must be some good and valid reason why that particular class should alone be subject to the burden. Ibid. Distinctions in these respects must not only be natural, and not arbitrary, but must rest upon some reason upon which they can be defended,—some sound legal reason. Cooley, Const. Lim. 890; Dugger v. Mechanics' & T. Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 258, 28 L. R. A. 796. Elsewhere I have shown that the general object of the bill was to take the principal expense and burden of criminal prosecutions off of the whole body of the state, and devolve it upon a few; and in this sense the law in its general scope and purpose is obnoxious to this provision of the Constitution. But, analyzing it more particularly, its special classifications are unnatural, arbitrarily, capricious, and in my judgment absolutely indefensible. I quote here the admirable analysis of defendant's counsel on this point: "When the act passed, February 8, 1897, the law was, and long had been, that witnesses for the state should be paid in all cases, regardless of the disposition which might be made of them. Such being the law, this act, discriminating among persons who belong to the class, called witnesses as follows, was passed: (1) The witnesses in eight named kinds of felonies are paid when the case proceeds to a verdict, and consequently the witnesses in such cases which do not proceed to a verdict are not paid. It often happens that after repeated continuances, mistrials, and reversals a felony case (of one of these eight kinds) is nolle, or the case terminated by the death of the accused. The witnesses have attended alike in all cases. In no case do they control it. In one case there was a verdict. In the other the case was nolle. In the third the defendant died. Can anyone give even the pretense of a reason why the witnesses should be paid in one case, and not in the others? An apt illustration exists in the following case: A murder is committed in a remote district. Henry and James are suspected and indicted. They sever. After repeated continuances and mistrials, Henry is acquitted. After repeated continuances and mistrials, James dies. The witnesses are from the same neighborhood, pass through the same toll gates, cross the same ferries, or come on the same train, and alike leave their plows standing in the field. The witnesses in Henry's case are paid. The witnesses in James's case are not. As the witnesses ride home, discussing the situation, what argument can the witnesses in Henry's case, with the money in their pockets, make to the witnesses in James's case, who returned empty-handed, which will satisfy them of the justice of the discrimination? Again, why should the witnesses in a manslaughter case be paid if the case proceeds to a verdict, and not be paid in a case of assault with intent to commit murder, which has proceeded to a verdict? Why, in cases of rape, but not in cases of attempt to rape? Or in bigamy, but not in attempt to poison? Why in embezzlement, but not in fraudulent breaches of trust? Why should they not be paid when the case proceeds to a verdict in railroad wrecking, official bribery, corrupting jurors, suborning witnesses, horse stealing, and masked marauding? Witnesses living more than 5 miles distant, going to another county, are paid, while those living within 5 miles are not. Conceded, for argument, that the discrimination as to mileage can be defended, that as to witnesses' fees cannot. A day at court is a day of time, whether the witness came 5 miles or ten. The truth is that, whether the nature of the crime, or its effects upon the public, or the degree of punishment, be considered, the classification is arbitrary, indefensible, and absurd. But, if it be possible, a more indefensible classification yet remains to be noticed. The witnesses for the state in eight named felonies are to be paid when the case named proceeds to a verdict; but in fifty other felonies, and many misdemeanors, they cannot be paid, even though the case has proceeded to a verdict, unless it be one of conviction. The inconvenience to the witness, and the loss of time, and the fares and tolls are not determined by the legal nature of the case, but by the circumstances of the witness. They are the same to him in all cases. Moreover, he cannot absolutely control, however much, under this act, he may influence, the verdict. Consequently, a statute which discriminates between witnesses, in respect to their compensation in criminal cases, according to the jury's verdict, is cruel, arbitrary, and indefensible. It is indefensible and arbitrary because it unreasonably discriminates between witnesses; it is cruel because it stabs the accused." I need add nothing, if, indeed, anything can be added, to this view of the act on this question. What is presented in it is, to my mind, absolutely conclusive.

89 L. R. A.

Though I have extended this opinion to great length, and am conscious that I will be less heard for much speaking, I am also aware, and suggest in deprecation of adverse judgment on this account, that much has been omitted which could have been, and perhaps ought to have been, said, and particularly as the clear, able, and thoroughly matured opinion of the majority upholding the validity of this act presents all that can be said in its support, fully suggesting the objections to it and evading none. The question, too, is a great one, and worthy of the profoundest consideration. These, and my earnest conviction that the law is in violation of some of the dearest rights which citizens of Tennessee have been permitted to enjoy for a hundred years, are my excuse—if not justification—for the length and the earnestness of this dissent. But I am aware that strength of conviction is often quite inconclusive of accuracy of judgment, and that this is more often true when the conviction is not in accord with that of any other member of the court, all of whom are as earnest, as fixed in opinion, and certainly as able to exercise as good, if not better, judgment than my own. With the construction given, however, in favor of the act, I desire to record my dissent as fully and as strongly as I am able to express it.

Viola HOCKING et al., Appls.,

v.

VIRGINIA FIRE & MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(.....Tenn.....)

A mortgagee of land cannot recover on an insurance policy taken out by the mortgagor payable to the mortgagee "as his interest may appear" where the mortgagor burned the insured building for the purpose of realizing on the policy.

(November 3, 1897.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Court of Chancery Appeals affirming a decree of the Chancery Court for Knox County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Junius Parker and H. T. Cooper for appellants.

Messrs. Webb & McClung for appellee.

Beard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This bill is filed by Viola Hocking and her

NOTE.—For rights of a mortgagee to the benefit of insurance taken in the name of the mortgagor, see Chipman v. Carroll (Kan.) 25 L. R. A. 305, and note; also Palmer Sav. Bank v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (Mass.) 32 L. R. A. 615.

As to the effect of a mortgage slip attached to an insurance policy, see Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Omaha Loan & T. Co. (Neb.) 25 L. R. A. 679, and note.

husband, who sue in their own right, and for the use of J. E. Hancock, to recover on a policy of fire insurance, issued by the defendant company to and upon the application of Viola Hocking upon her dwelling house, the policy reciting on its face that "the loss, if any, was payable to J. E. Hancock, as his interest may appear." The property covered by this policy was destroyed by fire during its life, and the question here presented is, Can a recovery be made for the use and benefit of Hancock, the mortgagee, when the record discloses beyond all doubt that the mortgagor, Viola, burned the house for the purpose of realizing on this insurance policy? It is conceded that Mrs. Hocking, by her conduct, has forfeited all right to recover, but it is insisted that this forfeiture does not affect the mortgagee. While a mortgagee, to whom the loss under an insurance policy issued to the mortgagor, and covering the property of the latter, is made payable "as his interest may appear," is, in a large sense, an assignee to the extent of his interest (Donaldson v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 280), yet he does not acquire a full and absolute right, and, in case of loss, recovers in the right of the party assured, and not in his own. In the present case, it was the property of Viola Hocking that was insured and destroyed by fire, and it was she who took out this policy for his benefit. If at any time after its issuance the mortgage in question had been discharged the interest of the mortgagee in this policy would have terminated, and Mrs. Hocking alone would have been entitled to its proceeds. Claiming through the assured, Hancock had no higher or greater right against the defendant company than she; and, as it is clear that she, being the incendiary of this property, would be repelled, he (the mortgagee) must abide the forfeiture which the conduct of his mortgagor has brought about. A large number of cases recognizing this sound principle are to be found in the reports. Among them are: Illinois Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Fir. 53 Ill. 151, 5 Am. Rep. 38; Hale v. Mechanics' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 169, 66 Am. Dec. 410; Pupke v. Resolute F. Ins. Co. 17 Wis. 379, 84 Am. Dec. 754; Grossenor v. Atlantic F. Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 391.

We agree with the court of chancery appeals that the forfeiture of all right under the policy, resulting from the conduct of the assured, the mortgagor, extends to and extinguishes the right of the mortgagee, and the decree of that court is therefore, affirmed.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Appl.,

v.

Margaret O'KEEFE, Admr., etc., of John O'Keefe, Deceased.

(168 Ill. 115.)

1. A person must be expressly or im-

NOTE.—As to when a person who has started for a train becomes a passenger, see note to Webster v. Fitchburg R. Co. (Mass.) 24 L. R. A. 521; Wood v. 39 L. R. A.

pliedly received as a passenger before he can sustain that relation to a carrier.

2. The holder of a free pass on a railroad who gets on the front platform of a baggage car next the tender when the train is in motion and after it has left the depot, and then tries to open the baggage car door, does not thereby become a passenger so as to make the railroad company liable for his protection as such, when he is killed by a collision while he is on the car platform.

Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 35 L. R. A. 199; and Western & A. R. Co. v. Voils (Ga.) 35 L. R. A. 655.

3. A conductor's knowledge that someone has boarded his train while in motion by getting on the platform between the tender and baggage car is not sufficient to show that he has accepted him as a passenger, when he does not know who the person is or what he is there for.

(Carter, J., dissents.)

(November 1, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Fourth District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Union County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of defendant's intestate. Reversed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Messrs. William H. Green and James Fentress for appellant.

Messrs. William A. Schwartz and Kar-raker & Lingle, for appellee:

Appellant should be held liable in this action for damages, because deceased was killed through what the law presumes to have been negligence on the part of appellant.

Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Thompson, 56 Ill. 141; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Cotton, 140 Ill. 494; Byrne v. Boadle, 2 Hurlst. & C. 722; Scott v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 3 Hurlst. & H. 598; Lavis v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 54 Ill. App. 641; Carpus v. London & B. R. Co. 5 Ad. & El. N. S. 747.

The law calls upon appellant to show and prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the accident resulted from a cause for which it should not be held liable. Even where no special relation like that of passenger and carrier exists between the parties.

North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Cotton, 140 Ill. 494.

A passenger who goes from one car to another of a moving train to find a seat does not, while so upon the platform, take the risk of collision with another train.

Devire v. Boston & M. R. Co. 148 Mass. 348, 2 L. R. A. 166; Stewart v. Boston & P. R. Co. 146 Mass. 605.

It was a question for the jury, under all the circumstances, whether or not O'Keefe was using proper care.

Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 658; Werlev. Long Island R. Co. 98 N. Y. 650; Noland v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 87 N. Y. 63, 41 Am. Rep. 345.

O'Keefe was riding on the platform by the permission of the company, and he could not be charged with contributory negligence in doing so.

Hutchinson, Carr. § 654; Lammert v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 9 Ill. App. 888.

Judgments of the trial court will not be reversed where the evidence of the successful party, when considered by itself, is clearly sufficient to sustain the verdict.

Shevlier v. Seager, 121 Ill. 569.

Care and negligence are questions of fact for the jury.

Lowry v. Lynch, 57 Ill. App. 323.

89 L. R. A.

The contract of carrier and passenger may be implied from slight circumstances.

North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Williams, 140 Ill. 288.

O'Keefe was a passenger because he was a traveler by an "established conveyance" on a regular passenger train, upon a pass issued to him by appellant for the purpose of expediting his work.

Gordon v. Grand Street & N. R. Co. 40 Barb. 546; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 566.

Whether or not O'Keefe was a passenger was a question of fact for the jury, and they were fully instructed upon that question.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Mehlsack, 181 Ill. 62.

Without any proof of the cause the jury might justly find that a collision, on the same track, of two cars or trains of a passenger carrier is due to the negligence of the carrier.

North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Boyd, 57 Ill. App. 536; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Martin, 154 Ill. 529.

The jury properly found appellant was guilty of the greatest and grossest negligence.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Traves, 38 Ill. App. 307; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Brown, 123 Ill. 162.

O'Keefe was not a gratuitous passenger.

Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 564; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 55 U. S. 14 How. 468, 14 L. ed. 502; Jacksonville S. E. R. Co. v. Southworth, 135 Ill. 253.

Cartwright, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was before this court on a former appeal, and the judgment appealed from was reversed. Illinois C. R. Co. v. O'Keefe, 154 Ill. 508. The case has been again tried, resulting in a verdict and judgment for $3,000, and the appellate court has affirmed that judgment. The facts will be found stated in the former report of the case, and will not be repeated in full in this opinion. The ground upon which defendant was charged at the trial with liability for the death of O'Keefe was that he became a passenger on defendant's train from Anna to Carbondale, and was killed through the negligence of defendant in the collision with the other train. At the close of the evidence the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that such evidence was not sufficient to authorize a verdict for the plaintiff, and that they should find the defendant not guilty. The instruction was refused, and the defendant excepted. The contention here is that the instruction should have been given, because the evidence did not fairly and legally tend to prove that deceased was a passenger, or that he was exercising ordinary care and prudence when killed, while it was necessary for the plaintiff to establish both these propositions by some affirmative evidence in order to recover.

Considering the latter of these propositions first, a reference to the opinion of the court upon the former appeal shows that the judgment was reversed for error of the court in instructing the jury, as matter of law, that it was not negligence, of itself, for O'Keefe to ride on the steps or platform of the car. It was further said that an assumption of negligence on the part of the defendant, or that the deceased was not negligent, could not be stated, under the facts of the case, as a matter of law. The evidence did not greatly differ in the two trials, and we adhere to the previous holding that on the question of negligence the case might properly have been submitted to the jury.

It was also necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the relation of passenger and carrier existed between the deceased and defendant. This relation, which was claimed to exist, is a contract relation. A railroad company holds itself out as ready to receive and carry, and is bound to receive and carry, all passengers who offer themselves as such at the places provided for taking passage on its trains, and who take such passage in the cars provided for passengers. When one so presents himself, the contract relation under which he acquires the rights of a passenger may be either express or may be implied from the circumstances. If a person goes upon cars provided by the railroad company for the transportation of passengers with the purpose of carriage as a passenger with the consent, express or implied, of the railroad company, he is presumptively a passenger. 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1578. Both parties must enter into and be bound by the contract. The passenger may do this by putting himself into the care of the railroad company, to be transported, and the company does it by expressly or impliedly receiving him and accepting him as a passenger. The acceptance of the passenger need not be direct or express, but there must be something from which it may be fairly implied. One does not become a passenger until he has put himself in charge of the carrier, and has been expressly or impliedly received as such by the carrier. Bricker v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 132 Pa. 1; Webster v. Fitchburg R. Co. 161 Mass. 298, 24 L. R. A. 521; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1581. Deceased was the holder of a free pass on the road, but that fact alone would not create the relation of passenger and carrier. The purchase of a ticket does not make one a passenger unless he comes under the charge of the carrier, and is accepted for carriage by virtue of it. If a ticket holder should offer himself as a passenger, and should be refused transportation, there would be a liability for consequent damages; but it would not be a liability to him as a passenger, or on account of the relation of passenger and carrier, but would be a liability for the refusal to enter into that relation, and to permit him to become a passenger. The uncontroverted evidence bearing upon the question whether O'Keefe became a passenger was as follows: He lived about 300 yards north and 50 yards east of defendant's station at Anna. The limited vestibuled train on defendant's road came from the south, and stopped at the station, while he was sitting at the table at home eating breakfast. The train consisted of a baggage car, two coaches, and a sleeping car. It was a solid vestibuled train, the vestibules filling the spaces between the cars, with a door at each entrance and exit to and from the platforms of the passenger coaches. These doors are opened at the stations to discharge passengers who have reached their destination and to receive those desiring to become passengers, and these are the places where passengers present themselves to take passage. While this train was at the station at Anna, it was prepared for the reception of passengers desiring to be transported to other stations by opening the doors, and passengers for Anna were discharged at the station. When the doors are closed, a person on the outside cannot get in, and when the business at that station had been done the doors designed for the admission of passengers were closed, and the train left the station as a solid train, closed and inaccessible up to the platform next the tender in front of the baggage car. When the train was moving from the station, O'Keefe took his hat, and ran out of the door, and ran to the railroad track, and south towards the approaching train. When he met the train, it was going 3 or 4 miles an hour, and he climbed on the platform next the tender at the front end of the baggage car. As he passed his house, his wife saw him standing on the platform, with his back against the baggage-car door. The engineer and conductor saw him climb on the platform, but did not see him afterwards, and the conductor did not know who he was. He was not seen, after his wife saw him, until he was found dead, sitting on the step of the platform, holding the guard rail with one hand. When found he had a piece of paper in one hand, and a pencil was lying on the ground. After leaving Anna, the conductor went through the train, commencing at the north end of the first passenger coach next the baggage car, and going the entire length of the train. He then came back, unlocked the door to the baggage car, and went in, as he said, to see about the person who got on the platform, and, seeing the other train approaching, he and the baggage man jumped off through the side door. The question is whether these facts fairly tend to establish the relation of passenger and carrier between O'Keefe and the defendant by showing that he had put himself in the care of the defendant as a passenger, and had been expressly or impliedly received and accepted as such by the defendant through any authorized agent. We think that they do not. He did not go upon the train at the station provided for the reception of passengers, and did not take any place provided for the reception, accommodation, or carriage of passengers. He did not comply with any of the ordinary customs under which defendant held itself out as ready to receive and carry passengers, or under which they are received or carried. It is said that he no doubt tried to open the baggage-car door, and the inference intended is that he tried to put himself in charge of defendant as a passenger in a proper place. There is no evidence of the supposed fact, and, if there were, it could make no difference. It will certainly not be claimed that defendant was bound to have the baggage-car door open so as to give access to its passenger coaches by way of the baggage car; but, even if that were a wrong to him, he could not become a passenger by attempting to get in that door any more than if he had attempted to open one of the vestibule doors, which was locked, and had failed. He had not put himself in the care of the defendant as a passenger. Of course, the fact that the engineer knew that deceased climbed upon the train would not make him a passenger, since an engineer is not authorized to act for the defendant in such a matter, or to accept passengers. Nor do we think that the mere fact of the conductor knowing that someone had boarded the moving train on the platform between the tender and baggage car, and might still be there, is evidence tending to show that defendant accepted him as a passenger. The conductor did not know who he was, or what he was there for, whether as a passenger or otherwise. As conductor, he performed the usual duties after leaving the station, and had not reached this platform next the tender when the accident occurred. He had done nothing in the matter one way or the other. The train was moving slowly when O'Keefe climbed on, but that fact is only material on the question of negligence on his part in boarding a moving train. The train had left the station, and there would be no difference, so far as creating a relation of passenger and carrier was concerned, whether he got on there or at some other place between stations where the train was moving slowly. Of course, he might have ridden on the platform in safety but for the collision, and so, also, he might on the engine or tender or elsewhere on the train where passengers are not carried. That fact concerns only the question of negligence, and is not material on the question whether he became a passenger. As we have concluded that there was no evidence tending to establish one necessary element for a recovery,—that deceased was a passenger on defendant's train,—it follows that for such failure of proof the instructions asked should have been given.

The judgments of the Appellate Court and Circuit Court are reversed, and the cause is remanded to the circuit court.

Carter, J., dissenting:

I do not concur in the decision rendered by this court in this case. It is held, as it was held when this cause was before us at a former term (154 Ill. 508), that it was a question for the jury to determine whether the deceased was himself guilty of negligence or not, and the judgment below is not reversed for lack of evidence showing due care on his part for his own safety. So far I am satisfied with the decision, but I dissent from the conclusion reached that there was not sufficient evidence to go to the jury tending to prove that the deceased was a passenger on appellant's train when he was killed. It is established that the collision of the two trains which caused O'Keefe's death was caused by the negligence of appellant. This question is not controverted, but this, the second judgment for appellee, is reversed on the sole ground that, considered as a question of law, not of fact, O'Keefe was not a passenger at the time of the accident. It seems clear to me that, if he was not a passenger, he was a trespasser. If not, what was his relation to the company? Now, if he was a trespasser, he was guilty of negligence in getting upon the train under the circumstances shown by the evidence and riding on the platform as he did; but it has been twice held in this case that that was a question of fact upon which this court cannot set aside the finding of the jury. So, also, in my opinion, is the judgment below conclusive upon the question whether he was a passenger or not. That is equally a question of fact under the evidence. When the jury found that O'Keefe was not a trespasser, and was in the exercise of due care for his own safety, and when this court confirms that finding, it logically follows, as it appears to me, that he was rightfully on the train as a passenger, for there was no pretense that he was there in any other capacity. The evidence shows that O'Keefe had a contract with appellant to deliver to it a large number of railroad ties, and in connection with this contract had received from the company a pass over its road to enable him to travel to and from different points in carrying out the terms of the contract. He had occasion frequently to pass over appellant's road, using this pass, and sometimes, with knowledge of the trainmen, riding in the baggage car. For purposes connected with his contract relating to the delivery of ties, it became important on the morning in question that he should take the train upon which he afterwards met with the accident at Anna for another station on the road. Failing to get to the depot in time to take the train, he was compelled, to avoid being left, to climb on the forward platform of the baggage car while the train was passing him, and was moving at the rate of 8 or 4 miles an hour; the train being a fast one, and the passenger coaches vestibuled. The engineer and conductor saw him get upon the train, but the conductor testified that he did not know at the time that it was O'Keefe; but he did not do anything to indicate that he objected to the carrying of O'Keefe in the manner now complained of. About fifteen minutes after the train had left Anna, the collision occurred in which he was killed. The deceased was found sitting upon the steps crushed between the forward end of the baggage car and the tender. Whether, after getting upon the train, he could have passed through the door at that end of the baggage car, and by that means have proceeded to the passenger coaches, was a controverted question under the evidence. It is apparent that O'Keefe entered upon the train for the purpose of taking passage and of becoming a passenger. He was not injured in the act of boarding the train, so that it was immaterial whether he got upon the train at the station or afterwards, when it was in motion, unless it could be considered as affecting the question whether, by getting upon the train where he did, he became a passenger or not; and that would be a question of fact settled in the appellate court. The jury were authorized from the evidence to find that he did all he could under the circumstances to become such passenger; that he had the right of passage on the train; that he was upon the train with the implied consent of appellant; and that while on such train, and before he could enter a passenger coach provided for the carriage of passengers, he was killed through the negligence of appellant. If they so found, then I think it follows that they must have found that he was a passenger. The jury had the right to find from all the circumstances, including the fact that, after the conductor saw him get on the front end of the baggage car, he went from the other end of that car through the train, taking the fares of passengers, without saying anything to O'Keefe, and without interfering with him in any way, that he did not object to his riding in that way; that is, to find implied consent on the part of the company. In Thomp. Carr. 42, 43, it is said: "The whole matter seems to depend upon the intention of the person at the time he enters the boat or cars," etc. See also North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Williams, 140 Ill. 275; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Mehlback, 131 Ill. 61. It is said by Mr. Elliott, in his late work on Railroads (vol. 4, § 1578): "We think it safe to say that the general rule is that everyone on the passenger trains of a railroad company, and there for the purpose of carriage, with the consent, express or implied, of the company, is presumptively a passenger." It is, I think, clear, from the authorities, that it was a question of fact whether or not the deceased was a passenger at the time he was killed, and that this question does not come within the rule laid down by this court in Simmons v. Chicago & T. R. Co. 110 Ill. 346, and other cases, that, "when the evidence given at the trial, with all inferences that the jury could justifiably draw from it, is so insufficient to support a verdict for the plaintiff that such a verdict, if returned, must be set aside, the court is not bound to submit the case to the jury, but may direct a verdict for the defendant." By the verdicts of two juries, followed by two judgments of the trial court, and two judgments of affirmance by the appellate court, it has been determined as a question of fact from the evidence that the relation of carrier and passenger existed between appellant and the plaintiff's intestate. The first judgment was reversed by this court without any intimation that upon the record (substantially the same as the one now before us) the plaintiff had no case, and the cause was sent back for another trial for what purpose? Simply for the plaintiff to be told after such trial, and another weary journey to this court, that she never had any case to be submitted to a jury.

Lawrence W. POTTS, et al., School Directors,
Appts.,

v.
Jennie BREEN et al., by Next Friend.

(187 Ill. 87.)

1. Power to require children to be vaccinated as a condition of attending school is not given to a board of health by a statute providing that it shall have general supervision of the interests of health and life of the citizens, and shall have authority to make such rules and regulations as it may from time to time deem necessary for the preservation or improvement of the public health, when the remainder of the statute imposes and confers specific duties and powers by which the general language of the statute is limited.

2. It will not be supposed that the legislature has by mere implication conferred on an administrative board power to require vaccination as a condition precedent to the exercise of the constitutional and statutory right of a child to attend school.

3. School directors and boards of education have no authority to exclude children from public schools for refusal to submit to vaccination, unless in cases of emergency in the exercise of police power it is necessary, or reasonably appears to be necessary, to prevent the contagion of smallpox.

(May 10, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Fourth District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lawrence County awarding a writ of mandamus to compel defendants to admit plaintiffs into the public school and awarding nominal damages for their refusal to do so. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gee & Barnes, for appellants:

It is undisputed that the smallpox was raging in the state of Illinois at the time the order of January 1, 1894, was issued by the state board.

When it is conceded that the entire control of our common schools is subject to the hand of legislation, it would seem manifest that the power can be delegated to a board, such as a health board, to enforce the primal necessity to the pupil—health protection.

Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 228; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 183, 38 L. ed. 385; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 67 Ill. 37, 16 Am. Rep. 611.

Messrs. C. J. Borden and C. F. Breen, for appellees:

It is not made the duty of school directors to enforce orders of the state board of health. Hurd's Rev. Stat. § 2, chap. 126a.

School directors have no health powers.

Id. chap. 189, § 127.

The life and liberty of the citizen can only be restricted by law when the welfare of the public demands it. In the case at bar there is no evidence to show that it was necessary to enforce this order for the benefit of the public health, and unless such necessity is shown it cannot be enforced.

Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 67 Ill. 37, 16 Am. Rep. 611; Re Smith, 146 N. Y. 68, 28 L. R. A. 820.

The state board of health has no judicial powers, and when it acts by its own order and not under the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, then, in order to justify its action, it must show the existence of a state of facts sufficient to authorize it to act, and no sufficient facts are shown in this case.

People, Copcutt, v. Yonkers Bd. of Health, 140 N. Y. 1, 23 L. R. A. 481; Re Smith, 146 N. Y. 68, 28 L. R. A. 820.

Carter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Two suits between the same parties were begun, one a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel appellants to admit appellees to the public school of their district, and the other an action of trespass to recover damages for the exclusion of appellees from such school. The cases were tried together upon the following facts agreed upon, viz.: Jennie Breen and Jim Breen, appellees, were the children of Michael Breen, a resident and taxpayer of district No. 5, township 2, range 12, Lawrence county, Illinois, of which district the appellants were directors. These directors acting under a certain rule and order of the state board of health, made a general order, applicable to all schools in their district, requiring that all pupils should be vaccinated before being admitted to such schools. They also employed a physician to vaccinate the pupils, and instructed and ordered the teacher of the school in question to impart no instruction to appellees until they should comply with said order; and appellees were refused admission to the school on the sole ground that they had failed and refused to comply with such order, the father of appellees absolutely refusing to permit his children to be vaccinated. The directors acted in good faith, under the belief that they were performing a duty imposed upon them by law, and used no direct force upon appellees, but simply denied them admission to the school, after repeated refusals to obey the orders relating to vaccination. In their answer to the petition, the directors alleged that the state board of health made and promulgated the following order: "Resolved, that, by the authority vested in this board, it is hereby ordered that on and after January 1, 1882, no pupil shall be admitted to any public school in the state without presenting satisfactory evidence of proper and successful vaccination;" and that at the January meeting, 1894, the said state board of health passed the following resolution: "Resolved, that the power of the state board of health, under the law creating said board of health, to order the vaccination of all school children, is clear and unquestionable. The consequent duty of the board of school directors to see that such order is strictly enforced in their respective districts is equally clear, and the said order of the board of health is their sufficient authority for so doing." These orders of the state board of health were sent to the superintendent of schools of said Lawrence county, and were by him transmitted to the appellants, with written directions of the state board of health to enforce the same; and appellants made an order that all children attending the said school in their district should be vaccinated, or should show a physician's certificate of previous vaccination, as a condition of attendance upon the said school. The trial court rendered judgment against appellants, granting the peremptory writ of mandamus as prayed, and assessed appellees' damages in the trespass case at one cent. These judgments have been affirmed, on appeal, by the appellate court, and appellants have prosecuted this appeal to this court. So far as the record discloses, appellees had not been exposed to infection by smallpox, but were in perfect health, and there was no reason for their exclusion except that they had not been vaccinated. There was no epidemic of smallpox prevailing or apprehended in the vicinity of the school.

NOTE.—As to compulsory vaccination, see note to Duffield v. Williamsport School Dist. (Pa.) 25 L. R. A. 152, and note; Re Smith (N. Y.) 28 L. R. A. 820; Bissell v. Davison (Conn.) 29 L. R. A. 251; State, Adams, v. Burdge (Wis.) 37 L. R. A. 157. 39 L. R. A.

The record presents the question whether or not the state board of health, or the appellants, as such school directors, acting under its orders or otherwise, had any power to impose, as a condition of the admission of appellees to the public schools, the requirement of vaccination; and, further, if such power existed, and could be enforced as a police regulation, for the preservation of the public health, and to prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases, was the regulation and its enforcement, under the facts appearing in the record, a reasonable one? Section 2 of the act creating the board of health (Laws 1877, p. 208), is as follows: "The state board of health shall have the general supervision of the interests of the health and life of the citizens of the state. They shall have charge of all matters pertaining to quarantine, and shall have authority to make such rules and regulations, and such sanitary investigations, as they may from time to time deem necessary for the preservation or improvement of public health; and it shall be the duty of all police officers, sheriffs, constables, and all other officers and employees of the state to enforce such rules and regulations, so far as the efficiency and success of the board may depend upon their official co-operation." Section 3 provides that the board of health shall have supervision over the state system of registration of births and deaths, as hereinafter provided." They shall make up such forms and recommend such legislation as shall be deemed necessary for the thorough registration of vital and mortuary statistics throughout the state. The secretary of the board shall be superintendent of such registration." Section 4 makes it the duty of all physicians and accoucheurs to report to the county clerk "all births and deaths which may come under their supervision, with a certificate of the cause of death, and such correlative facts as the board may require in the blank forms furnished as hereinafter provided." Section 8 requires county clerks to render complete reports of all births, marriages, and deaths to the state board of health; and § 9 requires the board of health to prepare the necessary forms. Section 12 provides for an annual report by the board to the governor, "and such report shall include so much of the proceedings of the board, and such information concerning vital statistics, such knowledge respecting diseases, and such instruction on the subject of hygiene, as may be thought useful by the board for dissemination among the people, with such suggestions as to legislative action as they may deem necessary." By reference also to the act of the general assembly to regulate the practice of medicine in this state, which was passed at the same session of the legislature, and which makes reference to the state board of health, and provides for the examination and licensing by said board of persons desiring to practice medicine, it clearly appears that one of the most important duties of the board was to ascertain and certify to the qualifications of practising physicians and surgeons, and to detect quacks, and to prevent them and all ignorant pretenders from imposing upon the sick and helpless. It is clear that no such power as claimed by the state board of health has been conferred upon it, unless by the broad and general language of the 1st section of the act creating it. But the general terms there employed must be construed in relation to the more specific duties imposed and powers conferred by the act taken as a whole, and, when thus construed, these general terms are restricted so as to express the true intent and meaning of the legislature. Take, for example, the first sentence, viz.: "The state board of health shall have the general supervision of the interests of the health and life of the citizens of the state." The scope of the language there employed is practically unlimited, and were it not held to be restricted by well-known legal principles, applicable in the interpretation and construction of statutes, it would appear to confer more power on this board than the legislature itself possessed. Plainly, it was not intended that any general supervisory power over the health and lives of citizens of the state should be exercised by the board otherwise than in conformity to law, and such as may be necessary within reasonable limitations, in the performance of the administrative duties which were or should be imposed upon the board by statute. It had and could have no legislative power. Its duties were purely ministerial, and the provision of the statute authorizing the board to make such rules and regulations as it should from time to time deem necessary for the preservation or improvement of the public health cannot be held to confer that broad discretionary power contended for, to prescribe conditions upon which the citizen of the state may exercise rights and privileges guaranteed to him by public law. In Huesing v. Rock Island, 128 Ill. 465, it was contended that the city had the power, under clause 78, § 1, art. 5, of the city incorporation act, to construct and maintain a city abattoir, as a sanitary measure. This clause is as follows: "To do all acts, make all regulations, which may be necessary or expedient for the promotion of health or the suppression of disease." This court, however, held that, in view of the fact that the same section contained other provisions authorizing the city council to do certain specified acts for the preservation of the health of the city and the suppression of disease, the general provision did not enlarge the powers conferred by the special provisions.

As recently held by the supreme court of Wisconsin in a similar case, we are of the opinion that the powers of the board are limited to the proper enforcement of statutes or provisions thereof, having reference to emergencies requiring action on the part of the agencies of government to preserve the public health, and to prevent the spread of contagious or infectious diseases. It will be observed that after the 1st section the powers and duties of the board with reference to different subjects are minutely specified, and it is required "to make reports to the governor, and to include therein such information concerning vital statistics, and such knowledge respecting diseases, and such instruction on the subject of hygiene as may be thought useful for the board for dissemination among the people with such suggestions as to legislative action as they may deem necessary." Its duty to recommend legislation is repeated more than once in the act, in connection with specifications of the powers and duties of the board; and from no point of view can we regard it as having been within the legislative intent to confer, by the 1st section, plenary powers upon the board in all matters pertaining to the public health, without regard to other provisions of the statute, or further action by the legislature. Section 1 of article 8 of the Constitution provides that "the general assembly shall provide a thorough and efficient system of free schools, whereby all children of this state may receive a good common school education." And the statute provides that the directors "shall establish and keep in operation for at least one hundred and ten days of actual teaching in each year . . . a sufficient number of free schools for the accommodation of all children in the district over the age of six and under twenty-one years, and shall secure to all such children the right and opportunity to an equal education in such schools." And the statute further provides that they shall adopt and enforce all rules and regulations for the management and government of the schools, and may suspend or expel pupils who may be guilty of gross disobedience or misconduct. The statute also contains provisions of similar import relating to schools in more populous districts and cities. It is therefore seen that the right or privilege of attending the public schools is given by law to every child of proper age in the state, and there is nowhere to be found any provision of law prescribing vaccination as a condition precedent to the exercise of this legal right. Whether the legislature has the power to make such a requirement or not, it is not necessary here to consider; it is sufficient that it has not done so, and it cannot be supposed that the legislature has undertaken, and not expressly, but by mere implication from the general language used in creating the state board, to confer upon that mere administrative body such vast power over the rights and liberties of the individual citizen as to deprive him of his constitutional and statutory rights, unless he shall submit his body to be inoculated with vaccine virus, as a mere precaution against some possible future contagion of smallpox. It is doubtless true that in a large number of school districts in interior parts of the state no case of smallpox has ever existed in the history of the state, and yet, by this order of the board, no citizen who has children to educate, although compelled by law to pay taxes to support the public schools, can send his child to such schools without first having such child vaccinated, as a precaution against a disease which had never appeared, and where there was no apparent danger that it would ever appear, in the vicinity.

The power to compel vaccination, or to require it as a condition precedent to the exercise of some right or privilege guaranteed to the citizen by public law, can be derived from no other source than the general police power of the state, and can be justified upon no other ground than as a necessary means of preserving the public health. Without the necessity, or reasonable grounds upon which to conclude that such necessity exists, the power does not exist. As such the board of health has no more power over the public schools than over private schools or other public assemblages, and, its order applying to public schools only, requiring vaccination as a prerequisite to the exercise of the right to attend a public school could be justified only upon reasonable grounds appearing that the contagion of smallpox would more likely originate in or be disseminated from the public schools than from other assemblages. Whether or not it might be invested with more power in this respect is a question not involved here and not necessary to consider. While school directors and boards of education are invested with power to establish, provide for, govern, and regulate public schools, they are in these respects nowise subject to the direction or control of the state board of health, and, as before pointed out, they have no authority to exclude children from the public schools on the ground that they refuse to be vaccinated, unless, indeed, in cases of emergency, in the exercise of the police power, it is necessary, or reasonably appears to be necessary, to prevent the contagion of smallpox. Undoubtedly, also, children infected or exposed to smallpox may be temporarily excluded, or the school may be temporarily suspended; but, like the exercise of similar power in other cases, such power is justified by the emergency, and, like the necessity which gives rise to it, ceases when the necessity ceases. No one would contend that a child could be permanently excluded from a public school because it had been exposed to smallpox, or that the school could be permanently closed, because of the remote fear that the disease of smallpox might appear in the neighborhood, and that, if the school should then be open and children in attendance upon it, the public would be exposed to the contagion. And, upon the same line of reasoning, without a law making vaccination compulsory, or prescribing it, upon grounds deemed sufficient by the legislature as necessary to the public health, as a condition of admission to or attendance upon the public schools, neither the state board nor any local board has any power to make or enforce a rule or order having the force of a general law in the respects mentioned.

We are not called upon to consider whether or not vaccination is a preventive, or the best known preventive, of smallpox. That it is so seems to be the consensus of opinion of a learned and honorable profession, borne out by the history of its use for a century, and we can only so regard it; but, when compulsorily applied, it must, like all other civil regulations, be applied in conformity to law. However fully satisfied, by learning and experience, a board might be that antitoxine would prevent the spread of diphtheria, no one would contend that a rule enforcing its use as a condition precedent to the admission of a child to the public schools would, as the law now is, be valid. It is a matter of common knowledge that the number of those who seriously object to vaccination is by no means small, and they cannot, except when necessary for the public health and in conformity to law, be deprived of their right to protect themselves and those under their control from an invasion of their liberties by a practically compulsory inoculation of their bodies with a virus of any description, however meritorious it might be.

39 L. R. A.

The same conclusion was reached by the supreme court of Wisconsin in State, Adams, v. Burdge, 95 Wis. 390, 37 L. R. A. 157, in a case similar in all respects to this. In that case the court also, upon the question of the power of the legislature to delegate to such board the power to make a rule having the force of a general law, cited Doubling v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 92 Wis. 68, 31 L. R. A. 112, which held that the legislature could not delegate the insurance commissioner the power, essentially legislative, to prepare, approve, and adopt a form of "a standing fire insurance policy" for use in that state, and which use was to be enforced by penal sanction of the act. See also, on this subject, O'Neil v. American F. Ins. Co. 166 Pa. 72, 26 L. R. A. 715, and Anderson v. Manchester F. Assur. Co. 59 Minn. 182, 28 L. R. A. 609. See also Tugman v. Chicago, 78 Ill. 405. As said in State, Hahn, v. Young, 29 Minn. 478: "It is a principle not questioned that, except where authorized by the constitution, as in respect to municipalities, the legislature cannot delegate legislative power, cannot confer on any body or person the power to determine what shall be the law. The legislature only must determine what it shall be." Hurst v. Warner, 102 Mich. 238, 26 L. R. A. 484. This was an act of the Michigan legislature which provided that, in certain contingencies specified in the act, the state board of health should be authorized to establish a quarantine, and to make rules for the disinfection of baggage belonging to persons coming from a country where contagious disease exists, and, through an inspector acting thereunder, to detain for disinfection baggage of passengers, passing through the state, and coming from localities where a dangerous communicable disease exists. It was held by the court that the act did not authorize a rule subjecting the baggage of all immigrants to disinfection, whether such immigrant came from a part or locality where any dangerous, communicable disease existed or not. The case of Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 326, was a mandamus proceeding to compel the principal of a public school to admit Abeel as a scholar, who had been refused admission because he had not complied with the vaccination act. This act provided that the school trustees and board shall "exclude from the benefit of the common schools any child or any person who has not been vaccinated." The act was held constitutional. The court says: "Vaccination, then, being the most effective method known of preventing the spread of the disease referred to [smallpox], it was for the legislature to determine whether the scholars of the public schools should be subjected to it." The case of Duffield v. Williamsport School Dist. 162 Pa. 476, 25 L. R. A. 152, was a mandamus proceeding to compel the admission of the plaintiff's minor child into the common schools of Williamsport. The facts in this case were that there was an ordinance in the city of Williamsport in force providing that no pupil "shall be permitted to attend any public or private school in said city without a certificate of a practising physician that such pupil has been subjected to the process of vaccination;" that smallpox was then existing in Williamsport, and had been epidemic in many near-by cities and towns; that the board of health and the school board, in view of the general alarm prevailing in the city over the report that a case of smallpox was in the city, had adopted a resolution in conformity with said city ordinance. The questions raised related to the power of the school board to adopt reasonable health regulations, and to the reasonableness of the particular regulation complained of, and the action of the board was sustained. But the case was unlike the one at bar in the fact that smallpox was then in the city, and was prevalent in adjoining communities. A similar conclusion was reached in Bissell v. Davison, 65 Conn. 183, 29 L. R. A. 251, but the general statute of Connecticut had expressly conferred upon the school committee the power exercised by it. The cases of Re Walters, 84 Hun. 457, and Abel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, involved the constitutionality of statutes requiring all children to be vaccinated before being admitted to the public schools, and such statutes were held to be constitutional. That question is not involved here, and the reasoning employed in those cases does not apply where this legislative power is exercised by an administrative board, and not by the legislature itself. Nor can the rule in question be regarded as a reasonable one where, as in this case, smallpox did not exist in the community, and where there was no cause to apprehend that it was approaching the vicinity of the school, or likely to become prevalent there. The record wholly fails to show that there were any grounds upon which the board could have any reasonable belief that the public health was in any danger whatever. Neither the board of health nor the board of directors having any power to make and enforce the order in question under the facts of this case, it follows that appellees were unlawfully excluded from the school. The powers of school officers under the statute have been considered by this court in numerous cases. Rulison v. Post, 79 Ill. 587; Trustees of Schools v. People, Van Allen, 87 Ill. 303, 29 Am. Rep. 55; McCormick v. Burt, 95 Ill. 263, 35 Am. Rep. 163; Chase v. Stephenson, 71 Ill. 898; People, Longress, v. Quincy Bd. of Edu. 101 Ill. 908, 40 Am. Rep. 196, and other cases. But nothing said in any of those cases sustains the contention of appellants.

The judgment of the Appellate Court affirming the judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Fred LEIFERMAN, Appt.,

v.

Carl OSTEN.

(167 Ill. 93.)

1. Failure of the justice of the peace to send up the complaint in an action for forcible entry and detainer is waived by going to trial on appeal to the circuit court without objecting to its absence.

NOTE.—As to the effect of a partial eviction upon liability for rent, see Edmison v. Lowry (S. D.) 17 L. R. A. 275, and note; also Collins v. Lewis (Minn.) 19 L. R. A. 822.

39 L. R. A.

2. Eviction of a tenant of the first floor of a building is not effected by moving the building to another part of the lot so as to relieve him from the payment of rent if he retains possession of his rooms.

(May 11, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to obtain possession of apartments in a building. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cruikshank & Atwood for appellant.

Mr. Albert Martin, for appellee:

In order for appellant to be evicted he would have to show that he was in the possession of something of the use of which he was deprived.

A tenant has an easement in the unobstructed passage of light only by a covenant or express agreement in the lease.

Keating v. Springer, 146 Ill. 481, 22 L. R. A. 544.

The lessee takes only such an interest in the subjacent land as is necessary to the enjoyment of the premises, and upon their destruction by fire he has no interest in the land of which an eviction can be predicated, and the subject-matter of the demise has ceased to exist.

2 Taylor, Land. & T. 8th ed. § 520; Central Mills Co. v. Hart, 124 Mass. 123; Holladay v. Chicago Arc Light & P. Co. 55 Ill. App. 463.

Possession retained after an alleged constructive eviction is a waiver of the right of abandonment.

Barrett v. Boddie, 158 Ill. 479; Patterson v. Graham, 40 Ill. App. 399, 140 Ill. 531; Burnham v. Martin, 90 Ill. 488.

The omission of the complaint in the justice's transcript should have been urged at the earliest possible moment.

Stillman v. Palis, 184 Ill. 582; Armstrong v. Crilly, 152 Ill. 646; Brown v. Keller, 33 Ill. 154, 33 Am. Dec. 258; Center v. Gidney, 71 Ill. 557.

Unless urged in apt time it may be waived.

Clifford v. Eagle, 35 Ill. 444; Tisdale v. Minonk, 46 Ill. 9.

The record may be amended at any subsequent term as to any matter of form in the judgment or proceedings.

Duncan v. McAfee, 4 Ill. 98; Atkins v. Hinman, 7 Ill. 450; Lyon v. Boilvin, 7 Ill. 629; Cook v. Wood, 24 Ill. 295; Coughran v. Gutcheus, 18 Ill. 390; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Holbrook, 72 Ill. 419; Church v. English, 81 Ill. 442.

Taking an appeal or suing out a writ of error and making the same a supersedeas is no obstacle to the amendment, and it may be made either in the court where the record remains or in any other court to which the record may be taken by appeal or writ of error.

Frink v. Schroyer, 18 Ill. 419; Thompson v. Turner, 22 Ill. 390; Gage v. Schmidt, 104 Ill. 108; Rev. Stat. chap. 7, ¶ 7. Amendments, etc.; Dunham v. South Park Comrs. 87 Ill. 185; Owen v. Stearns, 78 Ill. 446; Gebbie v. Mooney, 121 Ill. 258; World's Columbian Exposition v.

Seala, 55 Ill. App. 210; Jones v. Albes, 70 Ill. 40; Terry v. Eureka College, 70 Ill. 238; People, Hubbard, v. Anthony, 129 Ill. 220; Sullizan v. Eddy, 154 Ill. 199.

Carter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee recovered a judgment before a justice of the peace, and on appeal in the circuit court of Cook county, in forcible entry and detainer, for the recovery from appellant of the possession of the first floor of a two-story frame building at 1255 Wolfram street in Chicago. This appeal is taken from the judgment of affirmance of the appellate court, a certificate of importance having been granted. Appellant had occupied the first-story flat, as it is called, of the building, as tenant of appellee for about five years, at the end of which period appellee, against the objection of appellant, and while appellant was living in the house, moved the building, which occupied about half the lot, to the other side of the lot, and built a new building on the corner, the former site. The building removed retained the same number. Appellant did not vacate or surrender possession, but continued in the occupancy of the same part of the building, but refused to pay any rent thereafter, claiming that he had been evicted, and was by such eviction discharged from the further payment of rent. After the rent became due appellee served appellant with a written demand for rent, and notice to quit in five days if not paid. The alleged eviction, and the fact that there was no written complaint on file in the circuit court when the cause was tried there on appeal, constituted the grounds of defense in the appellate court, and are the ones relied on here. There was a written complaint in due form before the justice of the peace, but the justice neglected to send it up with his original transcript, and its absence was not noticed by either party during the trial in the circuit court. The defendant there assigned as one of the grounds for a new trial the absence of such complaint. The circuit court overruled the motion for a new trial, and also a motion in arrest of judgment. At a subsequent term of the circuit court the justice filed an amended transcript containing the complaint, and, on the suggestion of a diminution of the record in the appellate court, leave was granted to supply the omission, and it was supplied in that court.

Upon the errors properly assigned here, it is urged that the complaint was jurisdictional, and without it the circuit court had no jurisdiction to try the cause, that it could not amend its judgment in matter of substance and to cure a jurisdictional defect at a subsequent term, and that in fact no amendment was made, nor leave to file the amended transcript given, and that the subsequent filing of the complaint in the circuit and appellate courts was wholly ineffectual to cure the error. There was a sufficient complaint before the justice of the peace, and he had jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties. On appeal the circuit court had the same jurisdiction, and, if the attention of that court had been called to the fact that the justice had not sent up the complaint, the omission could then have been supplied. By going to trial without objection, the defendant waived the question which he is now urging here. The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, and the filing of a written complaint in the circuit court related only to the mode of procedure, and any irregularity in that respect must be availed of promptly, else it will be waived. It is a well-settled rule that all dilatory motions going to the jurisdiction of the court must be made in apt time. In Tisdale v. Minonk, 46 Ill. 9, it was held that a motion to dismiss for want of the sworn complaint in an action for violating a town ordinance came too late in the circuit court,—that it should have been made at the earliest moment before the justice. In Clifford v. Eagle, 85 Ill. 444, the defendant appealed from a judgment against him in the justice court, and appeared and moved for a continuance in the circuit court, and at the next term moved to dismiss the suit for want of a complaint in writing; but this court said: "If this was a case in which a written complaint on oath was necessary, the appellant waived it by appearing in the cause and moving for a continuance. The motion to dismiss being of a dilatory character, should have been entered at the earliest moment." See also Center v. Gibney, 71 Ill. 557, in substance to the same effect. In Evans v. Boulton, 85 Ill. 579, a suit in replevin before a justice, the defendant did not appear, but judgment was rendered against him by default. When the cause was called for trial in the circuit court on his appeal, he moved to dismiss the suit for want of an affidavit. This court held that the motion was made in apt time; that there was no law compelling the defendant to appear before the justice, and, as the judgment was there rendered against him by default, his motion in the circuit court was not too late. But it is apparent that that case does not support the contention of appellant here. Appellant cites, also, Stolberg v. Ohnmacht, 50 Ill. 442, as applicable to the case at bar. But we do not think it is. In that case there was no affidavit filed before the justice, as then required by the statute, and the defendant appeared before the justice and moved to dismiss the suit. The justice overruled the motion, and allowed the plaintiff to file his affidavit, and rendered judgment in his favor. The defendant appealed, and renewed his motion in the circuit court to dismiss, which was allowed. This court affirmed the action of the circuit court, holding that the affidavit was jurisdictional, that the justice had no jurisdiction, and that the justice had no power to issue the summons without an affidavit having first been filed. But there is a clear distinction between that case and the one at bar, because here there was a sufficient complaint before the justice when the summons was issued, and, further, the defendant went to trial in the circuit court without making any objection or taking any advantage of any kind of the omission of the justice to send the complaint up with his transcript.

The next question is, Was the defendant below excused from paying rent because of the alleged eviction? There are two kinds of eviction,—actual and constructive. An eviction may be actual, as where there is a physical expulsion, or it may be constructive, which, although an eviction in law, does not deprive the tenant of actual occupancy. 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 87. In 2 Wood, Land. & T. p. 1107, it is said: "Where there is an actual physical eviction from a part of the premises, the tenant may still retain possession of the other part and is absolved from the payment of any rent during the period of its continuance; and herein is the important distinction between an actual and a constructive eviction. The tenant must not only abandon the premises, but it must also appear that he abandoned them on account of the acts of the landlord, which are claimed to operate as an eviction; and if his abandonment was due to other causes, in part even, he cannot set up such acts in defense to an action for the rent." In the case at bar the lease to appellant was of the "first floor of the two-story frame building situated 1255 Wolfram street," and the question arises whether, by this lease, the appellant acquired any such interest in the land as, by the removal of the building therefrom, he was actually evicted from a part of the premises leased to him. Questions analogous to this have been passed upon in many cases in different states, and the uniform current of authority is that the land does not pass by such a lease, and that the tenant takes such an interest only in the subjacent land as is necessary to the enjoyment of the premises leased. Thus, in Winton v. Cornish, 5 Ohio, 477, it was said: "He [the owner] can grant the right to take all the minerals underneath, or those 20 feet below the surface only; to dig all the turf, to inhabit a cave, if there is one, to occupy a room in the third story, to occupy the second story, a room in the first story, or the cellar, or a part of the cellar. By such grants the land does not pass. . . . The leasees of the middle story of a house are limited above and below as well as on the sides, yet the land is as necessary to sustain their part of the house as that below." And in Kerr v. Merchants' Exchange Co. 8 Edw. Ch. 816, where there was a lease of certain apartments, it was said that it was not to be considered as a lease of land, but only of apartments in the building distinct from the land; that leases must be construed according to the intention of the parties, and with reference to the subject-matter; and that in that case no interest in the land passed. This is the rule where the building is destroyed by fire, the cases holding that, where the building containing the apartments leased was destroyed by fire, the lease had terminated. Stockwell v. Hunter, 11 Met. 448, 45 Am. Dec. 220; Womack v. McQuarry, 28 Ind. 103, 92 Am. Dec. 806. See also Graves v. Berdan, 26 N. Y. 498; McMillan v. Solomon, 42 Ala. 356, 94 Am. Dec. 654; Harrington v. Watson, 11 Or. 143, 50 Am. Rep. 465. And in Shawmut Nat. Bank v. Boston, 118 Mass. 125, it was said: "In cases where different rooms in the same building are leased to separate tenants, the situation of the property and the nature of the tenures exclude the idea that each tenant takes an estate for years in the land. Such estates, existing at the same time in different tenants, are inconsistent and impossible." There was nothing in the lease, and no evidence in the case at bar, to show that any yard privileges connected with the first flat were used in its enjoyment. None were claimed by appellant, and it does not appear that he was deprived of anything that could reasonably be held to pertain to his lease of the "first flat" of No. 1255 Wolfram street, except that a different parcel of land was substituted as the subjacent land necessary to the support of such flat. We are of the opinion that, in view of the law, the jury would not have been authorized to find that there was an actual eviction of any part of the premises leased.

In regard to the effect of a constructive eviction, inasmuch as appellant did not avail himself of his privilege of electing to treat the act of appellee as a constructive eviction, but remained in possession, it is not material to inquire whether the removal of the building was such an act as would amount to a constructive eviction or not. In Barrett v. Boddie, 158 Ill. 479, this court said: "The eviction sought to be shown by appellant was constructive. The possession of the premises was retained by the tenant after the alleged acts of eviction. Possession retained after an alleged constructive eviction is a waiver of the right of abandonment. No constructive eviction exists without a surrender of possession. With retention of possession after constructive eviction, liability for rent exists, according to the terms of the lease, during occupancy thereunder. Warren v. Wagner, 75 Ala. 188, 51 Am. Rep. 446; De Witt v. Pierson, 112 Mass. 8, 17 Am. Rep. 58; Scott v. Simons, 54 N. H. 426; Bereel v. Lavton, 90 N. Y. 298; Keating v. Springer, 146 Ill. 481, 22 L. R. A. 544." In Keating v. Springer, 146 Ill. 481, 22 L. R. A. 544, we said: "If, however, the tenant makes no surrender of the possession, but continues to occupy the premises after the commission of the acts which would justify him in abandoning them, he will be deemed to have waived his right to abandon and he cannot sustain a plea of eviction by showing that there were circumstances which would have justified him in leaving the premises. Hence, it has been held that there cannot be a constructive eviction without a surrender of possession. It would be unjust to permit the tenant to remain in possession, and then escape the payment of rent by pleading a state of facts, which, though conferring a right to abandon, had been unaccompanied by the exercise of that right." See also Burnham v. Martin, 90 Ill. 488; Patterson v. Graham, 140 Ill. 531. But, conceding that the act of the landlord amounted to a constructive eviction, still appellant must be deemed to have waived any benefit which might have accrued to him therefrom by retaining possession of his rooms, and, there being no conflict as to the possession, nor as to the amount of rent due under the lease, nor as to the demand notice to quit and default, there was no question of fact for the jury to try, and the direction by the court to find for the plaintiff was right.

The judgment of the Appellate Court is affirmed.

William C. NIBLACK, Appt.,

v.

PARK NATIONAL BANK of Chicago.

(189 Ill. 517.)

1. A check is properly presented to a bank for payment where a notary public takes it to the bank during banking hours for the purpose, and upon finding the doors closed makes a demand upon the bank president, although the controller of the currency has taken charge of the bank.
2. A bank to which a check is presented by a third person receiving it in the usual course of business cannot, where such check constitutes an equitable assignment of the fund, appropriate such fund after such presentation to the payment of a note held by it against the depositor and refuse to pay the check, if, at the time of presentation, it has taken no steps to appropriate the deposit to the payment of the note.
3. That the controller of the currency has taken charge of a bank at the time of the presentation of a check by a third person holding it in the regular course of business does not authorize the subsequent application of the fund to the payment of a note held by the bank against the depositor, as neither the controller nor the receiver appointed by him has any more right to transfer such fund than the bank itself.
4. Interest is properly allowed upon a check, payment of which has been wrongfully refused by a bank, from the date of its presentation for payment.

(November 8, 1897.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, reversing a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County in his favor in a suit brought to enforce payment of a check. Reversed.

Statement by Wilkin, J.:

On June 17, 1890, Cook and Leake, doing business as the Bank of Hartford, and having sufficient funds on deposit to their credit with the appellee, the Park National Bank of Chicago, drew a check for $1,056 upon the latter bank, payable to appellant William C. Niblack, and delivered it to him. On the morning of the 20th following, the controller of the currency seized the property and assets of the Park National Bank, and caused it to suspend business. At this time there was on deposit in the latter bank to the credit of the Bank of Hartford the sum of $3,574.44 and it held a note of the Bank of Hartford, payable on demand, for the sum of $13,600. At the time of the closing of its doors, it had taken no steps to transfer the deposit to part payment of the note which it held. On this day, Niblack, by a notary public, presented his check to the appellee bank for payment, and, finding the doors closed, and being unable to make a demand, presented it to the president of the bank at another place and protested it, in due form, upon payment being refused. Afterwards, on July 14, Gilbert G. Shaw was appointed receiver of appellee bank, and in August following a claim for the amount of the check was presented to him, but he refused to acknowledge it as an obligation of the bank, and this suit was brought to recover that sum. Upon the hearing judgment was rendered against the receiver for the face of the check, with interest from June 20, 1890, amounting in all to $1,346. Appeal was taken to the appellate court of the first district, where the judgment of the trial court was reversed, without being remanded. From that judgment William C. Niblack, appellant here, prosecutes this appeal.

Messrs. James S. Harlan and S. S. Gregory, for appellant:

In order to defeat the right of a checkholder the bank, prior to the time of presentment of the check, must have done some act indicative of its intention to appropriate its depositor's credit balance to the payment of its claims against him. This is not a mere question of bookkeeping.

First Nat. Bank v. Kelsay, 54 Ill. App. 660; American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Gregg, 138 Ill. 596.

The check of a depositor transfers to the payee so much of the deposit as the check calls for.

Bank of Antigo v. Union Trust Co. 149 Ill. 343, 23 L. R. A. 611; Fourth Nat. Bank v. City Nat. Bank, 68 Ill. 398.

A checkholder, though treated as an assignee of the depositor, yet has rights superior to him or to his assignee in insolvency.

National Bank v. Indiana Bkg. Co. 114 Ill. 483.

The drawer of a check cannot stop payment after the check has come to the hands of a bona fide owner.

Union Nat. Bank v. Oceana County Bank, 80 Ill. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 185.

A bank holding the note of a depositor which is overdue is not bound to apply his deposit to its payment, even as against a surety on that note.

People's Bank v. Legrand, 103 Pa. 309, 49 Am. Rep. 126; Voss v. German-American Bank, 83 Ill. 599, 25 Am. Rep. 415.

The controller must decide when and to what extent the personal liability of stockholders can be enforced, and the courts cannot review his decision in this matter.

Kennedy v. Gibson, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 498, 19 L. ed. 476; Cass v. Terrell, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 199, 20 L. ed. 184.

A bank check drawn on a sufficient fund is an assignment pro tanto, and on presentment and refusal may be made the basis of suit against the bank on which it is drawn by the holder thereof.

Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 85.

NOTE.—For set-off against assignee of commercial paper of claim against assignor, see note to Vann v. Marbury (Ala.) 23 L. R. A. 325.

As to setting off insolvent's obligation against claim in the hands of his receiver or assignee for creditors, see note to Merrill v. Cape Ann Granite Co. (Mass.) 23 L. R. A. 313.

39 L. R. A.

For set-off by bank of unmatured claim against check of insolvent, see note to Nashville Trust Co. v. Fourth Nat. Bank (Tenn.) 15 L. R. A. 710; also Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Robinson (Ky.) 28 L. R. A. 760.

A bank cannot set off against such check a claim it may have against the holder.

Brown v. Leckie, 43 Ill. 497.

The bank may, when it sees fit, insist on payment of its demand note, and for that purpose apply so much of the deposit as may be necessary.

Myers v. Union Nat. Bank, 27 Ill. App. 254.

Failure of a bank excuses presentment of commercial paper there payable.

Berg v. Abbott, 83 Pa. 177, 24 Am. Rep. 168, and note, p. 160; Bickford v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Ill. 238, 89 Am. Dec. 436.

A check is at least an equitable assignment to the amount of the check, and this is its character in advance of presentment.

Fourth Nat. Bank v. City Nat. Bank, 68 Ill. 398; Abt v. American Trust & Sav. Bank, 159 Ill. 467; Union Nat. Bank v. Oceana County Bank, 80 Ill. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 185; National Bank v. Indiana Bkg. Co. 114 Ill. 483.

Messrs. William Brace and John T. Richards, for appellee:

As between the parties, a check operates as an equitable assignment of the funds of the drawer from the time of delivery.

Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 35; Buehler v. Galt, 35 Ill. App. 225.

But as between the payee of the check and the bank, the rights of the former are fixed and determined by conditions existing at the time of presentment.

Myers v. Union Nat. Bank, 27 Ill. App. 254; Bank of Antigo v. Union Trust Co. 50 Ill. App. 434, 149 Ill. 348, 23 L. R. A. 611.

Where a depositor is indebted to the bank by an independent matured indebtedness, the bank may apply money on deposit in payment.

Home Nat. Bank v. Newton, 8 Ill. App. 563; Hayden v. Alton Nat. Bank, 29 Ill. App. 458; Schuler v. Laclede Bank, 27 Fed. Rep. 424.

The theory upon which the holder of a check may sue the bank, if at the time of presentment it had money of the depositor which it ought to have applied to the payment of the check, but did not, is, that the check operated as an assignment pro tanto of the funds of the drawer on deposit with the bank.

Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 35; Union Nat. Bank v. Oceana County Bank, 80 Ill. 212; National Bank v. Indiana Bkg. Co. 114 Ill. 483.

A bank holding an overdue note of a depositor, of greater amount than his deposit, may properly refuse to pay his check without any formal appropriation of the deposit upon the note.

Mt. Sterling Nat. Bank v. Green, 99 Ky. 262, 32 L. R. A. 568.

No demand is necessary before bringing suit on a note payable on demand.

Hall v. Jones, 32 Ill. 38.

Wilkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is contended by appellant that, inasmuch as at the time of the making and presentment of the check the Park National Bank held sufficient funds belonging to the maker of the check to pay it, and at that time had taken no steps to appropriate the deposit to the payment of the note in its favor, the bank could not afterwards appropriate this fund to the payment of its note, and refuse to pay the check. 89 L. R. A.

On the other hand, it is contended by appellee, first, that the check was not properly presented for payment; and, next, if it was presented, even after presentment, the bank had the right to appropriate the maker's funds then on deposit to the payment of its own note, rather than to the payment of the check. We think the check must be treated as properly presented to the bank for payment. It appears from the evidence that a notary public, with the check, went to the bank during banking hours, for the purpose of demanding payment for appellant, but found the doors closed. He then made a demand of payment of the bank president. Everything was done to present the check for payment which could be done by the holder. If a check is presented to the bank for payment during business hours, and the doors be closed, this is due diligence on the part of the holder of the check, and it may be protested for nonpayment. Bickford v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Ill. 238, 89 Am. Dec. 436. It is a well-settled rule in this state that the drawing and delivery of a check upon a fund in the bank is, in effect, an assignment to the holder of the check of so much of the fund as the check calls for. But the contention of appellee seems to be that, although the making and delivery is an equitable assignment of so much of the deposit, the banker has the right to refuse payment of the check even when presented by a third person, and appropriate the money to the payment of a debt due from the maker to himself, on the theory that he has a lien upon the deposit in favor of himself to the extent of the maker's indebtedness; or, in other words, it is insisted that the bank has the right of set-off, to the extent of the note, against the maker of the check, and may exercise the right to set-off when the check, which is held even by the third person, is presented.

The question in the case of Fourth Nat. Bank v. City Nat. Bank, 68 Ill. 402, is very similar to this. The banker, holding a note which was not due against the maker of the check, refused to pay the check which was presented by a third party, although, at the time of making and presentment, there were sufficient funds on deposit to the maker's credit to pay it. There, as here, the attempt was to maintain that the banker had a lien upon the funds in his possession to pay an indebtedness to himself. The court said: "In the very nature of such transactions, a banker's lien cannot extend to the money left on deposit with him, according to the customs and usages of banks. It has never been so extended, but is confined to securities and valuables which may be in the banker's custody as collaterals. The credit must be given on the credit of the securities or valuables, either in possession or expectancy. Russell v. Haddock, 8 Ill. 233, 44 Am. Dec. 693. This is the extent of a banker's lien." The right of set-off was urged in favor of the bank as against the maker of the check, and the court further said: "The other proposition, that of a right to an equitable set-off, might be conceded if no third party was in the way. The third party here is the appellees, whose right to this money was fixed on the 17th of October, the day the check was presented and payment demanded. This right of set-off, as claimed, is but another phase of the bank.

ers' lien, and has no foundation in law or justice as against a check holder for value." Had the maker himself presented this check, the bank would have had the right to refuse payment, and could have appropriated this deposit to the payment of the indebtedness. It is also the law, where a bank holds a demand note, or a note past due, it has the right to charge such obligation up against the maker's deposit account; and, if it does so before a check drawn by the depositor is presented for payment, it will be entitled to hold the deposit against any check afterwards presented. But here Niblack, a third party, presented the check, which amounted to the transfer of so much of the fund to him as the check called for, and no right of set-off existed in favor of the bank thereafter. He had received it for value. It had been drawn against a fund sufficient to pay it belonging to the drawer. Taken in the usual course of business, it was clothed with all the rights which the customs of business gave it for commercial convenience. When presented, the fund still stood to the credit of the maker, and, according to the decisions of this court, the bank had no legal right then to refuse payment.

Counsel for appellee contend that, the note being due, and the bank having passed into the hands of the controller when the check was presented, that state of facts itself transferred the deposit to the payment of the note. The fact that the controller took charge of the bank did not make any change in the relation of the parties. The controller, and the receiver afterwards appointed by him, acted for the bank. Having seen that the banker's lien does not extend to money on deposit when checks are presented by third persons who are holders in the regular course of business, neither the controller nor the receiver had any more right to make the transfer than the bank itself.

It is also urged that, even if the appellate court was in error, and its judgment must be reversed, the trial court erred in instructing the jury to allow interest upon the face of the check from the 20th day of June, the day of protest, and for this reason the judgment of the latter court should be reversed. We are satisfied that the check was duly presented for payment on the 20th day of June, and hence interest was properly allowable from that time. We find no merit in this contention.

The judgment of the Appellate Court reversing the judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

BALTIMORE CITY PASSENGER RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

T. Harry NUGENT.

(.....Md.....)

1. An injury to a passenger on a trolley car by contract with a trolley wire charged with electricity which breaks and falls over the rear end of the car does not render the carrier liable if the accident was caused solely by a hidden or latent defect in the wire which could not have been discovered or detected by any reasonable examination, unless the carrier has been in some way negligent in respect to the danger of such an accident.
2. The utmost care and diligence which human foresight can use is the measure of duty which a carrier owes to a passenger.
3. An hypothesis unsupported by evidence should not be submitted to the jury.
4. Negligence is relative, and cannot exist independently of some imposed or implied correlative duty essentially related to the particular circumstances.
5. Testimony that a person "looked very bad; he was lame and he could scarcely get up stairs," is not inadmissible on an issue as to his condition at a certain time.
6. An election for a trial by jury, required by the rules of court authorized by the amendment of 1892 to the Maryland Constitution, must be made by a separate and distinct act, and cannot be made by a demand in the declaration.

(November 17, 1897.)

NOTE.—As to injuries to a passenger on an electric car by a shock, see also Burt v. Douglas County Street R. Co. (Wis.) 18 L. R. A. 479.

39 L. R. A.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Arthur W. Machen and William S. Bryan, Jr., for appellant:

When an accident occurs from a failure of one of the appliances of a car, a prima facie presumption of negligence arises which it is incumbent on the defendant to meet by evidence. But when it appears from the evidence produced that the measure of care which the law exacts from the carrier had been in fact exercised in respect to such appliance, and that the defect which caused such failure was latent and not discoverable, and that all reasonable precautions by way of inspection and otherwise had been made use of, then the principle is well established that the carrier is not liable.

Daniel v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 8 C. P. 222; Hearn v. West Jersey Ferry Co. 143 Pa. 122, 18 L. R. A. 866; Pershing v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 585; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Marshall, 90 Va. 836; Booth, Street Railways, § 332; Baltimore & Y. Turnp. Road v. Cason, 72 Md. 380; Potts v. Chicago City R. Co. 33 Fed. Rep. 610; Fleming v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 158 Pa. 180, 22 L. R. A. 851; Curtis v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 18 N. Y. 543, 75 Am. Dec. 258; Mexican C. R. Co. v. Lauricella, 87 Tex. 279.

The law makes no unreasonable demand. It does not require from any man superhuman wisdom or foresight. Therefore no one is guilty of culpable negligence by reason of failing to take precautions which no other man would be likely to take under the circumstances.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 11.

If the accident complained of was caused solely by a hidden or latent defect, nor apparent to the eye, the defendant is not liable even though the plaintiff, without fault on his part, did receive injuries by reason of the breaking and falling of said trolley wire.

Carter v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 42 Fed. Rep. 89; Union R. Co. v. State, Steever, 72 Md. 159; Johnson v. Harvey, 80 Md. 259.

Messrs. Thomas C. Ruddell, Sidney Hall, and Joseph W. Bristor, for appellee:

If plaintiff while a passenger on one of the defendant's cars, and while exercising ordinary care, was shocked and knocked off said car, and injured by coming in contact with the end of a broken trolley wire used by defendant in the operation of the railway, he can recover.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, Mahone, 68 Md. 144; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, Hauer, 60 Md. 449; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, Coughlan, 24 Md. 84; Baltimore & Y. Turnp. Road v. Leonhardt, 66 Md. 70; Stokes v. Saltonstall, 88 U. S. 18 Pet. 181, 10 L. ed. 115.

There is imposed on the defendant as a carrier of passengers the duty not only to use the highest degree of diligence practicable under the circumstances in regard to the erection and maintenance of its trolley wire and car, but also to use the same degree of diligence in the operation of its line.

Hurt v. Woodland, 24 Md. 393; Maltby v. Northwestern Virginia R. Co. 16 Md. 445; Washington F. Ins. Co. v. Davison, 80 Md. 92.

The dangerous nature of the motive power used by the modern electric railway has brought with it an additional obligation, and the carriers of passengers, by electricity, are required to use the very highest degree of care in the construction, maintenance, and operation of their plant.

Uggle v. West End Street R. Co. 160 Mass. 351; Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State, Nelson, 82 Md. 293; Croswell, Electricity, §§ 234, 252.

McSherry, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover damages for a personal injury. The facts, so far as they need be recited to present the questions of law which are brought up by the second and third bills of exception, are few and simple, and will be stated in a moment. The ruling complained of in the first bill of exceptions has reference to a question of practice, and, though arising earliest on the record, will be considered and disposed of last, because it does not pertain to the merits of the controversy.

The appellant is a corporation owning and operating a street railway in the city of Baltimore. The motive power used to propel its cars is electricity, which is applied by the overhead trolley system. On the day that the injury complained of happened, the appellee boarded one of the company's cars, taking a seat on the inside, but afterwards, owing probably to the crowded condition of the car, going to and standing on the rear platform.

39 L. R. A.

Shortly thereafter the trolley wire broke some few inches from a brass sleeve which spliced together the ends of the separate wires that, when united, formed the continuous trolley wire. That part of the broken wire which was above the car, and which stretched in the direction that the car was going, was carried on the trolley pole as the car proceeded; and, as the car moved forward, the wire, charged with the electric current, was paid out over the trolley wheel, and the severed end fell upon the roof of the car, and thence over its rear edge, and came in contact with the appellee, who was thrown by the shock, or who, receiving a shock therefrom, jumped to the ground, and was injured. The period of time intervening between the breaking of the wire and the injury to the appellee was only a few seconds. The record fails to show that the car could have been stopped in a shorter space of time than it was, or that the employees in charge of it could have done anything which they omitted to do to avoid the injury. There was evidence adduced by the appellant tending to prove that the wire broke from a latent defect that no test or inspection could have discovered, and that no human foresight could have guarded against; that the wire had been subjected to all the tests known to science, if not before it was sent from the factory where it was made, at least before it was put in place; and that, since it had been in use, it had been regularly and carefully inspected. It was further shown that the most skilled contractors had constructed the line, and that the best materials which could be procured had been used. There was also sufficient evidence before the jury from which they well might have found, if they believed that evidence to be true, that the wire broke from no fault or negligence of the company or its employees; and they might likewise have concluded—for the testimony, if credited, warranted the conclusion—that the highest degree of care and caution known to science had been used by the company in providing the best materials, appliances, and workmanship in the building of its trolley system. The declaration contains a single count. It avers that a certain wire, the property of the defendant, and which it was its duty to keep in repair, was, through the carelessness and negligence of the company and its servants, out of repair, and, in consequence, broke, and fell upon the plaintiff, who at that time was using due care and caution. Under this declaration, and upon this proof, each of the parties presented two prayers for instructions to the jury. The court of common pleas granted the plaintiff's second prayer, modified his first, and, as modified, granted it; rejected the defendant's second, modified its first, and, as modified, granted it. To this action of the court the third bill of exceptions was taken.

The plaintiff's first prayer needs no discussion. The objection made to it in the court below was that it left to the jury a question of law, in not defining the degree of care required of the defendant. No point is suggested in the brief against this prayer, and we think the one raised below is not tenable. It defined the degree of care and diligence exacted of the defendant as the "highest degree of care and diligence practicable under the circumstances."

This, as we shall see later on, correctly described the extent of the duty owed by the carrier to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff's second prayer should not have been granted. There was a special exception interposed to it in the trial court, upon the ground that there was no evidence to support one of its hypotheses. This objection ought to have been sustained. The prayer instructed the jury that if they should find from the evidence that the plaintiff, while a passenger on the defendant's car, and while using due care, was injured by contact with a broken trolley wire, and that the broken wire was dragged up on the back platform, and against the plaintiff, by the momentum of the car, then their verdict would have to be for the plaintiff, "unless they shall further find that the defendant's employees could not, by the exercise of reasonable care, have prevented the trolley wire from being dragged up on the platform." Now, there is not a particle of evidence in the record to support the hypothesis we have put in italics, and it was consequently error to have submitted such an hypothesis to the jury. We may remark, in passing, that the theory of the prayer is directly at variance with the declaration. It does not, it is true, refer to the pleadings, and would not therefore, on the ground of variance, be open to criticism; but it shifts the right to recover from the one alleged in the narr. to a totally different ground. If the cause of the injury was, as charged in the declaration, the bad condition or disrepair of the wire, and this bad condition or disrepair was really due to the negligence of the defendant, and injury ensued as a consequence, then the cause of action declared on was proved; and it made and could make no possible difference whether the employees in charge of the car could or could not have prevented the wire from being dragged up on the platform after it had, in consequence of prior negligence, broken and fallen on the car. Even if the employees could not by the utmost care have prevented the wire from being so dragged up on the platform, the right of action would still have been perfect if the efficient cause of the injury was in reality the antecedent imputed negligence of the defendant in permitting the wire to be out of repair.

The substantial error of law into which the learned judge below inadvertently fell was in refusing to grant the defendant's second prayer. By that prayer the defendant sought an instruction to the effect that if the jury should find that the accident to the plaintiff was caused "solely by a hidden or latent defect, not apparent to the eye, in the trolley wire," and which "the defendant could not have discovered or detected by any reasonable examination," and that if the company employed proper and suitable contractors to erect the wire and overhead construction at the place of the accident, and if the contractors used suitable and proper material and a proper and skillful method of overhead construction, "then the defendant has performed its duty to the passenger in this regard, and the verdict must be for the defendant, even though the jury further find that the plaintiff, without fault on his part, did receive injuries by reason of the breaking and falling of said trolley wire. A carrier of passengers is not an insurer of their safety. This is the settled law. Such a carrier is only bound to employ the utmost care and diligence which human foresight can use. Washington, C. & A. Turnp. Co. v. Case, 80 Md. 45; State, Coughlan, v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 24 Md. 102, 87 Am. Dec. 600. This is the limit and the measure of the duty which he owes to the passenger. His failure or omission to discharge that duty is an act of negligence, and, if injury results from that negligence, an action will lie. It is apparent, then, that all actions of the kind we are now dealing with, to be maintained, must be founded on negligence of the defendant, both asserted and proved. If there be no negligence, though there be an injury, no action will lie. Negligence is essentially relative. In the abstract it is a nullity. It does not, and it cannot, in the nature of things, exist. It is metaphysically impossible to evolve a concept of negligence apart from the facts which give rise to it, and independently of some imposed or implied correlative duty. The duty must be essentially related to the particular circumstances; and a variance in the circumstances necessarily begets either a modification of the duty or else extinguishes it altogether. Thus, the duty which a railroad company owes to a passenger whom it is carrying on its train is widely different from the duty it owes to a trespasser on its tracks; not only because the rights of the two are different, but because the attendant circumstances and facts creating the reciprocal rights, in each instance, are dissimilar. This difference in rights and in duties springs from a divergence in the circumstances out of which they respectively grow. Consequently, a condition which would in one case give rise to an inference of negligence would be wholly insufficient to justify its deduction in the other. Because this is so, it follows that the conditions under which an injury to a trespasser and to a passenger happens produce different evidentiary results,—in the one case, the injury, if flowing from defective appliances, being in itself, on grounds of policy and convenience, prima facie evidence of negligence in respect to the appliances which produced the injury; while in the other instance it (the injury) is simply neutral and indifferent as respects the proof of negligence. Negligence and injury are cause and effect, but negligence is not the only cause of injury. As, in all cases where the injury itself is treated as prima facie evidence of negligence, this prima facie evidence is rebuttable, it results that the burden of proof to show that the injury arose from some other cause than negligence is cast upon the party against whom the prima facie evidence has raised the inference of negligence. Prima facie proof of negligence is not conclusive proof that negligence in fact existed. It furnishes sufficient evidence, if nothing to the contrary be shown. Every injury does not necessarily result from negligence. There are acts of God, involving a vis major, and there are accidents, including no elements of negligence, because occasioned by no breach of any imposed or implied duty at all. An act of God injures no one. When an act complained of and alleged to be negligent could not by the exercise of proper diligence have been foreseen, and is concurrent in its origin with the resulting injury, and as simultaneous therewith as physical cause and effect can be, and there is no antecedent dereliction or breach of duty, actual or constructive, constituting an ulterior or primary cause, the act belongs, not to the class of negligent acts, but to that described as accidents. Washington, C. & A. Turnp. Co. v. Case, 80 Md. 45. For a mere accident, unmixed with negligence or fault, no action will lie, even though an injury has been done; and no action will lie because there has been no breach of a duty that was owed, and therefore no negligence. Gault v. Humes, 20 Md. 297; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 272, 273, note 2. If, in a given case, where an injury has happened, and where, by reason of the duty that is owed and the circumstances existing, the presumption of negligence arises from the mere fact of an injury having been sustained, it be shown that the duty which was owed to the party receiving the injury had been performed to the full measure that the law exacts, then there is no breach of duty, and, there being no breach of duty, there is and there can be no negligence. This conclusion must be legally and logically applicable to a case like the one before us, if the carrier is not an insurer of the passenger's safety; and, if the conclusion be applicable, it can only be so because the carrier is an insurer of the safety of the passenger.

The measure of duty which a carrier owes to a passenger is, as we have said, the utmost care and diligence which human foresight can use. If human foresight, with the aid of the most advanced scientific methods yet discovered, is powerless to detect latent defects that are searched for in the appliances used by the carrier, and if proper skill be employed in the construction of those appliances, and if the appliances themselves are appropriate, and still an injury happens, not from negligence in their use, but solely and exclusively from some hidden defects in their structural materials, that adequate and careful inspection, seasonably and faithfully employed, failed to reveal, then such an injury is referable to a nonactionable accident, and not to negligence. There may be negligence predicated of an improper or careless operation or use of a perfectly sound appliance, but that is negligence in the manipulation or employment, and not in the construction, of the thing causing the injury. With that species of negligence the prayer does not deal, and it is consequently not involved in this discussion. The prayer we are considering left it to the jury to find whether the injury sued for resulted solely from a hidden defect in the wire, which defect could not have been discovered by any reasonable examination; and it also left it to them to find whether proper and competent contractors had been employed to erect the structure, and whether suitable materials had been used and a skillful method had been pursued in the work; and it then instructed them, as the legal conclusion from an affirmative finding of these hypotheses, that the appellant had performed its duty to the passenger in so far as that duty related to the providing of proper appliances that were alleged to have caused the injury; and, of course, it necessarily followed that, if its whole duty in this regard had been done, there was no breach of a duty owed to the passenger, and consequently no negligence of the character charged in the declaration; and, if there was no negligence, there was no cause of action. Under these conditions, the injury was the result of accident. This prayer contained a correct exposition of the law, and the jury ought to have been instructed to that effect. The refusal to do so was error. In addition to the adjudged cases hereinbefore cited, we may, in support of the legal principle announced in the prayer, refer to the following: Crutchfield v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 76 N. C. 320; Handelum v. Burlington C. R. & N. R. Co. 73 Iowa, 709; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Locke, 113 Ind. 404; Carrico v. West Virginia C. & P. R. Co. 39 W. Va. 86, 24 L. R. A. 50; Libby v. Maine C. R. Co. 85 Me. 34, 20 L. R. A. 812; Spellman v. Lincoln Rapid Transit Co. 36 Neb. 590, 20 L. R. A. 816; Simmons v. New Bedford, V. & N. S. B. Co. 97 Mass. 361-367, 93 Am. Dec. 99.

89 L. R. A.

There was error, also, in refusing to grant the first prayer of the defendant, as offered. The declaration did not count on negligence in the operation of the trolley wire and car; nor did it allege that an injury had resulted from the negligence of the servants in charge of the car, as negligence in the operation of the car involves; but it proceeded exclusively on the ground that the wire was, through carelessness and negligence, out of repair, and, in consequence, broke, and, breaking, inflicted the injury complained of. The defendant clearly had the right to have the jury confined to the issue made by the pleadings, and its first prayer as presented did this; but the modification of that prayer amplified and enlarged the issue. In this there was obvious error.

The second exception brings up a ruling as to the admissibility of evidence. A witness, not an expert, was asked what was the condition of the plaintiff on September 12,—one month and eight days after the date of the accident. And the witness replied that he "looked very bad; he was lame, and he could scarcely go up stairs," etc. The question and answer were excepted to. The witness was not asked an opinion. She was simply required to describe the plaintiff's physical condition, and this she was competent to do, because it was merely the description of a fact which she had seen. Its weight and value were for the jury. We see no error in the ruling.

The first exception brings up a new question of practice. By § 6 of article 15 of the Constitution, a trial by jury of all issues of fact is guaranteed to every litigant when the sum in controversy exceeds $5, though it is competent, under § 8 of article 4, for the parties to a proceeding to waive that right, and to submit the cause to the court for determination without the aid of a jury. It was found in actual practice that these provisions resulted in congesting the dockets of the common-law courts in the city of Baltimore, and accordingly an amendment of the organic law was proposed by the general assembly during the session of 1892. This amendment was subsequently adopted by the people.

Among other things, it declares that "the general assembly may provide by laws, or the supreme bench [of Baltimore city] by its rules, for requiring causes in any of the courts of Baltimore city to be tried before the court without a jury, unless the litigants or some one of them shall, within such reasonable time or times as may be prescribed, elect to have their causes tried before a jury." This amendment, it will be seen, requires the causes therein referred to to be tried by the court, unless an election to have a jury trial is made, and produces precisely the converse of the condition which prevailed prior to its adoption. Acting under the authority thus conferred upon it, the supreme bench adopted a series of rules to put the amendment into effect. Those rules provide that all causes standing for trial in the common law courts of the city shall be tried before the court without a jury unless an election in writing be filed for a trial before a jury. They further declare that such election must be made by the plaintiff not later than fifteen days after the filing of the declaration, and that defendants must make such election at or before the time of first filing a plea, but in no event after the time allowed by law to plead. It is also prescribed that "such election shall not be withdrawn except by written consent of all the parties filed in the case." The original declaration filed in this case concluded with these words: "Wherefore he brings this suit, and claims $5,000 damages, and prays a jury trial." Subsequently an amended declaration was filed, and immediately following the claim for damages these words appear: "The plaintiff prays a jury trial. This is the only election made by either of the parties to have the case tried by a jury. When the case was called for trial in the court of common pleas, the appellant filed a motion asking that a trial be had before the court without the aid of a jury, assigning, as a reason in support of the motion, the omission of the plaintiff to file, in the manner and within the time fixed by the rules, an election for a trial before a jury. This motion was overruled, and to that adjudication the first bill of exceptions was taken.

We think there was error in this ruling. There was no election by the plaintiff other than the concluding words which we have quoted from the declaration. These words were in fact a part of the declaration. A withdrawal of the declaration under leave of court would have withdrawn the election for a trial by jury, notwithstanding the rule forbids a withdrawal of an election without the consent of both parties. It was the obvious intent of the rule that an election for a trial by a jury should be a separate and distinct act, evidenced by a writing different from the pleadings, so that no change in the latter could affect or interfere with the former. Clearly, the correct practice under the rule is the one just indicated. There is an additional reason: By the same rule it is made the duty of the several clerks, as soon as it is ascertained that a cause will not be tried by a jury, to transfer the same to a separate trial docket, entitled "Non Jury Cases," and the trial shall take place before the judge at large. Now, it was manifestly not the design of the rule that the clerks of the several courts should examine all the pleadings to ascertain whether somewhere among them there might be found a claim for a trial by jury; and, to obviate the necessity for such an examination, the rule plainly provides that the election shall be filed in writing, not later (if filed by the plaintiff) than fifteen days after the filing of the declaration. The two things, viz., the election in writing and the declaration, are treated by the rule as distinct and independent; and it is clearly error to combine them in one paper. A declaration is simply the statement of the plaintiff's cause of action, and it has nothing to do with the mode of trial. The election is a mere designation of the mode of trial, and has nothing to do with the thing to be tried. Strictly, the declaration should contain no averments or statements beyond those that are necessary to set forth the cause of action; and hence a distinct step in the case relating only to the mode of trial ought not to be made a part of the declaration, with which it has no concern. What is true of the declaration is true also of the pleas, and the election should form no part of them. For the errors we have pointed out, the judgment must be reversed; and, as the truth of the evidence adduced by the defendant is a matter wholly for the jury, or the court sitting as a jury, to pass upon, a new trial will be awarded.

Judgment reversed, and new trial awarded, with costs above and below.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (Division No. 1).

Henry HOLKER, Appt.,

v.

Ed. HENNESSEY et al., Defts.,

and

Benjamin F. PIXLER, Garnishee, Resp't.

(.....Mo.....)

1. The amount in dispute on an appeal is the difference between the amount claimed and the amount recovered.

2. Money and property lawfully taken

NOTE.—For the general rule as to garnishment of property in custody of law, see Dunsmoor v. Furstenfeldt (Cal.) 12 L. R. A. 508.

39 L. R. A.

from a prisoner under arrest is not subject to garnishment in the hands of the sheriff because it is in custody of law.

3. Money or property unlawfully taken from a prisoner under arrest is not subject to garnishment because a wrongful use of criminal process was made in getting possession of it.

4. The lien on the estate of a criminal, given by Rev. Stat. 1889, § 4317, to the party injured, does not authorize the garnishment of his property while in the hands of a sheriff who took it from the prisoner while under arrest.

(November 23, 1897.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Nodaway County in favor of the garnishee in a proceeding brought to reach property alleged to be in his possession belonging to the defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank Griffin and W. W. Ramsay for appellant.

Mr. E. A. Vinsonhaler, for respondent, garnishee:

Is not this property in custodia legis, and therefore not subject to garnishment?

Richardson v. Anderson (Tex. App.) 18 S. W. 195; McKnight v. Spain, 18 Mo. 534.

It is the approved practice, upon arrest, to always search the prisoner. No order is necessary, nor is it subject to garnishment.

Commercial Exch. Bank v. McLeod, 65 Iowa, 665, 54 Am. Rep. 36; Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 212.

At least the property was not subject to garnishment on the 18th of October, 1894, for at that date the defendants had not violated the terms of their bond, and where service is obtained by publication the jurisdiction of the court is determined by condition of garnishee's liability at time of service.

McCord & M. Mercantile Co. v. Bettles, 58 Mo. App. 384.

Macfarlane, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The suit is against Hennessey and Green, to recover $5,000, of which amount plaintiff charges that defendants robbed him. In aid of the suit an attachment issued, and was placed in the hands of the coroner; and defendant Pixler, sheriff of Nodaway county, was summoned as garnishee. Garnishee made answer to the usual interrogatories as follows: "That at the date of service of process of garnishment he did not have, nor has he since received, any property, effects, or credits belonging to any of defendants, unless the following statement of facts should be held to show property in his hands belonging to defendants: That on the — day of —, 1894, two persons who gave their names as David C. Wilson and E. M. Hall, were apprehended by the police officers of Nebraska City, Otoe county, Nebraska, upon a charge that they had committed grand larceny in Nodaway county, Missouri. Garnishee was informed by the officers that upon such arrest said officers took from the person of David C. Wilson $180, and from the person of E. M. Hall, $66. That, pending issuance by the governor of the state of Nebraska of a warrant upon the requisition of the governor of the state of Missouri, said Wilson and Hall sued out a writ of habeas corpus to secure their release. That garnishee, to secure the detention of said parties, employed counsel and guards, and, the said parties having been denied their release by the court, garnishee paid the costs. That the following expenses were incurred." (Here follows an itemized statement of the expenses of the habeas corpus proceedings in Nebraska, amounting to $411.75.) Garnishee continues: "That afterwards these parties, under warrant from governor of the state of Nebraska, were returned to, and confined in, the jail of Nodaway county: D. C. Wilson, fifty-four days, at a cost of $27; E. M. Hall, sixty-one days, at a cost of $30.50,—when they gave bond for their appearance on the first day of November term, 1894, to answer an indictment now on file in this court. That said parties failed to appear as required, and their bonds were forfeited, and alias warrants issued for their arrest. That they are now fugitives from justice. That the sums of money said to be taken from the persons of said Wilson and Hall by the police officers aforesaid were turned over to this garnishee, and he is entitled to same, to reimburse him and the state for the expense so incurred. That said Wilson and Hall are not entitled thereto. Garnishee further states that he is not indebted in any manner to said Wilson and Hall. Having fully answered, garnishee asks to be discharged, with costs." To this answer, plaintiff replied: "That these defendants were on or about the 13th day of June, 1894, justly indebted to him in the sum of $5,233½, for and on account of having, at the county of Nodaway and state of Missouri, on the 18th day of June, 1894, feloniously stolen said sum of money from him, and having received the same from him by means of false pretenses. That on account of said felony the said Ed. Hennessey, alias E. M. Hall, and the said John Green, alias David C. Wilson, were at the June term, 1894, of the Nodaway county circuit court, indicted. That afterwards, to wit, on the — day, —, 1894, the garnishee, Benjamin F. Pixler, arrested said Green, alias Wilson, and said Hennessey, alias Hall, and placed them under arrest, for the commission of said felony, and after said arrest he received from said parties the sum of $246 in money; one diamond pin, of the value of $100; one gold watch, of the value of $150; one revolver, of the value of $10; one valise, of the value of $5; a roll of money, of the value of $4,200,—of the goods, chattels, and property of the said Ed. Hennessey, alias E. M. Hall, John Green, alias D. C. Wilson, Mary Green, Mathew Reynolds, and William Gardner, alias John L. Gardner, alias Denver. That all of said property was in the possession of the garnishee at the time of the service of this summons on the said Benjamin F. Pixler. Plaintiff further states that though the said Hennessey, alias Hall, and the said Green, alias Wilson, were indicted for said offense aforesaid, and were arrested as aforesaid, they were afterwards, during the month of September, 1894, released from the Nodaway county jail by the garnishee herein, Benjamin F. Pixler, and they have since escaped from this state, and have not been brought to trial, or convicted of said offense. Plaintiff further says that from the date of the arrest of said parties as aforesaid this plaintiff had a just and lawful lien on the property aforesaid, so received by this garnishee, for the reparation and payment of his debt against these defendants. That all of said property was and is subject to the garnishment proceedings in this case, and is in no wise liable to the payment of the claims set forth in the answer of garnishee. Wherefore plaintiff asks judgment against the garnishee for the full value of said property, aforesaid."

There seems to be no denial of this reply, although the case was tried without objection on the part of plaintiff. No objection is now made to this omission, and we treat the case—as treated by the parties—as though a general denial had been filed. The issues were tried to the court without a jury. On the trial it was shown that plaintiff had recovered judgment against defendants for over $5,000; that garnishee was sheriff of Nodaway county; that, under a charge of grand larceny from plaintiff, defendants were arrested in Nebraska by garnishee and the local officers of that state, and two revolvers, two valises, and a sum of money were taken from them; that defendants attempted, but failed, to secure their release under writs of habeas corpus; that garnishee paid the expenses incident to the arrest, and securing the habeas corpus proceedings, and securing the extradition of the prisoners, which amounted to the sum named in the answer of garnishee; that the prisoners were brought to this state and indicted; that they afterwards gave bail, and never appeared to answer to the indictment, and their recognizance was forfeited by judgment of court, and the accused were still fugitives from justice. There was evidence of one witness who testified that garnishee told him, while in Nebraska, that he had taken $4,000 from defendants. Garnishee admitted that the officers making the arrest took from the prisoners $246 in money, two revolvers, and two valises. He claimed that one of the revolvers was given to him by the prisoners. He admitted that he had the other and the $246 in money still in his possession, but claimed that it was subject to the state's lien for payment of costs. The evidence showed that plaintiff furnished garnishee money to pay the costs incurred in making the arrest, and in all other proceedings in securing the return of the prisoners to this state. There was evidence tending to prove that Judge Dawson received a gold watch and a diamond pin as security for his fee of $300 for legal services in defending the prisoners; that $200 was afterwards paid, and the diamond pin, valued at $150, was delivered to garnishee, to be held as security for the balance; that, after forfeiture, garnishee paid Judge Dawson the balance of his fee, and retained the pin. Judge Dawson testified that he received the watch and pin from a woman claiming to be the wife of defendant Green.

The finding and judgment of the court are as follows: "The court finds that the defendant has in his possession a revolver worth $15. Ordered, that the garnishee deliver the same into court, and, upon said delivery, is entitled to his discharge; and the court finds for garnishee as to other matters claimed. And now the sheriff, Pixler, delivers to the clerk of this court the revolver claimed, and is discharged." From the judgment, plaintiff appealed to the Kansas City court of appeals, from which the case was transferred to this court, on account of the amount involved being in excess of the jurisdiction of that court.

1. Issues in garnishment proceedings are made up by the denial of the answer of the garnishee, and the reply thereto. The denial should state the grounds upon which a recovery is claimed, and the reply to the denial makes the issue. The reply of plaintiff in this case charged that the garnishee received from the defendants, when arrested, the sum of $246 in money; one diamond pin, of the value of $100; one gold watch, of the value of $150; one revolver, of the value of $10; one valise, of the value of $5; and a roll of money, of the value of $4,200,—the property of said defendants. The evidence tended to prove these allegations. The amount in dispute therefore exceeded $2,500. The court found that the garnishee had in his possession one revolver, the property of the defendants, of the value of $15, which was ordered to be deposited in court. The amount in dispute, on the appeal of plaintiff, is the difference between the amount claimed and the amount recovered. In this case the supreme court clearly has jurisdiction of the appeal. Doud v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., 57 Mo. App. 219, 132 Mo. 581.

2. As to whether or not the diamond pin and watch in question were the property of defendants, the evidence is conflicting. No instructions as to them were asked or given, so we are unable to determine the theory upon which that issue was tried and determined. Indulging the presumption that the court found and decided correctly, we assume that it found that these articles belonged to the woman from whom Judge Dawson received them. The evidence is also conflicting as to the amount of money the garnishee took from defendants. No instructions were asked or given on this question, either. No question of law, therefore, was raised on that fact, and there is nothing before us to decide. Garnishee admitted, however, on the trial, that he took from the persons of defendants, when he arrested them, $246, which he still had. This fact, then, must be taken as confessed. The exception taken in the trial court, and insisted on here, is that error was committed in holding that "the $246 in the possession of the garnishee was not subject to garnishment."

3. The only question raised by this record is whether or not this money taken from the person of these prisoners when arrested and still held by garnishee officially, as sheriff, is subject to garnishment in an attachment suit in favor of plaintiff and against defendants; the subject of the suit being damages on account of the alleged crime. It has been held in this state, and is generally recognized as the law, that, in a civil action, service of process upon a defendant who is brought into the territorial jurisdiction of the court by fraudulent means or criminal process will be set aside, if timely objection is made thereto. Byler v. Jones, 79 Mo. 261; Christian v. Williams, 111 Mo. 485, and cases cited. So it is held that "where an officer unlawfully gets possession of a debtor's property, as by breaking into his dwelling house without proper authority, and then attaches it on mesne process, or levies upon it on execution, the attachment or levy will be void." Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 485, 93 Am. Dec. 459, citing Isley v. Nichols, 12 Pick. 270, 23 Am. Dec. 425; People v. Hubbard, 24 Wend. 369, 35 Am. Dec. 628; Curtis v. Hubbard, 4 Hill, 437, 40 Am. Dec. 292, and other cases. This seems to be the modern doctrine, founded upon the principle that courts will not lend their assistance to effectuate fraudulent or unlawful practices of suitors, though the old doctrine was that the seizure under process, in such case, would be valid, while the officer making it would be liable for the trespass. See People v. Hubbard, 24 Wend. 369, 35 Am. Dec. 628.

In the case of Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 485, 93 Am. Dec. 459, the sheriff arrested a person upon the charge of grand larceny, and, before trial or examination, proceeded, on his own motion, to search the prisoner, and took from his person some money, a watch, a watch chain, and a wallet. On the next day writs of attachment were issued against the prisoner, and placed in the hands of the sheriff, and he thereupon attached the money and other property. The court, in giving its judgment, says: "The money and other articles were proper articles to attach, if the officer could rightfully obtain possession of them, without arresting the debtor, which his writ did not warrant him in doing. Now, if the officer took advantage of his warrant, and the arrest under it, to take from his prisoner this property, not for any legitimate purpose, but simply for the purpose of attaching it on these writs, that would be obtaining possession of the property under false pretenses and fraudulently, which would make the possession to stand like the unlawful possession in case of breaking into the house in the other case, and would not justify the attachment." The court held that, if this property was lawfully taken from the person of the debtor, it was subject to attachment while in the hands of the sheriff. The same ruling was made by the supreme court of Iowa in the case of Reifmyer v. Lee, 44 Iowa, 102, 24 Am. Rep. 733. Beck, J., in delivering the opinion, says: "A party to a suit can gain nothing by fraud or violence under the pretense of process, nor will the fraudulent or unlawful use of process be sanctioned by the courts. In such cases parties will be restored to the rights and position they possessed and occupied before they were deprived thereof by the fraud, violence, or abuse of legal process." Money and a watch had also been taken from the person of the prisoner in that case, and the court held that the officer was authorized to make the search and take into his possession such property, and the levy of the attachment upon it while so held was valid. In a subsequent case, however, the same court held that where the sheriff took from the person of a prisoner two watches and some money, which were in no way connected with the crime with which he was charged, and which could not be used as evidence in the prosecution, it was his duty to return them, and while he retained them his possession was that of the prisoner, and they were "no more subject to attachment in an action against the prisoner than if they had been in his pocket." The court says: "To hold otherwise would lead to unlawful and forcible searches of the person under cover of criminal process, as an aid to civil actions for the collection of debts." Commercial Exch. Bank v. McLeod, 65 Iowa, 666. We find the same ruling by the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts in the cases of Robinson v. Howard, 7 Cush. 258, and Morris v. Penniman, 14 Gray, 220, 74 Am. Dec. 675. In the former case the headnote reads: "An officer is not liable, by the trustee process, to a creditor of a person arrested by him on a criminal warrant, for money or other property, taken by the officer, under color of his official duty, from the person of his prisoner, and for which he gives the latter a receipt." Shaw, Ch. J., says: "Such process might be used to search the person, or otherwise, under color of lawful authority, to get possession of the property of a debtor, in order to place it in the hands of the officer, and thus make it attachable by trustee process." In the latter case one Bassett was arrested on a charge of larceny. On being asked what property he had about him, he delivered up, with objection, a watch and key. While they were in possession of the officer they were attached on process against Bassett. On this state of facts the court held that "the attachment of the watch and key was not valid." A sheriff took from the person of a prisoner $950 in money, and other property. While in his possession, the officer was served with process by garnishment. Knox, the prisoner, intervened, and claimed that the property in the hands of the sheriff was in the custody of the law, and was not subject to garnishment at the suit of a creditor. On appeal this plea was sustained, on the ground that the property was not subject to process by garnishment. Richardson v. Anderson (Tex. App.) 18 S. W. 195. The supreme court of Alabama reaches a different conclusion, under a provision of the Code of that state. The court, however, in discussing the question, says: "At common law, and perhaps without statute, the money or property [taken from the person of the prisoner] would be in gremio legis, not subject to attachment, and entirely under the control of the court." Ex parte Hurn, 92 Ala. 109, 13 L. R. A. 120.

Generally speaking, in the absence of a statute an officer has no right to take any property from the person of the prisoner, except such as may afford evidence of the crime charged, or means of identifying the criminal, or may be helpful in making an escape. The officer has the undoubted right to make the search, and, considering the nature of the accusation, he may, when acting in good faith, take into his possession any articles he may suppose will aid in securing the conviction of the prisoner, or will prevent escape. "He holds all such property, whether money or goods, subject to the order of the court; and, in proper circumstances, he will be directed to restore it, in whole or in part, to the prisoner." Bishop, Crim. Proc. §§ 211, 212; Whart. Crim. Pl. §§ 60, 61. We find no statute of this state giving the arresting officer authority to search a prisoner, but no statute is necessary. The power exists from the nature and objects of the public duty the officer is required to perform. Such authority is directly given to a committing magistrate by statute (§ 4308, Rev. Stat. 1889); but, unless the arresting officer has the authority immediately on making the arrest, all evidences of crime and of identification of the criminal might be destroyed before the prisoner could be taken before the magistrate. We have no doubt the search of the prisoners in this case was entirely justifiable, considering the nature of the crime charged, and other circumstances. In the circumstances, also, he was justified in taking from their persons and keeping in his possession the money found upon them, though it may have been in no manner connected with the charge or proof against them. Money is the most effective kind of property a prisoner could have in his possession, to be used as a means of escape; and the safe-keeping of the prisoner justified the retention of the money, at least until he was brought before the magistrate. Neither the officer nor the state acquires any title to the property, or lien upon it, until after conviction. A mere accusation does not justify the confiscation of the property of the accused. The property, therefore, whatever its character, belongs to the prisoner, until judicially sequestered. "The officer," says Bishop, "holds all such property, whether money or goods, subject to the order of court; and, in proper circumstances, he will be directed to restore it, in whole or in part, to the prisoner. This power . . . will be exercised both in cases where original taking was wrongful, and where for the any other reason there ought to be a partial or complete returning of the thing." Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 212. If the taking was wrongful, then the custody of the officer can only be regarded as the custody of the prisoner; and the property in his hands would, before conviction, no more be subject to levy under attachment or execution than if upon the person of the owner. To hold otherwise, as said by Shaw, Ch. J., supra, "such process might be used to search the person, or otherwise, under color of lawful authority, to get possession of the property of a debtor in order to place it in the hands of the officer, and thus make it attachable." No such abuse of criminal process should be allowed. "The people shall be secure in their persons, papers, homes, and effects from unreasonable searches and seizures." Mo. Const. art. 2, § 11. If the property was lawfully taken from the person of the prisoner, the act of the officer will be in the performance of an official duty. The sheriff being an officer of the court in which the indictment is pending, the money is in custody of the court, subject to its order. The rule of general application is that money or property which has come into the hands of an officer of a court by virtue of legal process is regarded as in the custody of the law, and cannot be taken from him under other process, either of execution, attachment, or garnishment. Shinn, Attachm. § 505; 2 Wade, Attachm. §§ 380, 421; Kneeland, Attachm. § 410; Waples, Attachm. § 390; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1187. This rule was approved at an early day by this court in Murvin v. Hawley, 9 Mo. 382, 43 Am. Dec. 547, in which the court says: "It is not the policy of the law thus to embarrass the regular proceedings in the courts, deprive parties of their rights, and impose such onerous and difficult duties on the sheriff. We are then of opinion that money in the hands of the sheriff, collected on execution, cannot be attached by a creditor of the execution plaintiff before the return day of the writ." The officer, in such case, is the mere agent of the court, and custodian of the property; and to permit an interference with his possession would be to interfere with the jurisdiction of the court, and divert the property from the purposes for which it is held. No one could reasonably claim that money or other property taken from the person of a prisoner, and held to be used as evidence of the criminal charge, could be taken out of his possession by other legal process, whether of the same court or another.

other,—at least, until final judgment of conviction. "For these reasons, and because it is deemed contrary to public policy to permit such officers to be subjected to the embarrassment, delay, and expense incident to such process, the authorities are almost uniform in holding that general words in garnishment statutes are not to be construed as including them." 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1188, and note 2. The statute of Missouri provides that "no sheriff, constable, or other officer charged with the collection of money shall, prior to the return day of an execution or other process upon which the same may be made, be liable to be summoned as garnishee." Rev. Stat. 1889, § 5220. It may be agreed that this statute does not in terms apply to a case like this one, in which the property is taken from the owner under criminal process. But we do not think the statute, by stating one case of exemption, excludes all others. The sheriff does not require an order of court to pay over money collected on execution. The law imposes that duty upon him. The statute was designed to protect the sheriff from embarrassment in executing the process of the court, and the onerous and difficult duties garnishment proceedings would impose upon him. The principle that money in the hands of a custodian of the court is subject to its order rests upon wholly different grounds, as has been seen, and applies as well to receivers, clerks, and other custodians. Shinn, Attachm. § 505; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1188. It is therefore our opinion that, if the money and property were taken from the person of the prisoners by authority of law, which the sheriff would be estopped to deny, it was in the custody of the law, and subject to the orders of the court in which the criminal proceedings were pending, and was not—at least until after conviction—subject to attachment at the suit of a creditor of a prisoner. If, on the other hand, it was taken without authority of law, then it is not subject to attachment because a wrongful use was made of criminal process in getting possession. Such an abuse of criminal process is against the policy of the law, and would be violative of one of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

The only case in this state that we have been able to find, having any bearing on the issues in this one, is McKnight v. Spain, 18 Mo. 536. In that case money and a watch were taken from a prisoner on his arrest, which were held by the officer of the court until after trial and conviction of the prisoner, and a judgment for costs had been rendered against him. An execution was issued on the judgment, and the property so held by the officer was sold, and the proceeds were applied to the payment of costs. The only questions determined in that case were whether the execution was sufficient in form, and whether or not the lien of the state, which, under the statute then in force, dated from the arrest, would have priority over a transfer of the property after arrest, and before judgment. The court held the execution good, and that the lien of the state prevailed over the assignment. It does appear, however, that the property was sold under execution, though held by an officer of the court, and the validity of the sale was tacitly approved.

This circumstance gives some support to the position of plaintiff that the property, while in the hands of the officer, was subject to seizure and sale under civil process. The statute makes it the duty of the clerks of criminal courts, at the end of each term, to issue executions for all fines imposed and all costs of conviction, in criminal cases, remaining unpaid, "which will be executed in the same manner as executions in civil cases." Rev. Stat. 1889, § 4265. We take the issuance of execution in such cases, and the duty under it of the officer into whose hands it is placed, done and required by authority of law, as equivalent to an order of the court; and, unless otherwise directed by the court, it authorizes the money or property in the custody of the court to be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment. When the purpose of the legal custody has been accomplished, and the only duty the custodian has to perform is to deliver the property or pay the money to the owner, the legal custody ceases, the officer holds it for the owner, and it becomes subject to process at the suit of his creditors. 2 Shinn, Attachm. § 546. This rule is recognized by our statute which exempts a sheriff from garnishment until the return day of an execution, and an administrator until an order of distribution be made. After a final conviction in a criminal case, the purpose of the legal custody of the money or property taken from the person of the prisoner has presumably been accomplished, and it becomes subject to process, unless the court may otherwise direct. What has been said has no application to property stolen, or otherwise feloniously obtained. The statute provides for the restoration of such property to the owner. Rev. Stat. 1889, §§ 4808 et seq.

4. Plaintiff places his chief reliance for reversal upon the last clause of § 4317, which provides that "the party injured shall have a lien on the estate of the criminal from the time of his arrest, subject to any lien granted by law to this state." We are unable to see that this provision authorizes the enforcement of the lien by garnishment. Indeed, the lien of the injured party is expressly made subject to the lien of the state; and the equities between the two lienors, in case they are conflicting, must be determined and settled by the court having custody of the property under such appropriate proceedings as will give each a chance to be heard. The statute gives the state a lien on all property, real and personal, of any person charged with a criminal offense, from the time of his final conviction of such offense, for the payment of all fines and costs which he may be adjudged to pay. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 4264. The statute further provides, "Whenever any person shall be convicted of any crime or misdemeanor, he shall be adjudged to pay the costs, and no costs incurred on his part, except fees for board, shall be paid by the state or county." Id. § 4395. The lien the statute gives to the injured party only becomes consummate and enforceable on final conviction, but then relates back to the date of arrest. The preceding part of § 4317, which provides the proceedings by which the person injured may secure restitution, or reparation in damages, shows clearly that the lien can only be enforced after final conviction. The lien is given on the estate of the criminal, and no one can justly be called a criminal until he be convicted of crime. While, therefore, the lien of the state dates only from conviction, and the lien of the injured person dates from the arrest, both become enforceable on the date of the conviction, and the lien of the state has precedence, though of a later date. In this case neither party had an enforceable lien on the property in question by virtue of the foregoing provisions of the statute, for there had been no conviction, and the statute gave no aid to the proceedings by attachment.

We are of the opinion that the circuit court ruled correctly in holding that the sheriff was not subject to garnishment on account of the money of the prisoner in his custody, and its judgment is affirmed.

All concur.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Montana, ex rel. W. H. GELSTHORPE, County Treasurer, Appt.,

v.

Della M. FURNELL et al., Respts.

(.....Mont.....)

1. The right to receive property, and not the property itself, is taxed by act March 4, 1897, imposing a tax on "all property" which shall pass by will or intestate laws, unless the estate is less than $7,500.
2. A reasonable classification of property for taxation does not violate the rule of uniformity.
3. A succession tax does not take property without due process of law when it is imposed on all property which passes by will or intestate laws except when the estate is less than $7,500.

4. The rule of uniformity is not violated by a succession tax which exempts every estate less than $7,500.

5. An inheritance tax does not deny to anyone the equal protection of the laws because it exempts estates less than $7,500 each.

6. A statute taxing the right already vested to take shares of an estate of a person who died before the act was passed, but which is yet subject to the control of the probate court and not yet distributed, is not an unconstitutional impairment of vested rights.

(November 15, 1897.)

NOTE.—For legislative power to impose inheritance taxes, see Re Romaine (N. Y.) 12 L. R. A. 401, and note; also State v. Hamlin (Me.) 25 L. R. A. 632; 89 L. R. A.

Minot v. Winthrop (Mass.) 26 L. R. A. 259; State v. Alston (Tenn.) 23 L. R. A. 178; State, Schwartz, v. Ferris (Ohio) 30 L. R. A. 218.

APPEAL by relator from a judgment of the District Court for Cascade County in favor of defendants in a proceeding brought to enforce payment of an inheritance tax. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. M. M. Lyter and C. B. Nolan, Attorney General, for appellant:

Such taxes are nothing more than a burden, bonus, excise, or assessment, as they have been variously defined, imposed by government upon the passing devolution, transmission, or privilege of taking or receiving property under wills and intestate laws, whether such property passes to collateral or lineal heirs. The right to impose these taxes is based upon the broad constitutional power of the state, as a sovereign, to modify, amend, extend, or wholly to repeal the laws governing the transmission of property by will and intestate laws.

Dos Passos, Inheritance Tax Law, p. 31; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L. R. A. 259; State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 503, 25 L. R. A. 632; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 237; Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 387; Re Swift, 137 N. Y. 77, 18 L. R. A. 709; State, Schwartz, v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 314, 30 L. R. A. 218.

The evident intention of an act will prevail over the literal sense of its terms.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 219.

While the power to dispose of property is an incident to the property itself, the right to take by will or from intestate is a mere privilege of the municipal law, which may be changed, modified, or repealed, in the discretion of the legislature.

State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 505, 25 L. R. A. 632; Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 437, 73 Am. Dec. 367; Stride v. Com. 52 Pa. 181; Redf. Wills, § 1; 2 Bl. Com. pp. 10-13; Mager v. Grima, 49 U. S. 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168.

The right to inherit being a mere privilege conferred by statute, and not a natural right, the power of the legislature to tax that privilege is unlimited and unrestricted, and may be exercised in any manner or mode in its discretion.

Jenkins v. Erin, 8 Heisk. 456; Kelly v. Dwyer, 7 Lea. 180; State v. Burgoyne, 7 Lea. 173, 40 Am. Rep. 60.

The tax is levied upon the privilege and not upon the property.

State, Schwartz, v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 314, 30 L. R. A. 218; Re Hoffman, 143 N. Y. 330; Re Swift, 137 N. Y. 77, 18 L. R. A. 709.

The legislature might, after the death of a testator or intestate, increase the fees to be paid to the clerk of the court by executors and administrators. Could it be claimed that such increase disturbed rights which had become vested in the heirs or successors?

The privilege thus granted, and which did not otherwise exist, was not a contract on the part of the state.

Baltimore & S. R. Co. v. Nesbit, 51 U. S. 10 How. 396, 13 L. ed. 470; Butler v. Pennsylvania, 51 U. S. 10 How. 414, 13 L. ed. 477; Watson v. Mercer, 33 U. S. 8 Pet. 110, 8 L. ed. 884; Childer v. Bull, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648; Brick Presby. Church v. New York, 5 Cow. 538; Vanderbilt v. Adams, 7 Cow. 349.

The better authority upon the question as to the constitutionality of the retroactive provision in acts like the one in question here is in favor of the constitutionality of such provision.
39 L. R. A.

Dos Passos, Inheritance Tax Law, p. 417; Re Short, 16 Pa. 66; Carpenter v. Pennsylvania, 58 U. S. 17 How. 456, 15 L. ed. 127; Ennis v. Smith, 55 U. S. 14 How. 400, 14 L. ed. 472; Tucker v. Ferguson, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 563, 23 L. ed. 805.

Privileges which are granted by the state without any agreement as to their continuance, and without the passing of any consideration from the grantees, may be withdrawn at any time.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 338; Talmadge v. Seaman, 85 Hun. 242; Re Seaman, 147 N. Y. 69.

While the vested rights to the legal estate undoubtedly accrue upon the death of the testator, no rights vest in the beneficial interest, nor do the heirs become "beneficially entitled" to anything until distribution is made.

Todd v. Wickett, 18 B. Mon. 871.

Mr. William T. Pigott, for respondent:

The act is repugnant to the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, in that it denies to persons within the jurisdiction of Montana the equal protection of the laws.

(a) It exempts from tax estates under $7,500 in value, while it levies the tax upon all estates of that or greater value. An estate valued at $7,499.99 is exempt, but one of greater value is taxed, not only upon the excess, but also upon the $7,499.99.

Government is instituted for the equal protection and benefit of the people. Laws must likewise be for their equal protection and benefit.

Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co. 9 Sawy. 165, 18 Fed. Rep. 385; Railroad Tax Case, 8 Sawy. 238, 13 Fed. Rep. 722; State, Schwartz, v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 314, 30 L. R. A. 218.

(b) It exempts from taxation estates distributed prior to its passage, while imposing the tax upon all other estates.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666.

(c) In imposing a tax upon estates not distributed at the time the act took effect, it impaired the vested rights of those entitled to the property of such estates, whereas like vested rights in other estates were not disturbed. The persons having these rights are not equally protected by the law.

The act is in violation of the Constitution of Montana.

The tax is expressly declared upon property.

The Pennsylvania rule declared in Re Short, 16 Pa. 63, and Bittinger's Estate, 129 Pa. 338, that the tax is upon the property itself, is in harmony with the plain terms of the act.

Carpenter v. Pennsylvania, 58 U. S. 17 How. 456, 15 L. ed. 127.

If the tax be declared upon property as distinguished from the privilege of succession, the act violates section 1 of article 12, providing that the legislature shall levy a uniform rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for the taxation of all property except that especially provided for in this article.

The act violates also § 9, in that the rate exceeds 2½ mills on each dollar of valuation.

Exemption from taxation of an estate valued at less than $7,500 renders the act void.

State, Schwartz, v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 814, 30 L. R. A. 218; State, Davidson, v. Gorman, 40 Minn. 232, 2 L. R. A. 701; Curry v. Spencer, 61 N. H. 624, 60 Am. Rep. 337. And see State, Sanderson, v. Mann, 76 Wis. 469.

As applied to estates remaining undistributed when the act took effect, it disturbs and lessens vested rights, and also impairs the obligations of contracts.

At the moment of the testator's death, the rights of the devisees and legatees vested.

Brenham v. Story, 329 Cal. 188; Black, Constitutional Law, 429; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 359; Beach, Mod. Eq. Jur. § 1045; Croswell, Exrs. & Admsrs. § 171; Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202, 62 Am. Dec. 160; Ervin's Appeal, 16 Pa. 266, 55 Am. Dec. 499; Clarke v. McCreary, 12 Smedes & M. 347; Rock Hill College v. Jones, 47 Md. 1; Civil Code, §§ 1794, 1851.

The declaration contained in § 3 of article 8 of the Constitution, that all persons have the natural, essential, and inalienable right of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, coupled with the declaration of § 27, that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, would seem to imply a prohibition against the power of the assembly to enact a law whose effect would be the impairment of vested rights.

Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 209, 62 Am. Dec. 160; Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray, 329; Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 235, 4 L. ed. 559; Cooley, Const. Lim. 354.

Although the Constitution may not, in terms, prohibit laws impairing vested rights, nevertheless they are forbidden by the nature of republican government.

Wilder v. Lumpkin, 4 Ga. 208; Andrews v. Russell, 7 Blackf. 474; Darville v. Pace, 25 Gratt. 1, 18 Am. Rep. 663; Dunbarton v. Franklin, 19 N. H. 257; Commercial Bank v. Chambers, 8 Smedes & M. 9; Osborn v. Nicholson, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 654, 20 L. ed. 689; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. ed. 558; Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 499, 5 Am. Dec. 291.

Taxes on inheritance are laid in diminution of a new capital which now comes to the hands of persons on the death of the former owners.

Cooley, Taxn. p. 22.

If the legislature has the power to impose a tax of 5 per cent or 1 per cent on a vested right, it has authority likewise to destroy the right by imposing a tax equal to the value of the property acquired. Authority which permits a person to be deprived of his property by indirection is as much within the meaning and spirit of the constitutional limitation as where it attempts to do the same thing directly.

Merrill v. Sherburne, 1 N. H. 199, 8 Am. Dec. 52; Re Handley, 15 Utah, 212.

Whether or not the state received a consideration for granting the privilege of succeeding to property is immaterial when the privilege has been exercised and has become a right.

39 L. R. A.

The amount of the impairment of the obligation is immaterial.

Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. ed. 558.

Hunt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The legislature of Montana, by an act approved March 4, 1897, enacted a law establishing a tax on direct and collateral inheritances. The law substantially provides that "all property" which shall pass by will, or by the intestate laws of the state, from any person who may die seised or possessed of the same, shall be, and is, subject to a tax at a fixed rate on every $100 of the clear market value of such property: provided, that an estate valued at a less sum than $7,500 shall not be subject to any such "tax or duty." It is also provided that the tax shall be levied "upon all estates which have been probated before, and shall be distributed after the passage and taking effect of this act;" and again, that the act should apply to all estates remaining undistributed at the time the law took effect, and that in such estates the tax should be determined and collected as in other cases. The act went into effect March 4, 1897. Sess. Laws 1897, p. 83. Matthew Furnell, a citizen of Cascade county, Montana, died testate May 6, 1896, nearly one year before the passage of this law, leaving his property to the respondent, his wife, in her own right, and as trustee for his minor children. The value of the estate greatly exceeded $7,500. The will was duly proved in 1896, and administration was had. On July 19, 1897, after the inheritance-tax law was in force, the district court ordered a distribution of the estate and the discharge of the executors. Before this order was made, however, the county authorities took steps to collect the inheritance taxes, and thereupon it was agreed between the respective counsel for the interested parties that the order of distribution and discharge should in no way prejudice or delay the state in the collection of the inheritance taxes, if found to be justly due. This proceeding was then instituted to enforce the payment of the taxes. The district court held that, as applied to the estates of persons who might die after the law took effect, the statute was constitutional, but that where, as in this case, the decedent died before March 4, 1897, the tax or assessment could not be collected, for as to such case the law was invalid. The learned judge said that the legatees under the will took immediately at the death of the decedent a vested estate, and that, although the beneficiaries under the will were postponed in the matter of present possession and enjoyment, their interest was none the less a vested one, charged only with the burdens imposed by laws existing and in force at the time such interests vested. As the validity of the act affecting successions opening since its enactment, as well as its application to successions already in the course of settlement when the law was passed, is contested, it devolves upon this court to review each of the respondent's principal contentions.

It is urged that the law attempts to impose a tax upon property, as distinguished from the right or privilege of succession; that, if it be held to lay a tax on the right of succession, still it is invalid, because the legislature is limited in its right to tax only such property as is defined by § 17 of article 12 of the State Constitution; that, as applied to estates remaining undistributed at the time the act took effect, it disturbs and lessens vested rights, and impairs the obligations of contracts; and that the act is repugnant to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that it denies to persons within Montana the equal protection of the laws.

The better view, as laid down by the authorities, is that a collateral inheritance or succession tax is a duty or bonus exacted in certain instances by the state upon the right and privilege of taking legacies, inheritances, gifts, and successions passing by will, by intestate laws, or by any deed or instrument, made inter vivos, intended to take effect at or after the death of the grantor. The burden or the tax is not imposed upon the property itself, but upon the privilege of acquiring property by inheritance. In nearly all inheritance tax laws the statutes provide for appraising the property to be inherited, but the object of such valuation is not to tax the property itself. It is to arrive at a measure of price by which the privilege of inheriting can be valued. State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 25 L. R. A. 682. In speaking of the inheritance tax law of New York state, Judge Wallace, of the United States circuit court, said: "Such a tax is no more one upon the bonds than an income tax is one upon the property out of which the income is derived, or an excise tax is one upon the articles manufactured or sold. The bonds are the subject of the appraisal, but the privilege is the subject of the tax. Inasmuch as it is lawful for the state to withhold altogether the privilege of acquiring property within its dominion by will or inheritance, whether the property consists of government bonds or anything else, it is lawful for the legislature to annex any conditions to the privilege which may seem expedient and do not conflict with the organic law of the state, or the Constitution or laws of the United States." Wallace v. Myers, 38 Fed. Rep. 184, 4 L. R. A. 171. The courts generally approve of this doctrine. In the early case of Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 367, the court said that such a tax could not be regarded, in a proper, legal sense, as a tax upon property, but as one "upon the transmission of property by devise or descent to collateral kindred." Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 181. The intention of the legislature was to exact a certain premium for the enjoyment of a civil right secured under the laws of succession. The reasoning of the many cases upholding such laws proceeds upon the indisputable proposition that the state has the power—unless denied it by constitutional prohibition—to regulate the devolution and distribution of an intestate's property, and equal authority to limit the power of a testator to bequeath his property to whom he pleases. State v. Dalrymple, 70 Md. 294, 8 L. R. A. 372. Beneficiaries under wills, and heirs generally, must know that statutes may constitutionally limit the power of disposition and acquiring of property. The power to dispose of property by will is neither a natural nor a constitutional right, but depends wholly upon statute, and may be conferred, taken away, or limited and regulated in whole or in part, by the legislature." Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 24 L. R. A. 259. And under the power of regulation, clearly, the state may impose reasonable burdens or conditions pertaining to the taking of property by will or inheritance. Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 181. It therefore has a right to levy an excise tax or duty as a price upon the right or privilege of succession under a will, or by devolution in intestacy, for the purpose of increasing its revenues. Re Hoffman, 148 N. Y. 327. The United States Supreme Court has sustained such a tax,—not as upon property but as upon a right to take property. Mager v. Grima, 49 U. S. 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1169; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287. In the last case, Justice Brown, for the court, said: "In this view, the so called inheritance tax of the state of New York is in reality a limitation upon the power of a testator to bequeath his property to whom he pleases; a declaration that, in the exercise of that power, he shall contribute a certain percentage to the public use; in other words, that the right to dispose of his property by will shall remain, but subject to a condition that the state has a right to impose. Certainly, if it be true that the right of testamentary disposition is purely statutory, the state has a right to require a contribution to the public treasury before the bequest shall take effect. Thus the tax is not upon the property, in the ordinary sense of the term, but upon a right to dispose of it, and it is not until it has yielded its contribution to the state that it becomes the property of the legatee."

The most exact rule is that which regards the tax as upon the right to receive property, rather than the right to dispose of it. Such is the explanation of the nature of the tax as given by Dos Passos in his valuable book on Inheritance Tax Law (p. 81), and as stated in the following clear language by Judge Burket, of the Ohio supreme court, in State, Schwartz, v. Ferrie, 58 Ohio St. 314, 30 L. R. A. 218: "In view of the authorities cited, it must be conceded that the general assembly has the power to pass an inheritance tax for purposes of general revenue; unless prohibited by the Constitution of our state. Properly understood, it is not the right to transmit, but the right and privilege to receive, that is taxed. The right to dispose of property during the lifetime of the owner cannot be separated from the property itself, and therefore to tax the right of disposal by contract in the lifetime of the owner, even though to take effect at his death, is to tax the property itself. But the right to dispose of the property by will or descent, taking effect after the death of the owner, is not so closely connected with the right of property, and it is not so clear that such right may not be taxed. But when the right to receive the property is considered, it is clear that the right is distinct and separate from the property itself, and the state may tax this right to receive property; and this is so whether the property is disposed of by the owner during his lifetime, or at his death. This right to receive property is under the control of the legislature, and it has the power to regulate and lay such burdens thereon as it may see fit, within the provisions of the Constitution. To regulate by taxation or otherwise the privilege or right to receive property is not in conflict with the 1st section of the Bill of Rights, which recognizes the inalienable right of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property. Were it otherwise, all our laws as to wills, descent, distribution, and conveyances would be unconstitutional." The rule is also enunciated in the recent case of State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 674, 28 L. R. A. 178.

The language of the Montana statute, that "all property" shall be subject to a tax, etc., requires no construction not in harmony with the usual interpretation given to inheritance tax laws generally using identical language. In State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 25 L. R. A. 682, this point was made; but the court said the act should be construed "according to its essential principle, object, and effect. Substance, and not form of phrase, is the important thing. All exactions of money by the government are taxes; but they are not all levied by assessment upon values. The latter class refers to the burdens recurring periodically, which are assessed upon valuations of property, made at stated intervals." A majority of the Ohio court so held, too, in State, Schwartz, v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 314, 30 L. R. A. 218, where the language of the statute, upon its face, imposed the tax as upon "property;" and we are of the opinion that, under the recent decisions upon similar statutes, ours must be construed, upon this point, as a constitutional tax upon the right to receive property, and not upon the property itself. The case of Carpenter v. Pennsylvania, 58 U. S. 17 How. 456, 15 L. ed. 127, is cited by the respondent's counsel as upholding the view that the tax is upon property alone. The court there spoke of the Pennsylvania statute as one imposing a tax upon the property of the decedent, but we do not understand the decision to be that such a tax is a property tax, strictly speaking. Certainly no such interpretation was put upon the inheritance-tax laws by the same court in Scholey v. Rew, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 381, 23 L. ed. 99, or in their recent decision in United States v. Perkins, heretofore cited, where Justice Brown quotes liberally from various cases to distinguish the tax as not being one upon property, in the ordinary sense of the word.

The tax, therefore, being upon a civil right and privilege, we briefly inquire whether the statute imposing it violates the principles of equality and uniformity prescribed by §§ 1 and 11 of article 13 of the State Constitution. We do not think it does. Judge Cooley, in Cooley on Taxation (p. 570), lays it down that the sovereignty may, in the discretion of its legislature, levy a tax on every species of property within its jurisdiction, or it may select any particular species of property and tax it, and that "what is true of property is true of privileges and occupations also; the state may tax all, or it may select for taxation certain classes and leave the others untaxed." Of course, this power may be restricted by the Constitution; but that author expressly says on page 584 that succession to an inheritance may be taxed as a privilege, notwithstanding the property of the estate is taxed, and taxes on property are required by the Constitution of the state to be uniform. Cooley supports his text by citing Eyre v. Jacobs, 14 Gratt. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 307, where the court regarded the equality and uniformity clauses of state Constitution as applying only to direct taxes upon property, intended to prevent arbitrary taxation of property according to kind or quality, without regard to value, and not as limitations upon the power of the legislature as to the objects of taxation. But it is unnecessary to go at length into those questions now; for, conceding that succession taxes are within the rule contended for, the application of the principle of uniformity and equality must always be a reasonable one. The legislature is not prevented by the Constitution from the exercise of discretion as to what classes of rights or privileges it may enumerate as subject to taxation, provided always the tax imposed is uniform in its application to all rights and privileges within the class defined, and provided, further, we take it, that any classification made is based upon a reasonable, and not a mere arbitrary, ground. State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 674, 28 L. R. A. 178. Nothing laid down in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, conflicts with these expressions. In Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L. R. A. 259, the tax was urged as an unequal one, because it was not imposed upon all estates, and upon all heirs, devisees, legatees, and distributees. But the court said that distinctions between collateral kindred or strangers, in reference to the assessment of such taxes, had the sanction of nearly all states which levied taxes of this kind. Continuing, the court said: "It has a sanction in reason, for the moral claim of collaterals and strangers is less than that of kindred in the direct line, and the privilege is therefore greater. The tax imposed by this statute is uniformly imposed upon all estates and all persons within the description contained in it, and the tax is not plainly and grossly oppressive in amount. State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 674, 28 L. R. A. 178. The court also answered the argument that the tax was unreasonable on account of certain exemptions, by declaring that the cost of administering smaller estates is proportionately greater than that in administering large ones, and this operated to diminish amounts received, and furthermore, that the laws of the different states and nations which levied taxes on devises, legacies, and inheritances have usually made exemptions, but that it was peculiarly within the discretion of the legislature to determine what exemptions should be made, and apportioning the burdens of taxation among those who can best bear them. In State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 25 L. R. A. 682, the court said that it was within the province of the legislature to say who shall and who shall not take an estate, and the proportion in which they may take, and that the state was not prevented from exacting an excise or duty from the person for taking the privilege allowed by the state. "It is necessary," said the court, "to make such excise uniform as to the entire class of collaterals. It must not tax one and exempt another in the same class. But it is not a violation of this principle to require an excise from all collaterals and strangers, and exempt from the excise classes nearer in blood to the decedent."

Provision is made in the statute for notice, to the person whose right is liable for the payment of the tax, of the proceeding affecting his interests; and opportunity is given him to be heard in relation to the value of his property, and in the amount of the tax to be imposed. Considering all these matters, we find nothing in the statute violative of the uniformity and equality clauses of the Constitution; and we are unable to see how, in this respect, it denies to persons within Montana the equal protection of the laws, or takes property without due process of law. Re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 306, 58 Am. Rep. 502.

Thus far, we find ourselves in accord with the opinion of the district judge. But, after painstaking investigation and careful deliberation, we have concluded that he was in error in ruling that, as applied to an estate remaining undistributed when the act took effect, it disturbed and lessened vested rights. It is argued that at the moment of the testator's death the rights of the legatees and devisees vested. By our statutes, testamentary dispositions, including devises and bequests to a person on attaining majority, are presumed to vest at the testator's death (Civ. Code, § 1794); and real and personal property of one who dies without disposing of it by will, pass to the heirs of the intestate, subject to the control of the district court, and to the possession of the administrator for the purposes of administration. We believe that the privileges and rights of heirs and legatees to take and receive shares of the property of a decedent are vested immediately upon the death of the testator or intestate. That the right to a distributive share in an estate vests in those entitled, directly upon the death of the intestate, is well established. Croswell, Exrs. & Admsrs. p. 396; Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202, 62 Am. Dec. 160; Davis v. Newton, 6 Met. 537. Chief Justice Shaw said in this last case: "The decree does not found the right, but judicially ascertains the heir, the whole amount to be distributed, and the amount of the distributive share of each. This distributive share, therefore, though its amount was uncertain and the time of payment contingent, was a vested property in the insolvent, at the time of the decease of his brother Henry." Such a right is a valuable one. It may be sold or mortgaged by the person to whom it belongs, and no law can be so changed as to justly deprive him of it, and bestow it upon another, without the owner's consent. It is also true that, after a testator's death, rights of legatees are entitled to every safeguard usually afforded by the state for the protection of individual rights. Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 439. But, notwithstanding these truths, a person may not apply, as "a shield of protection," the term "vested rights," against all considerations designed by the legislature to promote the general welfare, or establish an advanced public policy for the state. Judge Cooley (p. 437, Const. Lim.), says: "In organized society every man holds all he possesses, and looks forward to all he hopes for, through the aid and under the protection of the laws; but as changes of circumstances and of public opinion, as well as other reasons affecting the public policy, are all the while calling for changes in the laws, and as these changes must influence more or less the value and stability of private possessions, and strengthen or destroy well-founded hopes, and as the power to make very many of them could not be disputed without denying the right of the political community to prosper and advance, it is obvious that many rights, privileges, and exemptions which usually pertain to ownership under a particular state of the law, and many reasonable expectations, cannot be regarded as vested rights, in any legal sense." A vested right is held subject to the laws for the enforcement of public duties. Why, on a similar principle, is a right to take a legacy not subject to the laws for the assessment and collection of a tax, as a premium upon the right and privilege to receive the inheritance, as much as it is subject to laws which authorize the taxation of the very property bequeathed? It cannot be denied that the tax is imposed for public uses and purposes. The whole state, including these legatees, have an interest in the collection of taxes for state purposes. Protection is guaranteed by the state, not alone to the property of the decedent and to those who are justly entitled thereto, but also to the right to receive the property by affording to those enjoying that right means to determine its extent, and enforce the same when determined, to the end that it shall accrue absolutely to them, freed from the control of an administrator or executor. As a correlative proposition, the state has power to demand of those upon whom it confers the right, and to whom it affords this measure of protection, a tax to help sustain its protection. In Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616, the general proposition was laid down that whenever by the laws of a state, or by state authority, a tax, assessment, servitude, or other burden is imposed upon property for the public use, and those laws provide for a mode of confirming or contesting the charge thus imposed in the ordinary course of justice, with notice to the person, the judgment in such proceedings cannot be said to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law, however obnoxious it may be to other objections. Now, clearly, it is not obnoxious to the Constitution to lay a tax on the right to take, even where such right is vested while the estate is subject to the control of the district court to ascertain the exact value of the right, and the possession of an executor for purposes of administration. It is this important restriction to the vested right which respondent seems to have overlooked in the case. The acts of administration are conservatory means directed by the state to ascertain those vested rights. But, although vested, the rights of the legatees "are subordinate to the conditions, formalities, and administrative control prescribed by the state in the interests of its public order and are irrevocably established upon its abdication of this control, at the period of distribution." Carpenter v. Pennsylvania, 58 U. S. 17 How. 456, 15 L. ed. 127; Oyon's Succession, 6 Rob. (La.) 504, 41 Am. Dec. 274; Deyraud's Succession, 9 Rob. (La.) 357. Nor is there anything in the Federal or state Constitutions which prevents the state, during this period of administration and control, from imposing and collecting the tax upon the vested right to receive, before the legatee has actually received under a decree of distribution. The interests vested only in the manner and upon the conditions authorized by the laws of the state (Prevost v. Greenauz, 60 U. S. 19 How. 1, 15 L. ed. 572); and the imposition of an inheritance tax, though made as a condition for the taking of the inheritance after the right to take was vested, yet before the taking, does not impair the value of the right in any greater manner than the imposition of a rate of taxation greater after an interest vested than before would impair the value of the property itself. The inherent power of the statute gives it the right to lay the tax. Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616. The statute is but an exercise and declaration of that power; and, when the rights of legatee vested (that is, at the death of the testator), the right of the state to tax in any reasonable manner it saw fit simultaneously arose. Arnaud v. His Executor, 3 La. 336. In Re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 306, 58 Am. Rep. 502, the court of appeals aided in its conclusions by exceptionally able briefs and arguments, published in the report cited, trace the origin of inheritance taxes, and expressly decide that the imposition and collection of such taxes are simply incidents in the final settlement and adjustment of the estates. It follows that, as final settlements are made by an administrator, they are acts in the course of administration, and the imposition of the tax but an item or incident therein. In announcing the doctrine of the constitutionality of such a tax, and the power of the legislature over the subject of taxation, Judge Earl, speaking for the court in the case just cited, said: "We entertain no doubt that such a tax can be constitutionally imposed. The power of the legislature over the subject of taxation, except as limited by constitutional restrictions, is unbounded. It is for that body, in the exercise of its discretion, to select the objects of taxation. It may impose all the taxes upon lands, or all upon personal property, or all upon houses or upon incomes. It may raise revenue by capitation taxes, by special taxes upon carriages, horses, servants, dogs, franchises, and upon every species of property, and upon all kinds of business and trades. People, Griffin, v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289; People v. Equitable Trust Co. 96 N. 89 L. R. A.

Y. 387; Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 252; Cooley, Taxn. § 7. Taxes upon legacies and inheritances have been approved generally by writers upon political economy and systems of taxation, and no tax can be less burdensome and interfere less with the productive and industrial agencies of society. Such taxes were imposed in Rome two thousand years ago, and are now imposed in England and several of the continental countries of Europe, and in the states of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia, and perhaps other states of this country." To this list of states may now be added Tennessee, Massachusetts, Maine, New Jersey, West Virginia, and others. And upon the powers of taxation we quote the following language of Justice Miller in Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616: "It is said that plaintiff's property had previously been assessed for the same purpose, and the assessment paid. If this be meant to deny the right of the state to tax or assess property twice for the same purpose, we know of no provision in the Federal Constitution which forbids this, or which forbids unequal taxation by the states. If the act under which the former assessment was made is relied on as a contract against further assessments for the same purpose, we concur with the supreme court of Louisiana in being unable to discover such a contract."

Possible consequences and difficulties in executing the act in certain cases, where death occurred prior to the enactment of the law, and where the estates of such persons have not been ordered to be distributed, are advanced by way of argument. While we doubt whether many embarrassments will ensue, yet, if they do, it cannot affect the constitutionality of the act upon all estates brought within its provisions. Our consideration has been addressed to the question of the power of the legislature to provide for such a tax, and to impose it upon the right to take estates not distributed. Whether or not the power has been expediently exercised is not for the court to decide. In conclusion, our judgment is that the act is constitutional and valid, as affecting the estate involved in this case, and that the lower court erred in holding otherwise.

The judgment is reversed, and the case is remanded with instructions to overrule the demurrer and motion of the respondent, and grant respondent leave to answer.

Pemberton, Ch. J., and Buck, J., concur.

Rehearing denied December, 13, 1897.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FOURTH CIRCUIT.

Fred L. CLAYTON, Appt.,

v.

John S. HEBB.

(42 U. S. App. 477, 80 Fed. Rep. 568.)

Placing 85 tons of coal as ballast in the hold of a vessel of 700 or 800 tons' burden which is loaded with lumber does not bring her within the provisions of the Maryland law, exempting from pilot fees vessels laden in whole or in part with coal or coke mined in the United States.

(May 5, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the District of Maryland in favor of libellant in a libel to enforce payment of pilot fees. Affirmed.

NOTE.—Liability of vessel or owner for compulsory pilotage fees.

- I. What constitutes compulsory pilotage.
- II. Consideration and construction of provisions for.
 - a. Generally.
 - b. Exemptions.
- III. Effect of constitutional restrictions.
- IV. Effect of national prohibition against discrimination.
- V. Effect of national provision for waters between states.
- VI. Effect of Federal licenses and license laws.
- VII. Conditions of liability.
 - a. Necessary qualifications of pilot.
 - b. Tender of services.
 - c. Refusal of services tendered.
 - d. First pilot offering.
 - e. Proper destination.
- VIII. Outward bound pilotage.
- IX. To whom and what the liability attaches.
- X. The amount or rate.

I. What constitutes compulsory pilotage.

Compulsory pilotage may be said to be a system of pilotage in which it is made by law the duty of a vessel approaching or about to leave a harbor to employ or pay a pilot.

Thus, 3 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 7th ed. pp. 2017, 2019, 2020, providing that vessels from foreign ports shall take a licensed pilot, or, in case of refusal, pay full pilotage, and making it a misdemeanor to pilot vessels without a license, and providing that the pilot who brought in a ship has the right, unless complaint has been made, to take her out, and in case of complaint that the commissioners shall assign another pilot,—creates a system of compulsory pilotage. Homer Rameadell Transp. Co. v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 68 Fed. Rep. 845.

The question as to when and under what circumstances pilotage is compulsory has frequently arisen and been extensively discussed in connection with collisions and other causes of damage happening while the vessel causing them was in charge of a pilot, under the doctrine that if the employment of the pilot is compulsory he is not the agent of the master or owner, and they are not responsible for his acts; but as these cases do not involve the liability of the vessel or owner for the fees, they have been omitted from this note.

The term "compulsory pilotage," as used with reference to fees, is usually applied to fees required by law to be paid when services are tendered but refused and no services are rendered.

In Smith v. The Creole, 2 Wall. Jr. 485, however, it was held that Pennsylvania pilot act of March 23, 1803, requiring vessels going out or coming in to the port of Philadelphia to receive a pilot or forfeit half pilotage, making it a lien upon the vessel and recoverable in admiralty, is not compulsory, and a ship need not take a pilot if it prefers to pay the penalty or forfeiture.

The master of a vessel may usually pilot his own vessel into harbor, subject only to liability for the 39 L. R. A.

payment of pilotage fees when a pilot seasonably offers his services; and if no such offer is made, he may employ any other person to pilot his vessel in without incurring any penalty therefor. Com. v. Ricketson, 5 Met. 412.

It will be seen, however, by examination of the cases herein set forth, that many of the English statutes, and some of those of the American states, impose a penalty upon anyone not a duly licensed pilot who pilots a vessel into or out of a harbor, some of them including the master of the vessel within the prohibition.

II. Consideration and construction of provisions for.

a. Generally.

A right to compulsory pilotage is not founded on the principles of the common law, and can be established only by statute. Winslow v. Prince, 6 Cush. 368.

And the right to pilotage fees for services tendered but not accepted cannot be exercised in the absence of express statutory authority. Winslow v. Prince, 6 Cush. 368.

Provisions for half pilotage in case of the refusal of the services of a pilot, however, are an essential and necessary part of every system of pilotage. Ex parte McNiel, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 236, 20 L. ed. 624.

And an act providing that the pilot who shall first offer himself to any vessel (shall be entitled to take charge thereof imposes on the vessel a corresponding obligation to allow the exercise of such right by the pilot. The Lord Clive, 110 Fed. Rep. 185.

A right to half pilotage fees in case a vessel declines the offered services of a pilot, given by statute, is a right to compensation for the exertion and labor of the pilot and the expense and risk incurred by him in placing himself in a position to render the services offered, and is in the nature of a quasi contract; and where such right is so far perfected that nothing remains to be done by the party asserting it the repeal of the statute upon which it depends, does not affect it, nor an action for its enforcement. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Joliffe, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 450, 17 L. ed. 805.

The consideration for half pilotage authorized by such a pilotage law is the exertion of the pilot to reach the vessel for the purpose of placing his knowledge and skill at her disposal, and the liability of the vessel attaches according to the general rule of the maritime law by which the vessel herself is held responsible, and the presence or absence of a provision for a lien in the statutes of a state does not affect the question. The Kalmar, 10 Ben. 242.

Thus, the services provided for by La. act of 1857, § 18, providing for half pilotage in case of refusal of tendered services, are performed indirectly, and the master and warden are as much entitled to be paid for them as if they were done directly. New Orleans Port Wardens v. The Martha J. Ward, 14 La. Ann. 289.

And the Pennsylvania statute of March 2, 1803, providing that a vessel which neglects or refuses to take a pilot shall forfeit and pay to the master

Before Goff and Simonton, Circuit Judges, and Brawley, District Judge.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Robert H. Smith, for appellant:

The bark "Edmund Phinney" was an American vessel. When she sailed from Baltimore on the voyage in question she had on board as part of her cargo 25 tons of coal mined in the state of Maryland. This coal was in fact a part of her cargo.

The legislature of Maryland had two objects in view in passing that law. viz.: first to remove a burden from American vessels, and, second, to encourage the coal industry of the port of Baltimore.

The first of these objects was accomplished by warden of the pilots, for the use of the Society for the Relief of Distressed and Decayed Pilots and Their Widows and Children, one half the regular amount of pilotage, is an appropriate part of a general system of regulations on this subject, and cannot be considered as a covert attempt to legislate upon another subject under cover of the subject of pilotage. Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 314, 13 L. ed. 1002.

So, the payment of pilotage fees by a master of a vessel who has declined an authorized pilot's seasonable offer of services and employed an unauthorized person to pilot his vessel in is not the payment of a penalty. Com. v. Ricketson, 5 Met. 412.

The laws respecting pilotage are to be classed under the head of maritime law, pilotage being a subordinate, but highly useful, branch thereof; and statutory provisions with relation thereto are entitled to a liberal construction in order to give full efficiency to laws especially designed to promote the interest of commerce, and to protect the lives and property of the citizens engaged in it. Smith v. Swift, 8 Met. 329.

And the pilotage act of New York of 1853, chap. 467, and the act of 1857, amendatory thereof, are in the nature of a public regulation for the protection of life and property which might be endangered for want of proper precaution in navigating vessels entering the harbor of New York, and is to be liberally and beneficially construed. Gillespie v. Winberg, 4 Daly, 318.

And the fact that it was in the summer, and that the weather was fair, that the ship's master was competent to and did bring his vessel over the bar in safety, does not affect his liability to pay the usual rates of pilotage upon refusal to receive a pilot on board under the act of assembly of North Carolina providing for such payment. Gerrish v. Johnson, 1 Jones, L. 336.

So, whether or not a port is a good and safe harbor does not affect the question of the liability of a vessel for half pilotage for refusal to accept the services of a pilot tendered, where the vessel was bound to such port and discharged her cargo therein. Weldt v. The Howden, 30 Fed. Rep. 877.

And the necessity imposed upon a vessel by statute to take a pilot for the security of life and property brings the case within the exception to the Lord's Day act, and it is no defense to an action for compulsory pilotage that the services of a pilot were offered on Sunday. Perkins v. O'Mahoney, 181 Mass. 548.

And the fact that certain pilots pooled their earnings and divided them after paying out certain agreed items of expense does not affect the right of a pilot to recover pilotage fees where the statute provides that a fee shall be paid to the pilot first speaking the vessel, and there is no proof that as among themselves they agreed to become partners. The Pirate, 32 Fed. Rep. 496.

So, Pennsylvania act March 23, 1803, providing a system of pilotage, and that if a vessel refuses or neglects to receive a pilot duly qualified, the master, owner, or consignee shall forfeit to the master warden a sum equal to the half pilotage of the ship or vessel, to the use of the Society for the Relief of Distressed and Decayed Pilots, is not repealed by act March 24, 1851, providing that upon refusal of a licensed coasting vessel to take a pilot the master or owner or consignee shall forfeit half pilotage, 39 L. R. A.

and if the vessel be not licensed he shall forfeit full pilotage, the latter act being of no effect except to increase the penalty for refusal. The Lord Clive, 10 Fed. Rep. 135.

And the master of a schooner is subject to the penalty of $50 for refusing to take a pilot under Mass. act 1829, chap. 2, subjecting a person to such penalty who shall undertake to pilot any vessel into the harbor of Boston without having first obtained a commission or a branch pilot, notwithstanding the fact that his vessel drew less than 9 feet of water, and the fact that by a former act vessels drawing less than 9 feet of water were not obliged to take pilots, as the act of 1829 extends to all vessels except such as are therein particularly excepted, without regard to their draft of water. Hunt v. Card, 14 Pick. 185.

And South Carolina act 1878, § 16, imposing penalties for entering port without a pilot or a signal for a pilot, and upon any person not a duly licensed pilot who shall bring in any such vessel, applies to masters of vessels bringing in their own vessels without a pilot, as well as to persons acting as pilots without a regular license. State v. Penny, 19 S. C. 218.

So, in Kemler v. Blanchard, 2 W. Bl. 690, 5 Burr. 2602, it was held that the master of a vessel is liable for navigating her within water covered by 3 Geo. I. chap. 18, imposing a penalty upon any person navigating a vessel not being a duly licensed pilot.

But the master of a vessel navigating her himself as pilot after a duly licensed pilot has offered his services is not liable to the penalty imposed by 6 Geo. IV. chap. 125, § 70, upon every person assuming or continuing in charge or conduct of any vessel without being a duly licensed pilot, as navigation of a vessel by the master is specially provided for by § 58 of that act. Beilby v. Shepherd, 3 Exch. 40, 18 L. J. Exch. N. S. 73.

In that case Kemler v. Blanchard, 2 W. Bl. 690, 5 Burr. 2602, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that the action there was founded on 3 Geo. I. chap. 18, in which there was no special provision for a case of pilotage by the master.

So, 6 Geo. IV. chap. 125, § 62, providing that the provisions thereof with relation to compulsory pilotage are not to be construed so as to subject to any penalty for nonemployment of pilots the master or mate of any vessel being the owner or part owner thereof and residing at Dover, Deal, or the Isle of Thanet, for conducting or piloting his own ship or vessel from any of the places located up or down the rivers Thames or Medway, extend only to protect such masters as navigate ships from the places so mentioned in the act. Peake v. Screech, 14 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 317, 7 Q. B. 608; Williams v. Newton, 14 Mees. & W. 747, 15 L. J. Exch. N. S. 11.

And in King v. Lambe, 5 T. R. 76, it was held that 5 Geo. II. chap. 20, inflicting the penalty of £20 on persons piloting ships down the Thames, etc., only extends to vessels sailing on foreign voyages, and not to those which, having performed their voyages, were steered from one wharf to another on the river for the purpose of unloading their cargo.

And the same was held in King v. Neale, 8 T. R. 241.

To justify a recovery of a claim for pilotage offered and refused, however, the court must be exempting vessels which had previously been burdened with pilotage charges from such charges when they were laden not only "in whole" but also "in part" with coke or coal. The second object was accomplished by encouraging vessels to carry coal (the mining and shipping of which are important industries in the state of Maryland) from the port of Baltifully satisfied that the vessel refused or neglected to take a pilot as provided by the statute. The Talisman, 28 Fed. Rep. 111.

And the fact that a pilot left the vessel he was piloting without written permission from the master, as required by the rules and regulations of the master and wardens of the port of New York, does not destroy his right to compensation provided he left a competent substitute on board who was able to perform his duties; but the substitute must be a person who is himself a branch or deputy pilot. Shepherd v. Mitchell, 10 Johns. 112.

And that a pilot did not immediately upon going on board a vessel ascertain the situation of the ship and cause an entry thereof to be made in the log book, according to the rules and regulations of the master and wardens of the port of New York, cannot take away the right of the pilot against the ship owner to compensation, and the situation of the ship, being a matter of fact, may be proved in an action for such compensation by parol. Shepherd v. Mitchell, 10 Johns. 112.

b. Exemptions.

The exemption of American vessels engaged in the Pennsylvania coal trade from the necessity of paying half pilotage for refusal to accept the services of a pilot, provided for by Pa. laws March 3, 1868, is a fair exercise of legislative discretion acting upon the subject of the regulation of the pilotage of the port of Philadelphia. Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 314, 13 L. ed. 1002.

So, a registered vessel bound from the port of Boston to Alexandria, from whence she was destined to and actually went upon a foreign voyage, should be considered as a coasting vessel within the meaning of the Massachusetts statute exempting coasting vessels from compulsory pilotage. Tilley v. Farrow, 14 Mass. 17.

And a vessel properly documented, sailing from Philadelphia to Boston with a cargo of coal duly cleared with bills of lading signed and delivered, is regularly employed in the coasting trade within the meaning of Mass. Stat. 1873, chap. 281, § 1, authorizing vessels engaged in such trade to decline the services of a pilot, and exempting them from compulsory pilotage, though she sailed under a register and not under a coasting license, and though she had not been continuously or generally so employed. Wilson v. Gray, 127 Mass. 98.

And a vessel regularly and properly documented, which had been continuously employed for about seven years in carrying coal for various persons from Philadelphia to New York and other ports along the coast of the United States, and chiefly employed by the charterer in carrying its coal from its depot in Philadelphia to various depots of that company at other ports, transporting a cargo of coal from such depot to the charterer in Newburyport for sale there in the regular course of its business, is engaged in the coasting trade within the meaning of Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 70, § 22, exempting vessels regularly employed in the coasting trade from compulsory pilotage. Chase v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 126 Mass. 347.

So, a British vessel engaged in the plaster trade between Nova Scotia and Boston is not obliged to take a pilot into the harbor of Boston, and is not liable for refusal to do so, as the statutes of Massachusetts exempt American vessels engaged in the plaster trade, and British and American vessels are by treaty and commercial arrangement between Great Britain and the United States placed upon the same footing with each other. Hunt v. Card, 14 Pick. 135.

If it had been the intention of the legislature to require the vessel which was to have the benefit of this exemption to carry any definite quantity of coal or any fixed proportionate part of her cargo of coal, it would have so provided by its legislation.

But an Irish vessel with a general cargo, trading between Belfast and London and not laden with corn or grain as specified in 46 Geo. III. chap. 97, § 2, cannot be considered as a coasting vessel or an Irish trader using the navigation of the river Thames, as a coaster, within the meaning of 52 Geo. III. chap. 39, § 2, and is not exempted from the duty of taking a pilot on board. Devson v. McKibben, 6 J. B. Moore, 387, 3 Brod. & B. 112.

For construction of exemption of vessels laden with lumber, see CLAYTON v. HEBB. Coasting vessels, however, are not bound to take pilots on board on entering rivers within the limits of a jurisdiction having authority to appoint and license pilots, and the exemption in 52 Geo. III. chap. 39, is not confined to coasters navigating the Thames alone. Usher v. Lyon, 2 Price, 118.

And the merchant's shipping act of 1854, § 379, exempting ships not carrying passengers employed in the coasting trade from compulsory pilotage in Trinity House export districts, which by § 370 thereof includes any pilotage district for the appointment of pilots within which no particular provision is made by law, is not repealed or overridden by the Ipswich dock act of 1852 (15 Vict. chap. 116, § 91), requiring the corporation of Trinity House to appoint commissioners resident within the port of Ipswich to examine and certify pilots; and the master of a ship not carrying passengers employed in the coasting trade within the district is not liable for compulsory pilotage upon refusing to take a pilot. Hadgraft v. Hewith, L. R. 10 Q. B. 360, 44 L. J. M. C. N. S. 140, 32 L. T. N. S. 720, 23 Week. Rep. 911.

But a steam tug carrying passengers between two places, both of which are within the provisions of the Dublin port and dock act of 1869, is within the merchant's shipping act (17 & 18 Vict. chap. 104), providing that certain vessels in such case must take a pilot, imposing a penalty upon the master for failure to do so. Dublin Port & Docks Board v. Shannon, Ir. Rep. 7 C. L. 116.

All exemptions from compulsory pilotage existing immediately before the time that act went into operation are continued by the merchant's shipping act of 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. chap. 104, § 368), and a vessel carrying passengers proceeding on her outward voyage to the Baltic is not liable for compulsory pilotage for refusal to allow a duly qualified pilot to take charge at Gravesend. Stanton v. Banks, 4 Jur. N. S. 10, 382, 8 El. & Bl. 445, 27 L. J. M. C. N. S. 105.

As to constitutionality of exemption of certain vessels, see Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 314, 13 L. ed. 1002, infra, III.

As to exemptions within the Federal prohibition against discrimination, see supra, IV.

III. Effect of constitutional restrictions.

A law requiring ships to pay half pilotage in case of refusal of offered services of a pilot is not unconstitutional. Collins v. Society for Relief of Distressed & Decayed Pilots, 73 Pa. 194.

A state statute regulating the modes and times

Alexander v. Worthington, 5 Md. 485; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 286.

If the words are free from ambiguity and doubt, and express plainly, clearly, and distinctly the sense of the framers of the instrument, there is no occasion to resort to other means of interpretation.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 287; Wilson v.

of offering and rendering their services by pilots and the compensation they may demand constitutes a regulation of commerce within the grant to Congress of the commercial power contained in the 8d clause of the 8th section of the 1st article of the Constitution of the United States, but such power is not in its nature national, admitting only of one uniform system or plan of regulation, and such state regulation is not therefore repugnant to such constitutional provision where Congress has not found it necessary to exert its power upon the subject. Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 300, 13 L. ed. 996.

Power to regulate pilots and pilotage is concurrent in the state and national governments until exercised by the latter, and is not therefore granted by Congress to the states, but may be exercised by the later until appropriated by the former. The Panama, Deady, 27.

And state pilotage laws regulating pilots and providing for their compensation, and entitling them to half fees when their services are refused, though subject to the power of Congress over the matter, are valid, and not in conflict with the provisions of the United States Constitution conferring upon Congress the power to regulate commerce. Ex parte McNiel, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 236, 20 L. ed. 624.

So, a state statute regulating the modes and times of offering and rendering their services by pilots and the compensation they may demand, passed previous to the act of Congress of August 7, 1790, providing that all pilots, in the bays, inlets, rivers, harbors, and ports of the United States shall continue to be regulated in conformity with the existing laws of the state respectively, wherein such pilots may be, might be held to have been adopted by Congress and thus made a law of the United States. Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 312, 13 L. ed. 1001, dictum.

See similar doctrine in Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 207, 6 L. ed. 72.

And the fact that Congress has legislated on the subject of pilotage by act of March 2, 1837, with relation to waters which are the boundaries between two states, considered in connection with the act of Congress of August 7, 1790, providing that all pilots in the bays, inlets, rivers, and harbors of the United States shall continue to be regulated in conformity with the existing laws of the states respectively, wherein such pilots may be, manifests an intent upon the part of Congress, with the single exception named, not to regulate this subject, but to leave its regulation to the states, so that a state statute providing for the modes and times of offering and rendering their services by pilots and the compensation they may demand would not be thereby rendered invalid. Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 300, 13 L. ed. 996.

Thus, the pilot laws of the state of New York are valid, and not in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States conferring power upon Congress to regulate commerce. Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 572, 26 L. ed. 234.

And the New York act of April 15, 1847, and amendments thereto, providing that a pilot who shall first tender his services may demand from the master of any vessel of designated capacity navigating Hell Gate, to whom the tender was made and by whom it was refused, half pilotage though a 39 L. R. A.

Gray, 127 Mass. 98; Tilley v. Farrow, 14 Mass. 18; Chase v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 135 Mass. 847.

Messrs. Stewart Brown, Arthur George Brown, F. W. Brune, and George Stewart Brown, for appellee:

In all known systems of pilotage, provisions for what is called "compulsory pilotage" are regulation of commerce, is not in conflict with the provision of the United States Constitution conferring power to regulate commerce upon Congress, as the power to regulate pilotage is one which may be exercised concurrently and independently by both state and nation, and may be exercised by the states until Congress shall see fit to act upon the subject. Ex parte McNiel, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 236, 20 L. ed. 624.

So, the act of California of May 20, 1861, providing that when the services of a pilot are refused he shall be entitled to one half pilotage fees, is not in conflict with the provision of the United States Constitution conferring upon Congress the power to regulate commerce, as such power does not exclude the exercise of authority by the states to regulate pilots. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Joliffe, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 450, 17 L. ed. 805.

And Louisiana act of 1865, with relation to the board of master and port wardens, providing for the payment for services actually rendered or the tender of such services by pilots, is not a violation of the commercial clause of the United States Constitution. New Orleans Port Wardens v. The Martha J. Ward, 14 La. Ann. 289.

And in New Orleans Port Wardens v. Prats, 10 Rob. (La.) 480, it was said that the constitutionality of the Louisiana act of 1806, which first allowed fees to the master and warden, has never been questioned, although they have been claimed for forty years.

So, the fees allowed to the master and warden of a port for piloting vessels, or for offer of services which is refused, are not impost or duties on imports or exports within the meaning of the prohibition against the levying thereof by the states contained in the Constitution of the United States. New Orleans Port Wardens v. The Martha J. Ward, 14 La. Ann. 289; State v. Penny, 19 S. C. 218.

And the Pennsylvania law of March 2, 1803, providing that a vessel which neglects or refuses to take a pilot shall forfeit one half the regular amount of pilotage, exempting American vessels engaged in the Pennsylvania coal trade, is not repugnant to the 5th clause of the 9th section of the 1st article of the Constitution of the United States, providing that no preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one state over those of another, and that vessels to or from one state shall not be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties to another, as pilotage fees are not duties, and the requirement of the payment of pilotage fees does not constitute a preference. Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 314, 13 L. ed. 1002.

And half pilotage under the California act of 1863, providing that all vessels arriving at or leaving a designated port shall receive only half of the rates provided for by full pilotage when a vessel is spoken and the services of the pilot are refused, which shall go to the pilot first offering his services, is not a toll in the sense of the Constitution, but merely a compensation dependent upon the rendering of certain services and the discharge of certain duties incident to the office of pilot. Harrison v. Green, 18 Cal. 94.

And the Pennsylvania act of March 2, 1803, providing that a vessel which neglects or refuses to take a pilot shall forfeit one half of the regular amount of pilotage, is not in conflict with the 2d to be found, and as such requirements are upheld by the courts as "necessary and usual parts of every such system."

Ex parte McNiel, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 236, 20 L. ed. 624.

They do not constitute "a burden on commerce, but are for its benefit and safety."

Smith v. The Creole, 2 Wall. Jr. 485.

and 3d clauses of the 10th section of the 1st article of the Constitution of the United States, which prohibits the state without the assent of Congress from laying any imposts or duties on exports or imports or tonage, as this provision of the Constitution was intended to operate upon subjects actually existing. Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 314, 13 L. ed. 1002.

So, Pa. act March 2, 1873, providing that a vessel which neglects or refuses to take a pilot shall forfeit one half the regular amount of pilotage, exempting American vessels engaged in the Pennsylvania coal trade, is not repugnant to the 1st clause of the 8th section of the 1st article of the Constitution of the United States declaring that all duties and imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States, as pilotage is not a duty, impost, or excise requiring uniformity. Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 300, 13 L. ed. 996.

And Ga. Code, § 1512, providing for compulsory pilotage, but exempting from its operation coasters of that state, and between the ports thereof, and those of South Carolina and Florida, is not repugnant to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution, providing that all citizens of the several states shall be citizens of the United States, and that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall infringe the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, and no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Thompson v. Sprague, 59 Ga. 409, 47 Am. Rep. 760.

And Ga. Code, § 1512, providing for compulsory pilotage, but exempting from the operation thereof coasters in that state, and between the ports thereof and those of South Carolina and Florida, is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, art. 4, § 2, ¶ 1, declaring that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states, as it cannot be said by this exception citizens of any state are excluded from owning and employing coasters within the exemption. Thompson v. Sprague, 59 Ga. 409, 47 Am. Rep. 760. But see Sprague v. Thompson, 118 U. S. 90, 30 L. ed. 115, infra, IV.

So, La. act 1855, organizing a board of port wardens for the port of New Orleans, which permits them to demand from each vessel arriving from sea the sum of $5 whether they are called upon to perform any services or not, is not unconstitutional as a charge or duty imposed without regard to a corresponding and equivalent benefit. New Orleans Port Wardens v. The Charles Morgan, 14 La. Ann. 602.

And Fla. act March 7, 1879, authorizing the pilot commissioners to determine rates of pilotage which shall be paid by any vessel at their ports, such rate not to be greater than those provided, is not a local law within the meaning of Fla. Const. art. 4, § 18, providing that in designated cases, and in others where a general law can be made applicable, the law shall be general and uniform throughout the state. The Chase, 14 Fed. Rep. 854.

So, the right of a pilot who offered his services to a vessel of 100-tons burden passing through Hurlgate near the city of New York, which were refused, under N. Y. act Feb. 19, 1819, providing therefor, will not be defeated by the claim that the

They are not a "tax, impost, or duty."

Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 314, 13 L. ed. 1002.

Nor a penalty.

Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Joliffe, 69 U. S. 3 Wall. 450, 17 L. ed. 805.

And such laws with respect to such provisions are not in derogation of the common law, vessel was owned in Boston, and that consequently the law of New York on that subject was unconstitutional, where it does not appear where the vessel was owned. Nickerson v. Mason, 13 Wend. 64.

IV. Effect of national prohibition against discrimination.

It is provided by act of Congress (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4237), that no regulations or provisions shall be adopted by any state which shall make any discrimination in the rates of pilotage or half pilotage between vessels sailing between the ports of one state and vessels sailing between ports of different states, or against national vessels of the United States.

This statute is constitutional and valid under the clause of the National Constitution authorizing Congress to regulate commerce between the states. Freeman v. The Undaunted, 37 Fed. Rep. 662.

And Cal. Pol. Code, § 2468, exempting from all charges for pilotage unless a pilot be actually employed all vessels coasting between San Francisco and any port in Oregon or Washington or Alaska territories, and by vessels coasting between ports of the state, is invalid for discrimination within the meaning of that statute. Freeman v. The Undaunted, 37 Fed. Rep. 662.

And a vessel sailing from San Francisco to New York around Cape Horn is a coasting vessel sailing between the ports of different states within the meaning thereof. Freeman v. The Undaunted, 37 Fed. Rep. 662.

And Cal. Pol. Code, tit. 6, chap. 1, art. 6, §§ 2466, 2468, providing a system of pilotage and half pilotage, but exempting vessels engaged in the whaling or fishing trade and all vessels coasting between San Francisco and any port in Oregon or Washington or Alaska territories, and all vessels coasting between the ports of the state, conflicts with the provisions of that statute, and are invalid so far as they relate to coasting vessels, but may be enforced so far as they relate to vessels engaged in foreign trade. The Alameda, 31 Fed. Rep. 366.

But the exemption under Cal. Pol. Code, § 2468, of certain coasting vessels from the charge of half pilotage does not have the effect of bringing the whole system of regulations for half pilotage prescribed by Cal. Pol. Code, § 2466, providing for a system of pilotage and half pilotage, and exempting vessels engaged in the whaling or fishing trade, within the inhibition of that statute; § 2466 being left intact, while § 2468 is invalid so far as it conflicts with the Federal prohibition. The Alameda v. Neal, 32 Fed. Rep. 331.

In that case Sprague v. Thompson, 118 U. S. 90, 30 L. ed. 115, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case it was sought to charge a coasting vessel which was exempted from pilot charges by the Code of Georgia, while here it is sought to exempt from such charges a vessel engaged in foreign commerce, because of an exemption in favor of certain coasting vessels contained in an independent section.

So, Georgia Code, § 1512, providing that any person, master, or commander of a ship or vessel bearing toward any of the harbors of that state who refuses to receive a pilot on board shall be liable to the first pilot offering his services outside of the bar for the full rate of pilotage, excepting from but "are entitled to a liberal construction, in order to give full efficiency to laws especially designed to promote the interest of commerce, and to protect the lives and property of the citizens engaged in it."

Smith v. Swift, 8 Met. 832.

Looking to the general purpose and policy of the pilot act, it should receive every reasonable intendment in its favor, and provisions for exemption from its operation, and not the general law itself should be strictly construed.

Ross v. Duval, 88 U. S. 13 Pet. 61, 10 L. ed. 59.

All statutes must be construed by reference to their effect upon the particular subject-matter to which they relate.

its operation coasters in that state and between the ports of that state and other designated states, is invalid because of such discrimination, as in conflict with the Federal prohibition. Sprague v. Thompson, 118 U. S. 90, 30 L. ed. 115, reversing Thompson v. Sprague, 69 Ga. 409, 47 Am. Rep. 760.

But South Carolina act 1878, prescribing a system of pilotage for the ports of that state, requiring the employment of licensed pilots and establishing the fees to be paid them by incoming and outgoing vessels, is not invalid as conflicting with U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4237, prohibiting discrimination. State v. Penny, 19 S. C. 218.

V. Effect of national provision for waters between states.

By act March 2, 1837, Congress provided that it shall be lawful for the master or commander of any vessel coming into or going out of any port situate upon waters which are the boundary between two states to employ any pilot duly licensed or authorized by the laws of either.

Within this provision a state may license pilots and provide regulations for their government and employment, but she cannot exclude others duly licensed elsewhere from employment on the public waters of the nation because these waters happen to be within her territorial limits, and a law designed for that purpose, or which contemplates an exclusive jurisdiction over the subject of water within the limits of the state by requiring any person exercising the profession of a pilot thereon to apply to a board of commissioners of that state for a license to entitle him to do so, is inoperative and void. The Clymene, 9 Fed. Rep. 164.

And a pilot duly licensed under a statute of the state of Delaware, who pilots a vessel from the entrance of Delaware bay into the port of Philadelphia, is not deprived of his right to compensation for his services by the fact that a statute exists in Pennsylvania prohibiting anyone from acting as pilot in Delaware river or bay without a license from a Pennsylvania board. The Clymene, 9 Fed. Rep. 164, 12 Fed. Rep. 346.

And a claim for half pilotage by a duly licensed pilot, against a vessel to which he tenders his services to bring her into the port of Philadelphia, under the Delaware statute providing therefor, is not affected by the fact that the laws of Pennsylvania exempt all vessels from the obligation to take a pilot after they have crossed a designated line. The Alzona, 14 Fed. Rep. 174.

So, a vessel at Astoria bound up the Columbia river is on pilotage ground subject to the laws of both Oregon and Washington, and may under the act of Congress of March 2, 1837, take a pilot from either state after declining the services of one from the other without being liable for half pilotage under a state law of the latter. The Glencarne, 7 Sawy. 200, 7 Fed. Rep. 604.

The state of Oregon and the territory of Washington have equal powers over the subject of pilots and pilotage on Columbia river, and either may appoint pilots for the river and prescribe their duties and compensation without reference to whether the business or commerce in which they are engaged pertains to Oregon or Washington, and neither can require that the legislation of the other shall conform to its own. The Alcalde, 30 Fed. Rep. 133.

89 L. R. A.

The Columbia river is the boundary between two states, Oregon and Washington, within the purpose and spirit of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4236, prohibiting discrimination by state laws with relation to pilotage on such waters, and the state of Oregon cannot require a vessel bound in or out of said river to take an Oregon pilot or pay half or any pilotage if the master thereof prefers and does take a Washington pilot. The Abercorn, 28 Fed. Rep. 384; Neil v. Wilson, 14 Or. 410.

And a duly licensed Oregon pilot who piloted a vessel over the bar of the Columbia river into Astoria, and tendered his services to pilot her out again to the open sea, which were refused and another pilot licensed for Washington territory engaged, is not entitled to half pilotage because of such refusal under Oregon act of 1882, providing that a pilot who brings a vessel in is entitled to pilot her out when she leaves, and if his offer of services is refused by the master he shall pay half pilotage. Neil v. Wilson, 14 Or. 410.

So, Fla. act 1859, § 8, providing that no person shall be authorized or permitted to conduct any vessel into or out of the harbor of Fernandina, unless such person shall have a license from the commissioner of pilotage for that port imposing a penalty for violation thereof, is unconstitutional as contravening that act. Cribb v. State, 9 Fla. 409.

And though the waters of Delaware bay and river are not the boundary between Delaware and Pennsylvania, as both states border on them, they come within the purview of the act. The South Cambria, 27 Fed. Rep. 525.

So, a vessel refusing to take a New York pilot upon entering New York harbor by way of Sandy Hook is not liable for pilotage as if one had been employed under N. Y. Laws 1853, chap. 469, as amended by N. Y. Laws 1857, chap. 243, where there was a New Jersey pilot on board, as the water constituted the boundary between two states within the meaning of the act of Congress of March 2, 1837, authorizing the employment of pilots licensed by the laws of either state. Brown v. Elwell, 60 N. Y. 249.

And a New Jersey pilot piloting in New York waters is authorized to maintain an action for compensation allowed by the statutes of New York by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4235, authorizing his employment in such waters, and declaring that pilotage shall be regulated by the law of the state where the pilot may be, as such statute adopts the local law and makes it applicable to the New Jersey pilot so employed. Heardon v. Arkell, 59 Fed. Rep. 624.

In Hopkins v. Wyckoff, 1 Daly, 176, however, it was held that a pilot licensed under the statutes of the state of New Jersey and authorized by Congress to pilot vessels coming in or going out of the port of New York cannot sue for the pilotage fees under the New York pilot act of 1853, as amended by Laws 1854, chap. 196, and 1857, chap. 243, for refusal of the master of a vessel to accept the service of the pilot first offering, the right to recover thereunder being confined to pilots who have been duly licensed under that act.

And the words "licensed pilots" in N. Y. Laws 1853, chap. 469, as amended by Laws 1857, chap. 243, regulating the pilotage of the port of New York, providing that certain designated vessels bound to or from the port of New York shall take a licensed Maxwell, Interpretation of Statutes, 2d ed. chap. 2, p. 75; The Cybele, L. R. 2 Prob. Div. 224, L. R. 3 Prob. Div. 8; Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U. S. 457, 36 L. ed. 226; United States v. Kirby, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 482, 19 L. ed. 278; The Winestead [1895] P. 170.

It is an unreasonable construction to hold pilot, or, in case of refusal pay pilotage as if one had been employed, to the pilot first offering his services, has been held to refer to pilots who derive their authority from the appointment of the commissioners established by that act, and not to include a New Jersey pilot whose services were offered and refused. Brown v. Elwell, 60 N. Y. 249.

But while a state cannot pass laws excluding the duly qualified pilot of adjacent states on the same waters, she may impose such regulation as she deems conducive to the public welfare upon pilots licensed under her own laws. The William Law, 14 Fed. Rep. 792.

And a state being sovereign and independent possesses inherent power over every resident citizen to declare what shall be considered a public grievance, provided such declaration does not conflict with the Constitution or any act of Congress passed within the scope of the constitutional power of Congress; and it may legally prohibit one of its citizens residing within its jurisdiction from holding and exercising a license as pilot granted by a sister state or any foreign power, so that fees for pilotage under such a license could not be recovered. Cribb v. State, 9 Fla. 409.

And a vessel refusing to take a pilot on waters which constitute a boundary between Delaware and Pennsylvania is liable under the Delaware statute for pilotage where he did not take a Pennsylvania pilot as authorized by the act of Congress of March 2, 1837, but went without a pilot. The Belle Hooper, 28 Fed. Rep. 828.

So, the provision of the act of Congress of March 2, 1837, that a vessel upon waters that are the boundary between two states may take a pilot from either, do not apply to a vessel bound on a voyage to Portland after passing the mouth of the Walamet river involving the navigation of that river for a distance of 12 miles within the exclusive jurisdiction of Oregon; and an Oregon pilot offering his services to the vessel to conduct her from Astoria to Portland is entitled to half pilotage under the laws of Oregon, in case of a refusal of his services. The Glenearne, 7 Sawy. 200, 7 Fed. Rep. 604.

And the rule that under the act of Congress of 1837 a state has no right to compel vessels passing up Delaware bay and bound to the port of Philadelphia to accept any other pilot than those they see fit to elect does not apply so as to relieve a vessel from payment of compulsory pilotage to a pilot offering his services, where she was not bound to Philadelphia but to a breakwater for orders, so that the whole scope of her action was confined to Delaware waters. The William Law, 14 Fed. Rep. 792.

The act of Congress of August 7, 1790, granting the power to states to pass pilot laws, includes territories, so as to authorize services on such waters by a pilot licensed by territorial legislation, and prevent a recovery for services tendered and refused by a pilot authorized under state legislation. The Panama, Deady, 27.

And the territory of Washington is a state, and the Columbia river is the boundary between two states, within the meaning of the act of Congress of March 2, 1837. The Abercorn, 26 Fed. Rep. 877.

And pilots and pilotage are rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution 89 L. R. A.

that the legislature intended to exempt a vessel carrying a quantity of little value and small compared with her full tonnage.

Goff, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

John S. Hebb, the appellee, filed a libel in the district court of the United States for the and the laws of the United States, within the meaning of the organization act conferring legislative power upon the territory of Washington. The Alcalde, 30 Fed. Rep. 133; The Panama, Deady, 27.

A vessel going out of a port situated on water constituting the boundary between Washington territory and Oregon, which refuses the services of the pilot which had brought her in, is not liable for half pilotage for such refusal under Oregon act of 1882, on the ground that the act of Congress of March 2, 1837, authorizing the employment of any pilot duly licensed by either state by a vessel coming in or going out of any port situated upon waters which are the boundary between two states does not apply as between a state and territory. Nell v. Wilson, 14 Or. 410.

In that case, supra, The William Law, 14 Fed. Rep. 793, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the vessel passed over no other territory than that within the jurisdiction of the state of Delaware; and The Glenearne, 7 Fed. Rep. 606, was distinguished upon the ground that the vessel in that case was on a voyage which involved the navigation of a river for a distance of 12 miles, which was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the state of Oregon.

VII. Effect of Federal licenses and license laws.

The act of Congress of 1852, with reference to pilots licensed by the United States, is applicable only to the class of pilots attached to particular vessels and charged with the duty of navigating them on the voyage, and does not supersede the authority of the states to regulate pilotage at their own ports for the protection of general commerce, and to require a vessel to take the first pilot offering his services. Cleco v. Roberts, 36 N. Y. 232.

And the act of Congress of July 25, 1866, providing that every seagoing vessel subject to the navigation laws of the United States shall when under way, except upon the high seas, be under the control and direction of pilots licensed by the inspector of steam vessels, and the act of February 25, 1867, amendatory thereof, providing that nothing in such acts shall be construed to annul or affect any regulations established by existing state laws, does not annul or abrogate state laws concerning pilots and pilotage in ports and harbors except so far as the latter may conflict or be inconsistent with the former, or prohibit a mere state pilot from piloting a seagoing steamer in the port or elsewhere upon the navigable waters of the United States; if the pilot be licensed by the United States inspectors the act of Congress is satisfied and does not exclude the operation of state laws providing additional regulations upon the subject, and the master of such a vessel may, if he chooses, pilot her in or out, but he is bound notwithstanding to pay a pilot who first offers his services outside of the bar full pilotage, and, if bound out, half pilotage, under a state statute providing therefor. The George S. Wright, Deady, 561.

And a duly licensed pilot who offered his services to a seagoing vessel, which were refused, cannot be deprived of his right to fees for pilotage on the ground that N. Y. act of 1853, chap. 467, p. 921, with the subsequent act amendatory thereof, was repealed by the act of Congress of July 25, 1866. Henderson v. Spofford, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. 140.

So, a pilot licensed by the United States inspectors under act of Congress July 25, 1866, is not a district of Maryland against Frederick L. Clayton, agent and consignee of the American bark Edmund Phinney, in a cause of pilotage civil and maritime. He alleged that he was a duly licensed pilot, authorized and competent to pilot vessels of any tonnage and class over the waters of the Chesapeake, to and from the Atlantic Ocean; that the Edmund Phinney was an American vessel of between 700 and 800 tons burden, registered in the port of Portland, Maine, in the name of J. S. Winslow & Co., as owners, of which Frederick L. Clayton was the agent and consignee in the port of Baltimore; that said vessel, laden with a full cargo of lumber, had cleared and was ready to sail from the port of Baltimore to a foreign port, to wit, full pilot on pilot grounds within the state of Oregon, and before he is authorized to offer his services to a vessel, and in case of refusal to demand whole or half pilotage as the case may be, he must be qualified under state law. The George S. Wright, Deady, 591.

And a license granted at Philadelphia to the master of a steamer as pilot for the Atlantic coast, under the United States Revised Statutes providing for such licenses, expires with the coast voyage of the vessel, and the provision therefor does not annul the Georgia act with relation to pilotage except so far as the coastwise voyage of the steamer is concerned, and does not authorize the navigation from Tybee bar and up the river with all its local difficulties of navigation to a port not on the coast without the aid of a pilot licensed by the United States local inspector for Savannah. Thompson v. Sprague, 69 Ga. 409, 47 Am. Rep. 760.

But, a vessel propelled by steam and engaged in carrying passengers is within the class of vessels provided for by acts of Congress of 1852, 1858, and 1848, providing that it shall be unlawful for any person to employ or any person to serve as engineer or pilot on any vessel propelled in whole or in part by steam who is not licensed by the inspector, such act applying to the employment of pilots on steam vessels engaged in carrying passengers throughout the whole voyage and every part of it, so that a person licensed as pilot under a state law, offering his services to pilot the vessel in and out of port, but who was not licensed under the act of 1852, cannot recover compensation where there was on board a pilot licensed under that act. The Panama, Deady, 27.

And where a pilot has a license from the United States authorities to pilot within the bar and up the rivers of a state under the provisions of the United States Revised Statutes, no state law can require an additional license and enforce the collection of the fees of a pilot so licensed by the state. Thompson v. Sprague, 69 Ga. 409, 47 Am. Rep. 760.

The proviso contained in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4444, that nothing in this title shall be construed to annul or affect any regulations established by the laws of any state, requiring vessels entering or leaving a port in any such state other than the coastwise steam vessels to take a pilot duly licensed or authorized by the laws of such state or of a state situate upon water of such state, however, does not apply to coastwise steamers whose masters or captains have no license to pilot within the bar and up the rivers of the state on the United States authorities. Thompson v. Sprague, 69 Ga. 409, 47 Am. Rep. 760.

A vessel enrolled and licensed in the coasting trade in the manner prescribed by law, and whose license is renewable annually, and which sails from one port of the coast of the United States to another, or which is employed in the whale or coast fisheries, is a coastwise vessel within the meaning of the act of Congress of February 28, 1871, § 51, which is subject only to the navigation laws of the United States, and when in charge of a United States pilot a Sandy Hook pilot licensed under a state law is not entitled to compensation for an offer of services which was refused. Murray v. Clark, 4 Daly, 468.

And an exemption of vessels licensed to engage in the coasting trade from liability to a fine imposed upon any master or person on board who shall bring a vessel into port without a licensed pilot on board, provided for by N. Y. Laws June 28, 1853, as amended by Laws 1857, chap. 243, applies to vessels which have taken out a coasting license as provided for by the act of Congress, by which their business would be confined exclusively to the coasting trade and it would then be known at sailing that such was their character. Sturges v. Spofford, 52 Barb. 436.
89 L. R. A.

And a coastwise sea-sailing vessel, not sailing under register, having a pilot licensed by the United States inspector of steamboats under pay from the commencement of the voyage to be taken on board when necessary, is under the direction and control of such pilot as required by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4401, and is exempt, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4444, from any pilot charges levied by any state, and is not liable upon entering a port of Georgia to pilotage fees under Ga. Code, § 1512, for refusal to take a state pilot. Sprague v. Thompson, 118 U. S. 90, 30 L. ed. 115.

So, a vessel owned by a citizen of the United States who was a resident of Maine sailing under a fishing license is not a foreign vessel or vessel under register, which is required to pay half pilotage in case of tender of services by a pilot and refusal under the New York pilotage law. Weaver v. McLellan, 5 Ben. 79.

VII. Conditions of Liability.

a. Necessary qualifications of pilot.

To render a vessel liable for compulsory pilotage it would seem, as a general rule, that the pilot must have been duly qualified by law to act as such, and must have possessed and been prepared to produce the evidences of such qualification regular upon their face.

Thus, a vessel is not liable to a pilot for services offered and refused where his license was only signed by two of the three commissioners provided for by law, unless it further appears from the minutes of the board that the matter was acted upon and the license granted at a meeting of the commissioners when all of them were present, or unless such license contains a direct recital or averment of such meeting and action. The California, 1 Sawy. 596.

And a pilot who has given a bond with two sureties who are only bound in the sum of $500 each, when the statute requires a bond for $1,000 with two sureties each bound for the whole sum, is a pilot de facto, and cannot recover fees for pilotage when he sues in his own right and claims that they are due to him personally by virtue of his office, and no rights of the public or of third persons are concerned. Dolliver v. Parks, 186 Mass. 499.

So, the master of a vessel is not liable to the penalty imposed by 6 Geo. IV. chap. 125, § 58, for refusal to employ a pilot offering his services unless the pilot produces his license as required by § 66 of that act though its production is not demanded. Hammond v. Blake, 10 Barn. & C. 424, 5 Moody & R. 361. See also The Eldridge, Deady, 176, infra, VII. b.

But a warrant or commission of a pilot, regular upon its face, entitles him to be treated and authorizes a ship to receive him as a pilot upon the production thereof, under a statute authorizing a pilot to Rosario, on the river Platte, in South America; and that, as so laden, she drew rather more than 16½ feet of water. It is also set forth in the libel that under the provisions of the Code of the state of Maryland, as amended and reenacted by the act of the general assembly of that state of March 11, 1896 (chap. 40, Acts 1896), it is, among other things, provided that to conduct a vessel into a harbor, so as to prevent another pilot from recovering compensation as for an offer and refusal, though the warrant of the former was without legal effect because he had not given bond and did not keep a suitable boat on the bar as required by the act. The Panama, Deady, 27.

And a license certifying that the licensee is a skillful master of steam vessels, and can be intrusted to perform such duties and to act as pilot, and licensing him to act as such master on steam vessels for a designated term, licenses him to act in a double capacity of master and pilot within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4443, permitting licenses to be granted to a master or mate to act as pilot, and requiring that it should state on its face that he is authorized to act in such double capacity, so as to exempt a vessel employing such master from compulsory pilotage within the meaning of Mass. Stat. 1882, chap. 176, § 15, and relieve the vessel from liability for pilotage to a pilot offering his services to such vessel, which were refused. Joslyn v. Nickerson, 1 Fed. Rep. 133.

And a warrant issued to a pilot is not objectionable because headed temporary, and his employment will prevent another pilot from being the first to offer his services where it appears that the warrant had never been revoked. The Panama, Deady, 27.

So, the warrant of a Washington pilot, granted him by the commissioners of pilots, is sufficient authority for his tender of services to any vessel bound in or out of the Columbia river, and it cannot be shown as a defense to a suit for half pilotage on a refusal of such offer that he did not keep a sufficient boat on the bar, such matter being a proper subject for inquiry before the board of pilot commissioners only. The Aloaide, 30 Fed. Rep. 133.

A statute requiring pilots to keep such boats as the commissioners might approve is not repealed by a subsequent statute requiring each pilot to keep a boat on the bar of not less than fifty tons' burden, so as to invalidate a warrant issued to a pilot under the former act who pilots a boat into harbor, and authorize recovery by another pilot for an offer and refusal of services. The Panama, Deady, 27.

b. Tender of services.

It is not necessary that a pilot should make an actual offer of services to the master of a vessel in the night-time bound into a harbor, or that the master should have knowledge of such offer; it is sufficient if the pilot approaches the vessel and hails her and makes all the tender of services the time and circumstances permit, and his hail is heard on board, though it is not answered. Com. v. Ricketson, 5 Met. 412.

The approach by a pilot boat within the customary cruising ground for incoming vessels, and the display of her blue flag as a signal, which was or ought to have been recognized by the master of an incoming vessel when the pilot boat was within a reasonable distance, is in legal effect a tender and offer of her services with the usual waiver of extra pilotage charge. The Yumuri, 68 Fed. Rep. 380.

To entitle a pilot to half pilotage it is his duty in speaking a vessel to use such signals as are ordinarily in use to denote the presence of a pilot and

"all vessels sailing under register bound to and from Baltimore city (except vessels employed in and licensed for the coasting trade and American vessels laden either in whole or in part with coke or coal mined in the United States), shall take a licensed pilot or in case of refusal to take such pilot shall themselves, their owners or consignees, pay the said pilot-the offer of services, in order to inform the master of his character and give him an opportunity to accept or reject them; and such signals should be made reasonably so that the officers of the vessel may see them. The Mascotte, 39 Fed. Rep. 371.

And a pilot who leaves his pilot boat anchored 2 or 3 miles from the channel, and comes with a small boat showing no light until within from 100 to 300 feet of a steamer, and no flash light until the steamer had passed and left him abaft the beam so that such flash was not seen by any of the officers of the steamer, and the pilot's hail was not heard by them, does not speak the steamer so as to entitle him to half pilotage, as for a refusal of services. The Mascotte, 39 Fed. Rep. 371.

In the absence of proper signals the burden of proof rests with the pilot to show that his hail was heard and understood. The Mascotte, 39 Fed. Rep. 371; The Ullock, 19 Fed. Rep. 207.

And he cannot recover pilotage unless he makes it appear from the evidence that his offer was made within the legal distance, where the pilot commissioners have prescribed a distance within which a tender of services must be made. The Ullock, 19 Fed. Rep. 207.

Thus, a pilot must offer his services and be ready to take charge of a vessel before she has arrived within the harbor lines, under Mass. Gen. Stat. chap. 52, Stat. 1882, chap. 176, § 24, and a vessel which signals for a pilot outside the harbor lines is not liable for compulsory pilotage where the pilot does not reach her till after the signal is hauled down and she is within the harbor lines. Perkins v. Buckley, 120 Mass. 8.

And a tender of pilot's services under Oregon Sess. Laws 1865, chap. 33, providing that any river pilot, who shall first speak any seagoing vessel ascending or descending the river above Astoria shall be entitled to half pilotage therefor, made by a river pilot to a vessel bound to Portland, is not valid if made below Astoria and before the vessel has reached the pilot's plot ground. The Glaramara, 8 Sawy. 22, 10 Fed. Rep. 678.

So, under Mass. Rev. Stat. chap. 32, every Boston pilot who offers his services to the master of an inward-bound vessel before she has passed the line designated by § 24 thereof as the harbor line is entitled to full fees of pilotage whether his services are accepted or not. Com. v. Ricketson, 5 Met. 412.

But the requirement of Mass. Rev. Stat. chap. 32, § 24, that the tender of the pilot's services shall be made before the vessel has passed the harbor line to entitle the pilot to fees, refers to a final passing of the line by the vessel in her inward-bound course, and not to a mere temporary and incidental passing followed by a retrogression outside of the line, and the vessel is liable for fees when it was outside the line when the pilot hailed it, though in tacking it, it had been inside. Hunt v. Carlisle, 1 Gray, 257.

And a vessel approaching the port of Philadelphia from a foreign port, which refuses the services of a Delaware pilot, is not exempt from liability for his fees under the Delaware statute by the fact that she had crossed the line within which by the laws of Pennsylvania a vessel was exempt from the obligation of taking a pilot. The Charles A. Sparks, 16 Fed. Rep. 480.

So, the provision of the New York Hell Gate pilot act indicates an intention to offer an induce-age, as if one had been employed, and such pilotage shall be paid to the pilot first speaking to such vessel (before Cape Henry bears south, if inward bound)." Also, it is alleged that the said Edmund Phinney, being so laden and ready to proceed on her voyage, the appellee, as a duly licensed pilot, made application to both the captain and to said Frederick L. Clayton, the consignee, and offered himself ready and willing to pilot her to sea, but that both of them declined the offer and refused to take the pilot; that thereupon, he having so offered, and they having so refused, he presented to said captain and consignee a bill for pilotage, which, under the law, amounted to $32.50, but that payment of the same was refused; that he ment to pilots to go farther east than Sands Point, and a tender of services off Norwalk island, 17 miles to eastward of Sands Point, is within the letter and spirit of the statute, and entitles the pilot to half pilotage in case of refusal of his services. The Georgia D. Loud, 8 Ben. 392.

And the words "navigating the channel of Hell Gate" in N. Y. Laws 1865, p. 197, providing for pilotage services by Hell Gate pilots and for half pilotage in case of an offer and refusal of services, refer to the actual present navigation of the Gate, and are to be taken as intended to cover any vessel which, approaching the Gate on the voyage which carries her through it, has reached a point as far to westward as Execution Rock on Sand's Point. Horton v. Smith, 6 Ben. 264.

The above cases, The Georgia D. Loud, 8 Ben. 392, and Horton v. Smith, 6 Ben. 264, together with The Traveller, 6 Ben. 280, infra, VII. e, were distinguished in The Glamara, 8 Sawy, 22, supra, on the ground that they all relate to vessels bound through the passage in the East river called Hell Gate.

But while a pilot under the New York Hell Gate pilot act may well be taken when the channels of Hell Gate are shortly to be navigated and it would not be unreasonable to take a pilot in time to enable him to ascertain the capacity of the vessel and her ability to work before reaching those channels, a tender of services by a pilot under that act to pilot a vessel through Hell Gate, made off Block island, when the vessel was not yet in Long Island sound, is not good, and will not charge the vessel with half pilotage though she was destined for New York by way of Hell Gate. The S. & B. Small, 8 Ben. 523.

All vessels lying within the protection of the headlands of a bay constituting pilot grounds are, in the absence of any legally defined limits to the bay, within it so as to entitle a pilot offering his services to half pilotage upon a refusal thereof. Weidt v. The Howden, 30 Fed. Rep. 877.

So, a licensed pilot may recover pilotage from a schooner which refuses to accept his services under the pilot laws of the state of New York providing for such liability in case of refusal, though the vessel was from a foreign port, and the tender of services was made outside of the jurisdiction of the state. Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 572, 23 L. ed. 234; Wilson v. Mills, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. 143, overruling Peterson v. Walsh, 1 Daly, 182.

Pilotage laws have sufficient effect beyond the boundary of the state to fix the rate of compensation for services tendered. The Nevada, 7 Ben. 386.

And while a state cannot extend the pilot ground at the mouth of a river indefinitely into the sea, and probably not farther than 3 miles beyond the headland, she may permit and require her pilots to cruise for vessels at a much greater distance from shore; and an offer of pilot services to be performed on pilot grounds, made to an inward-bound vessel outside the 3-mile limit, is valid and effectual, and a refusal would entitle the pilot offering to compensation. The Whistler, 8 Sawy, 232, 13 Fed. Rep. 295.

But the question whether the laws of the state of Delaware affect the rights of a foreign steamer to accept or refuse pilots at a place upon the high sea, does not arise where it appears from proofs that the offer of services as pilot was made within 89 L. R. A.

the 3-mile limit from the shore. The Earnwell, 28 U. S. App. 398, 70 Fed. Rep. 331, 17 C. C. A. 136.

A pilot is not entitled to half pilotage for a tender of services which was refused under Or. act Oct. 25, 1870, p. 51, where the vessel to which his services were offered was being towed by a tug or steamer. The Glamara, 8 Sawy, 22, 10 Fed. Rep. 678.

But a person who selects the course of a ship, and takes her management for the purpose of directing her in that course, is in the charge or conduct of the vessel within the meaning of 6 Geo. IV. chap. 125, § 70, providing that the master of a coasting vessel may, if he chooses, perform that duty himself, but if he chooses to employ another he must employ a licensed pilot, imposing penalties for the employment of another, but he is not precluded from employing any moving power, as, for instance, steam; and the fact that applying such power necessarily involves the selection of the ship's course and her charge and conduct in that course upon another is immaterial. Beilby v. Scott, 7 Mees. & W. 93.

The provision of Mass. Stat. 1862, chap. 176, requiring that in case any vessel liable to pilotage shall refuse to take a pilot it shall be the duty of the pilot to inform the vessel that she will be held to pay the regular fees for pilotage whether his services are accepted or not, are absolute, and in case of failure to give such notice the pilot cannot recover fees, though the ship master knew of the provisions of the statute by information from other sources. Chandler v. Doody, 101 Mass. 267.

And the exhibition by a pilot of his warrant to the master of a vessel is a necessary part of his tender of services, under the pilot act of the territory of Washington of January 26, 1863, authorizing certain pilots to take charge of vessels bound in and out of the Columbia river provided such pilots shall first show the masters his warrant, and unless such exhibition is expressly waived or intentionally prevented or avoided by the master the pilot cannot, in its absence, recover for such tender of services. The Eldridge, Deady, 178.

c. Refusal of services tendered.

The failure of a vessel to slow down or turn toward a pilot by whom she is properly signaled is a refusal to accept his offer of services which will render her liable for pilotage. The Yumuri, 68 Fed. Rep. 920.

And a reply of a master of a vessel on being hailed, that he would want a pilot when he got to pilotage ground, but keeping his course though the pilot boat followed a short time, and entering a port without a pilot, is a sufficient refusal of the services of the pilot to sustain an action for pilotage under N. Y. Laws 1857, chaps. 243, 329, authorizing a recovery in case of such refusal. Wilson v. Mills, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. 143.

And a tender of services by a pilot who overtook a vessel as she was about to anchor, and a reply by the master that he intended to wait until daylight and see if there were any tug boats about, after which the pilot went away and did not return, manifests an intent to avoid taking a pilot if he could find a tug, and amounts to a refusal of the was informed by them that their excuse for not accepting a pilot was that, in addition to the cargo of lumber aboard said vessel, they had shipped a quantity of coal mined in the United States, amounting to from twenty to twenty-five tons in all, and that by reason of such alleged shipment of coal they claimed that the vessel was "laden in part with coal mined in the United States," and that it was therefore exempt from the demand of pilotage. The libel then claimed that such shipment of coal, if made, was not in the usual and regular course of trade to the port of destination, but that the same was colorable merely, and made for the express purpose of evading the requirements of said pilot laws, and that, as it was services which will justify a claim for pilotage. The Tallman, 23 Fed. Rep. 111.

So, the services of a pilot offered to a British vessel on the high seas bound for the port of New York, at such a distance from Sandy Hook lighthouse that it could not be seen on deck, upon which the master offered to take him on board but said he would not pay offshore pilotage, whereupon the pilot left the vessel, are refused so as to entitle the pilot to recover offshore pilotage under the New York pilotage act of April, 1857, though the master subsequently took another pilot to whom he duly paid inshore pilotage. The Nevada, 7 Ben. 386.

And refusal by an ocean steamer to receive a duly qualified pilot on the ground that he had never before taken charge of an ocean steamer renders the vessel liable for full pilotage as if such services had been rendered, under Pa. act March 23, 1803, and March 24, 1851, providing therefor in case of refusal of services of the first duly licensed pilot who offers them to an inward-bound vessel, though the ship afterwards receives a pilot from the same pilot boat. The Lord Clive, 10 Fed. Rep. 135.

A vessel must take, and is liable for pilotage for refusal to take the first pilot offering his services, under Del. act April 6, 1851, with relation to pilotage of vessels passing in or out of Delaware bay by way of Cape Henlopen, where such pilot's boat and another boat from which a pilot was taken were similarly situated, and she could have taken a pilot from one as well as from the other. The Earnwell, 28 U. S. App. 333, 70 Fed. Rep. 331, 17 C. C. A. 136.

And a vessel cannot defend in an action for pilotage on the ground of a refusal of tendered services on the ground that other pilots offered their services at the same time, where the defense pleaded was that the pilot boat, after signaling the vessel, hauled down her signal and sailed away, thus preventing her from accepting the services, as such defense should have been averred in the answer. The Earnwell, 68 Fed. Rep. 223.

A vessel is not required to go materially out of her way to meet the pilot first signaling, or stop and wait for him, however, if others were more convenient, but simply to accept the services of the pilot first offering if she could do so without disadvantage; and if several offer simultaneously she can accept the services of either. The Earnwell, 68 Fed. Rep. 223.

But the master of a vessel which is piloted into Stand Gate creek by a Cinque pilot, and discharges him and goes a mile down the bank toward London and signals for a Trinity House pilot, who comes on board, is liable for the penalty under 52 Geo. III. chap. 39, § 34, for continuing in charge of the vessel after a duly licensed and qualified pilot shall have offered to take charge of her. Thornton v. Bolland, 9 J. B. Moore, 403, 2 Bing. 219.

d. First pilot offering.

The master of a foreign vessel bound to the port of New York from a foreign port by way of Sandy Hook is not bound to take the first pilot offering his services, or, in case of refusal, to pay him pilotage, under Laws 1853, chap. 467, § 29, as amended by N. Y. Laws 1857, chap. 243, providing that such vessels shall take a licensed pilot, or, in case of refusal to take such pilot, pilotage shall be paid as if one had been employed, to the first pilot speaking or offering his services; the penalty is imposed for not taking any pilot, and it is only when no pilot is taken that such pilotage is due. Gillespie v. Zittlosen, 60 N. Y. 449.

In that case, Cisco v. Robert, 36 N. Y. 292, supra, VI. was distinguished upon the ground that the statute had been changed, and that the regulation there in question does not now exist.

But slight circumstances are sufficient to warrant the inference that no other pilot was taken, in an action for the recovery of pilotage based on a tender and refusal of services; and proof that after the vessel arrived the pilot made out his bill and presented it to the master, who said it was all right, admits by implication that no pilot was taken. The Nellie Husted, 9 Ben. 42.

And the fact that a pilot offered his services as such to a vessel approaching the port of New York, 10 miles from Sandy Hook, and that there was no pilot on board the vessel at the time, is sufficient to show that he was the first pilot speaking or offering his services to the vessel. Murray v. Clark, 4 Daly, 463.

A pilot offering his services to pilot a vessel through Hell Gate, at a proper distance therefrom, whose services were refused, is the first pilot to tender his services within the meaning of the law, and is consequently entitled to half pilotage though another pilot had tendered his services to pilot the vessel through at a point off Block Island outside of Long Island sound. The S. & B. Small, 8 Ben. 523.

The liability for a penalty for refusal or neglect to take a pilot under the Pennsylvania act providing that the pilot who shall first offer himself to any inward-bound vessel shall be entitled to take charge thereof, however, is incurred upon refusal to receive such pilot, though another is subsequently taken, the provision inflicting the penalty for refusal to accept a pilot having reference to such pilot first offering himself. The Lord Clive, 10 Fed. Rep. 135.

And a pilot hired by the month to serve as such between the ports of San Francisco and Portland, who piloted the ship over the bar, may be considered a bar pilot who tendered his service as such to the ship so as to prevent another pilot who remains on the bar from first offering his services and becoming entitled to compensation on refusal thereof, where there is nothing in the statute to limit the locality within which services may be offered. The Panama, Deady, 27.

But a contract between the master or commander of a vessel and a pilot to receive the pilot on board at a certain point outside a harbor, pursuant to which he is so received, will not give such master or commander the right to reject a pilot offering his services before the former was received on board without becoming responsible for his fees, under Georgia Code, § 1512, providing for such payment in case of refusal to receive the first pilot offering his services. Thompson v. Sprague, 69 Ga. 408, 47 Am. Rep. 760.

And a duly licensed and qualified full branch pilot for the bars and harbors of St. Helena and Port Royal, who was the first pilot offering to board a ship about to enter such harbor from a regular numbered pilot boat then being within the cruising ground of St. Helena bar, whose offer was refused, is entitled to recover full pilotage under made for the purpose of evading the law, it was not within the fair and reasonable intent of the same, nor of its proper construction, and that, therefore, the vessel was not "laden in part" with coal so mined, and not exempt from paying the pilotage fees so demanded. Hence he prayed a decree against the consignee for the sum of $82.50. The answer of Clayton admitted that the Edmund Phinney was an American vessel of about 650 tons burden, hailing from the port of Portland, Maine; that he was the agent of the vessel in the port of Baltimore for procuring a cargo for her, and that he was her consignee for such purpose; that she was laden in the port of Baltimore, but not that she was fully laden with lumber; duly authorized rules of the board of commissioners of pilotage having jurisdiction over that port, providing that all vessels will be held for full amount of pilotage whether the services of the pilot were accepted or not, and that no pilot shall be allowed to take charge of any vessel unless attached to a duly numbered pilot boat belonging to the bars as prescribed by law, or board any vessel except from a regularly numbered pilot boat, or be entitled to collect pilotage fees from any vessel so boarded, though there was a licensed pilot on board of the ship who had gone on at another port at the time the offer of pilotage was made. O'Brien v. DeLarrinaga (S. C.) 27 S. E. 481.

Refusal of a vessel to employ the first pilot who reaches her, however, does not render her liable to him for pilotage where she was not fit to be navigated by the power of her sails alone, and her master had gone on shore for a pilot and a tug. Flanders v. Tripp, 2 Low. Dec. 15.

e. Proper destination.

To establish a claim for half pilotage under the Hell Gate pilot act, on the ground of a tender of services and refusal thereof, it must be shown that at the time of the tender the vessel was engaged in the prosecution of a voyage which would carry her through Hell Gate. The Kalmor, 16 Ben. 242.

And a breakwater constitutes a port within the meaning of the act of Congress providing that the pilots in ports, etc., shall continue to be regulated in conformity with state laws and the usages of navigation in the proper sense of the term, so that an offer of a Delaware pilot to take a vessel into a breakwater where she was bound for orders is an exercise of legitimate authority on his part, and the refusal to take the pilot is a violation of the Delaware statute providing for half pilotage in such case, for which the pilot is entitled to his remedy. The William Law, 14 Fed. Rep. 792.

And an offer by a pilot to a vessel bound in the Columbia river, to pilot her in, which was refused, is not rendered invalid so as to deprive the pilot of his right to compensation by the fact that the course of the vessel was subject to a contingency which never happened. The Whistler, 8 Sawy. 232. 18 Fed. Rep. 296.

And the words "navigating the said channel of Hell Gate," used in the Hell Gate pilotage act of 1847, p. 85, 1865, p. 197, must be deemed to cover any vessel navigating to or from the port of New York and from any part of the port when on a voyage through the Gate, and it is no objection to a recovery of half pilotage for a tender and refusal of services that the libel avers that the vessel was at the time of the tender in the North River off Hoboken; and a subsequent change of voyage or failure for any reason to attempt to pass the Gate has no effect upon the right of the pilot to compensation. The Traveller, 6 Ben. 280.

So, the duty of pilots for the harbor of Boston is to take charge of a vessel subject to the pilot laws about to enter that harbor, as well as where they are bound to other ports that must be reached by using the channels leading directly to the port of Boston as when bound to Boston; and they are entitled to their fees under Mass. Rev. Stat. chap. 32, when they seasonably offer their services to such vessel and their offer is refused. Martin v. Hilton, 9 Met. 371.

89 L. R. A.

And refusal of a pilot to pilot a vessel up one of the branches leading from Boston across the mouth of Charles river, on account of which the master of the vessel refuses to receive the pilot, does not affect his right to fees, where there had been an unbroken usage of the pilots in Boston harbor ever since the erection of such branches to pilot vessels destined to places or wharves of the branches either to the lower pier of the draw of the bridge or to a place of anchorage in the stream near the draw, and there leave them in charge of their master. Hunt v. Carlisle, 1 Gray, 257.

And parol evidence that the harbor of Boston extends only to the mouths of the rivers emptying into that harbor, and that the usage of pilots for the last forty years to pilot vessels bound to towns upon such rivers was to take them as far as such mouths and leave them, is admissible in an action by a pilot for fees against the master of a vessel who had declined to receive him because he had declined to take the vessel up as far as the master wished, but offered to carry her to a place where she might take a river pilot. Martin v. Hilton, 9 Met. 371.

So, the right of a duly licensed pilot for the port of Wilmington and bay of San Pedro to half pilotage for services tendered and declined will not be denied on the ground that the vessel was not bound for and did not enter the port of Wilmington or the bay of San Pedro, where the limits of the bay of San Pedro had never been defined by any competent authority, and the port of Wilmington had always been locally known and regarded as one and the same, and Congress had given unmistakable evidence that it regarded them as identical, though the port had originally been known as the port of San Pedro, and its name and the name of the bay had been changed to Wilmington. Weidt v. The Howden, 39 Fed. Rep. 877.

And a claim for pilotage of a ship into Wood's Hole by one whose warrant constituted him a branch pilot for the coast of Martha's Vineyard and over Nantucket Shoals, and authorized him to receive fees for piloting vessels to the ports, among others, of Holmes' Hole and Falmouth, is valid under a statute authorizing the appointment of pilots for the several harbors and coasts of the state, the port of Holmes' Hole being in the town of Falmouth, as the ports in Falmouth not specially designated as attached to a particular district may by force of the statute be assigned to such pilots as are best situated to serve most promptly vessels belonging or bound to such ports, and the fact that there was another ship harbor in that town does not affect the case, as the language used is broad enough to include all its ports. Smith v. Swift, 8 Met. 329.

The above case was distinguished in Winslow v. Prince, 6 Cush. 369, holding that a warrant appointing a branch pilot for the coasts of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard and over Nantucket Shoals does not since the enactment of Mass. Stat. 1788, chap. 56, confer exclusive right to such pilotage or the right to fees for services tendered to vessels bound through Vineyard sound and over the shoals, and refused, on the ground that the port of Falmouth in question in that case was not specially provided for in the statute, and that it was therefore perfectly competent for the governor to appoint the pilot and fix his fees.

that she cleared and sailed from Rosario, in South America, and that when laden she drew about 164½ feet of water. He alleged that the vessel was partly laden with coal mined in the United States. He denied that the libellant made application, either to him or to the master, after the vessel was loaded, or at any other time, to pilot her to sea, and he denied that any bill for pilotage had been presented to him. He admitted that the vessel did not take a pilot on the voyage from Baltimore, mentioned in the libel, and claimed that there was no obligation on her part so to do, and that a pilot was not needed. He set up that the vessel was partly laden with coal mined in the United States; that she carried twenty-five

VIII. Outward bound pilotage.

Where a pilot brings a vessel into port he has the exclusive right, under the Georgia statute, to take her out, and no other pilot can be employed for that service unless it can be proved to the satisfaction of the commission of pilotage that the one bringing the vessel in had misbehaved while in charge of her, or had in the meantime been deprived of his license or had obtained the inward pilotage against the right of some other pilot first offering his services. Melssner v. Stein, 72 Ga. 234.

A pilot cruising outside the bar, who tenders his services to an incoming ship, with certain exceptions under the Georgia statute, is entitled to compensation if his services are rejected, and should such services be accepted it entitles him to pilot her out again or to recover compensation therefor, except in cases of misbehavior, revocation of license, etc. Melssner v. Stein, 72 Ga. 234.

And a duly licensed pilot who brought a vessel into port, with whom the master arranged to meet him at a certain time and place, from whence they were to go together on board and he was to pilot her out, makes a proper tender of services, so as to entitle him to pilotage fees as outward pilot, where he presented himself at the time and place appointed, though the master did not then appear but went on board his vessel and put to sea without a pilot. The Francisco Garguilo, 14 Fed. Rep. 486.

And a pilot hired by the month to serve as pilot between the ports of San Francisco and Portland, who goes on board upon pilot ground and pilots the vessel out to sea, may be considered as first offering his services to the ship so as to prevent the recovery of another pilot for services offered and refused, though the latter tendered such services before the former went on board. The Panama, Deady, 27.

It is the duty of a pilot who is to pilot a vessel out to sea to be on hand at high water on the morning of the day she is to start, however, and a vessel of deep draught in shallow water is not bound to wait for him, and where he mistakes the hour of high water and is left, he is not entitled to compensation. The Ocean Express, 22 Fed. Rep. 176.

And a licensed pilot approaching the master of a vessel at the customhouse where he was engaged in clearing his ship and inquiring if he wanted a pilot, to which he answered "I don't know," does not constitute a speaking of the ship within the meaning of Cal. Pol. Code, § 2468, providing that when a vessel is spoken inward or outward bound and the services of a pilot are declined half pilotage shall be paid. The Australian, 36 Fed. Rep. 332.

And a conversation between the master of a vessel and a pilot, which was half jocular, conveying the impression that the pilot was teasing the master respecting the question of pilotage, in which the master answered in the same vein saying, "I will take you" when he knew that the pilot personally would not go, does not show a refusal to take a pilot which will warrant a claim of compulsory pilotage. The Harriet S. Jackson, 32 Fed. Rep. 110.

So, a duly commissioned pilot who tenders his services to a shipmaster outside the harbor to bring his vessel into port, which services are declined and paid for, is entitled to recover under Ga. act 1799 (Cobb's Digest, 37), providing that all vessels entering and clearing within the state shall pay rates of pilotage if a pilot is offered, and giving preference to the pilot bringing in the ship to carry the same out, where he again tenders his services to the master to take the vessel out of port, which services the master declines, and refuses to pay fees therefor. Wright v. Lake, 75 Ga. 219.

In that case, Thompson v. Sprague, 69 Ga. 409, 47 Am. Rep. 760, supra, VII. d, was explained and distinguished, the court saying that in that case all that was decided was that the pilot first offering his services and who was refused upon the arrival of the vessel in port could recover the full rates of pilotage established by law, and that what was said as to the policy of the law was by way of argument.

A pilot who brings a wrecked British vessel into port, which was libeled in admiralty and sold under a decree to which he was a party, and after the sale refitted by the purchaser and her name and nationality changed, who offers his services to carry her out to sea, which were declined, however, is not entitled to fees on the ground of such tender and refusal, under the Georgia statute providing that the pilot who brings in a vessel is first entitled to take her out, as she was not the same, but a new vessel. Melssner v. Stein, 72 Ga. 234.

In Wright v. Lake, 75 Ga. 219, Melssner v. Stein, 72 Ga. 234, was distinguished and explained, the court saying that the facts were essentially different from the facts in the case under consideration, and that, however much the argument may appear to fit the facts of the case being considered, it is not binding as a decision.

IX. To whom and what the liability attaches.

The person or thing to which liability for compulsory pilotage attaches depends largely upon the statute under which it is claimed, and under the different provisions of such statutes the master, owner, agent, consignee, and the vessel itself, have been respectively held liable.

Thus, Cal. act May 20, 1861, declaring that when a vessel is spoken by a pilot and his services are declined he shall be entitled to one half pilotage fees, creates a legal liability against the vessel, her master, and owners for such fees. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Joliffe, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 450, 17 L. ed. 805.

And the owners of a vessel, as well as the master thereof, are liable to pay pilotage fees to a pilot who duly offered to pilot the vessel into Boston harbor under Mass. Rev. Stat. chap. 32, and the rule of the commissioners of pilots thereunder, approved and published as required by the act of 1836, chap. 49, § 4, as that statute and the rules thereunder were not repealed by the act of Feb. 20, 1836, the tenor and effect of which were to revise and modify subsisting laws substituting the new for the old and preserving everything as it was before, except where specially altered. Hunt v. Mickey, 12 Met. 346.

And a master of a ship when acting within the scope of his authority is the agent of the owner, and his act of rejecting the proffered services of a pilot is the act of the owner which will render him responsible for the pilot's fees, under Ga. Code, § 1512, providing for such payment to the first pilot offering his services and refused. Thompson v. Sprague, 69 Ga. 409, 47 Am. Rep. 760.

So, one whose duties were to discharge a vessel in tons or more at the bottom of her hold, the balance of her cargo being lumber; and that both the coal and lumber had been shipped in the usual way. He claimed that the vessel was exempt from all pilotage charges. He denied that the coal was shipped for the purpose of evading the pilot laws, and claimed that there was no ground upon which any claim for pilotage could be lawfully made. The case came on to be regularly heard, when quite a number of witnesses were examined in open court, all of the testimony being set out in the record. The district judge entered a decree in favor of the libellant for the sum claimed, together with the costs of the suit. From that decree this appeal was sued out.

The decision of the questions raised by the assignment of errors depends upon the meaning of the amendment to the Maryland Code, set forth in the libel,—upon its proper construction. There is no material conflict in the testimony, and no trouble as to the facts. The case is so clearly stated in the opinion filed by Judge Morris in the court below, and the construction he gives the legislation in question coincides so fully with the conclusion we reach, that we deem it eminently proper to adopt his views as the judgment of this court. We quote from his opinion, as follows:

"The legislature of Maryland, by the amendment to the pilot laws contained in the act of 1896 (chap. 40), did not intend to exempt all American vessels bound to or from Baltimore, engaged in foreign commerce, from the payment of pilotage, but only those laden in whole or in part with coke or coal mined in the United States. The exemption obviously was intended as a relief or encouragement to the coal trade. Being a statute to affect trade and commerce, it should receive a sensible construction, looking to its object. It was intended to continue to the pilots their statutory fees for compulsory pilotage, unless the fact of the cargo which the vessel was carrying made it an advantage to the coal trade to exempt her. It would seem, therefore, that to hold that putting on board a few bushels or a few tons of coal gratifies the law is to defeat

a foreign port and enter her at the customs and collect the freight and obtain a cargo and clear the vessel under directions from the owners is a consignee within the meaning of N. Y. Pilot Laws 1857, chap. 242, p. 502, providing that pilotage shall be paid by the master, owners, or consignees where the master refuses to take a pilot upon coming into the port of New York by way of Sandy Hook. Gillespie v. Winberg, 4 Daly, 318.

And a ship broker who had procured a cargo for a vessel and cleared her at the customhouse for a foreign port, where she took in a cargo and returned with a cargo consigned to a third person, the captain reporting to such ship broker, who collected the freight and paid the bills for the vessel and cleared her for another voyage, is the consignee of the vessel, within the meaning of that act, who is bound to pay in such case. Gillespie v. Winberg, 4 Daly, 318.

To charge a person in the capacity of agent with half pilotage for tender and refusal of the services of a pilot, however, it is at least necessary to show that he had some connection with the vessel, and a tender is not good where it was made to one who was not the consignee of the vessel and did not act for her under any general employment, or collect her freight, or appear to be in any way connected with her. Mason v. Ingraham, 5 Ben. 81.

And the sum of 10s. and 6d. a day due to a pilot under the merchant's shipping act of 1854, § 357, over and above his pilotage, where without his consent he is taken out to sea beyond the pilotage limits, is not pilotage which can be recovered of the ship's broker under § 6068 of that act providing that a ship's broker at the port where the services of a pilot are obtained shall be liable to pay pilotage dues for her. Morteo v. Julian, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 216, 48 L. J. M. C. N. S. 126, 41 L. T. N. S. 71.

The consignee under N. Y. Pilot Act 1853, chap. 407, § 18, as amended by the act of 1857, providing that pilotage shall be payable by the master, owner, consignee, or agent clearing the vessel, where the master refuses to take a pilot upon coming into the port of New York by way of Sandy Hook, is the consignee of the vessel, and not of the goods with which she is laden. Gillespie v. Winberg, 4 Daly, 318.

So, a claim by a pilot under a state statute for half pilotage as compensation for tendering his services to pilot a ship out of a harbor, which were refused, is a claim for pilotage which by the general maritime law is a lien upon the vessel, and may be enforced by action in admiralty. The California, 1 Sawy. 468; The America, 1 Low. Dec. 176.

Or by a libel in rem. The Edith Godden, 25 Fed. Rep. 511; The Alzena, 14 Fed. Rep. 175; The William Law, 14 Fed. Rep. 722.

And the lien of a pilot upon a vessel for pilotage is not lost by taking a note therefor, where it was with the express understanding that he would not receipt the bills and would not give up the lien unless the note was paid. The Pirate, 32 Fed. Rep. 486.

And a statute giving a pilot a lien on a vessel for his fees does not take away his right of action against the master therefor. Perkins v. O'Mahoney, 131 Mass. 546.

So, a claim for half pilotage within the Oregon statute for services offered and refused stands, so far as the remedy is concerned, upon the same footing as an ordinary claim for pilotage, and the right to a lien upon the vessel, therefore, is not affected by the fact that the consignee of the ship is made expressly liable in case the master omits or refuses to pay. The George S. Wright, Deady, 591.

The right of a pilot under the general maritime law to a lien upon a vessel for his services actually rendered, however, does not extend to a lien for compensation provided by statute for services tendered and refused. The Robert J. Mercer, 1 Sprague, 234.

In The America, 1 Low. Dec. 176, The Robert J. Mercer, 1 Sprague, 235, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the law expressly or by implication denied the right to a lien.

And to make pilotage a charge upon the ship itself or upon the owners there must be an express or implied contract with the owner or with his authorized agent, and it cannot be done where the pilot was engaged by wrongdoers or usurpers of the command of the ship. The Anne, 1 Mason, 508.

And the master of a vessel has no lien thereon for his services as such, and where he also serves in the capacity of pilot he has no lien upon the vessel for his services as pilot. The Eolian, 1 Bias, 321, Reversing 1 Bond, 267.

A person who acts as master and pilot of a vessel has no lien for his services upon the vessel for a fund derived from its sale for his entire wages as master and pilot or for any part, where there has been no segregation of the amount due in the different capacities. The Willamette Valley, 76 Fed. Rep. 333.

But one who engages and ships on a vessel as a the law in both these respects. It deprives the pilots of their fees, and does not benefit the coal trade. In the present case a vessel of 657 tons was chartered to take a full and complete cargo of spruce lumber to South America, but the owners reserved the privilege of putting some coal on board as part of her ballast. They bought twenty-five tons at a cost of $55, and put it in the hold as ballast. The pilotage fees amount to $92.50. The agent of the owners confesses that the incidental advantage of escaping pilotage was a motive, but states that he had also the wish to try the market for coal at the vessel's port of discharge, never having before made a shipment there. Obviously the owners could not lose, for they would be gainers even if they had to throw the coal overboard. I think, to be entitled to exemption, the vessel's cargo must, in some substantial proportion, consist of coal or coke, and that this vessel was not in part laden with coal, in any fair commercial sense. It is not sufficient, in my opinion, to entitle the vessel to exemption, if the quantity is of no commercial value as a shipment. Legislation with regard to commercial matters should be construed, if the language will permit, so as to give effect to the scheme which it is apparent the lawmakers had in mind; and it cannot be supposed that when the legislature of 1896 amended a general law, intended to provide for the support of pilots, by introducing into it an exemption in favor of vessels carrying coal, they intended to leave the law in such a state that it would deprive the pilots of their support without benefiting the coal exporting trade. It is urged against the proposed construction that it will become a matter of doubt and dispute, as to every vessel which has any coal aboard, whether or not it is sufficient to enable her to say that she is laden in part with coal. But this is a difficulty which attaches to all similar legislation. It must be determined by considering all the circumstances by which reasonable men would be controlled in similar business transactions. If the legislature has failed to establish a definite criterion which can be applied with certainty, all that can be done pilot, and not in the character of master, is entitled to a lien upon the vessel for his compensation, where the captain and his agent performed all the duties of master, though he did not come on board and the duties of navigating were performed by the pilot. The Atlas, 42 Fed. Rep. 793.

X. The amount or rate.

Compulsory pilotage being purely a statutory matter, the rate charged therefor is always fixed by statute or under statutory authority.

The computation of pilotage at certain rates per foot according to the draft of the vessel, and the computation for the fractions of a foot, are not prohibited, and the usual practice to make a rest at the half foot and compute the rates according to the even foot or half foot, whichever is nearest the actual draft, is recommended by its practical convenience. The France, 50 Fed. Rep. 125.

And N. Y. Laws 1853, chap. 467, providing a compensation to be added to pilotage for detention at the wharf or in the harbor, etc., and fixing certain compensation for services rendered by pilots for removing or transporting vessels in the harbor of New York, and providing additional compensation for pilotage in the winter, is not superseded by N. Y. Laws 1884, chap. 90, in regard to the fees of pilots for piloting inward and outward bound vessels. The France, 50 Fed. Rep. 125.

So, an act providing for pilotage and rates to be paid pilots, and declaring that the several boards of pilot commissioners for the several ports of the state are to determine the rate, is not objectionable as a delegation to an inferior body of the power delegated to the legislature by Congress, such power being local in character, and not national. The Chase, 14 Fed. Rep. 864.

And Fla. act March 7, 1819, authorizing pilot commissioners to determine the rates of a pilotage which should be paid by any vessel at other ports, authorizes them to determine also what rate shall be paid by a vessel spoken by a pilot which does not accept services, the liability for which is provided for by a statute previously existing. The Chase, 14 Fed. Rep. 864.

So, pilots licensed for the port of New York by state authority are entitled to off-shore pilotage where they comply with the regulations prescribed by tendering their services at sea to vessels about to enter that port, provisions therefor being within the limits of state jurisdiction. Cisco v. Roberts, 36 N. Y. 222.

39 L. R. A.

But a New Jersey pilot who boarded a vessel bound to New York some 30 miles southeast from Barnegat, but who went to bed and was waked when Sandy Hook light hove in sight, and then first took charge as pilot, taking the vessel into harbor, is entitled to inshore pilotage only. The Alaska, 3 Ben. 391.

Labor performed and services rendered by a pilot, consisting only of such acts as the duty of a pilot demands, and requiring the peculiar knowledge of a pilot as to the depth of water and the rise and strength of the tides and the management of the vessel, must be considered as pilotage services, and not as salvage services, though the vessel was in distress and his exposure was unusual and the risk more than ordinary; but extra compensation may be made him by the allowance of extra pilotage. The Grid, 21 Fed. Rep. 423.

But extra compensation will not be allowed a pilot because he had encountered danger in boarding the vessel piloted, or because there was but little water under her keel. The Grid, 21 Fed. Rep. 423.

A pilot whose services were those of a pilot only is not entitled to additional compensation unless in boarding the ship or while on her he personally incurred extraordinary danger and risk, whether or not his services saved the vessel from great peril. The C. D. Bryant, 19 Fed. Rep. 608.

And a pilot going upon a vessel when the weather was calm and the sea was smooth and there was a thick fog, while the vessel was grounded upon a sand-bar, who leaves her until the tide rises and the wind freshens when she rubs across the sand into deep water and is afterwards carried out to sea where she remains until daylight, when he pilots her over the bar where she is taken in tow by a tug, there being at no time any probability of her going to pieces, does not incur extraordinary danger and risk which will entitle him to additional compensation. The C. D. Bryant, 19 Fed. Rep. 608.

Penalties imposed by 52 Geo. III. § 11, providing for forfeiture of double the sum which would have been demanded for the pilotage of a vessel and the further sum of £5 for every 50 tons burden thereof for neglect or failure to take a pilot on board on arriving at Dungeness, are to be calculated on a ship bound for the river, not on pilotage due from Dungeness, but on that which would be due on the ship arriving at her ultimate place of destination in the river. Mackie v. Landon, 1 Marsh. 585, 6 Taunt. 256.

F. H. B.

is to apply a reasonable one. It is a matter of common knowledge in the port of Baltimore that coal is usually shipped in full cargoes, but it is also a fact that, for long voyages, coal is sometimes too weighty if the vessel is filled full, and, therefore, lighter cargo is used to fill up the vessel. It is not improbable that it was for this reason that the legislature, intending to favor the coal trade, provided that vessels should be exempt even when not fully laden with coal, and that it should be held to be essential to entitle a vessel to the exemption that she should be, in a commercial sense, a coal-laden vessel, carrying a reasonable quantity to constitute a cargo, looking to her capacity and the voyage she is to sail. In the present case, at all events, it seems to me clear that one car load of coal, belonging to the owners and of less value than the pilot fees, dumped as ballast into the hold of a large vessel, which was under charter to carry a complete cargo of lumber, is not a substantial part of her cargo, but is an attempt to evade the law. The other points are not strongly insisted upon, and I think could hardly constitute a good defense. The statute obviously contemplates that the consignee, as well as the vessel's owner, shall be liable. It seems to me that the offer of a pilot was made in good faith. It was made by a pilot who was competent and qualified to take the vessel himself, and the offer was declined solely and openly upon the ground that the vessel was not required to take a pilot because she had on board a cargo partly of coal. The issue was intended to be raised, and it seems to me that it was distinctly raised, and that what took place was an offer and a refusal. I shall sign a decree for the libellant."

The decree appealed from is affirmed.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

John J. BERGIN, Admr., etc., of Timothy Delaney, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

SOUTHERN NEW ENGLAND TELEPHONE COMPANY et al.

(.....Conn.....)

1. The use of the same poles by a telephone company and an electric railroad company at the request of the municipal authorities is not unlawful when it is not shown to be necessarily attended with increased danger.
2. Negligence is a question of fact which cannot be reviewed on appeal unless the trial court failed to apply the correct standard of duty or violated some rule or principle of law applicable to the facts as found.
3. A telephone company may require its lineman to inspect and test for himself the guy wires or circuit breakers of an electric railroad company which uses the same poles that are used by the telephone company, when it furnishes him with suitable appliances for that purpose, and he knows that there are no other persons employed to do such testing.
4. The right of a telephone lineman to assume that an electric railroad company has used suitable and safe appliances to prevent the escape of electricity from its main or trolley wire to the guy wires does not excuse him from exercising proper care to prevent injury when he knows as a fact that the wires are not safe.
5. Errors in rulings which could not affect the trial or decision will not be prejudicial.

(November 30, 1897.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for New Haven County awarding him nominal damages only NOTE.—As to liabilities for injuries by electric wires in highways, see note to Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson (Colo.) 81 L. R. A. 566.

89 L. R. A.

in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of his intestate. Affirmed.

Deceased was in the employ of the defendant telephone company as a lineman. The city of Meriden had requested the telephone company and the Meriden Electric railroad company to use one line of poles through certain streets. The wires of the street railway company were kept in place by guy wires attached to telephone poles and containing circuit breakers which if in good order were sufficient to prevent the passage of electricity to the poles. Deceased was engaged in removing a wire from one of the poles and stood on the ground drawing it toward him and coiling it. The result of that action would be to cause the wire when it dropped from the last cross arm to fall directly over one of the guy wires which deceased had been warned was unsafe. The safety of the wire could be tested by connecting it with the ground by means of another wire when if it was unsafe the electricity would cause flashes at the point of connection. Linemen had the facilities for doing such testing and were supposed to do it. When the wire which deceased was coiling fell across the guy wire he immediately fell to the ground and died within a few minutes.

Further facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. James P. Pigott and Cornelius J. Danaher, for appellant:

Delaney's death was caused by the exercise of a power not authorized to the defendants by law, and this conduct of the defendants directly contributed to his death.

If a man while violating the law receives an injury due directly to his own law-violating he cannot recover for such injury.

Broschart v. Tuttle, 59 Conn. 11, 11 L. R. A. 83.

The converse of this ought to be true.

The question of negligence and of contributory negligence is one of fact and final unless it appears from the record that some erroneous standard of duty was applied in reaching such a determination.

Dundon v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 67 Conn. 286.

In any given state of facts the law prescribes the duty.

Schoonmaker v. Albertson & D. Mach. Co. 51 Conn. 393; Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 53 Conn. 471; Furrell v. Waterbury Horse R. Co. 60 Conn. 244; Morrissey v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 215; Hayden v. Allyn, 55 Conn. 289.

Duty is not an issuable fact, it is a conclusion of law.

Atwood v. Welton, 57 Conn. 522.

If the court required of the defendant a higher degree of care, or of the plaintiff a lesser degree of care, than the law requires, in either case there is a question of law.

Morrissey v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 215; McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 447.

If it was the duty of the trolley company to provide proper circuit-breakers, and to so supervise its lines that such circuit-breakers should be known to perform the functions for which they were used, then the failure of the trolley company to perform this duty was the failure of the telephone company.

Driscoll v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 65 Conn. 252.

The defendants are liable for want of ordinary care unless the proximate negligence of the plaintiff materially contributes to the injury.

New Haven S. B. & Transp. Co. v. Vanderbilt, 16 Conn. 421; Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 27 Conn. 406, 71 Am. Dec. 78; Williams v. Clinton, 28 Conn. 267.

The negligent act or omission of the plaintiff must operate as a proximate cause of the injury and not merely as a condition.

Smithwick v. Hall & U. Co. 59 Conn. 271, 12 L. R. A. 279; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157.

Delaney never stipulated with the trolley company to assume risks arising from the negligence of its employees.

Zeigler v. Danbury & N. R. Co. 53 Conn. 555.

A railroad company entering into contract relations with another company, by which the safety of its own passengers may be affected, will be held to have made the other company its own agent in this respect.

Murray v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 66 Conn. 512, 32 L. R. A. 539.

It is not necessary in all cases to make two parties liable as joint tortfeasors that there must be some concert of action between them in causing the injury, or some common duty resting upon them which both have violated.

Carstesen v. Stratford, 67 Conn. 436.

The defendants were liable as joint tortfeasors, for the injuries to Delaney, resulting in his death, because they were at said time and place jointly using and employing their poles and wires without legislative authority.

Broschart v. Tuttle, 59 Conn. 1, 11 L. R. A. 38; Slater v. Mesereau, 64 N. Y. 188; Colegrove v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 20 N. Y. 492, 75 Am. Dec. 418; Cincinnati Street R. Co. v. Murray, 58 Ohio St. 570, 30 L. R. A. 508;

39 L. R. A.

Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Robinson, 2 U. S. App. 205, 16 L. R. A. 545, 50 Fed. Rep. 810, 1 C. C. A. 684; Ahern v. Oregon Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 24 Or. 278, 22 L. R. A. 635; Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Peninsular Land, Transp. & Mfg. Co. 27 Fla. 1, 17 L. R. A. 84, and notes.

Where an act is unlawful in itself the wrongdoer will be held responsible although other causes may have subsequently contributed in producing the injury.

Weick v. Lander, 75 Ill. 96; Congreve v. Morgan, 18 N. Y. 84, 72 Am. Dec. 496; Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 53 Conn. 473; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 8; Keasbey, Electric Wires, 166, 167; Bigelow, Torts, 277; Thompson, Electricity, §§ 464-466; Gould, Pl. § 66, p. 190, § 74, p. 194.

Gross or wanton negligence exists when the conduct of the party causing the injury clearly shows such reckless indifference to the rights of others, or is equivalent to an intentional and wanton violation of their rights.

Gibney v. Lewis, 68 Conn. 395; Mason v. Hayes, 52 Conn. 12, 52 Am. Rep. 552; Welch v. Durand, 36 Conn. 182, 4 Am. Rep. 55; St. Peter's Church v. Beach, 26 Conn. 366; Linsley v. Bushnell, 15 Conn. 235, 38 Am. Dec. 79; Cooley, Torts, 574.

There having been negligence on the part of the defendants, it was not sufficient for them, in order to excuse themselves, to show merely that there was a want of care on the part of the plaintiff, unless it was a want of such a degree of care as it was incumbent on the plaintiff to exercise.

Beers v. Housatonic R. Co. 19 Conn. 571.

The master is liable for sending his servant into an exceptionally dangerous place where injury results therefrom.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 655, * 555, ¶ 3.

If the defendant is guilty of gross negligence, he cannot set up a trifling negligence or inadvertence of the plaintiff as a defense.

Field, Damages, § 168, pp. 159-163; Whart. Neg. §§ 300, 301; Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 27 Conn. 393, 71 Am. Dec. 78.

The Southern New England Telephone Company was guilty of the only negligence causing the injuries.

McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 445; Myhan v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 41 La. Ann. 984, 7 L. R. A. 172; Ilingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 583, 25 L. R. A. 552; Griffin v. United Electric Light Co. 164 Mass. 492, 32 L. R. A. 400; Giraudi v. Electric Improv. Co. 107 Cal. 120, 28 L. R. A. 597; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157; Ryan v. Chelsea Paper Mfg. Co. 69 Conn. 454.

The Meriden Electric Company was guilty of the only negligence causing the injuries.

Van Amburg v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 87 La. Ann. 650, 55 Am. Rep. 517.

The combined negligence of the defendants caused the injuries.

Carstesen v. Stratford, 67 Conn. 434; Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Peninsular Land, Transp. & Mfg. Co. 27 Fla. 1, 17 L. R. A. 34, and notes; Slater v. Mesereau, 64 N. Y. 188; Colegrove v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 20 N. Y. 492, 75 Am. Dec. 418; Webster v. Hudson River R. Co. 38 N. Y. 260.

It is not contributory negligence to engage in a dangerous occupation.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. p. 370; Wood, Mast. & S. § 768.

The risk assumed by the servant is such as is ordinarily incident to the employment; and this is synonymous with unavoidable accident.

Wood, Mast. & S. § 788; Beach, Contrib. Neg. p. 370.

An employee is not bound to inquire as to latent but only patent defects.

Whart. Neg. § 214; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 786, 787.

The master is liable for subjecting the servant, through negligence, to greater risks than those which fairly belong to the employment.

Wood, Mast. & S. § 777; Faren v. Sellers, 89 La. Ann. 1020; Ahern v. Oregon Teleph. Co. 24 Or. 276, 22 L. R. A. 685; Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. v. Owings, 97 Ga. 663, 33 L. R. A. 798.

The plaintiff was entitled to substantial damages.

Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. v. Owings, 97 Ga. 663, 33 L. R. A. 798; Wynne v. Parsons, 57 Conn. 80; Knight v. Goodyear's India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. 38 Conn. 443, 9 Am. Rep. 406; Myhan v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 41 La. Ann. 964, 7 L. R. A. 175.

The implements furnished to Delaney by the Southern New England Telephone Company at the time of the injury were not such as the law requires.

Wilson v. Willimantic Linen Co. 50 Conn. 433, 47 Am. Rep. 653; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157.

The place at which Delaney was put to work by the Southern New England Telephone Company at the time the injuries were received was not a suitable place for the work required.

McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 165.

The Southern New England Telephone Company were obliged to give its linemen specific warning of the dangers incident to their employment at this point, and were obliged to supervise the duty of testing its wires when in proximity with high-power wires.

McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 87 Conn. 445; Ryan v. Chelsea Paper Mfg. Co. 69 Conn. 454; Kelley v. Cable Co. 7 Mont. 70; McDonald v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 41 Minn. 439; Carpenter v. Mexican Nat. R. Co. 39 Fed. Rep. 315; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. McMullen, 58 N. J. L. 155, 32 L. R. A. 351; Lofrano v. New York & Mt. V. Water Co. 55 Hun. 452; Smithwick v. Hall & U. Co. 59 Conn. 261, 12 L. R. A. 279; Bennett v. Syndicate Ins. Co. 39 Minn. 254; Myhan v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 41 La. Ann. 964, 7 L. R. A. 172; Mulvey v. Rhode Island Locomotive Works, 14 R. I. 204.

Delaney had the right to presume that a circuit breaker or insulator, known to be defective on August 10, 1895, or one that could be easily so known to the defendants, or either of them, on said August 10, 1895, was not still in a leaky, defective, and dangerous condition.

Smith, Neg. 478; Union P. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451, 40 L. ed. 766; Bland 89 L. R. A.

v. Shreveport Belt R. Co. 48 La. Ann. 1057, 36 L. R. A. 114; Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 44 La. Ann. 692, 16 L. R. A. 43; Myhan v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 41 La. Ann. 964, 7 L. R. A. 172; Giraudi v. Electric Improv. Co. 107 Cal. 120, 28 L. R. A. 597; Beach, Contrib. Neg. p. 370; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 681, 788, 789, 749, 751, 763, 777, 786, 789; 2 Thomp. Neg. 975, 1172; 2 Whart. Neg. §§ 214, 215; Faren v. Sellers, 89 La. Ann. 1020; Shearm & Redf. Neg. § 81; Deering, Neg. § 16; Knowles v. Crampton, 55 Conn. 336; Hickman v. Missouri P. R. Co. 22 Mo. App. 344; Pleasants v. Raleigh & A. Air-Line R. Co. 95 N. C. 195; Rogers v. Ludlow Mfg. Co. 144 Mass. 198, 59 Am. Rep. 68; Goodrich v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 116 N. Y. 398, 5 L. R. A. 750; Morrissey v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 215.

The court imposed a higher degree of care upon Delaney than the law required.

Burt v. Douglas County Street R. Co. 83 Wis. 229, 18 L. R. A. 479; Kelley v. Cable Co. 7 Mont. 70; Mulvey v. Rhode Island Locomotive Works, 14 R. I. 204; Morrissey v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 215; Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 53 Conn. 473; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 681, 788, 783; 2 Whart. Neg. § 215, p. 975; Griffin v. United Electric Light Co. 164 Mass. 492, 32 L. R. A. 400; Illingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 588, 25 L. R. A. 552; Ryan v. Chelsea Paper Mfg. Co. 69 Conn. 454; Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810.

The Meriden Electric Railroad Company was guilty of negligence for having a defective insulator, from August 10 to August 12, 1895, on the guy-wire, with which the wire Delaney was coiling came into contact.

Myhan v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 41 La. Ann. 964, 7 L. R. A. 172; Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. v. Owings, 97 Ga. 663, 33 L. R. A. 798; McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 445; Barnes v. Beirne, 38 La. Ann. 280; Williams v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 43 La. Ann. 300; Suburban Electric Co. v. Nugent, 58 N. J. L. 658, 32 L. R. A. 700; Ennis v. Gray, 87 Hun. 355; Griffin v. United Electric Light Co. 164 Mass. 492, and notes to this case in 32 L. R. A. 401; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. McMullen, 58 N. J. L. 155, 32 L. R. A. 351; Morrissey v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 215; Pomponio v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 66 Conn. 535, 33 L. R. A. 530; Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 44 La. Ann. 692, 16 L. R. A. 43; Ahern v. Oregon Teleph. Co. 24 Or. 276, 22 L. R. A. 685.

When the defect existed a sufficient length of time for the defendant to have had knowledge and to have remedied the defect, the question of his duty to have done so is a question of law.

Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lynch (Ind.) 34 L. R. A. 298.

Everyone has the right to presume that others will act in a lawful and proper manner, and consequently will not hold it improvident in a plaintiff to act upon the presumption that the defendant has done or will do its duty.

Morrissey v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 218; Newson v. New York C. R. Co. 29 N. Y. 383; Snyder v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 11 W. Va. 14; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Ward, 4

Colo. 30; McGuire v. Spence, 16 N. Y. Week. Dig. 222; Morrissey v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 47 Mo. 521; Fowler v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 18 W. Va. 579; Deering, Neg. § 16; Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 53 Conn. 461.

The Southern New England Telephone Company owed to its employees the duty of inspection at the time and place of the injury.

Gottlieb v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 100 N. Y. 463; Goodrich v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 116 N. Y. 898, 5 L. R. A. 750; Bailey v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 139 N. Y. 802; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Avery, 109 Ill. 815; McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 445; Griffin v. United Electric Light Co. 164 Mass. 493, 32 L. R. A. 401; Illingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 583, 25 L. R. A. 552; Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 44 La. Ann. 692, 16 L. R. A. 43; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157; Wood, Mast. & S. § 376, p. 715, note; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Buck, 116 Ind. 573, 2 L. R. A. 520; Keith v. New Haven & N. Co. 140 Mass. 175; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Mulvey v. Rhode Island Locomotive Works, 14 R. I. 204.

The Meriden Electric Company owed to Delaney the duty of inspecting its wires at the time and place of the injury.

Doble v. Baird, 15 Daly, 287; Taylor v. Baldwin, 78 Cal. 517; Kossman v. Stutz, 25 N. Y. S. R. 953; Central R. Co. v. Haslett, 74 Ga. 59; Kelley v. Wilson, 21 Ill. App. 141; Mad River & L. E. R. Co. v. Barber, 5 Ohio St. 541, 67 Am. Dec. 812; Dale v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 63 Mo. 455; Mansfield Coal & C. Co. v. McEnery, 91 Pa. 185, 36 Am. Rep. 662; Pingree v. Leyland, 105 Mass. 398; Umbach v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 88 Ind. 191; Perigo v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 55 Iowa, 326; Shanny v. Androscoggin Mills, 66 Me. 420; and cases in Beach, Contrib. Neg. p. 479.

Where the master did not inspect he should be held liable for negligence in failing so to do.

Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. v. Owings, 97 Ga. 663, 33 L. R. A. 798; Myhan v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 41 La. Ann. 964, 7 L. R. A. 172; Illingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 583, 25 L. R. A. 552; Benzing v. Steinway, 101 N. Y. 547; Wright v. New York C. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 562; Gibson v. Pacific R. Co. 46 Mo. 163; Lewis v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 50 Mo. 495, 21 Am. Rep. 885; Walsh v. Peet Vallee Co. 110 Mass. 23; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 240.

The statement of Flannigan in the presence of Delaney, on August 10, 1895, as to the receipt of a slight shock by Flannigan, was not knowledge on Delaney's part that the defective circuit breaker which caused the shock, if it did cause it, on August 12, 1895, was still defective.

Myhan v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 41 La. Ann. 964, 7 L. R. A. 172; Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. v. Owings, 97 Ga. 663, 33 L. R. A. 798; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 842 et seq.; Bland v. Shreveport Belt R. Co. 48 La. Ann. 1057, 36 L. R. A. 114; McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 445; Morrissey v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 218; Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 192.

The knowledge claimed to have been imparted to Delaney by Flannigan, on August 30 L. R. A.

10, was not a continuing knowledge, and did not so continue until the time of the injury on August 12.

Field, Damages, § 168, pp. 159-163; Whart. Neg. §§ 300, 301; Suburban Electric Co. v. Nugent, 58 N. J. L. 658, 32 L. R. A. 700; Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612; Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. ed. 605.

It was not the duty of Delaney to test the wires of the Meriden Electric Railroad Company.

Myhan v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 41 La. Ann. 964, 7 L. R. A. 172; Wood, Mast. & S. pp. 681, 788, 763; 2 Whart. Neg. § 215, p. 975; Ellis v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 95 N. Y. 546; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 975; Gillette v. Goodspeed, 69 Conn. 863; Zeigler v. Danbury & N. R. Co. 52 Conn. 553; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Avery, 109 Ill. 815; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157; McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 445; Ryan v. Chelsea Paper Mfg. Co. 69 Conn. 454; Wilson v. Willimantic Linen Co. 50 Conn. 433, 47 Am. Rep. 653.

If the defendant and the telephone company were negligent in the matter of the contact of the wires, they are liable jointly and severally for such negligence.

Keasbey, Electric Wires, 166, 167; Bigelow, Torts, 277; Thompson, Electricity, §§ 464-466; Gould, Pl. § 66, p. 190, § 74, p. 194.

There may be faults in a plaintiff to a certain extent, and yet not to such an extent as to prevent his recovering.

Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 27 Conn. 412, 71 Am. Dec. 78.

Messrs. John W. Alling, James T. Moran, and Seymour C. Loomis for appellees.

Hall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It was not unlawful for both defendants to use the same poles. Such joint use was with the consent of both companies, and with the consent of the municipal authorities. It has not been shown to be necessarily attended with increased danger. By reducing the number of poles, the highway is used with greater convenience. Full control of the location of such wires and structures is given to the local authorities by § 8946 of the General Statutes, and § 8 of chapter 169 of the Public Acts of 1893.

The court has found that the defendant telephone company was not negligent. This is a question of fact which it has been repeatedly held cannot be reviewed by this court upon an appeal, unless it appears that the trial court did not apply the correct standard of duty in reaching its conclusion, or violated some rule or principle of law applicable to the facts as found. McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 445; Dundon v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 67 Conn. 266; Sprague v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 68 Conn. 345, 37 L. R. A. 638. The degree of care and duty imposed by law was apparently applied to the defendant telephone company by the trial court in testing its conduct in regard to negligence. Neither its conclusion from the facts found, nor any ruling of the court during the trial, indicates that it did not charge the telephone company with its legal duty as to providing for its employees a reasonably safe place and reasonably safe tools and appliances for their work, and competent collaborators. But it is said that this rule imposed upon the telephone company, as a matter of law, the duty of inspecting and testing the guy wires or the circuit breakers of the electric railroad company, and that it is apparent that that duty was not placed upon the telephone company by the trial court. There is no such absolute requirement of law. Whether the employer or employee should discharge such duty must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. In many instances either may properly perform that work, and in some cases who should perform that duty is a question of fact, to be determined by a variety of circumstances, such as the nature of the task of inspection, the skill, opportunity, and means of the workman to properly do it, and the terms of the contract of employment. McGorty v. Southern N. E. Teleph. Co. 69 Conn. 635.

The facts found in the present case clearly show, and the court held, that when, in the performance of the work in which they were engaged, it became necessary to handle a wire of the electric railroad company, or when a contact with such wire was likely to occur, the duty devolved upon the servant, and not upon the master, to first ascertain whether such wire was charged with electricity. As to the negligence of the electric railroad company, the trial court has not decided adversely to the plaintiff. The extent of the injury having been shown, the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment for substantial damages against the defendant who should fail to show either that it was not negligent as alleged, or that the injury was the result of the contributory negligence of the deceased. Sprague v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 68 Conn. 345, 37 L. R. A. 638. In its effort to show that it was free from fault, the defendant electric railroad company failed. From the facts found, the trial court evidently, and we think justly, concluded that the electric railroad company, "in the construction and operation of the appliances" for using in the public streets an agency so dangerous to human life, did not take the required precautions for the safe treatment of such an agency, and "for providing against all dangers incident to its use." McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 445. But, unless the court erred in holding that Delaney was guilty of contributory negligence, the plaintiff would gain nothing by a decision that both the defendants were negligent. That is the controlling question in the case, and, unless the ruling of the court below upon that point ought to be reversed, it seems unnecessary to consider the other questions raised by plaintiff's counsel.

The complaint alleges that it was not Delaney's "business" to know the unsafe condition of the guy or span wire. It is found by the court "that in doing work which is dangerous by reason of the possible contact of the telephone wires with the highly charged wires of the street-railway or other companies [and this, the record shows, is work which the linemen of the telephone company are frequently required to perform], the linemen do their own testing," that they know that there are no others employed by the telephone company to do such testing, and that they are supplied with suitable appliances for testing such wires. Delaney was an experienced lineman, acquainted with the duties and dangers of his employment. As against the telephone company, his negligent failure to perform one of the duties of his employment must defeat a recovery for an injury caused by such failure. The relation of Delaney to the electric railroad company was different. As he was not their employee, he was under no contract duty to test their wires or circuit breakers. Under different circumstances, he might have assumed that the electric railroad company was performing its duty, and using suitable and safe appliances to prevent the escape of electricity from the main or trolley wire to the guy wires. But when the accident happened he knew, as an experienced lineman, that such was not the fact, and that it was unsafe to act upon such a belief. He had been expressly warned of the danger of a contact with wires of this kind. Two instances upon this same work of damages caused by the escape of electricity to the telephone wires by reason of defective circuit breakers had been called to his attention, and a fellow workman, but a day or two before this accident, pointed out to him this particular guy wire as one from which he had himself just received a shock. With such knowledge, and after such warning, Delaney heedlessly pulled the wire which he was coiling, from the arm of the telephone pole, in such a manner that it would obviously fall, as it did, upon the guy wire, and when, as the court finds, it would have been easy for him to have thrown the wire from the pole so as to avoid contact with the dangerous guy wire. The defendant electric railroad company can be only liable in this action for an injury caused by its negligence to one who was himself in the exercise of ordinary care. Its negligence did not excuse Delaney from exercising such care to avoid an injury. Applying that test to the conduct of Delaney, namely, the care which a person of ordinary prudence and judgment should have exercised under similar circumstances,—and we have no reason to think that any different standard was applied,—the trial court has found that he was not in the exercise of due care, as alleged in the complaint, and that his negligence essentially contributed to cause his injury. This conclusion of the court is final. Peltier v. Bradley, D. & C. Co. 67 Conn. 42, 32 L. R. A. 651. Were it reviewable, we should say that it was fully sustained by the facts found.

The action of the court in receiving the evidence offered to prove a discharge by the plaintiff, before he was appointed administrator, of the cause of action against the telephone company, could not have harmed the plaintiff. The court very properly refused to hold that the facts proved constituted a release. Cadden v. Fletcher, 4 Mees & W. 378; Taylor v. Moore, 47 Conn. 278. Had the court held that such facts constituted a release of the alleged cause of action, the record shows that, by reason of the contributory negligence of Delaney there was no cause of action which could have been discharged.

Manifestly the plaintiff was not prejudiced by the rulings of the court in permitting the hypothetical question to Boynton, in admitting the notice which had been served upon the electric railroad company, and in excluding proof of the declarations of Butler. We think these rulings can be sustained, but assuming that they were erroneous, as the plaintiff's right to recover beyond nominal damages is defeated by Delaney's contributory negligence, and as these rulings could not have affected the trial or decision of that question, the plaintiff was not injured thereby, and we have no occasion to discuss them further.

We have considered all the questions which we think are involved in the rulings and decision of the court below. At least twenty of the twenty-seven reasons of appeal assigned seem to be unnecessary for the proper presentation of those questions in this court.

There is no error

The other Judges concur.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Christ M. DAHNKE, Plff. in Err., vs.

PEOPLE of the State of Illinois.

(168 ILL. 102.)

1. Locking the door of a court room during the adjournment of court, and refusing to allow the judge of the court and his officers and the parties to the suit on hearing before him to enter the court room at the time to which court was adjourned, are a contempt of court.
2. An assignment of the different court rooms in the court-house to the different judges of the courts of record is not within the power of the county board under statutes requiring the board to provide a court-house and proper rooms and offices for the accommodation of such courts, but it rests with the judges of the courts to arrange among themselves how they will occupy the several court rooms provided by the board.
3. The power to manage county affairs, given to the county board by Const. 1870, art. 10, § 7, does not include the power to assign court rooms to the different judges of the courts of record.
4. The custody and care of the court-house and jail, given to the sheriff by Rev. Stat. chap. 125, § 14, is a limitation of the provision of chap. 34, § 25, giving to the county board the care and custody of all the real estate owned by the county.
5. The custody of a court-house which the sheriff, as the court's executive officer, has, is the custody and care of the building as a court-house, while as real estate simply, it is in the care and custody of the county board, which controls the title and keeps it in repair.

(November 1, 1897.)

ERROR to the Appellate Court, First District, to review a judgment affirming the judgment of the Superior Court for Cook County fining defendant for contempt. Affirmed.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

This was a proceeding against the plaintiff

NOTE.—As to the power of courts to provide necessary places and equipment for their business, see Vigo County Comrs. v. Stout (Ind.) 22 L. R. A. 308; also White County Comrs. v. Gwin (Ind.) 22 L. R. A. 402.

As to lease of rooms in court-house, see State, Scott, v. Hart (Ind.) 33 L. R. A. 118.
39 L. R. A.

in error in the superior court of Cook county for contempt in interfering with the use of one of the court-rooms in the court-house of Cook county by Judge Henry V. Freeman, one of the judges of the superior court of said county. Notice was given to plaintiff in error of an application for a writ of attachment for criminal contempt, based upon an affidavit showing the facts in regard to such interference. A writ of attachment was issued, and plaintiff in error was arrested. On December 8, 1894, an order of court was entered, showing that the sheriff had brought plaintiff in error into court, and ordering that the attorney for the people should forthwith file interrogatories to be propounded to the plaintiff in error. Such interrogatories were filed, and answers thereto made by the plaintiff in error. Upon filing such answers, plaintiff in error moved to be discharged as purged of contempt. The court found plaintiff in error guilty of contempt, and overruled the motion for discharge, and fined him $50, and ordered that he stand committed to the custody of the sheriff until the fine was paid. The judgment imposing this fine was taken by writ of error to the appellate court, and there affirmed. The present writ of error was then sued out from this court for the purpose of reviewing such judgment of affirmance entered by the appellate court.

The facts as they appear from the affidavits filed and the answers to the interrogatories are substantially as follows: It appears that, since 1891, the board of county commissioners of Cook county has assumed control of the court-house in that county, and appointed a custodian therefor. The plaintiff in error was, at the time of the contempt charged against him, holding the position of such custodian. There are a number of court rooms in the court-house in said county, prepared for the use of the judges of the superior and circuit courts of Cook county, who are of equal dignity, and have the same jurisdiction. There are about twenty-three of such judges who hold court in said court rooms; and, in view of the number of judges and the limited number of court rooms, it has happened that there is not a sufficient number of court rooms in the court-house to accommodate said judges with separate court rooms. Hence there are times when some one or more of said judges are without court rooms in said court-house. It appears that the county board have assumed to assign the court rooms in the court-house to the various judges of said courts. On September 17, 1894, Judge McConnell, of the circuit court, who had been occupying court room No. 421, left that room for the purpose of holding criminal court in the criminal-court building, which is a separate building from that in which the civil courts are held. Upon such vacation of the room by Judge McConnell, Judge Freeman, of the superior court of Cook county, took possession of said room 421, although the same had not been assigned to him by the county board, and occupied it for the purpose of holding his court therein, and continued so to occupy it until November 5, 1894, when the occurrences hereinafter mentioned took place. In the meantime, and on October 15, 1894, the county board assigned said room 421 to Judge Windes, of the circuit court, room 207 to Judge Haency, of the circuit court, and room 327 to Judge Freeman, of the superior court to be used by him temporarily, until another judge, who was holding criminal court, should return from the criminal-court building to take up his civil docket. Before the order of October 15 was entered by the county board, and on or about October 1, 1894, Judge McConnell resigned his position as judge in the circuit court. On November 5, 1894, Judge Freeman was holding court in the court room No. 421, and hearing a chancery cause therein. On the evening of that day, by order entered of record, he adjourned said court until 10 o'clock a. m. on November 7, 1894; November 6 having been the day of the general election. When court adjourned, the files in the cause on hearing, and in other causes pending in said court, as well as the memoranda and papers of the judge, were in said court room No. 421. In the interval between the adjournment of the court on the evening of November 5 and the hour of 10 o'clock on the morning of November 7 the plaintiff in error, acting under the directions of the county board, changed the locks on the doors of said court room 421; and on the morning of November 7 refused to permit Judge Freeman, and the sheriff and his bailiffs attending the court, and the attorneys, parties, and witnesses interested in the cause on hearing, to enter said court-room. By this conduct the judge, and the officers of his court, and the witnesses, attorneys, and parties interested in the cause on hearing, although in attendance and ready to proceed with such cause, were unable to gain admission to the court-room. The plaintiff in error, acting under such order of the county board, declared that the session of said court should not be held in the said room. The plaintiff in error, as custodian as aforesaid, had been directed by the county board to remove the property of Judge Freeman from room 421, and turn over said room 421 to another judge. In view of this conduct of plaintiff in error as such custodian, the bailiffs in attendance upon Judge Freeman's court threatened to break into said court room; and thereupon the plaintiff in error unlocked the doors thereof, and allowed such bailiffs to take possession until he could report to the county board, and ask further instructions.

39 L. R. A.

Mr. Robert S. Iles, for plaintiff in error:

In order to sustain the charge of contempt upon the record, it must appear that the acts complained of were committed against the lawful authority of the court and in defiance of the power vested in the court by law.

The power to punish for contempt is not an arbitrary power to be used for all purposes, and can only be exercised in cases where the act of offense is committed against the court as a court, and where such act weakens, or tends to weaken, or to destroy, the power of the court to enforce the law or to administer justice.

Any act directed against the court as a court and in defiance of its lawful authority, which defeats or tends to defeat the objects for which the court is established and maintained, is contempt of court, and no other act or class of acts can be so construed.

The act complained of did not and does not tend to defeat the purposes and objects for which the said court was established.

The act complained of was not directed against the court as a court, and was not in defiance of the court's lawful authority.

The record shows that the sheriff at that time was not the de facto custodian, and was not recognized as such by either the judges or the county board, and that he did not assume to exercise any of the functions of that office.

The sheriff, under the Constitution of this state and the statutes enacted thereunder, is not, and was not at that time, de jure or the legal custodian of the court-house for the purposes involved in this cause, to wit: he was not the legal custodian for the purpose of furnishing court-rooms, caring for, repairing, or controlling the use of the building.

Const. art. 10, § 7; Rev. Stat. chap. 34, § 24.

Mr. S. P. Shope, for defendant in error:

It is the duty of the county authorities under the statute (§ 27, chap. 34, 1 Starr & C. 655), to erect or otherwise provide, "and keep in repair, a suitable court-house, . . . and to provide proper rooms and offices for the accommodation of the several courts of record of the county, and for the county board, county clerk, . . . and the clerk of said courts, and to provide suitable furniture therefor."

People, Bull. v. La Salle County Supers. 84 Ill. 303.

The duty to provide suitable rooms for the accommodation of the several courts of record in no way carries with it the power to designate what particular judge shall occupy any particular room.

The power to make an assignment of rooms among the judges, and to designate what particular rooms shall be occupied by the judges, severally, is not conferred by law upon the county board.

Const. of 1870, art. 10, § 7; Andrews v. Knox County Supers. 70 Ill. 69; People, Bull. v. La Salle County Supers. 84 Ill. 303.

The board of county commissioners can exercise only such powers as are given by law, or such as arise by necessary implication from the grant, or are indispensable to carry into effect the objects and purposes of the corporation which they represent.

Cook County v. Gilbert, 146 Ill. 274.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The first question which arises in this case is this: Was the conduct of the plaintiff in error in locking the door of the court room during the period of adjournment, and refusing to allow the judge of the court, and his officers, and the parties to the suit on hearing before him, to enter the court room, a contempt? In Stuart v. People, 4 Ill. 395, we held that the power was inherent in every court of justice to defend itself when attacked just as much as the individual man has a right to defend himself for his own preservation; and we also there held that in the power to punish for contempt are necessarily "included all acts calculated to impede, embarrass, or obstruct the court in the administration of justice. Such acts would be considered as done in the presence of the court." The doctrine of the Stuart Case was reaffirmed in People v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 195, 16 Am. Rep. 528. The conduct of the plaintiff in error was certainly such as was calculated to obstruct the court in the administration of justice. Rapalje, in his work on Contempt (at § 22), classifies, among contempts which are direct, those which are committed within the presence of the court while in session, "or so near to the court as to interrupt its proceedings." It is true that the acts of the plaintiff in error were not performed while the court was actually in session; but, having been performed during the brief adjournment of the court from one session to another, and having had the effect of preventing the judge of the court from gaining access to his court room, they may be regarded as being so near to the court as to interrupt its proceedings. "Courts of justice have an inherent power to punish all persons for contempt of their rules and orders, for disobedience of their process, or for disturbing them in their proceedings." 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 780. There can be no doubt that the conduct of plaintiff in error here disturbed and interfered with the court in its proceedings, and while it was engaged in the administration of justice. Contempt of court is a despising of the authority, justice, or dignity of the court. He is guilty of such contempt whose conduct is such as "tends to bring the authority and administration of the law into disrespect or disregard, or to interfere with or prejudice parties litigant, or their witnesses during the litigations." Oswald, Contempt of Court, pp. 3, 4. "Any conduct which is calculated to interfere with the proceedings, by assailing litigants or witnesses within the precincts of the court, or preventing or hindering, or endeavoring to prevent or hinder, them in their access to the court or otherwise, is a contempt." Id. p. 27. It has been said that the power of the court in the matter of contempt cannot be defined within any limits, and that the primary question in all cases of alleged contempt is "whether there has or has not been an interference or an attempt to interfere with the due administration of justice." Id. p. 70. Applying the definition of "contempt" as thus laid down to the facts of this case, we are of the opinion that there was here a contempt of court, which the judge was justified in punishing, if the facts hereinafter set forth do not constitute a sufficient excuse or justification for the conduct of the plaintiff in error.

2. It is claimed that the county board had a right to assign the different court rooms in the court-house to the different judges of the circuit and superior courts of Cook county; that each one of such judges was bound to occupy the particular court room so assigned to him; that room 421, though in the actual occupancy of Judge Freeman, had, while he was so occupying it, been assigned to another judge; that Judge Freeman had been assigned to occupy court room 327; that, therefore, the county board had the right and power to order plaintiff in error, as their custodian, to remove Judge Freeman's property from room 421 to room 327, and to prevent his access to room 421; and that, inasmuch as plaintiff in error was merely acting under orders of the county board, he was justified in doing what he did.

We know of no law or statute, and have been referred to none, which authorizes the board of county commissioners of Cook county to assign the court rooms in the court-house in that county to particular judges. Section 26 of the act of March 31, 1874, "to revise the law in relation to counties," provides as follows: "It shall be the duty of the county board of each county: First.—To erect or otherwise provide when necessary, and the finances of the county will justify it, and keep in repair, a suitable court-house, jail, and other necessary county buildings, and to provide proper rooms and offices for the accommodation of the several courts of record of the county, and for the county board, county clerk, county treasurer, recorder, sheriff, and the clerks of said courts, and to provide suitable furniture therefor." 1 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. p. 1089. Section 4 of the act of February 16, 1874, "to revise the law in relation to circuit courts and the superior court of Cook county," provides as follows: "If there is no court-house in the county, or if from any cause the court-house is unfit for the holding of court therein, the proper authorities of the county may temporarily provide another place at the county seat for the holding of court, or the court, by order entered upon its records, may adjourn to a suitable place at such county seat, and the place so provided, or to which such adjournment is made, shall, during the time the court is so held thereat, be held to be the court-house of such county for all judicial purposes connected with such court." Id. p. 1157. Under these provisions of the statute it is the duty of the county board to erect and keep in repair a suitable court-house, and to provide rooms therein for the accommodation of the several courts of record of the county. When the board has provided rooms for the accommodation of the courts, the rooms so provided are then in the possession and under the control of the courts and their officers. If there are a number of court rooms in any court-house, the duty of the board is discharged when it turns over such court rooms to the judges of the courts. It rests with the judges of the courts to arrange among themselves how they will occupy the several court rooms thus provided for them by the county board. The county board has no right to dictate to the judges as to what particular room each judge shall occupy. To make the judges of our courts depend upon a legislative or political body for the rooms in which they shall hold their sessions, in the manner indicated in this record, would be to destroy the dignity and independence of the judiciary. A county board, having such a power of assignment, would be tempted to assign the best court rooms to its favorites among the judges, and would thus be enabled to put the judiciary under obligations to themselves. The judiciary should be free from obstruction by county boards; it should be independent in all matters relating to the execution of judicial functions. There is danger that such independence will be sacrificed, if the judges are not allowed free access to their court rooms and control over the same during the sessions of the court, and during its necessary seasons of adjournment. Whenever it happens that there are not rooms enough to accommodate all the judges, then such a state of things exists as is described in the following words of the statute above quoted: "If there is no court-house in the county, or if from any cause the court-house is unfit for the holding of court therein." It is then the duty of the county board to provide another place or places at the county seat for the holding of court by the judges who are thus without suitable court rooms. Section 7 of article 10 of the Constitution of 1870 provides that "the county affairs of Cook county shall be managed by a board of commissioners of fifteen persons, ten of whom shall be elected from the city of Chicago, and five from towns outside of said city, in such manner as may be provided by law." The power to manage the county affairs of Cook county, as thus conferred by the Constitution, in no way includes the power to assign court rooms to the different judges of the courts of record in such manner as is claimed in this case. The power to so manage is such power as is provided by law, and therefore such power as is specified, so far as the present subject is concerned, in the statutes already quoted.

Reference, however, is made by counsel for plaintiff in error to §§ 24 and 25 of chapter 84 of the Revised Statutes in relation to counties. Said § 24 provides as follows: "Each county shall have power: First—To purchase and hold the real and personal estate necessary for the uses of the county, and to purchase and hold, for the benefit of the county, real estate sold by virtue of judicial proceedings in which the county is plaintiff. Second—To sell and convey or lease any real or personal estate owned by the county. Third—To make all contracts and do all other acts in relation to the property and concerns of the county, necessary to the exercise of its corporate powers." 1 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. p. 1085. Said § 25 provides as follows: "The county boards of the several counties shall have power: First—To take and have the care and custody of all the real and personal estate owned by the county. Second—To manage the county funds and county business, except as otherwise specifically provided." Id. p. 1086. It is contended on behalf of plaintiff in error that inasmuch as under §§ 24 and 25 the county board has the power to purchase and hold the real and personal estate of the county, and to take and have the care and custody of all such real and personal estate, it therefore has the right to have the care and custody of the court-house and all the court rooms therein. But § 14 of chapter 125 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to sheriffs, provides that the sheriff "shall have the custody and care of the court-house and jail of his county, except as is otherwise provided." 3 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. p. 3768. The act in regard to counties is general in its terms, and provides for the care and custody by the counties of all the real estate belonging to the county. The act, however, in regard to sheriffs, specifically provides that the sheriff shall have the care and custody of the court-house. The two acts, the one in regard to counties, and the other in regard to sheriffs, were passed at the same session of the legislature in 1874. It is a well-settled rule of construction that, where there are two provisions, one of which is general and designed to apply to cases generally, and another is particular and relating only to one subject, the particular provision must prevail, and must be treated as an exception to the general provision: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 148 Ill. 141; People, Herdman, v. Rose, 166 Ill. 422. Hence it would seem to follow that, while the county board is entitled to the general care and custody over the ownership of the real estate belonging to the county, so far as to hold the title thereto, and preserve the evidence of title, and so far as it is necessary to erect and keep in repair the buildings thereon, yet, after the particular court rooms in a court-house have been provided for the judges, the possession thereof is in the hands and under the control of the courts themselves, and the care and custody thereof rightfully belong to the sheriff, as the executive officer of the courts. If the general provision in the act in regard to counties entitles the board of county commissioners to have the custody and care of the court-house, then it cannot be otherwise construed than as giving the county board the power to have the care and custody of the jail, because § 14 of the act in regard to sheriffs couples the custody and care of the court-house with the custody and care of the jail. One of the common-law powers of the sheriff is that he shall be custodian of the county jail. 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 525. The Constitution of this state provides for the election of sheriffs. Const. art. 10, § 8. Sheriffs, as elected under the Constitution, have the same powers with which they were clothed at common law. Murfree, in his work on Sheriffs (chap. 2, § 42), says: "The very name and office of sheriff implies the possession by that functionary of all the powers, and the obligation to perform all the duties, of a common-law sheriff, except so far as those powers and duties may have been modified by state Constitutions or constitutional statutes." The same author also says: "When the office of sheriff is a constitutional office in any state, recognized and designated eo nomine, by the Constitution, as a part of the machinery of the state government, the sheriff, ex vi termini, must possess in that state, all the substantial powers appertaining to the office by common law. It is competent for the state legislature to impose upon him new duties growing out of public policy or convenience, but it cannot strip him of his time-honored and common-law functions, and devolve them upon the incumbents of other offices created by legislative authority." Id. § 41. It has accordingly been held that the legislature cannot transfer to other officers elected by the board of supervisors the power of the sheriff to have the custody and control of the jail and the prisoners therein, when the Constitution provides for the election of sheriffs, without designating what their powers shall be. State, Kennedy, v. Brunst, 26 Wis. 412, 7 Am. Rep. 84; People, McEwan, v. Keeler, 29 Hun. 175. It being true, therefore, that the general provision in the act in regard to counties, giving the care and custody of all the real estate of the county to the county board, cannot have the effect of transferring to that board the care and custody of the jail, it must also appear to be true that it could not have the effect of transferring to the county board the care and custody of the court-house.

This conclusion receives indorsement from several other considerations. In the first place, § 38 of chapter 27, in regard to "counties and county commissioners' courts," of the act of March 3, 1845, provided as follows: "The county commissioners of said counties shall have the care and custody of said court-houses." Ill. Rev. Stat. 1845, p. 135. Section 7 of the act of March 3, 1845, in regard to sheriffs and coroners, also provided as follows: "It shall be the duty of the sheriff of each county to attend all circuit courts and courts of county commissioners in his county at the terms and sessions of such courts; and he shall have the custody and care of the court-house and jail." Ill. Rev. Stat. 1845, p. 515. These two statutes of 1845, passed on the same day, would seem to conflict with each other, as one gives to the county commissioners the care and custody of the court-house, while the other gives to the sheriff the care and custody of the court-house and jail. We need not stop to advance any theory for the purpose of reconciling these two statutes of 1845. It is sufficient to say that, in 1874, when the legislature adopted a new revision of the statutes, it left out that provision of the act of March 3, 1845, in relation to counties, which specifically gave the care of the court-house to the county commissioners, and merely provided, in general terms, that the county boards should have the care and custody of all the real estate owned by the county without specifically mentioning court-houses. At the same time, while it adopted this general provision in regard to counties, it adopted the specific provision which gave the custody of the court-house to the sheriff. In the second place, § 24 of the act in regard to sheriffs provides as follows: "When a sheriff goes out of office he shall deliver to his successor all writs, process, papers, and property attached or levied upon, except such as he is authorized by law to retain, and also the possession of the court-house and jail of his county, and shall take from his successor a receipt," etc. 3 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. p. 8770. Here is a provision which directs the sheriff specifically when he goes out of office to deliver the possession of the court-house to his successor. No other inference is possible than that, during his term of office, he was to have the possession of that which, at the close of such term, he was to deliver over to his successor. If, therefore, the sheriff is entitled to hold possession of the court-house, it would seem to follow that the county board has no right to such possession, except in the manner already specified. We have held that the county board can exercise such powers only as are expressly given by law, or such as arise by necessary implication from the powers granted, or are indispensable to carry into effect the objects and purposes of the creation of the municipal corporation. Cook County v. Gilbert, 146 Ill. 274. Hence we are inclined to concur with the view expressed by Judge Freeman in deciding this case in the court below, as follows: "As real estate simply, the court-house is in the care and custody of the county board. As a court-house it is in the custody and care of the sheriff. As real estate the county board controls the title, and keeps the building and its furniture in repair. As a court-house the sheriff, who is himself an officer of court, guards and cares for it. Should the building cease to be a court-house, it would revert to the care and custody of the county board like the other real estate. . . . The custody of the court-house by the sheriff is the custody of an officer of the courts, who is subject to their control. In other words, it is the custody of the courts themselves. . . . The sheriff himself has no power to control the use of the court rooms by the courts or judges thereof. His custody and care cannot be construed to include the power of dictating to the courts what special court rooms they shall occupy. This matter rests with the courts themselves, as a matter of inherent power, not with the sheriff even, and certainly not with the county board." [27 Chicago Legal News, 140]. The same doctrine is also well expressed by Mr. Justice Shepard of the appellate court, in deciding this case, in the following words: "The custody and control which the county board is entitled to exercise under the authority of the Constitution and statutes are such as attach to and flow from the ownership of the court-house by the county; those of the sheriff are such as attach to and flow from the inherent powers and duties of his office at common law, and as recognized by the Constitution and declared by the statutes as the attendant upon the court and as the court's executive officer." 57 Ill. App. 619.

89 L. R. A.

For the reasons herein stated the judgments of the Appellate Court and of the Superior Court of Cook County are affirmed.

V. H. GIBSON et al.

v.

SAFETY HOMESTEAD & LOAN ASSOCIATION,

John R. CHALLACOMBE, Intervener, Plff. in Err.

(170 Ill. 44.)

1. Notice of withdrawal from an insolvent loan association does not entitle members to priority of payment over their fellow stockholders.

2. The illegality of an issue of paid-up stock by a building and loan association cannot be asserted by stockholders who have taken it and paid for it in order to place themselves in a better position with respect to other stockholders, who do not question its validity, than they would be if the stock had been valid.

(Phillips, Ch. J., dissents.)

(November 8, 1897.)

ERROR to the Appellate Court, Third District, to review a judgment affirming a decree of the Circuit Court for Montgomery County ordering a distribution of the assets of the Safety Homestead & Loan Association which were in the hands of a receiver, John J. McLean. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Howett & Jett and James M. Truitt, for plaintiff in error:

Nowhere in the act authorizing the organization of associations similar to that which defendant in error represents is the issue of such stock known as paid-up stock authorized or permitted.

Rhodes v. Missouri Sav. & Loan Co. Ottawa Sup. Ct. Oct. 1896; see 63 Ill. App. 77; Murray v. Scott, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 519.

The holders of paid-up stock should have been considered to be preferred creditors for an amount in excess of the sum for which they would have been liable for monthly dues as the holders of common stock.

Paid-up stockholders who had given thirty days' notice of withdrawal should have been declared to be preferred creditors.

Walton v. Edge, L. R. 10 App. Cas. 38; United States Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Silverman, 85 Pa. 394; Wetterwulph v. Knickerbocker Bldg. Assn. 2 Bosw. 381.

Messrs. Lane & Cooper, for defendant in error:

A stockholder by giving thirty days' notice on an insolvent association cannot cease to be a member thereof and thereby become a creditor and be entitled to priority of payment.

Re Sunderland 36th Universal Bldg. Soc. L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 394; Strohen v. Franklin Sav. Fund & L. Assn. 115 Pa. 278; Christian's Appeal, 102 Pa. 154; Thomp. Bldg. Assn. 67; Endlich, Bldg. Assn. 2d ed. § 108; Chapman v. Young, 65 Ill. App. 181.

All parties purchased stock in this association in good faith, and, without the fault of any of said stockholders so far as this record discloses, the society failed; now it is sought to cast the entire loss on the holders of common stock.

The holders of paid-up stock have no equity to make such a demand, nor do we think the court has any power to grant it.

Criswell's Appeal, 100 Pa. 488; People v. Love, 117 N. Y. 175; Knoblanck v. Robert Blum Bldg. & L. Assn. 25 Pittsb. L. J. 39; Toivle v. American Bldg. & L. Assn. 75 Fed. Rep. 938.

The funds of an insolvent association should be administered by the court between stockholders upon principles of equity, and to the end that all members should equally and mutually bear their just proportion of the losses sustained in the course of the life of the society.

Chapman v. Young, 65 Ill. App. 181.

The holders of preferred stock are not creditors but members of the corporation.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 611.

Withdrawing members of an insolvent building association are not entitled to priority.

42 Cent. L. J. 374; Thomp. Bldg. Assn. 67; Heinbokel v. National Sav. Loan & Bldg. Assn. 58 Minn. 340, 25 L. R. A. 215.

It may be true that this association had no power to issue paid-up stock and sell the same to the plaintiffs in error. But that question cannot now be raised either by the association or the parties who purchased the stock.

Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 413, 7 Am. Rep. 656.

The holders of paid-up stock assented to the acts of the association for they were chargeable with a knowledge of the law at the time that the corporation had no power to issue paid-up stock if such is the fact.

They are estopped by their own acts, as the association is estopped from claiming it had no power to issue such stock.

Kadiash v. Garden City Equitable Loan & Bldg. Assn. 151 Ill. 538; 2 Parsons, Contr. 790.

The plea of ultra vires must fail.

2 Beach, Priv. Corp. §§ 424 et seq.; Chicago Bldg. Soc. v. Crowell, 65 Ill. 459; Heims Brewing Co. v. Flannery, 137 Ill. 318.

Members are chargeable with notice of the charter and by-laws of the association.

Citizens' Sav. Bldg. & L. Soc. v. Ruhl, 55 Ill. App. 70; Manufacturers' & M. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Gent, 13 Ill. App. 308.

The plaintiffs in error voluntarily purchased the stock without any fraud or false representations, and during the life of the association accepted interest on such stock, and they cannot now question its validity.

Bloomington Mut. Ben. Assn. v. Blue, 120 Ill. 128, 60 Am. Rep. 558; Criswell's Appeal, 100 Pa. 488.

Wilkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the appellate court of the third district confirming an order of distribution in the circuit court of Montgomery county in the matter of the Safety Homestead & Loan Association. The order of the circuit court is as follows: "The court finding from reports of John J. McLean, receiver, that there is sufficient money in the re-

NOTE.—As to withdrawals from building and loan associations, see note to Englehardt v. Fifth Ward Permanent Dime Sav. & L. Assn. (N. Y.) 85 L. R. A. 220.

39 L. R. A.

ceiver's hands to pay a dividend of 25 per cent to shareholders, and still leave enough money in the receiver's hands to pay taxes and other expenses of administration of said estate, orders, adjudges, and decrees that the receiver may pay a dividend of 25 per cent to all shareholders of said association in the following manner: First. Receiver is ordered to pay, from any money in his hands as receiver, a dividend of 25 per cent among all shareholders, irrespective of withdrawals of paid-up stock, as follows: The principal sum upon which dividends shall be paid to holders of common stock shall be the total amount of monthly instalments paid by the several shareholders of such stock, with 6 per cent interest on the several instalments, computed according to the average time of monthly payments from date of payment to April 23, 1895. Second. The principal sum on which dividends shall be paid shareholders of paid-up stock shall be the total amount paid by the several shareholders of such stock, with 6 per cent interest from date association failed to pay 6 per cent interest on said stock to April 23, 1895. Third. Borrowing shareholders shall be credited with amount of dividends payable on their shares when they pay off their loan to said receiver, but the credit shall be as of the date when dividends are paid to nonborrowing shareholders. Fourth. Receiver shall only pay dividends to persons by stock books as owners of stock on which dividends are paid. Fifth. Dividends shall only be paid upon presentation of certificates of shares to receiver at time dividends are paid for indorsement, or credit thereon of amount paid."

Two objections are urged against this order: First, that it gives stockholders who had served notice of withdrawal upon the association no preference or advantage over stockholders who had not given such notice; and, second, that it treats those who are called "paid-up stockholders" the same as all others.

It is not denied, but fully appears from the record, that, at the time notice of withdrawal was given by the stockholders now claiming the benefit of such notice, the association was insolvent. The decree of the circuit court very properly gave such stockholder no advantage over the common stockholders. Notice of withdrawal from an insolvent society does not entitle members to priority of payment over their fellow stockholders. Endlich, Bldg. Asso. 2d ed. § 108; Chapman v. Young, 65 Ill. App. 131, and cases cited.

The second point is a novel one. It seems that the association issued to certain persons what is called paid-up stock. The form of the certificate is as follows:

This is to certify that —, of —, is the owner of — shares of the — series, dated —, of the prepaid capital stock of the Safety Homestead and Loan Association of East St. Louis, Ill., having therefor paid the sum of $50.00 per share in advance, transferable only on the books in person or by attorney upon surrender of this certificate, and is entitled to the dividends and is subject to the conditions printed on the back of this certificate and the constitution and by-laws of the association.

39 L. R. A.

The certificate bore the following indorsement: "The stock represented by this certificate is entitled to semiannual dividend of 3 per cent on amount paid therefor, which will be deducted from profits earned on stock, balance being credited on stock represented by this certificate. When amount to credit of stock equals $100 per share, stock is matured; and holder may withdraw same by surrender of this certificate, properly indorsed, and receive $100 per share therefor. Holder may surrender stock by giving thirty days' notice any time after one year, and receive full amount paid and portion of profits equal to earned and unpaid dividends thereon. Board of directors reserved right to call in, cancel, and pay off certificates any time by giving person to whom issued thirty days' notice by mail at post last known, and by paying him withdrawal value. After expiration of such notice, stock represented by this certificate will not be entitled to further dividends, whether presented for redemption or not."

Each of these certificates was issued upon the payment to the association of $50. The holders now say that the association had no authority under the law to issue them. In other words, they contend that a building and loan association, under the statute of this state, cannot lawfully issue paid-up stock; and from that premise they conclude that they themselves may repudiate the validity of the stock, and, to the extent of the money paid therefor, they should be treated as preferred creditors of the association. If it be true that the association had no authority of law to issue the stock, it is equally true that the holders of that stock had no right or authority of law to accept it; and, if they were claiming any benefit therefrom, other stockholders might, with propriety, question the legality of the transaction. But the holders of that stock are in the anomalous position of themselves repudiating its validity, and thereby seeking to obtain an advantage over those who are the legal stockholders of the association. It seems to us unreasonable to say that these stockholders may be allowed to assert the illegality of the action of the building association to which they themselves were parties, and at the same time, by reason of that illegality, place themselves in a better position than they would have been had their stock been valid. They bought paid-up stock. They paid for it. No one is questioning their right to the benefit of that stock, and, clearly, they cannot be heard to do so. In case the whole of this paid-up stock shall not be considered as a preferred indebtedness, plaintiffs in error ask the court to hold that the holders thereof be charged with monthly dues on the amount of their stock, from its date, so that they may be placed upon an equal footing with other stockholders as to that part, and, as to any excess, they be declared creditors of the association and paid in full. In other words, their contention is that, if the whole of their stock cannot be paid in full as a preferred indebtedness, part of it may be. Certainly, no good reason appears why the holders of paid-up stock should be entitled to any more advantage as to this excess than they would be as to the whole of the stock.

The judgment of the Appellate Court affirming the decree of the Circuit Court will be affirmed.

Boggs, J., having passed upon this case in the appellate court of the third district, took no part in the decision of the case in this court.

Phillips, Ch. J., dissenting:

I hold that a shareholder may, with the consent of the association, pay up in full for his stock, as near as the amount to be paid therefor can be estimated. In other words, he may deposit a sum of money with the association to be used by the secretary in crediting payments on the shares as the monthly dues become due. The association may allow interest on the amount deposited or paid in until required for the payment of dues. Paying in advance is nothing more than a transaction of that character. When an association fails, then, to the extent shares were paid by reason of their having become due, such shareholder paying in advance is in the same position as a shareholder who has paid his dues monthly. There is no reason why he should be in a worse position. The association has, to the extent of the money not yet used for paying dues, the money of the shareholder, which it was to apply in payment of dues, but, by reason of its failure, cannot so apply. It has the money of the shareholder, which it has not the right to retain. To such amount the association is a debtor to the shareholder, and that sum should be paid in full if there be sufficient funds to do so, and to that extent there should be a preference over dividends to shareholders. As to the amount of dues that have become due, his dividends should be the same as other shareholders,—no greater, no less. I cannot concur in this opinion.

Rehearing denied December 14, 1897.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

William MORAN, Exr., etc., of John Moran, Deceased,
v.

William D. MORAN, Impleaded, etc., Appt.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. A devise absolute in form cannot be shown by oral evidence to be in trust for other persons.
2. A bequest of money "to be divided among the Sisters of Charity," without any limitation as to locality, state, or nation, and without any provision for the exercise of discretion by the trustees, is void for uncertainty.
3. A bequest to the pastor of a specified church, "that masses may be said for me," although not a charity, creates a valid private trust.
4. A bequest for a known and lawful purpose, where the power of execution is prescribed and available, should never fail for want of a name or a legal classification, unless it is in obedience to a positive rule of law.

(December 18, 1897.)

APPEAL: by defendant, William D. Moran, from a judgment of the District Court for Dallas County upholding the provisions of the will of John Moran, deceased. Modified.

Statement by Granger, J.:

This is a proceeding asking for the construction of the will of John Moran, deceased. The will is in the following language, so far as it is important for the purpose of this proceeding: "Will of John Moran. Before these present, I will and bequeath to Patrick Moran five hundred dollars of money. I will and bequeath to William Toomey nine hundred dollars of money. I will and bequeath to Patrick Doyle three hundred dollars of money. I will and bequeath to the Catholic priest who may be pastor of the Beaver Catholic Church when this will shall be executed three hundred dollars, that masses may be said for me. I will and bequeath to my brother William five hundred dollars, and to my brother Michael fifteen hundred dollars, and to my sister, Mary Moran, five hundred dollars, and to be divided among the Sisters of Charity by William Toomey, William Moran, and Rev. H. V. Malone, five hundred dollars. And I will to William Moran, my nephew, a son of my sister, Mary, my farm."

The witnesses to the will are William Moran and William Toomey, both of whom are legatees in the will. The probate of the will was contested on the ground, among others, that the subscribing witnesses were legatees thereunder. The testator died without issue and unmarried. He left surviving him William D. and Michael and Mary Moran, as brothers and sister, who, in the absence of the will, would inherit the estate. They are defendants in this proceeding, with others, and each is a legatee under the terms of the will. After the filing of the objections to the probate of the will, William Moran, who was a legatee under, and subscribing witness to, the will, filed his answer to the objections, in which he expressly denied that he had any interest in any devise or legacy provided by the will, and alleged that the devise of the farm to him was in trust, only, for the children of his sister, Bridget Tiernan, which trust was declared by parol to the testator, and by the parol agreement on his part to accept said trust. William Toomey, the other subscribing witness, also filed his written relinquishment of any provisions of the will in his favor, and upon a hearing the will was admitted to probate. The plaintiff, as executor, institutes this proceeding, with all parties if interest as defendants, and asks the court to determine what provisions of the will are valid and should be executed. Defendant William D. Moran answers the petition, representing that the bequest of $300, that masses might be said, and also of $500, to be divided among the Sisters of Charity, are void, and also that the devise of the farm to William Moran cannot be established and treated as a trust in favor of the children of Bridget Tiernan, but that, because of the relinquishment by William Moran, the same becomes a part of the estate, for distribution among the heirs at law as if the said John Moran had died intestate. Other pleadings were filed, by other parties, presenting their respective claims for construction in accord with their interests. The district court adjudged the bequests for masses and to the Sisters of Charity valid and that the devise to William Moran, of the farm, was in trust for the children of Bridget Tiernan. The defendant William D. Moran, appealed.

NOTE.—As to validity of bequests for masses, see Festorazzi v. St. Joseph Roman Catholic Church (Ala.) 25 L. R. A. 380.
89 L. R. A.

Messrs. Robert S. Barr and Shortley & Harpel, for appellant:

Wherever the prior disposition of the property imports absolute and uncontrolled ownership, and also wherever a clear discretion and choice to act or not to act is given, equity will not construe a trust from the language employed.

Randall v. Randall, 135 Ill. 393; Jones v. Storms, 90 Iowa, 369; Richardson v. Haney, 76 Iowa, 102; Koster v. Miller, 149 Ill. 195; Van Buskirk v. Van Buskirk, 148 Ill. 9; 1 Perry, Tr. 113; Maroney v. Maroney, 97 Iowa, 711; Lantry v. Lantry, 51 Ill. 465, 2 Am. Rep. 810.

There is no fraud proved or claimed inducing the devise, hence no constructive trust, and parol evidence is incompetent to prove an express trust.

Perry, Trusts, 4th ed. § 73, p. 55; Hill, Trustees, 8d Am. ed. pp. 86, 87; Allen v. Willrow, 110 U. S. 119, 28 L. ed. 90.

Fraud, imposition, mistake in the original transaction, may constitute the purchaser or donee, a trustee ex maleficio. It is fraud then, and not subsequent fraud, if any exist, which justifies a court of equity in intervening for the relief of the party injured by it.

Patton v. Beecher, 62 Ala. 579; Manning v. Phippen, 86 Ala. 357; Brock v. Brock, 90 Ala. 86, 9 L. R. A. 290; Barr v. O'Donnell, 76 Cal. 470; Gore v. Clarke, 87 S. C. 537, 20 L. R. A. 465; 3 Redf. Wills, pp. 578, 579.

Parol evidence is not admissible to show an agreement to hold property in trust where it is conveyed by a deed absolute on its face, unless the instrument was obtained by fraud, or was made absolutely by mistake.

27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 52; Orth v. Orth, 145 Ind. 184, 32 L. R. A. 299; 1 Bigelow, Fr. 189, 190; McGinness v. Barton, 71 Iowa, 644; Andrew v. Concannon, 76 Iowa, 251; Champlin v. Champlin, 136 Ill. 809; Peterson v. Boswell, 137 Ind. 211; Moore v. Campbell, 102 Ala. 445; Martin v. Baird, 175 Pa. 540; McClain v. McClain, 57 Iowa, 187, citing Brown v. Barngrover, 82 Iowa, 208.

There can be no resulting trust in this case, for the reason that the plaintiff relies upon an express agreement.

Bispham, Eq. 80; Andrew v. Concannon, 39 L. R. A.

76 Iowa, 253; Brown v. Barngrover, 82 Iowa, 204; McClain v. McClain, 57 Iowa, 169; Keltum v. Smith, 33 Pa. 165; Barnet v. Dougherty, 32 Pa. 872; Minot v. Mitchell, 30 Ind. 228, 95 Am. Dec. 685; Acker v. Priest, 92 Iowa, 610; Dunn v. Zwilling Bros. 94 Iowa, 233; Lantry v. Lantry, 51 Ill. 465, 2 Am. Rep. 310; Tollerson v. Blackstock, 95 Ala. 510; Acker v. Priest, 92 Iowa, 610.

The alleged bequest in the will in regard to masses is invalid for the reason that it contains no element of a charitable use.

Nichols v. Allen, 130 Mass. 221, 39 Am. Rep. 445; Carter v. Balfour, 19 Ala. 829; Williams v. Pearson, 88 Ala. 307; 3 Jarman, Wills, 87, 379-490; Russell v. Allen, 107 U. S. 163, 27 L. ed. 397; Pom. Eq. Jur. 599; Owens v. Missionary Soc. of M. E. Church, 14 N. Y. 880, 67 Am. Dec. 160; Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312; Atty. Gen. v. Fishmongers' Co. 2 Beav. 168; Re Blundell's Trusts, 30 Beav. 360; Re Schouler, 134 Mass. 426.

The soul of the deceased being a use not recognized in law, and the donor and usee being the same, and not in life, the bequest should be held void.

Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312; Russell v. Allen, 107 U. S. 163, 27 L. ed. 397; Festorazzi v. St. Joseph's Catholic Church, 104 Ala. 327, 25 L. R. A. 360; Sargent v. Burdett, 96 Ga. 111; Lefevre v. Lefevre, 2 Thomp. & C. 341; Methodist Episcopal Church v. Jackson Square Evangelical Lutheran Church, 84 Md. 173; Lapage v. McNamara, 5 Iowa, 142.

Messrs. White & Clarke, for appellee:

The case is not within the statute of frauds, or of wills.

Dowd v. Tucker, 41 Conn. 208; Hooker v. Azford, 33 Mich. 453; Hoge v. Hoge, 1 Watts, 216, 26 Am. Dec. 52; Williams v. Vreeland, 29 N. J. Eq. 417.

Equity will enforce the performance of an agreement made by the defendant with a testator.

Jarman, Wills, 356; Browne, Fr. § 108; Church v. Ruland, 64 Pa. 432; Jones v. McKee, 3 Pa. 496, 45 Am. Dec. 661.

Where a gift or bequest is procured from a testator through a promise to hold the subject in whole or in part for a third person, whom the giver desires to benefit, a trust will arise ex maleficio if the promise be not fulfilled.

1 Jarman, Wills, 6th ed. Bigelow, p. 494, and notes; Russell v. Jackson, 10 Hare, 206; Tee v. Ferris, 2 Kay & J. 357; Gaither v. Gaither, 8 Md. Ch. 158; 1 Bigelow, Fr. 447; Headley v. Renner, 129 Pa. 542; Etter v. Greenwalt, 98 Pa. 422; Eyre's Appeal, 106 Pa. 184; Abbott, Trial Ev. pp. 129-150; Underhill, Ev. p. 328; Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 42, 3 Am. Rep. 418; Stickland v. Aldridge, 9 Ves. Jr. 516; Kingsman v. Kingsman, 2 Vern. 559; Barrow v. Greenough, 3 Ves. Jr. 152; Pring v. Pring, 2 Vern. 99; Chamberlain v. Agar, 2 Ves. & B. 259; Podmore v. Gunning, 7 Sim. 644; Schouler, Wills, § 586.

An extensive brief on this question will be found in note to Gore v. Clarke (S. C.) 20 L. R. A. 465.

Where property is devised to one person on his promise to hold it for the benefit of another, such a trust may be proved by parol.

Carver v. Todd, 48 N. J. Eq. 102; Rags- dale v. Ragsdale, 68 Miss. 92, 11 L. R. A. 816.

Although a devise on its face may import an absolute gift to the devisee in her own right, it is competent to show, by her written admissions, that she was to take the property in trust for herself and others.

Bromley v. Gardner, 79 Me. 246; 3 Redf. Wills, 8d ed. p. 576; 1 Redf. Wills, 8d ed. pp. 511-513; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 2d ed. § 1007.

The bequest in favor of the Sisters of Charity is a valid bequest for the reason that it was made to named trustees.

Quinn v. Shields, 62 Iowa, 140, 49 Am. Rep. 141; Phillips v. Harrow, 98 Iowa, 92; 2 Perry, Tr. §§ 781, 782; 2 Redf. Wills, pp. 401, 402, 580-584.

Testator having faith in the efficacy of masses, and no doubt regarding the provision for masses as a religious duty, there is no legal reason why the provision should not be carried out.

Rhymer's Appeal, 93 Pa. 142, 39 Am. Rep. 788, note.

Granger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We first notice the question whether or not what appears by the terms of the will to be an absolute devise to William Moran of the farm can be shown by parol evidence to be in trust for the children of Bridget Tiernan. It appears that the will was drawn by Father Malone, a Catholic priest. There were present, other than the priest and the testator, William Moran and William Toomey, who were subscribing witnesses. The situation will be best seen by quoting from the record a little of the evidence. Father Malone testified: "When I sat down, I told him now we were ready to write anything he wanted us to write; and he says to me, the very first thing, 'I want Billy, here, to take that farm, and give the benefit to those children.' I says, 'What children do you mean?' and he says, 'The Tiernan children.' We didn't understand how he wanted the title fixed—whether he wanted it left to the Tiernan children by will, or leave it to William in trust. Q. What was said by him? What did he say in reference to that? A. I stopped and hesitated quite a bit, because I didn't want to disturb the man any more than was necessary. I remember I said: 'John, you don't fix the title to that property, and, if we write it down the way you say, it would be very vague. Can't you make it clearer?' He says: 'Billy can explain it to you, if you want it.' And it seemed to worry him when I said that. I says: 'Let us drop that out until we write the rest, and leave that to the last.' When we had written the other items, I says: 'I believe we have written all but that.' He says: 'I want it left to Billy, simply.' I wrote it down, and says: 'Is that what you want?' He says: 'Yes, sir; that is it, exactly. Billy will know what to do with the children.' In order to get more information without questioning, I says: 'That is a very good idea. Some of the children are very young, and they might squander it.' He says: 'That is it, exactly. Some of them might not be as good as they might be, and, if they got any part of this property, they might squander it; and, in order to prevent it, I want him to have that title, so that he can discriminate among them as he sees fit.' And then he made the remark that it would prevent litigation, and keep it out of court." William Moran, the devisee, testified as follows: "He said he wanted to leave it to these children, for their use and benefit, and he wanted to put it in my name, so there would be no costs or court expense. For that reason it was put as it was. . . . I asked him if he had any particular choice, that he should leave more to one than to others. He said, 'No; if they were all good, he wanted them to get equal amounts, and, if there was any poor ones (that is, ones of bad character), he didn't want them to have anything. I consented I would carry out his instructions if I was permitted to do so."

While there is a claim otherwise, we think it clearly appears by parol evidence, that the testator's intention was to devise the farm to Moran only for the use and benefit of the Tiernan children. With this expression of opinion as to the sufficiency of the evidence if admissible, we may better consider the legal proposition whether, under the provisions of our statute, such evidence is competent to show the fact. It will be remembered that the devise is absolute to Moran of the farm, in the following language: "I will to William Moran, my nephew, son of my sister, Mary, my farm." Can the devise so made, by evidence like the above, be so affected, changed, or modified as to give it the effect of a devise in trust to Moran for the use and benefit of said children? Upon this question the parties are in very earnest contention; appellant saying it cannot, because of the following provision of the Code of 1873, in force at the time of the execution of the will, and of the trial of the case in the district court:

"Sec. 1934. Declarations, or creations of trusts or powers, in relation to real estate, must be executed in the same manner as deeds of conveyance; but this provision does not apply to trusts resulting from the operation or construction of law."

"Sec. 2326. All other wills, to be valid, must be in writing witnessed by two competent witnesses and signed by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his express direction."

Reliance is also placed on the statute of frauds.

Appellees maintain that the devise can be so affected, and state two propositions, either of which is said to be sufficient to support the conclusion,—first, that "the case is not within the statute of frauds or of wills," and "that it has been held universally, in such cases as the one at bar, that the statutes are inapplicable, and are not to be invoked to accomplish a fraud." A little sifting out of claims that we are disposed to disregard will tend to simplify the disposition of the question. The statute of frauds seems, by its express language, to prescribe a rule of evidence applicable to contracts; and, without any holding on the question, we may say that it is a matter of serious doubt if it was ever intended to apply to testamentary dispositions of real estate. Section 1934 of the Code of 1873, providing that "declarations or creations of trusts or powers in relation to real estate must be executed in the same manner as deeds of conveyance," is a section of a chapter on real estate, the purport of which seems to be as to transactions other than those of a testamentary nature; and, without placing any construction on the scope of either of those statutory provisions, they may be understood as in no way influencing our conclusion of this question. The statutory law that we do regard as applicable and controlling is that "Of Wills and Letters of Administration," wherein it is provided who may dispose of his property by will, and how it shall be done. After specifying the circumstances under which personal property may be disposed of by verbal will is the provision we have quoted above, that "all other wills, to be valid, must be in writing, witnessed by two competent witnesses and signed by the testator, or by some person in his presence, and by his express direction." This provision as to wills being in writing is a general, if not a universal, statutory requirement in this country; and hence judicial determinations and general rules of construction may prove valuable aids to a conclusion. Looking at the question solely in the light of our statutory language, if we permit the evidence in this case to ingraft on the will the modification sought, the effect will be to change the absolute devise to William Moran of the farm into a devise as follows: "I will to William Moran . . . my farm, in trust for the children of Bridget Tiernan." The provision established by oral evidence, and without which it could not be even thought of, entirely destroys the devise manifest from the language of the will, and makes another. Can such a devise properly be said to be in writing? From an extended examination of authorities, we are led to regard the rule as universal that the plain effect of the language as used in the will is not to be varied by external proof of what effect was really intended. Parol evidence may, indeed, be resorted to for the purpose of making intelligible in the will that which cannot without its aid be understood, or resolving a doubtful interpretation; but if the language of the will, in point of legal construction, requires one interpretation, and can be understood in that sense, evidence of intention cannot be adduced to give it another and a different interpretation. Such is the rule as stated in Schouler, Wills, § 587. Mr. Redfield, in his work on the Law of Wills (volume 3, p. 59), in a connection to make the language entirely applicable, uses this language: "The very purpose of requiring wills to be in writing would be wholly defeated if courts of equity were allowed to ingraft upon their provisions such parol trusts as seem probably to have existed in the mind of the testator." It is to be said that such a rule has general support in authority, but we are cited to a larger number of cases said to sustain the rule of appellees' contention. We cannot agree with appellees in the claim that they apply to the facts of this case. That there are authorities to the effect that where a testator, because of the fraud of a devisee, is induced to make the devise on the representation by the devisee that he will take the devise in trust for another, who was the real object of his bounty, equity will enforce the trust, is not to be questioned. See Hooker v. Azford, 38 Mich. 454; Hoge v. Hoge, 1 Watts, 216, 26 Am. Dec. 52; Dowd v. Tucker, 41 Conn. 197; Williams v. Vreeland, 29 N. J. Eq. 417; Tee v. Ferris, 2 Kay & J. 857. Numerous other cases could be cited, but it is not important to do so. In these cases—and, if there are exceptions, we have not noticed them—equity has interfered to enforce a trust on the ground of fraud, in the practice of which the devisee has, by his acts or silence, prevented the testator from, or led him to avoid, making provisions in his will which he intended; and the cases cited were not for the construction of the wills, but to declare a trust based on the fraudulent acts by which the making of the will, as intended, was prevented. The cases do not attempt to change the wills, or to construe them, but to fix obligations because of the acts of the devisee. In this case there is no claim of fraud, nor that the devisee in any way induced the devise. The will was written just as the testator desired it. He wanted Moran to have the title, and he gave it to him. He also wanted Moran to hold and use the property for specified purposes, and neglected to make any provision for it in his will, and that is what the authorities say cannot be ingrafted onto the will by oral proof. If, in this case, we sustain the trust, we must say that the testator intended by his will to create the trust, while he knew at its making, and all present knew, that he did not so intend, but he did intend verbally to create the trust. In fact, all was done as he intended to do it, but not in the way to give his intentions effect. Assuming that he knew the law, as we must, he purposely departed from its requirement to make the devise in writing. It is also to be said that the objector, who is a brother of the deceased, and urges the invalidity of the devise, had no part in, and, so far as the record discloses, had no knowledge of, the making of the will. He is in no way in fault that the will does not express the intention shown by the verbal proof. In this respect the case is unlike those in which a trust is sustained. We think the cases all expressly or impliedly guard the exercise of authority to maintain or enforce such a trust by the fact that the testator would have done what the trust is maintained for, had not fraud prevented it. That is not true of this case. It is also said by appellees that, if further writing is necessary to prove the trust, it is found in the answer of William Moran in the probate proceedings, in which he acknowledged the trust, and defined its extent. Mr. Moran is to be commended for his unselfish and faithful course in the matter, by declining so generous a bounty at the expense of a breach of confidence, but he cannot by his writing do what the testator should have done. The conditions of the will were fixed by the expressed intentions of the testator in the way provided by law. Inasmuch as William Moran has relinquished all claims under the will except such as should come from the trust sought to be shown, and as no trust can be sustained, the devise of the farm must fail; and it becomes a part of the residuary estate, to be disposed of as if no devise of it had been attempted.

2. Objection is made to the provision of the will in favor of the Sisters of Charity, which is in these words: "I will and bequeath, . . . to be divided among the Sisters of Charity by William Toomey, William Moran, and Rev. H. V. Malone, five hundred dollars." It is said that the bequest is void because of uncertainty, and we think the objection must be sustained. We do not question the rule that it is competent for a testator to bestow a charity on a person or institution to be chosen by a trustee or executor, and that such bequests will be upheld. It is an historical fact, of which we may take notice, that Sisters of Charity are general throughout the state and country. It appears in evidence that they constitute a charitable sisterhood of the Catholic Church. The provision of the will is that the bequest is to be "divided among the Sisters of Charity." If the bequest should be sustained, how would the trustees execute it? No one would say that it should be divided among all of them, for such, in reason, could not have been the intention. There is no limitation as to locality, state, or nation. We infer that appellees think the trustees may select to whom the bequest shall be given. The will does not so provide. In LePage v. McNamara, 5 Iowa, 124, with a very similar question under consideration, as to the legal proposition it is said: "If there is such uncertainty as that it cannot be known who is to take as beneficiary, the trust is void; and the heir, by operation of law, will take the estate stripped of the trust." That rule is decisive of this question. There is no attempt in argument to say who the beneficiary of this bequest is, in language less uncertain than the will itself. There is no contention that the will is sufficiently specific, if the trustees may not use a discretion, and no such right is granted. The bequest is void for uncertainty.

3. It is also urged that the provision of the will, in order that masses might be said for him, is void. The bequest is as follows: "I will and bequeath to the Catholic priest who may be pastor of the Beaver Catholic Church when this will shall be executed three hundred dollars, that masses may be said for me." The testator was a member of Beaver Catholic Church. It had a definite and known location. It is not to be doubted that the words of the bequest "when this will shall be executed" mean when the will should be carried into effect. An objection to the bequest is that it contained no elements of a charitable use. That is true, but bequests are not limited to such purposes. We must assume that the bequest was inspired by his religious convictions as to duty in the way of furthering his hopes and purposes for security and happiness hereafter. Promises and pledges made in life for the support of religious observances to the same end are usual, and supported by undoubted authority. Why is not a bequest to secure such observance after one's death, for the same purposes, valid? It is said that "the soul of the deceased being a use not recognized in law, and the donor and uses being the same, and not in life, the bequest should be held void."

It is thought that Russell v. Allen, 107 U. S. 163, 27 L. ed. 397, sustains appellant's view, but a careful examination of the case shows otherwise. The case has to do with charitable bequests, and where they are void, because the object of the charity is not so defined as that it may be known. We have in this case recognized the rule of that case in the respect stated; but, as we have said, this bequest is not a charity. It is an expenditure directed by the testator for a service promised to him, and the fact that, when the service is to be rendered, he will not be living, so as to be a beneficiary in this life, is a matter of no concern to the courts. His soul's welfare in the hereafter is a matter of his personal concern, for which, when not contravening public policy, he may act as his judgment and beliefs shall direct. It is not the province of the courts to inquire as to the soundness or reasonableness of religious beliefs, but to respect all such, and the ceremonies of their observance, wherein they do not militate against the public peace and security. The provision is little different from one for the erection of a monument after his death, or the doing of any other act that he might desire, not intended for the benefit of anyone living, but which, if living, he might lawfully do. Such bequests, if made so definitely as that the intent may be known and carried into effect, are valid. In a somewhat recent case in Alabama (Festorazzi v. St. Joseph's Catholic Church, 104 Ala. 327, 25 L. R. A. 360), the legal effect of such a bequest is considered. The bequest there considered was in these words: "I give and bequeath to the Roman Catholic Church of Saint Joseph, in the city of Mobile, the sum of two thousand dollars, also to be used in solemn masses for the repose of my soul." The case treats the bequest as a private trust, which we think, is the proper class in which to place such a bequest. In holding the bequest invalid as such a trust, it is said: "It is not valid as a private trust, for the want of a living beneficiary. A trust in form, with none to enjoy or enforce the use, is no trust." The latter proposition is not to be doubted. The former we need not consider, for that branch of the case is made to turn on the fact that "there is no imaginable being possessing power to enforce the use declared in this bequest." The statement as to such a bequest being void for want of a living beneficiary is not argued. It will be noticed that in that bequest the trustee is the church; because of which it is said there is no imaginable person to enforce the trust. That is not true of this case. The priest of the church designated, at a specified time, is made the person to execute the trust; and when he accepts the money he becomes responsible to the court for the proper discharge of his duties as trustee.

The cases on this subject are not in accord. Some of the courts have been slow to get away from the rule of the English cases in which, under their amalgamated condition of church and state, such bequests and devises were held void, as superstitious uses or creating perpetuities. In Festorazzi v. St. Joseph's Catholic Church, 104 Ala. 327, 25 L. R. A. 360, it is said: "Under our political institutions which maintain and enforce absolute separation of church and state, and the utmost freedom of religious thought and action, there is no place for the English doctrine of superstitious uses." Similar language has been repeatedly used by the courts of this country. In Gilman v. McARDLE, 99 N. Y. 451, 52 Am. Rep. 41, the question was to the effect of an agreement, by which money was accepted during the lifetime of the decedent, to be applied to certain purposes, and the residue to be expended for Roman Catholic masses, to be said for the repose of her soul and that of her husband. The court declined to definitely settle the question as to the application of the residue for masses, but the opinion contains a discussion of bequests for such purposes, incidental to other questions, that is worthy of notice. The lower court in that case had held that, as to the surplus to be used for masses, it was held by one as mere agent, whose authority was revocable, and that no valid trust had been created; that there was nothing illegal or contrary to public policy in the purpose to which the money was intended to be applied, but that, as a trust, it was void for want of a beneficiary who could enforce it, both of the persons for whose benefit the masses were to be solemnized being dead. The same court expressed the opinion that the disposition of such surplus would have created a valid trust if contained in a will. This holding and language of the court is made the basis on which the court of appeals based its discussion and conclusion. The argument is clear to the effect that there is no such distinction in law as that an agreement during life, for the expenditure of money for masses after death, is invalid, but that a testamentary provision to that effect would be valid. The two methods are unmistakably made of equal validity, for the court, after specifying the facts, says: "Such a contract could be enforced by the legal representatives of the promisee, and in case of a refusal to perform they could recover the consideration paid. It certainly must be in the power of a person to provide, either by will or contract, for matters of this description, and I can see no legal reason why he should be confined to a testamentary direction." This conclusion follows some argumentative language that gives to it an added value, and we quote it as follows: "But in the case before us, even if it should be conceded that the agreement under which the defendant received the money could not be sustained strictly as a trust, on the ground of the want of a beneficiary to enforce it, it would not follow that it was of no effect whatever. As a trust the same objection, if valid, existed to the undertaking to apply the fund to defraying the funeral expenses of the deceased and her husband, and to the erection of a monument to their memories, but it would be a great abridgment of the rights of property to deny to any person the power, in his lifetime, to enter into a contract to be performed after his death by another person, to do or procure to be done any act not objectionable as against any rule of law, morals, or public policy, and to pay the consideration for the performance of such contract. It appears in this case that the defendant was an undertaker; that the deceased selected the kind of a coffin she desired, and described the monument she wished erected and specified the times at which the masses were to be solemnized; and the finding of the court is that the defendant received the money on the terms stated by the deceased, and promised to apply it to the uses and purposes therein mentioned. There was no indefiniteness about this contract and it was easy of performance. There certainly can be no legal objection to a person contracting in his lifetime for his funeral, his coffin, and his monument and even for the solemnization of masses, and paying for them in advance. And if so, what reason can there be for denying him the power of paying a sum of money to a third person on his agreement to procure those things. Suppose a person should desire in his lifetime to provide for the writing of his biography, the publication of his literary works, the painting of his portrait, or the erection of a statue to his memory after his death. He certainly can make a valid contract with any person to do either of those things, and pay for them; and although they may be personal to himself and for the gratification of his own feelings and perhaps his vanity, and he cannot, in strictness, create a trust for the purpose, because there will be no beneficiary, as he will not live to enforce it, why should he not be at liberty in his lifetime to contract with some person of his confidence to procure them to be done, and as a consideration for such agreement, to pay him the sum necessary to defray the expense." We may assume that if such an agreement has the sanction of the law, because it has the elements of a valid contract, so would a testamentary provision with precisely the same elements for its support. It is not wise, in such cases, for courts to quibble about technical trusts or beneficiaries. Results are of greater importance than technical names, and a bequest for a known lawful purpose, where the power of execution is prescribed and available, should never fail for want of a name or a legal classification, unless it is in obedience to a positive rule of law.

We have said that this bequest, if the priest should accept the money, is a private trust; and we think it possesses the essential elements of such a trust, as much as it would if the object were the erection of a monument or the doing of any other act intended alone to perpetuate the memory or name of the testator. But even if there is a technical departure, because of no living beneficiary, still the bequest is valid. We have also said that it is not a charity, and we can discover no element of a charity in it. It seems to be a matter entirely personal to the testator. In one or more cases the courts have felt the necessity, in order to sustain such a bequest, to denominate it a "charity," because charitable bequests have had the sanction of the law. We know of no such limitation on testamentary acts as that bequests or devises must be in the line of other such acts, if otherwise lawful. Such a bequest has direct support in Seibert's Appeal, 18 W. N. C. 276. In Re Schouler, 184 Mass. 426, such a bequest is sustained, and it is said: "Masses are religious ceremonies or observances of the church, . . . and come within the religious or pious uses which are upheld as public charities." Our conclusion is that, as to the devise of the farm and the bequest to the Sisters of Charity, the will must be held inoperative, and the property passes to the residuary estate. As to the bequest for the saying of masses for the testator, the will is sustained.

The judgment will stand modified and affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

Bennett GLAZER, Appt.,

v.

Ed. W. HUBBARD.

(.....Ky.....)

1. Erroneous advice by a city attorney to the police justice as to his power to arrest an alleged fugitive from justice will give the justice no right of action over against him in case recovery is had against the justice, although he acts out of the line of his duty and apparently in ignorance of the law.

2. A police judge ordering the commitment to jail of a person of whose guilt there is no evidence and without any other warrant than a telegram to the chief of police to arrest him is guilty of false imprisonment, although his motives may not have been improper or corrupt.

(October 18, 1897.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Caldwell County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for false imprisonment. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hodge & Hodge, for appellant: Before a person can be legally arrested charged with a crime committed in another state, Ky. Stat. chap. 56, title Fugitives from Justice, art. 1, § 1930, must be complied with.

If not complied with the persons making the arrest and committing to prison are trespassers and guilty of false imprisonment.

As the law has given defendant capacity to entertain complaint against the person sought to be charged, the complaint required by the law must be actually made or preferred, and the person must have been properly brought before him to answer the charge, before he acquires jurisdiction.

7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 598, 664, note 2, 668, note 2, 669; Botts v. Williams, 17 B. Mon. 687.

Mr. John C. Gates for appellee.

Lewis, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant brought this action for false imprisonment, stating in his petition, substantially, that appellee maliciously, wrongfully, and without any authority of law, issued a mittimus directed to and commanding the jailer of Caldwell county to receive appellant into the jail, and keep him safely until discharged by due course of law, and that in virtue of said wrongful order he was put into said jail, and there kept until released on a writ of habeas corpus issued by the judge of Caldwell county court. Appellee, in his answer, after denying that he either maliciously, with intent to injure appellant, wrongfully, or without authority of law, issued the order of commitment, stated that he was at the time police judge of the city of Princeton, and the order in question was made by him in discharge of his duty as such judge, as he believed it to be. As an additional defense, he stated that one J. T. Coleman, city attorney, advised him that it was proper to commit appellant to jail, and that, being himself ignorant of the law, he relied upon, and acted according to, his advice; that therefore appellee is entitled to judgment over against Coleman for any sum that plaintiff in the action may recover against him; and, to that end, his answer was made a cross petition. Coleman filed a demurrer to that part of the answer, as did also appellant, and, of course, both were properly sustained; for it constituted no defense to the action, nor cause of cross action against Coleman, though the latter acted out of the line of his duty, and apparently in ignorance of the relative rights and duties of appellant as a citizen, and of appellee as a judicial officer. As appears from the evidence, the only authority the marshal of the city of Princeton had for arresting and bringing appellant in custody before appellee as police judge, was the following telegram, purporting to be from E. F. Gibson, chief of police of Opelika, Alabama:

September 18, 1894.

To Chief of Police, Princeton, Kentucky:
Arrest Ben Glazer, and wire me.

And appellant was committed to jail by order of appellee, acting as police judge, with no other warrant than that telegram, and without any evidence whatever showing or tending to show him to be guilty of an offense against the law of either Alabama or Kentucky. Yet the lower court instructed the jury trying the case, in substance, that appellant was entitled to no reparation, unless appellee, in depriving him of his liberty, acted without an honest conviction of duty, and with corrupt and improper motives; and as there was no evidence showing that appellee acted corruptly, or with a bad motive, of course the verdict had to be, and was, for him. As early as the case of Gregory v. Brown, 4 Bibb, 28 (decided in 1815), this court held that where a magistrate acts judicially upon a subject within his jurisdiction, though he should act illegally or erroneously, he cannot be made liable for any damages sustained by his conduct, unless he acted from impure or corrupt motives. And the rule has been extended and applied in the case of even an officer of elections, who may be required to act judicially in determining the qualification of a person offering to vote. But in all the cases it has been distinctly made a condition of immunity of judicial officers from damage for wrong and injury done by his decision or act that such decision be rendered or act done within his jurisdiction of the subject-matter or of the person affected. As said in Cooley, Torts, *418: "Every judicial officer, whether the grade be high or low, must take care, before acting, to inform himself whether the circumstances justify his exercise of the judicial function. A judge is not such at all times, and for all purposes. When he acts, he must be clothed with jurisdiction; and, acting without this, he is but the individual falsely assuming an authority he does not possess." Further, on page 420, he says: "The rule of law, therefore, which compels him to keep within his jurisdiction at his peril cannot be unjust to him, because, by declining to exercise any questionable authority, he can always keep within safe bounds, and will violate no duty in doing so."

NOTE.—As to the liability of a judicial officer for a judicial decision, see note to Austin v. Vrooman (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 138; Thompson v. Jackson (Iowa) 27 L. R. A. 32.

In this case the marshal had no warrant of any kind to arrest appellant. It was too plain, for a person having any knowledge of the duties of the office of police judge, that appellee, as such, had no jurisdiction whatever of the person of appellant, or authority to inquire in regard to the matter, much less to commit him to jail, without any legal charge against him, or evidence in support of a charge. Kentucky Stat. § 1930, authorizes arrest and confinement in jail, and delivery over to the proper authority, of a person guilty of a felony anywhere in the United States, if found in this state, only when a warrant has been issued by judicial authority upon affidavit of the facts. But he cannot be committed to jail by any judicial officer before whom he may be brought, until satisfied, upon hearing evidence, of his guilt. In this case no warrant was issued at all, nor was it, at the time appellant was committed to jail, or subsequently, made to appear that he was guilty of a felony. As, therefore, appellee acted without legal power, and consequently without jurisdiction, he is liable to appellant, though the motives actuating him may not have been improper or corrupt, and it was error for the lower court to so instruct the jury.

The judgment is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

HETTERMAN BROTHERS, Appts.,
v.

P. J. POWERS, et al.

(.....Ky.)

1. Organized labor may invoke the law to protect the fruits of its skill and handiwork from piracy and intrusion.

NOTE.—For protection of trade-union labels or trademarks, see note to State v. Bishop (Mo.). 29 L. R. A. 200.

89 L. R. A.

2. An employee whose skilled labor creates a demand for a commodity that secures for him higher remunerative wages has as definite a property right to the exclusive use of a particular label, sign, symbol, brand, or device adopted by him to distinguish and characterize said commodity as the product of his skilled labor as the merchant or owner has to the exclusive use of his adopted trademark on his goods.

3. Voluntary unincorporated labor organizations composed solely of practical cigar makers are entitled to the protection of a label adopted by them against use by an unauthorized person, although they do not own the cigars to which their label is affixed.

4. Other manufacturers of cigars are not attacked by the blue label of the cigar makers' international union declaring that the cigars to which it is affixed "are not the product of inferior, rat-shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement-house workmanship."

(October, 27, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County enjoining them from counterfeiting plaintiff's labels. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Humphrey & Davie for appellants.

Mr. Augustus E. Willson, for appellees:

At Sacramento, California, a dealer selling Chinese made cigars put up signs with the stamp of this union and upon a suit to compel him to remove the sign the court enjoined him from exhibiting the stamp or label or any facsimile of it.

Judge Hunt, in the supreme court at San Francisco, enjoined the defendants from selling cigars in boxes containing a counterfeit of this label, or to which the genuine label had been fraudulently affixed, May 8, 1888.

At Lincoln, Nebraska, injunction was granted against the unauthorized use of this label.

In the district court of Scott county, Iowa, injunction was also granted.

At Buffalo, New York, in the supreme court, three judges sitting, a judgment was affirmed, convicting the defendant of counterfeiting this label. The court also established that this is a trademark and entitled to the protection of trademarks.

At St. Louis, Missouri, the circuit court granted a permanent injunction upon the same label.

At Toronto, Canada, a like injunction was granted.

In the circuit court at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, a judgment for the plaintiff was entered in a like proceeding.

And in the superior court of Santa Clara, California, a like injunction was granted.

At New Haven, Connecticut, a temporary injunction was granted.

Haselrigg, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellants were manufacturers and dealers in cigars in Louisville, Kentucky, and, without right, or claim of right, used on boxes of cigars manufactured and sold by them the blue label of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America, a facsimile of which is as follows:

Sept. 1880.

Issued by authority of Cigar Makers' International Union of America. Union-Made Cigars. This certifies that the cigars contained in this box have been made by a first-class workman, a member of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America, an organization opposed to inferior, rat-shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement house workmanship. Therefore we recommend these cigars to all smokers throughout the world. All infringements upon this label will be punished according to law.

A. Strasser, President C. M. I. U. of America.

Thereupon appellees Powers, Kieffer, and Wopprice, suing for themselves and all their associate and fellow members in the Cigar Makers' International Union and the Cigar Makers Protective Union, No. 82 and joining these two organizations also, as plaintiffs, brought this action to prevent this alleged wrongful use of the label. The International Union, embracing, according to the petition, some ——— members, and the local union, some ——— members, are voluntary, unincorporated labor organizations, composed solely of practical cigar makers. They are working men, who do not own the products of their labor, being exclusively wage workers. The purpose of these unions, as said in the petition is, generally, to maintain a high standard of workmanship, and secure fair wages to cigar makers; to elevate the material, moral, and intellectual welfare of the membership; and by legitimate, organized effort, to secure laws prohibiting labor by children under fourteen years of age, the abolition of the "truck" system, the tenement house cigar manufacture, and the manufacture of cigars by prison convict labor. Other praiseworthy objects are set out, which need not be detailed. It is further averred that, for the purpose of designating the cigars made by the members of the union, the label in controversy was adopted and extensively used as a trademark, or certificate of identification, and, when posted on the outside of cigar boxes containing cigars made by members of the unions, it is a guaranty that the cigars are made by first-class workmen, members of the cigar makers' union, etc.; that because the members receive fair wages, and were thus able to furnish good workmanship, the cigars so labeled commanded a higher price than did similar looking cigars not so labeled; that the label was therefore a source of great profit and benefit to the appellees, and other members of the union. The appellants, for defense, do not deny the use of the label as charged in the petition, but it is insisted by them that this label does not possess any of the elements of a trademark; that the appellees are engaged in no trade, having nothing to sell, and therefore nothing to protect by a trademark; that none of them are engaged in the business of selling cigars; that they are "simply workmen employed by other people making cigars—first by one person, and then by another—and those persons sell the cigars;" that the plaintiffs, therefore, "have not shown any property right in the label, as a trademark or otherwise;" moreover that the membership is an ever changing one, constantly varying in numbers, composed of a few thousands to-day, and many thousands to-morrow,—“a shifting crowd;” that the plaintiffs, therefore, are not qualified to sue, and have, in fact, no legal rights that can be made the subject of a suit. Moreover, it is urged that the plaintiffs do not come into court with clean hands; that they are members of an organization lately engaged in boycotting the defendants, and attempting to ruin their business; that the label itself cannot be approved, either in law or morals, as it denounces other cigars than union made ones as inferior and unwholesome, and the product of filthy tenement houses, or made by coolies and convicts.

And, first, we may admit that the label is not used as a "trade-mark," in the ordinary sense of that word. It is not a brand put on the goods of the owner, to separate or distinguish them from the goods of others. But we cannot agree, on that account, that it does not represent a valuable right, which may be the subject of legal protection. Why may not those engaged in skillful employments so designate the result of their labor as to entitle them to the fruits of their skill, when it is admittedly a source of pecuniary profit to them? And this though they may not own the property itself. They are not, it is true, "in business" for themselves, in the ordinary sense; but they have property rights, nevertheless. They may not select a label, and be protected in its use apart from its connection with some commodity; but they not only select it in this instance, but they apply it to property, and it does not at all matter that the tangible property is that of another. In order to get the benefit of the superior reputation of cigars made by them, the appellees select and apply this label, as a distinguishing brand or mark; and it would be strange if this thing of value,—this certificate of good workmanship, which makes the goods made by them sell and thus increases the demand for their work,—should be entitled to no protection, because those making the selection and application are not business men engaged in selling cigars of their own. The man who is employed for wages is as much a business man as his employer, in that larger sense in which the word "business" has come to be used by statesmen and legislators. In a number of the states, laws have been enacted giving protection to the men engaged in the business of working for wages; and their right of organizing and selecting appropriate symbols to designate the results of their handiwork is recognized, and ordained to be the subject of lawful protection, by the court. Thus, in this state, in April, 1890, a law was enacted by the general assembly providing that "every union or association of working men or women adopting a label, mark, name, brand, or device intended to designate the product of the labor of the members of such union, shall file duplicate copies of such label in the office of the secretary of state, who shall then give them a certificate of the filing thereof," and that "every such union may, by suit in any of the courts of the state, proceed to enjoin the manufacture, use, display," etc., "of counterfeits or imitations of such labels," etc., "on goods bearing the same; and that the court having jurisdiction of the parties shall grant an injunction restraining such wrongful manufacture, use," etc., "of such label," etc. This suit was filed before the adoption of this statute, but it indicates the policy of the law, and the growth or expansion, and perhaps the creation, of legal remedies hardly known to ancient trademark law. The learned chancellor below, in an exhaustive opinion, reviewing all the authorities, among other things, said (and we can say it no more clearly) that "the known reputation of a particular kind of skilled labor, employed in the development of a particular product or class of products, determines, to a large degree, the value or price of such products when put on the markets. To stamp or label a commodity as the product of a particular kind or class of skilled labor, determines the demand for, and the price of, such product or commodity. The marketable price of a commodity influences the scale of wages paid for its manufacture. The higher the price, the higher the wages paid. Hence it is indisputable that the employee, whose skilled labor in the production of a particular commodity creates a demand for the same that secures for him higher, remunerative wages, has as definite a property right to the exclusive use of a particular label, sign, symbol, brand, or device, adopted by him to distinguish and characterize said commodity as the product of his skilled labor, as the merchant or owner has to the exclusive use of his adopted trademark on his goods."

The question has engaged the attention of a number of the courts of this country, but the conclusions reached have not been uniform. In Weener v. Brayton, 152 Mass. 101, 8 L. R. A. 640 (1890) it was held that an injunction against the wrongful use of the label of the International Cigar Makers' Union should not be granted because of special injury to plaintiffs, who were officers and members of the union, but were not manufacturers or dealers in the cigars on which such label is used; and to the same effect are the cases of Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 98 v. Conhaim, 40 Minn. 243, 3 L. R. A. 125; McVey v. Brendel, 144 Pa. 235, 13 L. R. A. 377; Schneider v. Williams, 44 N. J. Eq. 391. However, a number of the courts have held otherwise. In the case of Strasser v. Moonelis, 23 Jones & S. 197, affirmed in court of appeals in 1888, 108 N. Y. 611, it was argued, as it is here, that the members of the union were not the owners or manufacturers of cigars, but merely laborers, and that, therefore, the label did not come within the settled definition of a "trademark." The court said: "It is needless to discuss this phase of the case, for the right to the exclusive use of this label may be sustained, although it fail to be a trademark, in the precise definition of the term as heretofore used. For whether we call the property-right which I believe the plaintiffs have in the label a trademark, or by another name, is a matter of slight import. It is a right entitled to the protection of a court of equity, on the same principle as that upon which courts have based their right to protect trademarks and goodwill. It has been accepted as the rule that the court proceeds upon the ground that a person has a valuable interest in the goodwill of his trade or business, and that having appropriated to himself a particular label, or sign, or trademark, indicating to those who wish to give him their patronage that the article is manufactured or sold by him, . . . he is entitled to protection against any other person who attempts to pirate on the goodwill of his friends or customers . . . by sailing under his flag without his authority or consent." In Cohn v. People, 149 Ill. 486, the court upheld the constitutionality of the trades union act in that state; and as the court, independently of the statute, disposed of one of the contentions of counsel in the case, which is also relied on here, we quote, in part, its argument: "It is next objected that the label, an imitation and counterfeit of which is alleged to have been unlawfully used by plaintiff in error, could not have been rightfully adopted either as a trademark, or form of advertisement. It is said that it transgresses the rules of morality and public policy. We are referred to the rule in respect to trademarks, that 'to be a lawful trademark the emblem must avoid transgressing the rules of morality and public policy.' Browne, Trademarks, § 602. . . . By reference to the label heretofore set out, it will be seen that it is a certificate, signed by the president of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America, certifying that the cigars contained in the box upon which it is placed were 'made by a first-class workman, a member of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America, an organization opposed to inferior, rat-shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement-house workmanship.' And it concludes: 'Therefore we recommend these cigars to all smokers throughout the world.' The purpose, as derived from the label itself, is to send the cigars out to the public with the assurance that they are made by a first-class workman, who belongs to an order opposed to the inferior workmanship designated. It will be observed that the label attacks no other manufacturer of cigars. It says, simply, in effect, These cigars are not the product of inferior, rat-shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement-house workmanship. Can it be said that one may not, without condemning or aspersing the product of other manufacturers, commend the article he has for sale? If he may do so himself, may he not procure the certificate of others as to the quality of the article he puts upon the market?" See also State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 169; Carrson v. Ury, 39 Fed. Rep. 777, 5 L. R. A. 614.

Further, we agree with the learned chancellor that there is no competent evidence that the appellees, or any of them, have been engaged in boycotting the appellants, and thus deprived themselves of the right to enforce their legal remedies in a court of equity. Whatever may be said of the letters and circulars looking to this end, and exhibited in the proof, it is not shown by any competent proof that the appellees instigated, or had aught to do with, the attempted boycott. And, moreover, this boycott, which seems to have occurred in 1886, did not in any way grow out of the wrongful use of the label in controversy. On the whole case, therefore, we are of opinion that the law may be justly invoked by organized labor to protect from piracy and intrusion the fruits of its skill and handiwork, and that brain and muscle may be the subjects of trade-law rules, as well as tangible property.

The judgment is affirmed.

W. H. JERNIGAN, Appt.,
v.
City of MADISONVILLE et al.

(.....Ky.....)

The assignment or transfer by a court of a town or city from one class to another, which Stat. §§ 3661, 3662, attempts to authorize, is in violation of Const. § 156, requiring the general assembly to make such assignments and transfers, and making no provision for delegating that power.

(December 1, 1897.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hopkins County refusing a writ of prohibition to restrain defendants from exercising the powers and privileges belonging to cities of the fourth class. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. J. Waddle for appellant.

Mr. J. F. Gordon for appellees.

Guffy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears from this record that the circuit court of Hopkins county entered an order and judgment transferring the city of Madisonville from cities of the fifth class to cities of the fourth class, and afterwards the appellant instituted this action in the Hopkins circuit court against the said city, H. H. Holman, mayor, and other officers thereof, seeking to enjoin and restrain said defendants from exercising, or attempting to exercise, the privileges and powers conferred by law upon cities of the fourth class. The defendants pleaded and relied upon the said orders and judgment of the circuit court transferring said city to the fourth class, to which answer the plaintiff demurred, which demurrer was overruled by the court, and the court refused to grant the writ of prohibition or order of injunction, and dismissed the petition, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The sole question presented for decision is as to the constitutionality of the act empowering the circuit courts to make such transfers or assignments from one class to another class. Section 156 of the Constitution reads as follows: "The cities and towns of this commonwealth, for the purpose of their organization and government, shall be divided into six classes. The organization and powers of each class shall be defined and provided for by general laws, so that all municipal corporations of the same class shall possess the same powers and be subject to the same restrictions. To the first class shall belong cities with a population of 100,000 or more; to the second class, cities with a population of 20,000 or more, and less than 100,000; to the third class, cities with a population of 8,000 or more, and less than 20,000; to the fourth class, cities and towns with a population of 3,000 or more, and less than 8,000; to the fifth class, cities and towns with a population of 1,000 or more, and less than 3,000; to the sixth class, towns with a population of less than 1,000. The general assembly shall assign the cities and towns of the commonwealth to the classes to which they respectively belong, and change assignments made as the population of said cities and towns may increase or decrease, and, in the absence of other satisfactory information as to their population, shall be governed by the last preceding Federal census in so doing; but no city or town shall be transferred from one class to another, except in pursuance of a law, previously enacted and providing therefor. The general assembly, by general law, shall provide how towns may be organized, and enact laws for the government of such towns until the same are assigned to one or the other of the classes above named; but such assignment shall be made at the first session of the general assembly, after the organization of said town or city." Sections 3661, 3662, Ky. Stat., provide, in substance, that when the population of any city or town, as ascertained by the last Federal census, or by the census taken pursuant to an ordinance of said town, authorizes it to be placed in a class other than that in which it is, the authorities of such a town may enact an ordinance setting forth the population of the town, and may file a petition in the circuit clerk's office declaring the facts, and upon the proper steps being taken, and evidence furnished to the circuit court of the county, said court may enter a judgment assigning such town to the class to which it belongs as appears from the petition and exhibits, and thereafter such town may be governed by and under the general laws relating to the class to which it has been assigned. It is conceded that the transfer or assignment under consideration was made pursuant to and in accordance with the provisions of the sections supra. We therefore deem it unnecessary to copy the sections in full. It will be seen from the provisions of § 156 of the Constitution that the cities and towns of the commonwealth shall be divided into six classes, and the classification is determined by the population of such town. The population of each class is fixed by the Constitution. It will be further seen that the general assembly is required to assign the cities and towns of the commonwealth to the classes to which they respectively belong, and change assignments made as the population may increase or decrease. It will be seen that the power and duty of assigning towns to the different classes and changing such assignments, is conferred alone upon the legislature; and no grant of power is given the legislature to delegate the power to make such change or assignment to any tribunal. It will be further seen that the power is given to the legislature to provide for the creation or organization of new towns, yet the legislature is required to assign such towns to the classes to which they belong at the first session of the legislature after such organization. It is further provided that no assignment

NOTE.—For power of court as to incorporation of municipalities, see also Re North Milwaukee (Wis.) 83 L. R. A. 638, and cases cited in footnote thereto.

89 L. R. A.

shall be made except in pursuance to a law previously enacted and provided therefor. It follows, therefore, that so much of §§ 3861 and 3862 of the Kentucky Statutes, supra, as attempts to authorize the circuit courts to assign or transfer a town or city from one class to another is unconstitutional and void, and that the judgment of the Hopkins circuit court attempting or assuming to transfersaid city of Madisonville to cities or towns of the fourth class is null and void, and of no effect. So much of said sections, however, as provides means for taking the census or determining the population of any such city or town is constitutional and valid, and, when the population of a town is ascertained pursuant to the provisions of said section, the legislature will be authorized to make the proper transfer of such town or city. The object of the framers of the Constitution doubtless was to provide a certain, safe, and convenient means whereby it might be readily ascertained to what class any city or town belonged, and therefore provided that all assignments or changes from one class to another should be by an act of the legislature, which would always be a matter of record, and readily accessible to the whole people. The requirement of the general law providing for such changes was deemed proper and necessary to the end that the citizens of the several towns should know in advance how and when such changes might be lawfully made.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant the writ of prohibition and injunction prayed for, and for proceedings consistent herewith.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Annie B. CROCKER et al., Petitioners,
v.
Charles U. COTTING et al., Trustees, etc., Apts.

(.....Mass.....)

1. An agreement that the land should remain in common, and not be partitioned, is not implied on the purchase in common of land subject to an easement already belonging to the purchaser.
2. Land all of which is subject to an easement of a right of way is nevertheless subject to partition, if owned in common, under Pub. Stat. chap. 178, § 1, providing that "tenants in common may be compelled to divide."

(January 5, 1898.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County reversing a judgment of the Probate Court denying partition of a passageway. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. G. Putnam and J. L. Putnam, for appellants:

We have the payment of a considerable sum of money for a title in common, which was plainly more beneficial for each owner, considering the land as a passageway, than a divided title could be. It cannot be supposed that the money would have been contributed for a divided title. The essential feature of the purchase was that each purchaser controlled the whole way irrespective of his easement.

Morgan v. Moore, 8 Gray, 819.

In partitions under the statute, the passageways were formerly often, if not usually, left in common.

Peck v. Cardwell, 2 Beav. 187; Coleman v.

Coleman, 19 Pa. 100, 57 Am. Dec. 641; Beach v. New York, 45 How. Pr. 357.

It can make no difference whether the passageway was left in common in a division of the surrounding lands, or was bought in common after a division of the surrounding lands. In both cases the parties have mutually, for valuable consideration, entered into a passageway scheme which cannot equitably be changed without the consent of all.

Latahau's Appeal, 122 Pa. 142; Coleman v. Coleman, 19 Pa. 100, 57 Am. Dec. 641; Conant v. Smith, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 67, 15 Am. Dec. 669; Swoyer v. Schaeffer, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 749; Eberts v. Fisher, 54 Mich. 294; Avery v. Payne, 12 Mich. 540; Peck v. Cardwell, 2 Beav. 187; Brown v. Lutheran Church, 23 Pa. 495; Baldwin v. Humphrey, 44 N. Y. 609; Selden v. Vermilya, 2 Sandf. 568; Beach v. New York, 45 How. Pr. 357.

A mere way by itself is not a subject of partition proceedings. Involuntary partition could not be had at common law except between coparceners.

Many things coming within the technical meaning of "lands" are clearly not partible and could not have been within the meaning of the statute; such as rights of water, rights of way, mining rights, mill dams.

Adam v. Briggs Iron Co. 7 Cush. 361; Miller v. Miller, 13 Pick. 237; De Witt v. Harvey, 4 Gray, 486.

Remainders and reversions.

Wainwright v. Dorr, 13 Pick. 338.

Equity had power independently of statute to regulate the rights of tenants in common in property which could not be made the subject of strict partition.

Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 650 et seq.; Jefferys v. Smith, 1 Jac. & W. 298; Adam v. Briggs Iron Co. 7 Cush. 361; De Witt v. Harvey, 4 Gray, 486.

In Husband v. Aldrich, 135 Mass. 317, it was decided that there could be no partition by suit in equity of any subject-matter included within the scope of the statutes of partition.

NOTE.—For validity of agreement against right to partition, see Haeussler v. Missouri Iron Co. (Mo.) 16 L. R. A. 220.

39 L. R. A.

Messrs. Solomon Lincoln, Francis V. Balch, Felix Rackemann, and Harrison M. Davis, for appellees:

Every cotenant of lands, tenements, and hereditaments is entitled, as a matter of right, to partition.

Parker v. Gerard, 1 Ambl. 236; Mitchell v. Starbuck, 10 Mass. 5; Hanson v. Willard, 12 Me. 146, 28 Am. Dec. 162; Baldwin v. Aldrich, 34 Vt. 526, 80 Am. Dec. 695; Hoyt v. Kimball, 49 N. H. 324; Richardson v. Monson, 23 Conn. 97; Johnson v. Olmsted, 49 Conn. 509.

Where equity has concurrent jurisdiction of partition it is equally a matter of strict right as at law.

Parker v. Gerard, 1 Ambl. 236; Willard v. Willard, 145 U. S. 116, 36 L. ed. 644; Turner v. Morgan, 8 Ves. Jr. 143; Mundy v. Mundy, 2 Ves. Jr. 122, note.

The process provided by statute is equally a matter of right.

Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 178; Taylor v. Blake, 109 Mass. 513; Johnson v. Olmsted, 49 Conn. 509.

The right cannot be defeated by showing that partition would be inconvenient, injurious, or even ruinous to the parties.

Freeman, Cotenancy & Partition, § 433.

Thus, partition has been decreed by a partition wall.

Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnston [1894] 1 Ch. 508.

Of a manor.

Hanbury v. Hussey, 5 Eng. L. & Eq. 81.

Of a mill.

Wood v. Little, 35 Me. 107.

Of a lake.

Menzies v. Macdonald, 36 Eng. L. & Eq. 20.

Of a mine.

Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 501.

Of a tract of pasture in which tenants had complicated grazing rights.

Parker v. Gerard, 1 Ambl. 236.

Of a cold bath.

Warner v. Baynes, 2 Ambl. 589.

Of a house.

Turner v. Morgan, 8 Ves. Jr. 143.

Of a moor or heath, where the shares of the owners were proportioned to the value of other lands owned by them respectively, and subject to incorporeal rights of strangers.

Agar v. Fairfax, 17 Ves. Jr. 533.

Of a cotton plantation.

Royston v. Royston, 13 Ga. 425.

Of a system of a dock.

Bentley v. Long Dock Co. 14 N. J. Eq. 480.

Of a hotel.

Willard v. Willard, 145 U. S. 116, 36 L. ed. 644.

Of a yard, where the land was subject to easements or rights of the cotenants to the continued use of the premises as a yard.

Fisher v. Deverson, 3 Met. 544.

The owner of the soil of a way, public or private, has all the rights of an owner which can be exercised without interference with the easement.

Com. v. Peters, 2 Mass. 127; Atkins v. Bordman, 2 Met. 457, 37 Am. Dec. 100.

The cases holding that the right of partition may be waived, suspended or limited by agreements between the cotenants divide themselves into four classes.

39 L. R. A.

1. Where an express condition in the deed originally conveying the land to the tenants in common prohibits partition, and amounts to a limitation of the estate conveyed.

Hunt v. Wright, 47 N. H. 399. Compare Spaulding v. Woodward, 53 N. H. 573, 16 Am. Rep. 892. See Winsor v. Mills, 157 Mass. 363.

2. Where cotenants have expressly covenanted or agreed in writing not to partition.

Coleman v. Coleman, 19 Pa. 100, 57 Am. Dec. 641; Goesele v. Bimeler, 55 U. S. 14 How. 589, 14 L. ed. 554.

3. Where parties become tenants in common of land pursuant to an express covenant or agreement in writing as to its use and disposition, in which case an agreement is implied that partition shall not be had so as to prevent or hinder the use or disposition expressly agreed upon.

Peck v. Cardwell, 2 Beav. 187; Arery v. Payne, 12 Mich. 540; Baldwin v. Humphrey, 44 N. Y. 609.

4. In Pennsylvania it is held that equity has no jurisdiction to decree partition of church property owned in common by two or more congregations or religious societies,—such lands are held under a charitable trust.

Latahaw's Appeal, 122 Pa. 142; Swoyer v. Schaeffer, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 749. See also Potter v. Munson, 40 Conn. 473; Black v. Tyler, 1 Pick. 150.

Rights or equities, both of cotenants and of their assignees, which would be protected in courts having concurrent jurisdiction in equity of partition proceedings are not regarded by our law.

Marks v. Sewall, 120 Mass. 174; Barnes v. Lynch, 151 Mass. 510; Husband v. Aldrich, 135 Mass. 317; Freeman, Cotenancy & Partition, § 425.

No purpose that this strip of land should remain in common, or that the tenants should be deprived of any of the ordinary rights incident to a tenancy in common, subject only to existing easements, is to be inferred from the fact that it was subject to easements when purchased, and was called a "passageway" in the deeds.

Atkins v. Bordman, 2 Met. 459, 37 Am. Dec. 100; Sibley v. Holden, 10 Pick. 249, 20 Am. Dec. 521; Dickinson v. Lee, 106 Mass. 557.

If it were possible to infer such an agreement, there is no warrant to suppose that such a novel incident could be annexed to land, even if evidenced by deed.

Norcross v. James, 140 Mass. 188; Keppell v. Bailey, 2 Myl. & K. 517.

No right of light and air, or easement that land should remain unbuild upon, can exist in this commonwealth without express grant or covenant.

Keats v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 204, 15 Am. Rep. 80; Brooks v. Reynolds, 106 Mass. 31.

Nor are verbal agreements enforced under the doctrine of equitable easements with notice; unless in some special case where the breach of such an agreement would operate as a fraud on others who have acted on the faith of it.

Hubbell v. Warren, 8 Allen. 173; Whitney v. Union R. Co. 11 Gray, 359, 71 Am. Dec. 715.

Except under Stat. 1871, chap. 111 (Pub. Stat. 178, § 65), enlarging power of the court to order a sale, the manner of partition is exclusively to be determined by the commissioners and not by the court before issuing the warrant.

Aldrich v. Husband, 181 Mass. 480; King v. Reed, 11 Gray, 490; Hall v. Hall, 152 Mass. 136; Ramsay v. Humphrey, 162 Mass. 385.

Between tenants in common, partition is the natural and usually the adequate remedy in every case of controversy.

Calvert v. Aldrich, 99 Mass. 74, 96 Am. Dec. 693.

Holmes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition for partition of a strip of land subject to a passageway, which already has been before the court. Crocker v. Cotting, 166 Mass. 183, 33 L. R. A. 245. In the former case it was decided that the land under the way was not parcel of the adjoining estates. If it was not, then there was no question that it passed by two conveyances to the predecessors in title of the present parties as tenants in common, or that the present parties are tenants in common still. This proceeding was begun in the probate court after the above decision. Pub. Stat. chap. 178, §§ 1, 45. The case is here on appeal from the decree of a single justice of this court reversing the decree of the probate court and granting partition. The petition is resisted only on the grounds that the statute first cited does not apply to land subject to a right of way, and, more especially, that the implications of the purchase in common of the land subject to the easement already belonging to the purchasers are that the land should remain in common, and that it would be inequitable to divide it against that implied understanding.

To deal with the last argument first, we discover no such understanding as is supposed. Why the purchasers bought the land under the passageway is pure matter of conjecture. Their right of way was secure. Very possibly, their thoughts went no further than to get rid of outside ownership. Probably they did not contemplate partition, because probably they never thought about it, one way or the other. The fact that they would have provided against it if they had thought about it, if established, would not exclude the right to partition as a necessary consequence. But we have no warrant for saying that they would have provided against it. It is equally possible, on the facts before us, that they would have said, "When we get rid of outsiders, if it ever becomes convenient to divide the land, we will do it, keeping up our right of way." If, indeed, the tenancy in common of the servient land by the owners of the dominant estates had extinguished their several easements by merger, a very different question would be presented from that with which we are dealing. But the easements remained. They would not be extinguished so long as any difference in the quality of the title to the dominant and servient estates made it in any degree for the interest of the dominant owners to keep them alive. "That unity of titles in the dominant and servient estates should operate to extinguish an easement, the ownership in the two estates should be coextensive." At- lanta Mills v. Mason, 120 Mass. 244, 251; Bradley Fish Co. v. Dudley, 37 Conn. 136, 144, 145; King v. Hermitage, Carth. 239, 241; Washb. Easem. 518. See Littleton and Moile, in Year Book, 85, Hen. VI. pp. 55, 56, pl. 1. It is true that the petitioners make no mention of the easements to which the land is subject, but there is no indication that they hoped by this proceeding to cut off the respondents' rights of way; and that the respondents shall continue to have those rights may be made a term of the partition, for greater caution.
89 L. R. A.

The fact, if it be one, that at the time of the original purchase in common passageways often were left in common in partitions under the statute, or that ways often were acquired by such a purchase, is far from sufficient to establish a binding surrender of one of the incidents of ownership. Mere inconvenience is equally insufficient. Partition is a matter of right. Mitchell v. Starbuck, 10 Mass. 5, 12; Potter v. Wheeler, 18 Mass. 504, 507; Warner v. Baynes, 2 Ambl. 589; Parker v. Gerard, 1 Ambl. 236; Turner v. Morgan, 8 Ves. Jr. 143, 145, note 1; Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnston [1894] 1 Ch. 508; Hanson v. Willard, 12 Me. 142, 146, 147, 28 Am. Dec. 162; Wood v. Little, 35 Me. 107; Willard v. Willard, 145 U. S. 116, 36 L. ed. 644; Freeman, Cotenancy & Partition, 2d ed. § 438.

But in the case at bar no inconvenience appears. On the contrary, the convenience of the petitioners will or may be met by partition, and that of the defendants not otherwise impaired than by depriving them of a right to prevent the petitioners doing what they want, which may have pecuniary value.

Then, as to the scope of the statute, Pub. Stat. chap. 178, § 1. The language is: "Persons holding lands as . . . tenants in common, may be compelled to divide such lands either by writ of partition at the common law or in the manner provided in this statute." This language applies to the present case as plainly as words can, unless for some reason it is narrowed from what it seems to mean on its face. There is no doubt that land is not withdrawn from partition by the fact that a part of it is subject to easement. Weston v. Foster, 7 Met. 297, 299. There is no greater obstacle in the fact that the whole of it is. Suppose that all the parties wanted a partition, but could not quite agree on the proportions and that, as in this case, it was or might be a great advantage to their several estates to have the land divided, it would strike everyone as monstrous, if, under this statute, the courts should decline to proceed, on the ground that they were not given power. But, if the voluntary jurisdiction extends to this case, the right to proceed in initium also does. The jurisdiction is not affected by a defendant's recalcitrance.

In England, when partition was asked and decreed of a moor, the objection was urged that the moor was subject to rights of common. But Sir William Grant, the master of the rolls, answered: "The rights of common are no objection to the commission, as that right will not be in the least affected by the partition, which regards only the freehold and inheritance of the soil. A partition never affects the interests of third parties. It is immaterial, whether others have a right over that soil and freehold which they have in common among them. Those rights will equally remain." Agar v. Fairfax, 17 Ves. Jr. 533, 544. The same thing is said concerning a right of way by Chief Justice Shaw in Weston v. Foster, 7 Met. 297, 299, already referred to.

These considerations appear to us to dispose of the case.

Decree affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State of Michigan
v.

William THIELMAN, Exceptant.

(.....Mich.....)

Keeping open a saloon on Monday, July 5, is prohibited by Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313, § 17, providing that all saloons shall be closed on "all legal holidays," and Pub. Acts 1893, No. 185, designating July 4 as a holiday and providing that when such day falls on Sunday the next Monday following shall be deemed a public holiday for all or any of the "purposes aforesaid."

(November 17, 1897.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant before sentence to rulings of the Circuit Court for Ottawa County made during the trial of a prosecution against him for illegal liquor selling which resulted in his conviction. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Walter I. Lillie, for exceptant:

When after an enumeration the statute employs some general term to embrace other cases, the other cases must be understood to be cases of the same general character.

Brooks v. Cook, 44 Mich. 617, 88 Am. Rep. 282.

When the words used limit the provisions of the act to the specific things mentioned in the act, nothing can be added by implication or construction.

McDade v. People, 29 Mich. 50.

When we consider that the act is made expressly for the presentation of notes, etc., and says nothing about any other business, and then adds § 2 for the purpose of making Monday a holiday when one of the days mentioned comes on Sunday, for "the purposes aforesaid," and those purposes are the protesting of notes, etc., it cannot be a holiday within the meaning of How. Stat. § 2238e.

Detroit v. Putnam, 45 Mich. 263; People, Houghton, v. State Land Office Comr. 23 Mich. 270; State v. Sparrow, 89 Mich. 263.

This statute, like all criminal statutes, must be construed strictly, and nothing not within its words be held to be within its meaning.

People v. Reynolds, 71 Mich. 348.

A statute revising the whole subject of a former statute, and intended as a substitute, although it contains no words to that effect, operates as a repeal of the former law, and the statute thus repealed must be considered as if it never existed.

Moore v. Kenockee Twp. 75 Mich. 332, 4 L. R. A. 555.

Therefore all prior acts were repealed by act number 185 of the Public Acts of 1893, and it is all the statute we have in reference to holidays.

Ruge v. State, 62 Ind. 388; State v. Atkinson, 139 Ind. 426.

Messrs. Fred A. Maynard, Attorney General, and Arend Visscher, for the People.

Long, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Respondent was convicted in the Ottawa circuit court on a trial before a jury, and the case comes into this court on exceptions before sentence. It appears that the respondent was keeping a saloon in the city of Grand Haven, and the information charged him with keeping it open, and not closed, "on Monday, the 5th day of July, 1897, said 5th day of July, 1897, being then and there a legal holiday, commonly called the 'Fourth Day of July.'" The testimony was uncontradicted that the respondent did keep his saloon open on that day, and made sales of liquors there, the same as upon other days. The only question raised upon the trial, and the only question here, is whether Monday, the 5th day of July, 1897, was a legal holiday, within the meaning of the statute prohibiting the opening of saloons and the sales of liquors on legal holidays. The 4th day of July fell on Sunday. Section 17, act No. 313, Pub. Acts 1887 (the general liquor law), provides: "All saloons, restaurants, bars in taverns or elsewhere, and all other places, except drug stores, where any of the liquors mentioned in this act are sold, or kept for sale, either at wholesale or retail, shall be closed on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, on all election days, on all legal holidays," etc. This provision as to closing saloons, etc., on legal holidays, was first introduced into the statutes by act 267, Pub. Acts 1879, and has been continued in the liquor statutes since that time. Act No. 124, Laws 1865, is entitled "An Act to Designate the Holidays to Be Observed in the Acceptance and Payment of Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes, in the Holding of Courts, and Relative to the Continuance of Suits." Section 1 of the act provides that "the following days, viz.: The 1st day of January, commonly called New Year's Day, the 4th day of July, the 25th day of December, commonly called Christmas Day, and any day appointed or recommended by the governor of this state

NOTE.—As to the law of holidays in respect to matters other than commercial paper, see note to Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Jaffray (Neb.) 19 L. R. A. 316.

39 L. R. A.

or President of the United States as a day of fasting and prayer or thanksgiving, shall for all purposes whatsoever as regards the presenting for payment or acceptance and of the protesting and giving notice of the dishonor of bills of exchange, bank checks, and promissory notes made after the passage of this act, also for the holding of courts, be treated and considered as the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday," etc. This act was amended in 1875, in 1881, and by act No. 77, Pub. Acts 1893. Section 1 of the amendatory act of 1893 also includes other days designated as legal holidays in addition to those enumerated in the act of 1865, and further provides that, "in case any of the holidays shall fall upon a Sunday, then the Monday following shall be considered as the said holiday." This last provision was first introduced into the statute by act No. 163, Laws 1875, and has continued therein to the present time, unless it may be said that there is a limitation placed upon it by act No. 185, Pub. Acts 1893 (which was an act passed later in the session of that year than act No. 77), again amending § 1 of the act and adding a new section.

It will be seen that, at the time the liquor law of 1879 was passed, the statute as to legal holidays provided that, "in case any of the holidays shall fall upon a Sunday, then the Monday following shall be considered as said holiday;" so that the legal holidays upon which all saloons, etc., were to be kept closed, included such Mondays, which were made by the act legal holidays. This continued up to the time act No. 185, Pub. Acts 1893, took effect. By the 1st section of the act, the 1st day of January, 22d day of February, 30th day of May, 4th day of July, 1st Monday of September (called Labor Day), and the 25th day of December are designated as holidays. Section 1 also provides that every Saturday, from 12 o'clock noon until 12 o'clock at night, shall be designated a half holiday; and the same section strikes out from the act the proviso that, in case any of the holidays shall fall upon a Sunday, the Monday following shall be considered as the said holiday. In § 2 is inserted the following: "Whenever the 1st day of January, the 22d day of February, the 30th day of May, the 4th day of July, or the 25th day of December shall fall upon Sunday, the next Monday following shall be deemed a public holiday for all or any of the purposes aforesaid." Counsel for respondent contends that the words "for any or all of the purposes aforesaid" are words of limitation upon the act, so that a Monday following a legal holiday can be treated as a holiday only for the purposes specified in that act, and that, therefore, such a Monday is not a legal holiday, in contemplation of the liquor statute. By § 17 of the liquor statute, heretofore quoted, saloons, etc., must be closed on all holidays. This statute does not provide that any specified day shall be a holiday. To ascertain what days are holidays, we must look to the statutes providing for such days. This added clause to § 2 is of no more significance than the title of the act itself, and no more limits the liquor act than does that title. That title, as passed in 1865 and since continued in all the acts, is, "To designate the holidays to be observed in the acceptance and payment of bills of exchange and promissory notes, in the holding of courts and relative to the continuance of suits." In Reithmiller v. People, 44 Mich. 280, the respondent was convicted of an illegal sale of liquor on Christmas Day, it being alleged that the day was a legal holiday on which such sales were forbidden. The conviction was sustained. The court in speaking of the liquor statute said: "It is true that the statute does not enact in so many words that any specified day shall be a holiday. But that is not important. The past and present provisions concerning privileged days, including this act of 1879, are to our present purpose in pari materia, and are to be considered together, and the identical days contemplated by the legislature may be ascertained by such examination." The court said further: "Were Christmas Day to be excluded on the ground contended for, it would follow unavoidably that nothing could be retained to answer to the call for 'legal holidays.' The ground taken for excluding Christmas would, according to the necessary meaning of the context, equally exclude all other days possibly capable of being classed under the head of 'legal holidays,' and leave nothing whatever for that phrase to apply to." In People v. Ackerman, 80 Mich. 588, the respondent was convicted of keeping open a saloon on April 30, 1889. That day had been designated by the governor as a day of thanksgiving and prayer. It was known as Centennial Day. It was held that this was a legal holiday, within the meaning of § 17, Pub. Acts 1887, as fixed by the statutes defining legal holidays. That clause 2 of the act of 1893 cannot be given the construction contended for by counsel is made more apparent when we examine the provisions of § 1, making Saturday afternoons half holidays for certain purposes, as, in the latter part of the section, it is provided that "nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent or invalidate the entry, issuance, service, or execution of any writ, summons, or confession of judgment or other legal process whatever, holding courts, or the transaction of any lawful business, except banking, on any of the Saturday afternoons herein designated as half holidays." So that on those half holidays any lawful business may be carried on, except such as is specifically designated in that section.

The conviction must be affirmed, and the court below is directed to proceed to judgment.

The other Justices concur.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Re Contest of Will of Alexander H. MILLER, Deceased.

(179 Pa. 645.)

1. A hypothetical question by contestant to an expert witness upon the question of incapacity of a testator need embrace only the facts which the evidence of the contestant tends to prove, and not those alleged by proponents, which he denies, or those which are irrelevant.

2. A finding by the court that testator had testamentary capacity of the highest order is erroneous where the question of undue influence is also involved, if it appears that, possessed of property of over $300,000 in value, he gave more than three fourths of it to one of his children, and for a period of ten years covering the time of the will he drank largely of intoxicating liquors and was afflicted with locomotor ataxia; while interested witnesses testify to the daily consumption of unusual quantities of intoxicants, and the failure of memory, and weakening of will power, although the evidence of incapacity is not sufficient to send the case to the jury.

3. The question whether or not a will was procured by undue influence must be submitted to the jury when the evidence tends

NOTE.—Drunkenness as affecting testamentary capacity.

I. Present intoxication.

II. Habits of intoxication.

III. Drunkenness as evidence of incapacity.

a. Generally.

b. In connection with conduct and condition.

c. In connection with nature of the act.

d. In connection with undue influence.

e. Point of time under investigation.

f. Presumption and burden of proof.

IV. Inquisition of drunkenness as evidence.

I. Present intoxication.

Intoxication is temporary insanity ceasing with the exciting cause. Wheeler v. Alderson, 3 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 574.

And the rule that capacity requisite for the testamentary act is, that the testator can comprehend the property he is about to dispose of, the natural or other objects of his bounty, the meaning of the business in which he is engaged, the relation of each of these factors to the others, and the distribution that is made by the will,—is applicable to an allegation of incapacity from intoxication as well as insanity. Re Lee, 46 N. J. Eq. 193; Re Halbert, 15 Misc. 308.

But a testator who is in the habit of excessive indulgence in strong drink need not be wholly free from its influence in order to make a valid will. Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9, 84 Am. Dec. 220.

One whose mind is partially clouded by drink may make a valid will. Re Johnson, 7 Misc. 230.

It is a species of insanity, and may invalidate a will made during a drunken fit. Duffield v. Robeson, 2 Harr. (Del.) 375.

But the intoxication of a party which will authorize setting aside a deed in the nature of a testamentary disposition must have been so excessive that he was utterly deprived of the use of his reason and understanding. Belcher v. Belcher, 10 Yerg. 121.

And in order to avoid a will made by an intemperate person, it must be proved that he was so excited by liquor or so conducted himself during a particular act as to be at the moment legally disqualified from giving effect to it, and as to disorder his faculties and pervert his judgment. Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9, 84 Am. Dec. 220.

There is no standard of drunkenness which will defeat testamentary capacity short of downright imbecility. Dimond's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 554.

And the intoxication of a testator will not avoid his will if it was not sufficient to prevent him from knowing what he was about. Pierce v. Pierce, 38 Mich. 412.

A will is not rendered invalid by the mere fact that the testator was under the influence of liquor when it was made; to have avoided it the mind must have been in such a condition that the testator had no intelligent comprehension of the nature of the transaction. Key v. Holloway, 7 Baxt. 576.

A person under the influence of intoxicating liquors is competent to execute a will where he is capable of exercising judgment, reason, and deliberation, and of weighing to a reasonable degree the consequences of his act. Re Convey, 52 Iowa, 197.

A drunkard may make a valid will, even if at the time of the execution thereof he is under the influence of liquor, provided he comprehends the nature, extent, and disposition of his estate, his relations to those who have or might have a claim upon his bounty, and is free from undue influence, fraud, or coercion. Re Reed, 2 Connolly, 403.

So, in Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9, 84 Am. Dec. 220, the will of a confirmed drunkard was established though executed after a protracted debauch and the testator had drank several times in the course of the day, it appearing that at the time his excitement was not such as to disorder his faculties and pervert his judgment.

Where there is evidence in a will contest tending to show that at or near the time the will was made the testator was so drunk that he could neither stand up, understand anything, nor talk, however, it should be left to the jury to say whether at the time he signed the will he was so drunk that he had not sufficient reason and understanding to know his property and dispose of it in a rational manner according to a fixed purpose of his own. Best v. Best, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 215.

The effect of intoxication upon the capacity of an intoxicated person to make a will is not a scientific question to be determined by experts, but one within common observation depending upon the facts of each case and to be determined from such facts. Pierce v. Pierce, 38 Mich. 412.

II. Habits of intoxication.

Long continued habits of intemperance may greatly impair the mind and destroy the memory and other faculties so as to produce insanity which will invalidate a will. Duffield v. Robeson, 2 Harr. (Del.) 375.

When by habitual intoxication a man's senses are so affected and his understanding gone he cannot make a will. Starrett v. Douglas, 2 Yeates, 48.

And weakness of intellect from extreme age or great bodily infirmity, or from intemperance to the extent of disqualifying a testator from knowing and comprehending the nature and effect and consequences of his act, destroys testamentary capacity. Leech v. Leech, 5 Clark (Pa.), 86.

It cannot be said as a rule of law, however, that because a man is a drunkard he is of unsound mind. Re Johnson, 57 Cal. 529; Weisman's Estate, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 561.

And drunkenness does not necessarily take away a testator's capacity to make a will. Turner v.

to show that for some time before it was made the testator had been addicted to the use of intoxicants to an unusual degree; and that the son to whom he gave three fourths of his property was always with him when he was intoxicated, and had, said there was boodle in it for him; and that he had deliberately prejudiced his father against the other children and ingratiated himself in his favor, although he was not actually present when the will was made.

4. Evidence tending to show testamentary incapacity is admissible upon the question of undue influence in the obtaining of the will, although it may be insufficient to show want of capacity to make the will.

(Mitchell and Fell, J.J., dissent.)

(January 4, 1897.)

Cheesman, 15 N. J. Eq. 243; Whitenack v. Stryker, 2 N. J. Eq. 8.

And mere drunkenness upon the part of a testator does not affect the validity of his will unless it absolutely disables him from disposing of his estate with intelligence and reason. Starrett v. Douglass, 2 Yeates, 48.

The question to be determined with relation to habits of intoxication of the testator, as well as with relation to his insanity, is whether his mind was so affected that he was not sufficiently master of himself to give expression to his real wishes. Re Johnson, 7 Misc. 220.

And a person whose intemperance has grown into a confirmed habit, and whose constitution is gradually giving away, may make a valid gift in the nature of a testamentary disposition when he is sober at the time, unless his indulgence has resulted in a settled derangement of mind independent of the immediate influence of drink. Gardner v. Gardner, 2 Woud. 526, 34 Am. Dec. 340.

To invalidate a will upon the ground of the intoxication of the testatrix, it must appear, not only that she was intoxicated or that she was usually intoxicated, but also that she was so in fact at the very time the will was executed, or that her mind was so clouded by drink that she was incompetent to give expression to her real testamentary intentions. Re Halbert, 15 Misc. 308.

Habitual intoxication will not incapacitate a testator to make a will unless the excitement was such as to disorder his faculties or pervert his judgment. Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9, 84 Am. Dec. 220; Houster v. Lightner, 42 Phila. Leg. Int. 239.

It must have been carried to the extent of intoxication generally or at the time of making the will. O'Neil v. Murray, 4 Bradf. 311.

And it will not invalidate his will where his mind was not so affected thereby as to render him incapable of comprehending the condition of his property, or the relation of the objects of his bounty, or the scope and bearings of the provisions of his will. Re McLaughlin, 2 Redf. 504.

So, old age, failure of memory, and drunkenness do not of themselves necessarily take away a testator's capacity to make a will; it may still be valid if he retain sufficient capacity to understand the business in which he was engaged. Whitenack v. Stryker, 2 N. J. Eq. 8.

Neither old age, weakness, failure of memory, eccentricities, intemperance, nor ill temper will invalidate a will if the testator knew the nature of his property and understood to whom and in what manner he wished to dispose of it. Philadelphia Trust & S. D. Co. v. Drinkhouse, 17 Phila. 23.

And a will is valid where the testator when he made it could comprehend the property he was about to dispose of, the objects of his bounty, the meaning of the business in which he was engaged, the relation of each of these factors to the others, 39 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by Alexander H. Miller from a decree of the Orphans' Court for Allegheny County dismissing his petition for an appeal from an order of the register of wills admitting to probate the alleged will of Alexander H. Miller, deceased. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. Edward Campbell, Lazear & Orr, W. H. Tomlinson, and Charles E. Hogg, for appellant:

Where there is a substantial dispute upon a material question of fact an issue devocavit vel non is a matter of right, and the test of substantiality in the dispute is that a verdict could be supported by the trial judge, upon a review of all the evidence adduced.

Sharpless's Estate, 184 Pa. 250; Knauss's Ap- and the distribution that is made by the will, though he was addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, and to some extent his indulgence had impaired his mental and physical powers and contributed to the degradation of his moral character. Bannister v. Jackson, 45 N. J. Eq. 702.

And one whose mind was so weakened by habits of intoxication that he could not conserve his estate may nevertheless make a valid will where he could recollect its nature and extent and those for whom he naturally would provide. Re Johnson, 7 Misc. 220.

And a will made by one whose habitual and excessive indulgence in strong drink had not produced a mental derangement sufficient to destroy mental capacity is valid if at the very moment of the execution thereof he was not intoxicated to such a degree as to destroy his faculties or pervert his judgment. Bannister v. Jackson, 45 N. J. Eq. 702; Hennessey v. Wolfe, 49 La. Ann. 1876.

A person addicted to intemperance and subject to consequent fits of derangement may make a will if he be compos mentis at the time. Hebert v. Winn, 24 La. Ann. 385.

And habitual excessive indulgence in strong drink upon the part of a testator will not affect the validity of his will where it has not produced fixed mental disease sufficient to render him unable to comprehend the property he is about to dispose of, the objects of his bounty, the meaning of the business in which he is engaged, the relation of each of these factors to the others, and the distribution that is made by the will, and at the very moment of the execution of the document he is not so intoxicated as to disorder his faculties or pervert his judgment. Bannister v. Jackson, 45 N. J. Eq. 702, affirming 46 N. J. Eq. 598.

And the will of an habitual drunkard who was not properly a madman, but who while under the excitement of liquor acted in all respects like one, will be upheld where he was not under the excitement of liquor at the time he made it. Ayrey v. Hill, 2 Add. Ecol. Rep. 206.

So, habits of drunkenness do not affect a man's capacity to make a will where he was not intoxicated when he made it, though his habits were the cause of the disease of which he died. Kahl v. Schober, 36 N. J. Eq. 461.

And a will made at the request of a testator, which was his voluntary and spontaneous act, not under constraint and free from force or fraud and from imposition or importunity, is valid though the testator was proved to have been addicted to drink, and to have had delirium tremens a few days before, and though it was drawn up by one of the devisees at the devisee's house. Handley v. Stacey, 1 Fost. & F. 574.

III. Drunkenness as evidence of incapacity.
a. Generally.

Drunkenness, as has been seen, does not of itself, peal, 114 Pa. 20; Armor's Estate, 154 Pa. 517.

A man of sound mind and disposing memory is one who has a full and intelligent knowledge of the act he is engaged in, a full knowledge of the property he possesses, an intelligent perception and understanding of the disposition he desires to make of it, and of the persons and objects he desires shall be the recipients of his bounty.

Wilson v. Mitchell, 101 Pa. 495; Shaver v. McCarthy, 110 Pa. 389; Knauss's Appeal, 114 Pa. 10.

The evidence of appellant shows a great and inordinate use of alcoholic liquors by an aged man, the moderate use thereof beginning as early as 1862 or 1863; that from 1878 or 1879 and as a matter of law, destroy testamentary capacity. It is a mere matter of evidence upon the question of its existence or nonexistence. Re Harigan, Myr. Prob. 135.

Thus, in stating the grounds of contest in a proceeding to contest a will on the ground of the unsoundness of mind of the testator induced by habits of intoxication, it is sufficient to state that the testator was not at the time of sound and disposing mind. Unsoundness is the ultimate fact to be found, and acts of inebriety are to go to the jury from which unsoundness may be found. Re Gharky, 57 Cal. 274.

So, whether habits of inebriety upon the part of a testator had the effect to render his mind unsound either permanently or temporarily covering the time of the execution of his will, so as to affect its validity, is a question for the jury. Re Johnson, 57 Cal. 629.

And a finding of the court below that a testator was of sound and disposing mind will not be disturbed on appeal where there was some evidence to sustain it, though there was other evidence tending to show that for twenty years he had been addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors and had been for years a noted drunkard. Re Johnson, 57 Cal. 629.

Nor is mere evidence of the habitual use of liquors to excess by the testator alone sufficient to establish testamentary incapacity. Weisman's Estate, 45 Phila. Leg. Int. 274.

And occasional fits of intemperance are not evidence of a want of capacity on the part of a testator to dispose of his estate. Violet's Will, 1 Bibb, 617.

So, evidence that a testator was very nervous, weak, and suffering from mental and physical prostration at the time of making his will, due to over stimulation, will not justify the submission of the issue of testamentary capacity to a jury where there is nothing to show an inability to comprehend the nature and character of the testamentary power or of its exercise, and it appears that shortly afterwards he made the statement that he had changed his will stating the change made accurately. Harmony Lodge, 1 O. O. F.'s Appeal, 127 Pa. 269.

And evidence that a testator originally possessed a strong will which might have been weakened somewhat by disease and dissipation, and that he was frequently drunk and generally ill-natured and stubborn, is insufficient to warrant the submission of the issue of testamentary capacity to the jury. McPherson's Appeal (Pa.) 9 Cent. Rep. 408.

b. In connection with conduct and condition.

Occasional or habitual fits of intemperance, and want of domestic management, and generally bad conduct on the part of a testator, do not show testamentary incapacity. Harper's Will, 4 Bibb, 244. 89 L. R. A.

he drank as much as a pint, and often a quart, of whisky a day, keeping it at his own house in large quantities, and at his office in bottles.

The appellant's evidence further shows that the alleged testator was so weakened in body and mind by the inordinate use of whisky as to render him practically unable to transact business requiring thought, care, and judgment.

The appellant's evidence shows great failure of memory by the alleged testator at the time of and prior to the making of the will and codicils, as well as subsequent thereto.

There is also disclosed by the evidence of the appellant a marked change in the affections, disposition, and habits of the alleged testator, at the time of and prior to and subse-

Nor are frequent sleepiness, flightiness, and violent outbreaks of passion, resulting from excessive use of intoxicating drinks and narcotics, alone, sufficient. McCullough's Will, 35 Pittsb. L. J. 169.

And the presumption of the sanity of a testator is not rebutted by proof that his intellect was greatly impaired by the use of opium and ardent spirits, and that in consequence thereof he was frequently incapable of transacting business, in the absence of proof that such was his condition at the time the will was executed. Temple v. Temple, 1 Hon. & M. 476.

So, evidence of habitual drunkenness, old age, weakness of body, shortness of memory and a few incoherent expressions is not sufficient to establish testamentary incapacity. Hight v. Wilson, 1 U. S. 1 Dall. 94, 1 L. ed. 51.

Nor is evidence that the testator was old, intemperate, and irascible. Keating's Appeal, 15 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 283. And see Whitenack v. Styker, 2 N. J. Eq. 8; and Philadelphia Trust Co. v. Drinkhouse, 17 Phila. 23, supra, II.

And evidence of habits of intemperance upon the part of a testator, and that he was occasionally wild and violent from the effects of intoxicating drink, and that his mind was undoubtedly impaired and weakened, and that capacity may have been temporarily suspended, is not sufficient to establish a total and permanent want of testamentary capacity. Julke v. Adam, 1 Redf. 454.

So, a will will not be set aside on proof that the testator at times acted with whimsical and ridiculous levity, where this was accounted for and attributable to fits of intemperance, and the evidence shows that he acted with a firm, collected, and efficient mind in the framing and execution thereof, and that his mind was sufficient to entitle him to the right of disposing of his property by will. Violet's Will, 1 Bibb, 617.

And one who transacts his own business, and keeps his own accounts, and makes his own returns for the assessment of taxes, is not insane so as to be incapable of making a will, though he was a drunken man and played drunken pranks. Billingshurst v. Vickers, 1 Phillim. Eccl. Rep. 193.

And a will is not invalidated by the fact that the testator was a dissipated man and had indulged in a protracted debauch for five days before that on which he signed it, where he is not shown to have committed any extravagances or to have exhibited any insane conduct on that day, except to indulge in improper and profane language as intemperate men will do, and the persons who were present at the very time the act was done, one of whom was from previous knowledge and present observation eminently competent to speak, saw nothing in him indicating a want of ordinary intelligence or entire sanity, and there was nothing extravagant or unreasonable in the will. Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9, 84 Am. Dec. 220.

quent to the execution of the will in question and codicils thereto.

Appellant's evidence establishes, beyond question or doubt, that at the times the will in question and codicils were made, the testator was suffering from chronic alcoholism, and it had so affected and perverted the intellect, moral faculties, and will power of the patient as to render him incapable of the possession of that soundness of mind necessary to make a last will and testament.

There are the unequal provisions of the will itself, which the courts always treat as a strong circumstance bearing on the question of mental capacity.

Thomas v. Carter, 170 Pa. 272.

It is the practice of this learned court in cases of this character to receive and consider expert evidence.

Pidcock v. Potter, 68 Pa. 342, 8 Am. Rep. 181; Thomas v. Carter, 170 Pa. 272.

On the trial of an issue deviseavit vel non a conflict in the evidence and contrariety of the opinions expressed, and the veracity of the witnesses, are matters peculiarly within the province of the jury, and with them the court has nothing to do.

Shaver v. McCarthy, 110 Pa. 339; Newhard v. Yundt, 182 Pa. 324; Shaffer v. Clark, 90 Pa. 94; Weater v. Craighead, 104 Pa. 288; Sharpless's Estate, 184 Pa. 250.

The evidence of all the witnesses in the case must be considered, and not the testimony of some to the exclusion of that of others.

Nor does the fact that a testator was an intemperate man, and that he was suffering from Bright's disease of the kidneys, show testamentary incapacity, where his signature to the will shows no evidence of unsteadiness, and his will was such as he might naturally have made. Re Schreiber, 22 N. Y. S. R. 862.

And evidence that a testator was of intemperate habits and accustomed to paroxysms of great intoxication, becoming insensible, and that his death was probably caused by exposure while intoxicated and by the effects of intoxication, together with that of experts that he was insane, is not sufficient to invalidate his will where it appears that he would remain sober for a considerable length of time, and was considered a man of good mind when sober, and the opinions of the experts were given without personal examination or engaging in conversations with him, and the parties with whom he lived and at whose house he died explicitly say that his mind was not impaired. McIntyre v. McConn, 28 Iowa, 483.

And evidence as to long-continued habits of intemperance on the part of a testator, and irrational conduct, and that for two years previous to his death he had been paralyzed on one side, and later had lost the power of intelligible speech, does not show testamentary incapacity as against evidence of the testator's neighbors who had known him for many years that he was of sound mind and memory, where it appears that the testimony as to his incapacity was extremely biased and in some respects false, and that a part of his property was bequeathed pursuant to an agreement that if the legatee would live with him and take care of him for life he would leave her his property after death. Re Tacke, 17 N. Y. S. R. 805.

So, inebriety accompanied by bona fide attempts to commit suicide, and accomplished suicide, though perhaps manifesting a deranged mind, do not necessarily show incapacity to make a will. Koegel v. Egner, 54 N. J. Eq. 623.

And in McElwee v. Ferguson, 43 Md. 479, a will was upheld which was made by a person recovering from an attack of mania a potu who on the following day committed suicide, there being evidence to the effect that his mind was clear at the time.

A belief upon the part of a testator that his only son was illegitimate, based upon reports and stories he had heard shortly after his marriage, but which had never been communicated to anyone except to his priest and to his wife while he was intoxicated, is not such an insane delusion as will invalidate a will made by him disinheriting such son. Re Smith, 53 N. Y. S. R. 658.

c. In connection with nature of the act.

The dispositions of a will may be examined in a contest thereof in which it is claimed that the testator was intoxicated when making it, to see, not 89 L. R. A.

whether they are in some degree extravagant or unreasonable, but whether they depart so widely from what would be considered natural as to be fairly referable to no other cause than a disordered intellect. Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 2, 84 Am. Dec. 220.

And evidence of the reasonableness of a will, and testimony consistent with the existence of ability of the testator to execute it and of his understanding of the condition of his property, is sufficient to support a finding of testamentary capacity, though the testator was a man of intemperate habits and was suffering from the effects of a debauch when he made it, and a physician acquainted with his habits gave his opinion that at the time he was incapable of understanding what he was doing. Re Peck, 42 N. Y. S. R. 398.

And that a testator was an habitual drunkard, and that he had injured himself to a great extent by indulging his appetite for ardent spirits, do not establish his incompetency to make a will as against proof, derived from circumstances attending the execution, that he possessed such sanity of mind as would uphold the dispositions made by him, such dispositions being reasonable and in accord with previous intentions. Hubbard's Will, 6 J. J. Marsh. 50.

Nor will a deed in the nature of a testamentary disposition, made by a man seventy-six years of age just previous to his second marriage, be set aside though he had been addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors throughout his life and his memory had begun to fail, where he still possessed sound practical judgment on business matters, and it was done in fulfillment of a purpose formed a long time before, and the division of the property made by it among his children was not so unequal as to shock a sense of justice. Wiley v. Ewalt, 66 Ill. 26. See also Re Schreiber, 22 N. Y. S. R. 892, supra, III. b.

In Waters v. Cullen, 2 Bradf. 354, however, an unequal will was denied probate where at the time it was made and for some time before the testatrix's death she had been subject to attacks of delirium tremens, and at the time of making it entertained delusions likely to affect her testamentary provisions.

And in M'Diarmid v. M'Diarmid, 3 Bligh, N. R. 374, a deed by an old man eighty-three years old by which he relinquished all his interests in a fund of £6,000, assigning it to his daughter and her husband to whom the reversion belonged, in consideration of an annuity of £40 a year for life and his funeral expenses, was held to be void where it appeared that he was weak and infirm and addicted to intoxication, and that the deed was drawn up by the agents of the daughter and her husband, and no agent or other person was employed on the part of the father.

And evidence that a testator had fallen from a

Grubbs v. McDonald, 91 Pa. 236; Shaver v. McCarthy, 110 Pa. 389; Irish v. Smith, 8 Serg. & R. 578, 11 Am. Dec. 648; Rambler v. Tryon, 7 Serg. & R. 92, 10 Am. Dec. 444; McTaggart v. Thompson, 14 Pa. 149.

Undue influence to affect a will must be such as to subjugate the mind of the testator to the will of the person operating upon it.

Tawney v. Long, 76 Pa. 106; Den, Trumbull, v. Gibbons, 22 N. J. L. 117, 51 Am. Dec. 253; Redf. Am. Cas. on Wills, 251.

It is not to be supposed that fraud and undue influence are ordinarily susceptible of direct proof. Subscribing witnesses are called to attest the execution of wills, but not the antecedent agencies by which they are procured.

two-story window during an attack of delirium tremens, severely injuring himself, and that he mistakenly insisted that he had been pushed out by his wife's grandson, and that he labored under the delusion that his wife wanted to poison him and that persons in the house were trying to rob him, and that after making a will making a considerable gift to one of his sons he made another upon the mistaken idea that such son had broken open the sealed envelope and read it, which second will gave him nothing, radically changing bequests made to others, is sufficient to establish want of testamentary capacity. Edge v. Edge, 38 N. J. Eq. 211.

Nor will a will giving one of two sons of the testator a larger share than the other, and making a devise to his wife of property a part of which was her own and a part of which had been sold by him some time before, and giving her only about one half the amount devised to a sister and her children, notwithstanding the fact that she had cared for and watched over him faithfully, the testator having been several times committed to an asylum for alcoholic insanity and the physician who attended him and one of the attesting witnesses having testified that he was of unsound mind,—be admitted to probate, though there was evidence of rational acts. Re Ely, 16 Misc. 223.

In that case Re Halbert, 15 Misc. 308, and Re Johnson, 7 Misc. 220, supra, II. were distinguished upon the ground that in those cases there was no contention that a generally insane condition of mind existed caused by excessive indulgence in drink, the only issue being whether or not at the time of the execution of the will the testator was intoxicated.

A voluntary deed in the nature of a testamentary disposition, giving a favorite son much more than was given another son, will not be set aside, however, on the ground that at the time the deed was executed the father was in some degree intoxicated, where he was not insensible to what he was doing and no undue or improper means were used to procure the deed by the favored son. Belcher v. Belcher, 10 Yerg. 121.

And a will executed by a woman eight years before her death, who, though guilty of excessive drinking and great extravagances, managed her own property, received her dividends, did various acts of business, corresponded rationally with her friends, and was not shown to be under any delusion, cannot be set aside on the ground of insanity, though it totally excluded some of her next of kin with whom she had quarreled, and was in the handwriting of and executed at the office of her attorney, who was one of the executors and a residuary legatee to a large amount, he and his family both having large legacies, and the attesting witnesses speak to the bare execution, there being documents in her own handwriting showing both capacity and knowledge of contents, though not mentioning the residue, such documents supplying the addition.

The purposes to be served are such as court privacy rather than publicity.

Tyler v. Gardiner, 35 N. Y. 559; 1 Redf. Wills, 469, 470; Marsh v. Tyrrell, 2 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 84; Sears v. Shafer, 6 N. Y. 272.

The question of undue influence exerted upon the execution of a will is a question of pure fact. Its disposition properly rests with the jury alone.

Herster v. Herster, 116 Pa. 626.

Great latitude in testimony is allowed where the object is to establish fraud.

Reeme v. Parthemere, 8 Pa. 462; Davis v. Calvert, 5 Gill & J. 269, 25 Am. Dec. 282; Hiss v. Weik, 78 Md. 439; Steadman v. Steadman (Pa.) 14 Atl. 406.

tional proof required. Wheeler v. Alderson, Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 574.

So, in Ritter's Appeal, 59 Pa. 9, a deed in the nature of a testamentary disposition by a man of intemperate habits who was perfectly aware of his tendency to drink to excess, and made the deed for the benefit of his family, fearing that he would squander his property, was upheld where he was perfectly sober and in full possession of all his faculties, and thoroughly understood the nature and character of the act at the time.

d. In connection with undue influence.

A lesser degree of intoxication, or impairment of mind therefrom, would appear to be required to affect the validity of a will where undue influence was brought to bear upon the testator, than in cases in which drunkenness alone is relied upon.

Thus, evidence of incapacity from intoxication or otherwise, though not sufficient to warrant its submission to the jury on an issue of testamentary capacity, is admissible on the question of undue influence, the condition of the mind of the testator alleged to have been unduly influenced, although of testamentary capacity, being important in determining whether the act was the result of fraudulent arts practised upon him. Re MILLER.

So, evidence that a testator who was about seventy years old had been an habitual drunkard for fifty years, and that his appetite for drink was uncontrollable, and that he went to live with his brother, a saloon keeper, who offered him a home with full and free opportunity to drink when and what he pleased, and who resisted the efforts of his guardian to take him away, and that he had been drinking to some extent on the day he made his will which made such brother his sole legatee, warrants a finding of undue influence invalidating it. Slinger's Will, 72 Wis. 22.

And refusal to probate a will upon the ground of undue influence is warranted by proof that the testator was aed, and that his mental capacity was greatly impaired by habitual intemperance, and that his wife had for some time directed his intentions and controlled his acts, and that in her presence he directed a will, giving her two thirds of his property instead of one half provided for in a previous will, saying that he wanted to satisfy her and that it must be drawn as she desired it, she giving directions as to particular dispositions. Julke v. Adam, 1 Red. 454.

So, a will in English drawn for a German who possessed little familiarity with the English language and was habitually intoxicated, by his partner who supervised the execution and took substantial benefits under it, will be looked upon by the court, upon an allegation of fraud or undue influence, as an indication of fraud; and if it is not sufficient to raise a presumption against the instrument, it will at least induce a suspicious scrutiny. Koegel v. Egner, 54 N. J. Eq. 623.

Fraud vitiates everything it touches.
1 Redf. Wills, 522.

Where a testator, although possessed of testamentary capacity, is aged, infirm bodily, with mental faculties impaired, if a confidential adviser be largely a beneficiary under the will there is a presumption of fact that undue influence was brought to bear on the mind of the testator, and the burden is on him to rebut this presumption.

Wilson v. Mitchell, 101 Pa. 495; Armor's Estate, 154 Pa. 517; Dean v. Negley, 41 Pa. 312, 80 Am. Dec. 620.

Acts and declarations of Florence C. Miller, the principal legatee, are competent evidence, as well, also, as those of the testator.

Morris v. Stokes, 21 Ga. 552; 1 Redf. Wills,

And a will prepared by an attorney, who takes at least a fourth of the estate thereunder, the legatees taking the whole to the exclusion of the testator's own family, together with the fact that the testator was a person of slender capacity, addicted to drink, singular in appearance, and frivolous and even childish in his amusements and occupations, calls upon the court to watch the operation of the will itself with care, diligence, and suspicion. Barry v. Butlin, 2 Moore, P. C. C. 482.

And evidence of the character of women who had combined to impose upon a testator after he had lost the use of his rational faculties is admissible upon an issue of deusavit vel non, where it appears that they kept him in a state of intoxication and had represented each other as persons of virtue and good character, and urged him to make a will in their favor to the exclusion of his own blood relations. Nussear v. Arnold, 13 Serg. & R. 323.

See also M'Diarmid v. M'Diarmid, 3 Bilgh, N. R. 874, supra, III. c.

The act of a party addicted to intemperance in disposing of his property will not be invalidated on the ground of undue influence exercised over him by the inmates of his family, however, where the influence arises from kind offices springing from attachment or affection. Re Johnson, 7 Misc. 220; Gardner v. Gardner, 22 Wend. 826, 34 Am. Dec. 840.

And a will in favor of a legatee who had treated the testator kindly and furnished him with a home and cared for him and advanced him means, which he several times declared conformed with his wishes, will not be denied probate on the ground of mental incapacity and undue influence upon proof that he was much addicted to drink, and had been found an habitual drunkard by a jury, and had been such for two years, and had been committed to an insane asylum several times and twice committed to the penitentiary for drunkenness, a similar will having been previously made, and the persons who otherwise would have been entitled to his bounty had attempted to restrain his appetite for liquor and had refused him admission into their homes. Re Reed, 2 Connolly, 403.

So, a will prepared for a testator of slender capacity and addicted to drink, by a solicitor, under which he takes at least one fourth of the estate and the legatees take the whole to the exclusion of his son and heir, will be admitted to probate where it appears that there was a complete alienation between him and his son, and that they had ceased to speak with each other, and that the person preparing the will meant that it should be fairly and openly executed. Barry v. Butlin, 2 Moore, P. C. C. 482.

And the fact that a testator had become weak in will and impaired in memory, and was therefore an easy prey to fraud, compulsion, and improper conduct, and that at the time he made his will he was in a somewhat elated state of mind caused by drink-

200; Herster v. Herster, 116 Pa. 612; Rambler v. Tryon, 7 Serg. & R. 90, 10 Am. Dec. 444.

Even when the jury may differ in opinion with the court, it is no ground upon which to grant a new trial, where there is a conflict of testimony, or where the cause is submitted on the credibility of the witnesses.

Ausine v. Mayer, 5 Kulp, 523; Blakeslee v. Scott, 37 Phila. Leg. Int. 474.

The case at bar is much like that of Hiss v. Weik, 78 Md. 439.

Messrs. Clarence Burleigh and Watson & McCleave for appellee.

Dean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Alexander H. Miller, a member of the bar of ing an intoxicant which was on the table near at hand, will not invalidate his will on the ground of undue influence where there is no evidence going to show fraud, compulsion, or improper practices. Re Storey, 20 Ill. App. 183.

And declarations made by a testator to the effect that he had never made the will in question, and if he signed it they got him drunk and made him do it, for he had no recollection of it, are inadmissible in evidence in a proceeding to invalidate the will on the ground of undue influence and unsoundness of mind by reason of intoxication, such declarations not being evidence of the truth of the facts stated. Gibson v. Gibson, 24 Mo. 227.

See also Wheeler v. Alderson, 3 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 574, supra, III. c.

c. Point of time under investigation.

The point of time under investigation on an inquiry into testamentary capacity as affected by intoxication is that at which the will was made. Hennessey v. Woulfe, 49 La. Ann. 1376; Dimond's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 554.

Intoxication is a temporary condition, and testimony as to intoxication in a will contest must be confined to the time involved in the transaction, and if the testator was not overcome by drunkenness when he made his will it is not important what his condition was on other occasions. Pierce v. Pierce, 88 Mich. 412.

And in order to avoid a will made by an intemperate person it must be proved that he was so excited by liquor, or so conducted himself during the particular act, as to be at that moment legally disqualified from giving effect to it. Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9, 84 Am. Dec. 220; Andress v. Weller, 3 N. J. Eq. 604; Wheeler v. Alderson, 3 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 574.

And, against affirmative proof of his competency at such time, all evidence as to his capacity or incapacity on other and earlier occasions is clearly irrelevant. Dimond's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 554.

To establish the legality of a will attacked on the ground of habits of intoxication upon the part of a testator all that is required to be shown is the absence of the excitement of liquor at the time the act was done, or at least the absence of excitement in any such degree as would vitiate the act done. Ayrey v. Hill, 2 Add. Eccl. Rep. 206.

And evidence that a testator was a drunkard does not warrant the submission of the issue of testamentary capacity to a jury in the absence of anything to show that he was not entirely sober and possessed of testamentary capacity when the will was made. Levis's Estate, 140 Pa. 179.

And an issue deusavit vel non is properly refused in a will contest when asked for on proof of habits of excessive drinking which were not continuous but periodical, where the fact of even ordinary intoxication at the time of its execution was not

Allegheny county, on September 4, 1887, died at the age of seventy-three years. His wife had died seven years before, but he left, surviving him, six children,—Alexander H. (this appellant), with four brothers, and a daughter, Virginia, married to Patrick H. Winston. He left a will dated May 24, 1883, to which were appended two codicils, one dated May 29, 1884, and the other July 30, 1886. His estate, made up of realty and personalty, was valued at between $300,000 and $400,000. By the will he gave to his executors, in trust for his daughter Virginia, $25,000; to his son Zant, $5,000; to his son Hampton, an annuity of $500 for life; to Thomas, $5,000; to his brother George W., an annuity for life of $200. All the residue he gave absolutely to his son Florence, and appointed him and James J. Donnell executors of the will. By the first codicil he adds $5,000 to the bequest to his son Thomas, making it $10,000; to his son Alexander H., who had been given nothing in the will, he gave an annuity for life of $400. By the second codicil he gave to his son Hampton, in addition to his annuity, a house and lot then in the son's occupancy, and increased Alexander's annuity proved, and it was proved without contradiction that it was dictated by himself and perfectly well understood by him both at the time of execution and after that date. Harmony Lodge, I. O. O. F.'s Appeal, 127 Pa. 269.

So, the fact that a testator was an habitual drunkard and subject to not infrequent attacks of mania a potu during the last ten years of his life will not invalidate his will where it does not appear that he was drunk and of unsound mind on the day it was executed. Hebert v. Winn, 24 La. Ann. 385.

And proof that a testator was not properly a mad man, but an habitual drunkard, who under the excitement of liquor acted in all respects very like a mad man, will not invalidate his will where it appears that he was not under the excitement of liquor when it was made. Ayrey v. Hill, 2 Add. Ecol. Rep. 206.

And the fact that a testator had hurt himself to a great extent by indulging in intoxicating liquors, and that he displayed acts of folly while drunk which drunkards so frequently display, does not show him incompetent to make a will where he appeared to be sober at the time of its execution. Hubbard's Will, 6 J. J. Marsh. 59.

So, proof of a long-continued habit of drinking intoxicating liquors to excess, and of the fact that such habit tends to impair the intellect and moral sense, is not enough to invalidate a will by reason thereof; it must appear that at the time of its execution the testator was so enfeebled in mind by his habitual use of intoxicating liquors, or so intoxicated at the time of its execution, as to be incapable of making a will. Re Tracey, 11 N. Y. S. R. 103.

And proof of occasional intemperance upon the part of a testator, and that during such periods he was not competent to attend to business, does not show testamentary incapacity, where there is no direct evidence to show that at the time the will was made he was not in possession of the ordinary degree of mind and memory, or that he was in such a state as not fully to understand the business in which he was engaged. Goble v. Grant, 3 N. J. Eq. 629.

Nor will evidence that a testator was occasionally under the influence of intoxicating liquor and was quite feeble affect the validity of his will where it appears that he was perfectly sober when the will was executed and there was nothing to show lack of memory, and he had a full understanding of his affairs and was entirely free from restraint. Re Watson, 34 N. Y. S. R. 906.

Nor will proof that a testator had spells of intemperance and spells of sobriety, and that whenever he had been drinking for some time he became crazy, extravagant, foolish, and delirious, invalidate his will as against evidence that he was rational when sober, and proof by subscribing witnesses that he was sober and rational at the time he made it. Hart v. Thompson, 15 La. 88.

And something more than vague statements to the effect that the testator was more or less under the influence of liquor at an early hour in the morning of the day on which his will was executed is needed to destroy the presumption of testamentary capacity. Dimond's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 554.

So, the fact that during the last six months of the life of a testator he was for a large portion of the time more or less under the influence of intoxicating liquors will not invalidate his will made during that time, where it appears that at the very time of its execution four men saw him, who all unite in saying that he was free from intoxication and in full possession of his faculties, and the signature was not one of a trembling inebriate, but the bold rapid writing of a man in possession of power. Fluck v. Rea, 51 N. J. Eq. 233, Affirming 51 N. J. Eq. 639.

f. Presumption and burden of proof.

The legal presumption of a testator's capacity is not destroyed by proof of instances of longer or shorter incapacity from drunkenness. Black v. Ellis, 3 Hill, L. 68.

And habitual intoxication upon the part of a testator raises no presumption that there was incapacity or drunkenness at the time of making his will; such condition must be affirmatively proved or the presumption of capacity will prevail. Koegel v. Egner, 54 N. J. Eq. 623; Re Lee, 46 N. J. Eq. 193.

So, the burden of showing the want of capacity of a testator because of drunkenness at the time of the execution of his will rests with the party contesting it. Harper's Will, 4 Bibb, 244.

A will made by a person addicted to drunkenness is presumed to be valid, and its invalidity is to be established by the person alleging it. Starrett v. Douglass, 2 Yeates, 48.

And long-continued inebriety, though resulting in fits of insanity, does not require proof of a lucid interval to give validity to the acts of a drunkard, as is required where insanity is proved. Gardner v. Gardner, 22 Wend. 526, 34 Am. Dec. 340; Koegel v. Egner, 54 N. J. Eq. 623; Re Lee, 46 N. J. Eq. 193.

Insanity from intemperance is generally of a temporary nature, followed, not merely by a lucid interval, but by permanent restoration to reason, and to such insanity the usual presumption of continuance does not apply. Duffield v. Roberson, 2 Harr. (Del.) 375.

And to prove that a testator about the time of the execution of his will was addicted to the habitual use of intoxicating liquors to such an extent that he was occasionally drunk is not sufficient to render it incumbent upon the proponents of the will to show that at the time it was executed he was free from incapacitating intoxication. The person who asserts such intoxication must affirmatively show that it existed at the very time the will was made. Elkinton v. Brick, 44 N. J. Eq. 154, 1 L. R. A. 161.

But to uphold a will made by a testator who for some time before its execution and until his death was generally in a state of derangement produced by the habitual and intemperate use of ardent spirits, though he enjoyed some intervals in which his mind might be deemed competent, it should be shown by clear and satisfactory testimony to have from $400 to $500. The result of the will and codicils was to leave fully three fourths of the estate to his son Florence. The will was proved September 10, 1887, without notice to the heirs or legatees. An appeal was taken by Hampton J. Miller from the decree admitting the will to probate, which was dismissed because of neglect of appellant to file the bond required by law. (See 159 Pa. 562.) On June 27, 1892, Alexander H. Miller (this appellant) presented his petition to the orphans' court for allowance of an appeal from the same decree.

In this petition he averred testamentary incapacity of his father at the date of the execution of the will and codicils and undue influence exercised over him by Florence C. Miller, the principal beneficiary, to procure the making of them. It is not important, in the issue before us, to notice and discuss the decree on this petition in the court below, in the interval between the probate and dismissal of petition. They afford us no aid in the decision of this contention. It is sufficient to say that the appellant got his case properly before the court been made in one of such lucid intervals. Cochran's Will, 1 T. B. Mon. 204, 15 Am. Dec. 116.

And bare proof of execution is not sufficient to authorize the probate of a will of an aged person of a low grade of intellect who had become addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, and who was perfectly mad while under their influence; there must also be proof of instructions or knowledge of contents. Durling v. Loveland, 2 Curt. Eccl. Rep. 225.

And proof that a testatrix knew what was in the will she signed is imperatively demanded where there is no evidence that she had anything to do with its preparation or that she ever read it or heard it read or the contents stated,—especially where it affirmatively appears that her mental faculties were seriously impaired by the use of strong drink and opiates. Burritt v. Silliman, 16 Barb. 198.

A party seeking to invalidate a will upon the ground of the incapacity of the testator induced by habits of intoxication, which were not such as to render him habitually incompetent to transact business, however, must show the existence of the incompetency at the very time of executing the will. Andrews v. Weller, 3 N. J. Eq. 604; Fluck v. Rea, 51 N. J. Eq. 233; Sanderson v. Sanderson, 52 N. J. Eq. 243; Hebert v. Winn, 24 La. Ann. 385.

To invalidate a will upon the ground of the intoxication of the testatrix it is incumbent upon the contestants to prove, not only that she had been intoxicated or was usually intoxicated, but that she was so in fact at the very time the will was executed, or that her mind was so clouded by drink that she was incompetent to give expression to her real testamentary intentions. Re Halbert, 15 Misc. 308.

Keeping a will uncanceled gives rise to a presumption that it was not procured against the testator's will and intelligent consent, whether fraud, undue influence, or intoxication is set up against it. Pierce v. Pierce, 38 Mich. 412.

But the legal presumption that a testator understood the contents of her will which had been read to her is only prima facie where she was of great age and addicted to the use of opiates and ardent spirits to such an extent as to enfeeble and impair her faculties. Rutland v. Gleaves, 1 Swan, 198.

IV. Inquisition of drunkenness as evidence.

A retrospective finding of a jury on a commission of habitual drunkenness overreaching a will made by a testator is presumptive, and not conclusive, evidence of his incapacity. Re Patterson, 4 How. Pr. 34.

And the general rule would seem to be that the finding of an inquest that a testator was an habitual drunkard is only prima facie evidence of want of testamentary capacity, the effect of the inquest being to shift the burden of proof to the party asserting capacity. Lackey v. Cunningham, 56 Pa. 370; Dugan's Estate, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 322; Hannum v. Worrall, 2 Del. Co. Ct. Rep. 49.

Thus, a will made by an habitual drunkard while subject to a commission is not for that reason 39 L. R. A.

absolutely void. The existence of the commission is only prima facie evidence of incapacity, and may be rebutted by proof; and such a person, if of sufficient mental capacity, may make a valid will notwithstanding the commission. Lewis v. Jones, 50 Barb. 645.

And a finding of habitual drunkenness against a testator, adjudging him to be a fit subject for guardianship, is not conclusive against his capacity to make a will. It is prima facie only, and if actually restored to capacity he may make a will, though his restoration be not judicially determined; and the court may properly hear evidence as to whether or not he was actually restored to capacity at the time of its execution. Re Johnson, 57 Cal. 529.

To invalidate a will made by a person under commission the testimony must go to the extent of showing that at the time of the execution of the will the testator was mentally unfit to dispose of his property. Dugan's Estate, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 222.

In Re Patterson, 4 How. Pr. 34, however, the rule was laid down that while a commission remains unrevoked the lunatic or habitual drunkard cannot make a valid will without permission of the court, the existence of the commission being conclusive against the validity of the will.

But this holding was overruled by Lewis v. Jones, 50 Barb. 645, supra, in which Re Patterson, 4 How. Pr. 34, was distinguished and explained, the court saying that the determination that the order allowing the will to be made could be granted ex parte was all that was necessary for the determination of the appeal in that case, and that there was nothing in the decision which militates against the right of an habitual drunkard under a committee to make a will subject to the prima facie presumption that he is incompetent, the order in that case merely discharging the lunatic from the commission and inquisition so far as to permit him to make his will under the advice and with the sanction of a vice chancellor, but leaving him at liberty to revoke and cancel the will without such sanction; and that if there is a doubt of the power of a person under a commission of lunacy to make a valid will it does not necessarily follow that the same doubt applies to a will made by one under a commission as an habitual drunkard, drunkenness always having its sober intervals, while lunacy does not.

An application to the court to suspend an inquisition of habitual drunkenness so far as to permit a person to make a will is addressed to the discretion of the court, and may be made ex parte or on notice to the committee and next of kin, as the court shall direct. Re Patterson, 4 How. Pr. 34.

So, failure of the committee appointed for a person found to be an habitual drunkard to give bond and take charge of his property until his death, leaving him to manage his own affairs after a period of thirty-five years, raises a presumption that he had reformed and was competent to make a will, that being a fair inference after the lapse of more than twenty years. Leckey v. Cunningham, 56 Pa. 370.

F. H. B.

below, and that there was a regular judicial decree on the merits, after hearing, by a court of competent jurisdiction, against him, from which he now appeals to this court. He alleges the court erred—First, in not determining that there was evidence for a jury that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at the date of the execution of the will and codicils; and second, in not finding there was evidence for a jury that the will was procured by undue influence exercised over him by Florence C. Miller.

When the question before an appellate court is whether the evidence adduced in the court below was of that character which required its submission to a jury, and the answer of the appellate court is in the affirmative, a sort of restraint in the expression of an opinion is always necessarily imposed on the appellate court, not because of doubt in the correctness of its judgment, but because of the possible effect of elaborate discussion on the retrial of the cause. Hence, in whatever we may say in vindication of this judgment, we desire it to be distinctly understood that we are not pointing out what the verdict of the jury ought to be, but only the evidence on which a jury, after a consideration of it, may rest a verdict, if, in view of all the evidence, such verdict be warranted.

The appellant averred that the testator lacked testamentary capacity when he executed the will and codicils. The court below, as a question of fact, determined that this averment was so unfounded that there was no evidence which would warrant a jury in sustaining it, but that, on the contrary, he possessed "testamentary capacity of the highest order." It was alleged that the testator had become so addicted to the use of intoxicating liquor years before the date of the will, and at that date the habit was so aggravated and confirmed, that his mental powers were weakened, and bordered on imbecility. In proof of this, twenty witnesses were called, some of whom had peculiar and long-continued opportunities of observation, who testified that he began the drink habit about the year 1865, and kept it up until after the date of the will and codicils, and until his death; that it had so grown upon him as early as 1879 that he then drank at times as much as a quart a day, and, that it might be easy of access, he kept it, in large quantities, both at his house and law office; that he bought whisky for his own use, on more than one occasion, by the barrel. One of the witnesses to the excessive use of liquor was W. A. Lewis, Esq., who commenced reading law with him in 1865, and continued in his office until 1882. Some of the others were servants in his family; others street-car conductors on the lines leading past his home. Besides these disinterested witnesses were some of his children, living much of the time in his house. That he drank liquor to gross excess from 1879 to his death cannot be questioned, from this testimony, unless almost every one of the twenty witnesses be guilty of flat perjury. If they be believed, then, his brain was saturated with alcohol for almost ten years before his death. But, further than this, it was averred, and not denied, that the testator, when he executed the will and codicils, was afflicted with locomotor ataxia. This, appellant alleged, contributed to his physical and mental prostration. As to the probable effects of alcoholism and the disease of locomotor ataxia on the mind, the testimony of reputable experts was offered by the contestants, but rejected by the court for the reason that a prima facie case of incapacity had not been made out, and the further reason that a hypothetical question put to the experts, purporting to embrace the facts, omitted material facts proved by appellee. We do not think the grounds of the rejection sufficient. The testimony, when added to that already in, might have, if duly considered, affected the judgment and changed the result. But a comparison of the hypothesis with the facts contestant's evidence tended to prove shows that it embraced every material fact he alleged. He was not bound to include in it facts alleged by proponents which he denied, or facts which may be fairly considered irrelevant. Hence, in passing on the testimony, we take into consideration that which was rejected.

The learned judge of the court below went beyond the issue in his finding, when he declared that the testator possessed "testamentary capacity of the highest order." And while, if the issue presented only this one question, the error might be of no consequence, yet, because of the two questions, as will be noticed in our discussion hereafter of that relating to undue influence, the error becomes very material, and therefore requires notice. Take first the undisputed facts: An aged man, worth over $300,000, makes his will. He has six children. He gives more than three fourths to one of them. For ten years before his death—a period covering the date of the will—he drank largely of intoxicating liquors; besides, was sorely afflicted with an incurable disease. Next take the disputed facts. The testimony of disinterested witnesses shows that by reason of the excessive use of liquor, he was in almost a constant state of intoxication. Interested witnesses then testify to the consumption during that period by him, daily, of unusual quantities of intoxicant; that in consequence his memory had failed, and his power of will had weakened. Is it probable, in view of the undisputed facts, as well as those disputed, that testator had testamentary capacity of the highest order? Without considering the expert testimony, is not such a conclusion opposed to common knowledge derived from observation? In our judgment, there was manifest error in so finding. But, keeping within the scope of the issue, did he possess simply testamentary capacity? That is all the law requires in a valid testamentary disposition. This the court below could have found, notwithstanding testator's established habits of intoxication. Even a judicial decree that he was an habitual drunkard, and the appointment of a committee would have been, although conclusive as to contractual, only prima facie evidence of testamentary incapacity. Leckey v. Cunningham, 56 Pa. 370. While we are of opinion that the evidence wholly fails to establish a higher order of testamentary capacity, we will not say that the testator was destitute of that mental capacity requisite to a valid testamentary disposition of his property. On the first branch we sustain the court in refusing an issue, not because the decree is clearly right, but because it is not clearly wrong. The evidence of incapacity, taken altogether, is not of that weight which should constrain us to send the case to a jury.

The next question is, Was the will procured by undue influence exerted over the testator by his son Florence C. Miller? This is a question of pure fact. As is said in Herster v. Herster, 116 Pa. 612: "Its disposition properly rests with the jury alone. Even if the trial judge should feel that, were he sitting as a juror, he could not regard the evidence as sufficient to induce him to find a verdict against the will, that is not enough to justify him in taking the case entirely from the jury. . . . If the testimony is such that after a fair and impartial trial resulting in a verdict against the proponents of the alleged will, the trial judge, after a careful review of all the testimony, would feel constrained to set aside the verdict as contrary to the manifest weight of the evidence, it cannot be said that a dispute, within the meaning of the act, has arisen. On the other hand, if the state of the evidence is such that the judge would not feel constrained to set aside the verdict, the dispute should be considered substantial, and an issue to determine it should be directed. . . . It is perhaps well to say that undue influence may be exercised secretly as well as openly, and this is especially possible where a confidential relation exists between the principal devisee and the testator, and they dwell together in the same house." This is the substance of our authorities in Pennsylvania on the subject. Take now the undisputed evidence as to testator's age, habits, and disease at the date of the will and codicils; what is the reasonable inference to be drawn as to his testamentary capacity? Can it be of that order which it undoubtedly was twenty or thirty years before his death, and before it had become impaired by age, drunkenness, and physical infirmity? Assuming, as we do assume, with the court below, that testamentary capacity existed, and that, if voluntarily and independently exercised, testator was competent to make a valid will, yet was the capacity such as, by reason of its impairment, it could easily be operated upon by outside influence? Then follow the facts that Florence C., the son, lived in the house with his father, was his confidant for years, close to his person, his helper in his physical infirmities, his adviser in his business affairs. Then come to the gross inequalities in the distribution of the large estate. The confidant is largely the beneficiary. Next notice the affirmative testimony of the witnesses. B. F. Young testified that he frequently saw Florence with his father when the latter was intoxicated. Once, on the cars from Uniontown to Pittsburg, he says, "I spoke to Florence in reference to the old man's condition at the time, and asked him why he alone always accompanied the old gentleman in that condition. He answered, at the same time striking his chest with his hand, that there was boodle in it for him." Further on, after stating that he had remarked to Florence that he supposed his father would leave his brother Hampton in good circumstances, Florence replied, "He mustn't be too — sure of that, because I have got something to say in the matter." Then, about four months after the father's death, he asked Florence what chance his brothers and sisters would have to break the will, and he replied: "They didn't have the least possible show on earth; that he had things too well fixed for that." Virginia B. Winston, the daughter, testified that in 1881 Florence made a proposition to her to join him in a conspiracy to have the other brothers disinherited, which she refused. Sarah Outlaw, a servant, testified that she had frequently heard Florence say that he could do anything he pleased with his father. Nine witnesses, interested and disinterested, give like testimony, tending to show the extent of the influence obtained by Florence over his father from a time antedating the will until his death. "Where the testator, although possessed of testamentary capacity, yet is aged, infirm bodily, with mental faculties impaired, if his confidential adviser be largely a beneficiary under the will, there is a presumption of fact that undue influence was brought to bear on the mind of the testator, and the burden is on the beneficiary to rebut this presumption. Wilson v. Mitchell, 101 Pa. 495; Armor's Estate, 154 Pa. 517. If, in aid of this presumption, many witnesses testify to positive acts and express declarations indicating the unscrupulous intention of the confidant to exert his influence in his own favor, can it be said that there is no case for a jury?

Many reputable witnesses were called by proponent, and heard by the court, whose evidence tended to establish a degree of sobriety on part of testator; that he correctly transacted legal business for his clients; and that when they saw him he was not under the influence of liquor, and conversed intelligently. The effect of their testimony was to show that certainly, at times, testator was not incapacitated to make a valid testament, and it properly had great weight with the court on this branch of the case. But it tended only in a slight degree to negative the testimony of contestant adduced to show the undue influence exerted by Florence over his father. The court treats the evidence of the brothers and sisters as deserving of little credit, because of their interest; but it must be borne in mind that on questions of this kind the members of testator's family, and the inmates of his home, are generally the only witnesses who have every opportunity to observe the relations between the maker of a will and him whose unlawful influence procures it. Their interest may affect their credibility, but, if they had no interest, they would seldom be in a situation to know anything material to the issue. The learned judge also denies the credibility of the disinterested witnesses, and arrives at his conclusions by practically disregarding the testimony of both classes, interested and disinterested. But it was peculiarly the province of the jury to pass on the credibility of these witnesses, as has been held over and over. The learned judge does not take up the evidence and determine whether there is a substantial dispute demanding an issue, but he considers the bearing of the evidence on the issue as if granted; analyzes, weighs it on both sides, credits and discredits witnesses, then determines according to his judgment the truth of the matter. He performed, as one juror, a duty which the law imposes on twelve. In fact, there is no dispute of this character in which a jury could possibly have any duty to perform, if the judge chose to assume it, to the extent it was assumed in this preliminary inquiry. That Florence was not personally present when the will was executed is a fact to be considered with all the other evidence in the case bearing on the question of undue influence. The court treats this as most conclusive evidence in favor of the will. But this fact of itself has no such significance. If it had been alleged that Florence, by threats or other means, had excited the fears of the father on the day the will was made, and that in terror he had given him the bulk of his estate, the fact that he was not personally present when his father and the witnesses subscribed their names would have almost conclusively negated such a theory; but no such theory is put forward here. It is averred, however, that, by a long course of deception and falsehood practised upon his father, Florence had prejudiced him against his other children, and had ingratiated himself in his favor, with a special view to becoming the principal object of his bounty. Witness after witness was called whose testimony tended to show this. If such were the case, and the father became hereby embittered against the other children, and especially adopted Florence as his favored child, it was not specially important that Florence was not present when the will was signed. The machinations, it was alleged, which had prompted such a will, had been practised to that end for years preceding it, and were kept up for years after, to guard against a change of it. Assuming this to have been Florence's conduct, he would naturally absent himself at the time the will was actually subscribed.

We think, on the lines of the testimony pointed out, appellant had a case for a jury on the question as to whether the will had been procured by undue influence of the son upon the father. And, while the evidence tending to establish testamentary incapacity is not sufficient to warrant its submission to the jury on an issue involving that question, it is admissible in the determination of the second question. The condition of mind of a testator alleged to have been unduly influenced, although of testamentary capacity, is important in determining whether the act was the result of the fraudulent arts practised upon him.

The decree of the court below is reversed, and it is further ordered that an issue be awarded to determine whether the alleged will and codicils were procured by the undue influence of Florence C. Miller.

Mitchell, J., dissenting:

There is in this case (1) strong affirmative proof of every element of testamentary capacity in the act itself, the will, the codicils, and the circumstances of their making; (2) the overwhelming testimony of witnesses who knew the testator, and who also knew the requisites of testamentary capacity; (3) the conclusive evidence of the actual transaction of business, personal, professional, and as trustee, amounting during the period involved to more than $1,000,000, and no pretense that any single transaction showed incapacity; (4) on the other side the testimony of interested witnesses and the opinions of experts, not worth a rush against the proved facts. There is no trace of undue influence in the making of the will or the codicils, or in the separate custody of them by the testator for years before his death. That he preferred one child over others was his right as a parent, and that he preferred the son he did ought not to surprise anyone who reads the testimony even of the others. That the motives of the favorite may have been partly mercenary would not affect the fact that he was the only one who stayed with and assisted his father in his old age, or whose conduct in fact was not such as tended to drive him to drink or to the grave. As I am of opinion that the evidence is not sufficient to permit a jury to set aside this will, I would affirm the judgment.

Fell, J., joins in this dissent.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Charles McLOUTH, Respt.,
and
Pliny T. SEXTON, Appt.,
v.

George C. HUNT et al., Respts.

(164 N. Y. 179.)

1. The only principle for determining the relative rights of life tenants and remaindermen in respect to the capital and income of trust property under a will is to ascertain the intention of the testator from the language used, the relations of the parties to each other, their condition, and all the surrounding facts and circumstances of the case.

2. Grandsons, each of whom is entitled to the income of a share of a trust estate until he becomes thirty-five years of age, and then to the full payment of that share, if living, otherwise payment to be made to his descendants, if any, and if none, then to the other

NOTE.—As to rights of life tenants and remaindermen in respect to stock dividends, see Spooner v. Phillips (Conn.) 16 L. R. A. 461, and note; also 39 L. R. A.

Hite v. Hite (Ky.) 19 L. R. A. 173; and Pritchett v. Nashville Trust Co. (Tenn.) 38 L. R. A. 866.

grandsons, are to be regarded, with respect to the income and capital of the fund, as life tenants until they reach the age of thirty-five, and after that as remaindermen.

3. A decrease in the value of bonds by the lessening or wearing away of premium on account of the bonds reaching maturity should be borne, as between life tenants and remaindermen, by the corpus of the estate, where the bonds were held by a testatrix and transmitted as she held them to trustees with a direction that the life tenants should receive the full income.

4. A corporation cannot change accumulated earnings into capital, as between life tenant and remainderman, by its mere resolution, or conclude the courts on that question.

5. Stock certificates for the accumulated earnings of a corporation represent profits belonging to life tenants of stock, rather than an increase of capital for the benefit of remaindermen.

(November 23, 1897.)

APPEAL by plaintiff Sexton from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fifth Department, affirming a judgment entered in the office of the clerk of Wayne County upon the report of a referee in favor of the life tenants in a proceeding to determine the proper distribution of stock dividends and wearing away of premium on government bonds between life tenants and remaindermen. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Pliny T. Sexton, in propria persona:

The cases cited by the referee do not, operatively upon our case, come within the doctrine of stare decisis, for in none of them, of which a competent court had jurisdiction, in which it was necessary to dispose of a stock dividend as such, was the question here under review litigated and decided upon principle.

Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 646; Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 487; Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. 637; Goldsmith v. Swift, 25 Hun, 201; Woodruff's Estate, Tucker, 58; Re Prime, 64 Hun, 50; Re Kernochan, 104 N. Y. 618.

The principles enunciated in Hyatt v. Allen, 56 N. Y. 553, 15 Am. Rep. 449, and Re Kernochan, 104 N. Y. 618, logically require the holding that stock dividends are principal and not income of trust estates.

Clapp v. Astor, 2 Edw. Ch. 379.

The only practicable, most just, and equitable rule, is that, as between beneficiaries of the current income of trust funds, and the remaindermen thereof, stock dividends are not distributable as income, but must be retained by the trustees as representing that which, notwithstanding such so-called dividend, still remains, as it was before, a part of the corpus of the trust estate.

Burrall v. Bushwick R. Co. 75 N. Y. 211; People, Manhattan F. Ins. Co., v. Tax & A. Comrs. 76 N. Y. 74; Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 N. Y. 189; Cross v. Long Island Loan & T. Co. 75 Hun, 533; Re Gerry, 103 N. Y. 445, 18 Abb. N. C. 178; Knight v. Lidford, 3 Dem. 88; Utica v. Churchill, 33 N. Y. 237.

If corporate profits are improperly withheld from shareholders, the courts have ample power to enforce the proper distributing of such profits.

Hiscock v. Lacy, 9 Misc. 578.

A cash dividend, after its declaration, becomes an obligation of the corporation to the shareholder, for which he may bring suit, and it is taxable to him as its owner.

People, United States Trust Co., v. Barker, 86 Hun, 181.

The most highly respected tribunals in other jurisdictions unite in holding that, as between a beneficiary of the current income of a trust estate and a remainderman, stock dividends are capital, and not income thereof.

Gibbons v. Mahon, 133 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525; Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101, 96 Am. Dec. 705; Doland v. Williams, 101 Mass. 571; Leland v. Hayden, 102 Mass. 542; Rand v. Hubbell, 115 Mass. 461, 15 Am. Rep. 121; Spooner v. Phillips, 62 Conn. 62, 16 L. R. A. 461; Mills v. Britton, 64 Conn. 4, 24 L. R. A. 587; Hite v. Hite, 93 Ky. 257, 19 L. R. A. 173; Thomas v. Gregg, 78 Md. 545.

It was not Mrs. Cuyler's intention that the wearing away of the premiums on United States bonds, while or when held in the trust estates created in her will, should be borne by the corpus of said estates.

Re Gerry, 108 N. Y. 449; Hardenbergh v. Ray, 151 U. S. 112, 38 L. ed. 93; Fosdick v. Delafield, 2 Redf. 392.

The testatrix having made no provision, the income should bear the loss.

Whitson v. Whitson, 53 N. Y. 482; Re Albertson, 113 N. Y. 439; Woodward v. James, 115 N. Y. 346; Re Vowers, 113 N. Y. 571.

The changing of the general rules of law must be done so clearly and certainly as to leave no doubt of the testator's intention.

Re Vowers, 113 N. Y. 571; Re Albertson, 113 N. Y. 435; Whitson v. Whitson, 53 N. Y. 482; Re Shipman, 82 Hun, 116.

The general rule of law requires trustees to reserve and retain, as so much principal returned, such portion of each instalment of interest received upon United States bonds, or other securities, held in the trust estates at a premium, as will offset the current, proportionate wearing away of their premiums, caused by the progress of the securities toward their maturity.

Re Albertson, 113 N. Y. 439; Whitson v. Whitson, 53 N. Y. 482; Scorel v. Roosevelt, 5 Redf. 124; Wilcox v. Quinby, 73 Hun, 524; Re Mason, 98 N. Y. 534; People, Cornell University, v. Davenport, 30 Hun, 184; Re Housman, 4 Dem. 415; Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. 641; Cogswell v. Cogswell, 2 Edw. Ch. 231; 1 Perry, Tr. 537, 538; Minot v. Thompson, 106 Mass. 585; Farwell v. Thredle, 10 Abb. N. C. 94; New England Trust Co. v. Eaton, 140 Mass. 532, 54 Am. Rep. 493; Reynal v. Thebaud, 8 Misc. 187.

A gift of the use of property generally will not authorize the consumption of perishable property that happens to form a part of testator's estate at his death.

2 Perry, Tr. § 547; Re Housman, 4 Dem. 415.

Mr. Charles McLouth, in propria persona:

A stock dividend made from surplus or net earnings after the death of a testator is to be regarded as income and not capital.

Re Kernochan, 104 N. Y. 618; Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 487, 26 Hun, 90; Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 646; Goldsmith v. Swift, 25 Hun, 201; Hyatt v. Allen, 56 N. Y. 553, 15 Am. Rep. 449; Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. 637.

Dividends coming from a sale of part of the stock are principal.

Knight v. Lidford, 3 Dem. 88; Re Skillman, 24 Abb. N. C. 41; 2 Perry, Tr. 4th ed. 545; Re Lawrence, 2 Connolly, 53.

So, when a sum was given to a widow to be paid from certain stock, and such stock was transferred to her by the executors, it was held that certain dividends paid to the executors did not go to her.

Re Hodgman, 140 N. Y. 421; People, Cornell University, v. Davenport, 30 Hun, 177, 117 N. Y. 549.

A stock dividend representing profits made by the corporation is income belonging to the life tenants.

Hite v. Hite, 93 Ky. 257, 19 L. R. A. -173; Earp's Appeal, 28 Pa. 368; Thomas v. Gregg, 78 Md. 545; Woodruff's Estate, Tucker, 58; Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 646; Goldsmith v. Swift, 25 Hun, 201; Hyatt v. Allen, 56 N. Y. 553, 15 Am. Rep. 449; Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. 637; Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 487; Re Warren, 33 N. Y. S. R. 584; Re Skillman, 24 Abb. N. C. 41; Re Prime, 64 Hun, 50; Wood v. Lary, 47 Hun, 550; Whitson v. Whitson, 53 N. Y. 479; Re Oliver, 136 Pa. 43, 9 L. R. A. 421.

Where a stock dividend represented earnings of a corporation it was income and would go to the tenants for life; but where it represented the avails of the sale of a portion of the corporate property it would go to the remainderman.

Spooner v. Phillips, 62 Conn. 62, 16 L. R. A. 461.

Where a dividend is declared it belongs to the owner of the stock at the time.

Hopper v. Sage, 112 N. Y. 531; People, United States Trust Co., v. Barker, 86 Hun, 131.

Was the wear of premiums to be borne presently by the defendants, of the corpus of the estate? This is a question purely of fact, depending upon the ascertained intention of the testatrix.

It has been said that such intention is a mixed question of law and fact.

White v. Hoyt, 73 N. Y. 505; Kenyon v. Knights Templar & M. Mut. Asso. 122 N. Y. 247; Stokes v. Mackay, 140 N. Y. 649; East Hampton v. Vail, 151 N. Y. 463.

But the fact must first be determined.

Stuart v. Brown, 11 App. Div. 492; Re Clinton, 12 App. Div. 132; Stimson v. Vroman, 99 N. Y. 79.

The question has been determined as a question of fact, and that determination has been affirmed by the general term.

The question then arises, What jurisdiction has this court to entertain an appeal on that branch of the case? I say none.

Niendorff v. Manhattan R. Co. 150 N. Y. 276; Hopkins v. Clark, 149 N. Y. 329; Seuchy v. Hillside Coal & I. Co. 150 N. Y. 219; Crim v. Starkweather, 136 N. Y. 635; Amherst College v. Ritch, 151 N. Y. 320, 37 L. R. A. 305.

It must be held to have been within testatrix's 89 L. R. A. contemplation that the securities which she purchased would be held in her estate, which she placed in trust after her death.

Bergen v. Valentine, 63 How. Pr. 221; Shaw v. Cordis, 143 Mass. 444.

And so she knew that for every reason the holding of government securities was not only a thing which people must, but it was for their interest to, do. She knew that by holding the premiums would wear off.

Reynal v. Thebaud, 3 Misc. 190.

The circumstances of the beneficiaries as known to the testatrix are circumstances to be considered on the question of intention.

Skullers v. Johnson, 38 Barb. 80; Stimson v. Vroman, 99 N. Y. 74; Freeman v. Coit, 96 N. Y. 63; Roseboom v. Roseboom, 81 N. Y. 356; Tilden v. Green, 130 N. Y. 29, 14 L. R. A. 33; Starr v. Starr, 132 N. Y. 154; Re Gerry, 103 N. Y. 449.

The "full income" is necessarily to be that part which is left after the payment of expenses, and to that in full, or entirely, or in gross, the defendants must be entitled.

Re Gerry, 18 Abb. N. C. 178, 103 N. Y. 445; Shaw v. Cordis, 143 Mass. 446; Burleigh v. Center, 9 Jones & S. 441; Reynal v. Thebaud, 3 Misc. 187; Hemenway v. Hemenway, 184 Mass. 446; New England Trust Co. v. Eaton, 140 Mass. 593, 54 Am. Rep. 493; Knight v. Lidford, 3 Dem. 90; Porter's Estate, 5 Misc. 274; Re Hutchinson, N. Y. L. J. Feb. 29, 1892; Farwell v. Tweedle, 10 Abb. N. C. 94; Duclos v. Benner, 62 Hun, 435; Hite v. Hite, 93 Ky. 257, 19 L. R. A. 175; Re Jones, 19 N. Y. S. R. 436.

Mr. S. N. Sawyer, for respondent Carlton C. M. Hunt:

Plaintiffs are not authorized or required by law to set aside and retain as a part of the corpus of the estate from the interest received upon the government bonds an amount sufficient to offset the wearing away of the market premiums.

Re Gerry, 103 N. Y. 445, 18 Abb. N. C. 178; Re Pollock, 3 Redf. 100; Townsend v. United States Trust Co. 8 Redf. 220; Scovel v. Roosevelt, 5 Redf. 121; Wilcox v. Quinby, 73 Hun, 524; Farwell v. Tweedle, 10 Abb. N. C. 94; People, Cornell University, v. Davenport, 117 N. Y. 549, 30 Hun, 177; Bergen v. Valentine, 63 How. Pr. 221; Reynal v. Thebaud, 3 Misc. 187; Shaw v. Cordis, 143 Mass. 443.

The subject under consideration is to be determined by the intent of the testatrix, if same can be gathered from a reading of her will in the light of her surroundings.

Masterson v. Townshend, 123 N. Y. 458, 10 L. R. A. 811; Whitney v. Whitney, 63 Hun, 59; Woodward v. James, 115 N. Y. 346; Cahill v. Russell, 140 N. Y. 402; Riggs v. Cragg, 26 Hun, 95; Re Lapham, 37 Hun, 15; Re Powers, 113 N. Y. 569.

The twenty-five and four-tenths shares of Western Union Telegraph stock received by the trustees for stock dividends are to be treated as income and distributed to these defendants.

Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 646; Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. 637; Goldsmith v. Swift, 25 Hun, 201; Riggs v. Cragg, 26 Hun, 90, 89 N. Y. 487; Hyatt v. Allen, 56 N. Y. 553, 15 Am. Rep. 449; Re Kernochan, 104 N. Y. 618; Knight v. Lidford, 3 Dem. 88; Re Woodruff's Estate, Tucker, 58.

Messrs. William H. Stuart and Joseph A. Adlington, for other respondents:

The stock dividend of twenty-five and four tenths shares stock of the Western Union Telegraph Company is income, and should be turned over to the beneficiaries now, and should not be retained as a part of the principal of the trust estate which they are not to receive until they respectively become thirty-five years of age.

Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 487; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, §§ 552-557; 1 Spelling, Priv. Corp. § 457, note 2; Title to Dividends as between Life Tenants and Remaindermen, 19 Am. L. Rev. 737; Williams v. Western U. Tele. Co. 93 N. Y. 182; Earp's Appeal, 28 Pa. 374; Moss's Appeal, 83 Pa. 269, 24 Am. Rep. 264.

The suggestion that the intention of the directors should determine the question whether the dividend is capital or income cannot be correct.

Heard v. Eldredge, 109 Mass. 260, 12 Am. Rep. 687; Hite v. Hite, 93 Ky. 265, 19 L. R. A. 173; Thomas v. Gregg, 73 Md. 545.

The loss, if any, from the "wearing away" of the premiums on United States bonds, should be born by the corpus of the trust fund.

Reynal v. Thebaud, 3 Misc. 287; Peckham v. Newton, 15 R. I. 322; 83 Alb. L. J. 424, 427, article by Mr. Guy C. H. Corliss; Redfield, Surrogate Practice, 5th ed. 509; Bergen v. Valentine, 63 How. Pr. 221; Re Pollock, 3 Redf. 100; Re Hutchinson, N. Y. L. J. Feb. 29, 1892; Shaw v. Cordis, 143 Mass. 446; Hemenway v. Hemenway, 184 Mass. 446; Whittemore v. Beckman, 2 Dem. 276; Furness's Estate, 12 Phila. 130.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action to procure a judicial construction of the provisions of a will, and incidentally for an accounting by the trustees of a testamentary trust. Caroline Cuyler died on the 18th day of September, 1888, leaving a will with two codicils, which was admitted to probate. The plaintiffs are the executors of the will, and trustees under the trust created thereby. The testatrix, after making various general and specific bequests and devises to collateral relatives, friends, and institutions of charity, disposed of the residue of her estate in trust for the benefit of three grandchildren named therein. The questions involved here relate wholly to the administration of the trust by the trustees, and to the distribution of the fund between the parties respectively entitled thereto. The trust provision is as follows: "After the payment of the above legacies, and any debts which I may owe, and the proper expenses of settling my estate, all of the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, of every kind, I give, devise, and bequeath, in three equal parts, to my executors, in and upon three several, separate, and independent trusts, and in trust as follows, to wit: That they take, receive, hold, care for, preserve, maintain, invest and reinvest, convert, sell, lease, and collect the same, in all things, as in their discretion may seem advantageous for the benefit, respectively, of my said three grandsons, George Cuyler Hunt, Samuel Hall Hunt, and Carlton Charles McLouth Hunt, as follows: That my executors pay over to the use and benefit of each of my said grandsons, respectively, during their or his minority, such portion of the income of said three parts, for their support, maintenance, or education, as in the discretion of my executors may seem proper. That from and after the arrival at age of my said grandsons, respectively, that my said executors pay over to each of them, respectively, annually from their arriving at age, the full income of one of said three parts. That my executors pay over to each of my said grandsons, respectively, on his arriving at the age of thirty-five (35) years, the full amount of one of said three parts, together with any accumulation thereupon which may remain. In case of the death of one of my said grandsons prior to his arriving at the age of thirty-five (35) years, I direct that my executors shall pay over his share (being one of said three parts) to his descendants, if any. If none, then that the same shall remain in trust, as above written, for his surviving brothers, my two remaining grandsons. In case of the death of the second of my said grandsons prior to his arriving at the age of thirty-five (35) years, I direct that my executors shall pay over his share (being one of said three parts) to his descendants, if any. If none then his original part or third, as above written, shall remain in trust, as above written, for his remaining brother, my surviving grandson; but the portion or share so received or inherited by said second of my grandsons dying from the share of his prior deceased brother shall be paid to such surviving brother, my remaining grandson."

The executors and trustees duly qualified, and took charge of the whole estate. On December 1, 1890, the surrogate having jurisdiction, by an order made on that day, directed the trustees to set aside and retain, for the purposes of the trusts, certain personal property belonging to the estate, including $95,000, par value of United States 6 per cent bonds, valued at a premium of 28 per cent or at $121,600; also $12,000, par value of United States 4 per cent bonds, at the same premium, inventoried and valued at $15,360.

The 6 per cent bonds will mature in 1898, and the 4 per cent bonds in 1907. There was also included in the trust, under the same directions, 254 shares of the capital stock of the Western Union Telegraph Company, upon which the trustees received a stock dividend of 10 per cent on the 10th day of November, 1892, represented by certificates issued to them for 25.4 additional shares. This dividend was declared upon the surplus earnings of the corporation. It appears that in the administration of this trust a difference of opinion arose between the two trustees with respect to their duties, and with respect to the distribution of certain items claimed by the one to be income, and by the other to be capital. It was for the purpose of adjusting this dispute in an amicable spirit that this action was brought to obtain a construction of the will, and a direction to the trustees with respect to their duties and obligations. The trustees are the sole plaintiffs, and the three grandchildren named in the trust provisions the only defendants. The defendants answered the complaint, setting forth what they claimed to be their rights under the will, and the duties of the trustees with respect to the trust estate. The action being at issue, it was referred to a referee for trial; and, as an incident of the litigation, a full accounting on the part of the trustees was had, which shows the sums paid out under the directions of the trust, and the fund which still remains in their hands.

It will be seen from the terms of the will creating the trust in question that there is a contingent remainder in favor of descendants or great grandchildren born before the grandchildren arrived at the age of thirty-five years, but, in case the latter arrived at that age without children, then they are to take the whole corpus of the estate. The grandchildren are now all living without children, and one of them is within a few months of the age specified. The other two will arrive at that age within the next four years. So that the only practical importance of this controversy, aside from the interesting nature of the questions involved, arises from the possibility that children may be born to some of them before they have reached the age designated in the will for the final termination of the trust and the distribution of the fund. The grandchildren, as the immediate beneficiaries of the trust, are entirely satisfied with the decision of the questions as rendered by the courts below and none of them have appealed from the judgment. In case the grandchildren had now arrived at the age designated in the will, without issue, when they are to become the absolute owners of the whole fund, the case would present little more than an academical question, in which the trustees had no legal interest sufficient to warrant an appeal to this court. Bryant v. Thompson, 128 N. Y. 426. But as there is still a possibility that the contingencies contemplated by the will, upon which the remainders to the immediate beneficiaries may be defeated, will happen, the questions raised must be met and decided. In discussing these questions, it will be more convenient to consider the grandchildren, before reaching the age of thirty-five, as life tenants, and after arriving at that age as remaindermen, although such a classification may not be strictly accurate. The case is obviously governed by the same rules and principles that prevail in the determination of legal questions between the owner of an estate for life and the owner of an estate in the same property in remainder; and the analogy is so perfect that we may adopt it, in order to avoid confusion of terms, and to bring the discussion within the language of the authorities cited, and which are conceded to have more or less application to the case. We have seen that the controversy is wholly between the plaintiffs themselves, as trustees. Their respective claims and contentions are as follows: Mr. Sexton, one of the trustees, contends: (1) That in the administration and distribution of the trust estate the life tenants are not entitled to the full interest on the United States bonds, but that there should be deducted therefrom, and retained by the trustees for investment, a progressively increasing sum in each year, to meet what is called the "wearing away of the premium," to the end that the remaindermen may receive them at the termination of the trust intact, without diminution in value in consequence of the fact that they have matured, or are approaching maturity, when of course, the premium must disappear altogether; in other words, that the expense of the premiums on the United States bonds must be borne by the life tenants, and not by the tenants in remainder. (2) That the stock dividends upon the Western Union stock were not income payable to the life tenants, but an accession to the capital which goes to the remaindermen. Mr. McLouth, one of the trustees, and the three grandchildren defendants, on the other hand, insist upon just the contrary of these two propositions, and in their contention they have been sustained by the courts below.

At least one, if not both, of these questions, has been the subject of discussion in the courts of this country and England for a century. The decisions, though numerous, are singularly conflicting and unsatisfactory. It is not necessary, in the disposition of this case, to review them, or to attempt to reconcile the conflict, even if that were possible. The whole subject has been in recent years carefully examined and elaborately discussed in the courts of this country; and, while the conflict still exists, it is possible, from a study of the decisions, and a careful consideration of the peculiar facts and circumstances of this case, to arrive at a conclusion which will be equitable and just, and will have the support, substantially, of the more recent authorities upon the questions, as expressed in judicial decisions and by textwriters. Notwithstanding the conflict of authority to which I have just referred, there is one principle or rule applicable to this case, with respect to which the parties are all at agreement; and that is that the questions are not to be determined by any arbitrary rule, but by ascertaining, when that can be done, the meaning and intention of the testatrix, to be derived from the language employed in the creation of the trust, from the relations of the parties to each other, their condition, and all the surrounding facts and circumstances of the case. With respect to the question as to which estate the premium upon the bonds is to be charged, the courts below have disposed of that by an application of this rule; and in reviewing their decision it is important to keep in view some facts as to which there is no dispute, viz.: (1) That the bonds in question, except $5,000, were purchased by the testatrix during her lifetime, or came to her by will and were transmitted as she held them to the plaintiffs; (2) that the direction in the will is that the life tenants shall receive the full income; (3) that the trustees placed and retained these bonds in the trust as a part of the capital of the fund by the direction of the surrogate who had jurisdiction,—a direction which they were not at liberty to disobey, any more than if the testatrix herself had specifically designated them as a part of the trust fund. Upon a consideration of all the circumstances of the case the learned referee held that it was the intention of the testatrix, in making the trust provision, that the decrease in the value of the securities by the lessening or wearing away of premiums on account of the bonds reaching maturity should be borne by the corpus of the estate, and not presently by the defendants, and that the defendants were entitled to receive the whole of the current annual income of the estate, less expenses and commissions, as provided by the surrogate's decree under which the trust was erected. It is said that the intention of the testatrix with respect to the amounts which the beneficiaries were to receive as income from the earnings of the fund, and expressed by the words "full income," was a question of fact, to be determined, not only from the language employed, but from the conditions and relations of the parties, and all the circumstances of the case. Whether that is so or not, we think that when the testatrix directed that her grandchildren should receive the whole income of these securities, she must have intended the full interest payable thereon, without diminution by reserving a considerable portion of it for the purpose of meeting any depreciation in the market value of the bonds, due to the fact that they were approaching maturity. Whatever meaning the words "full income" may convey to the mind of a trained expert in finance, it cannot, we think, be doubted that the common mind must always understand such a direction in a will as meaning the annual interest upon securities. To give to her words now an artificial meaning, based even upon scientific theories, would be to subvert her intentions, and to take from the objects of her bounty a considerable portion of the money which she intended that they should receive. The thought that was in the mind of the testatrix with respect to her grandchildren, and the provision necessary for their support and maintenance, should be carried out. There seems to be no reason to believe that she intended that they should receive any less than the interest. But, quite apart from these considerations, it is said that, upon principle and the great weight of authority, the decision of the learned referee was right. Since the investment must be unquestionably safe, in order to preserve the capital as well as to secure income, the premium is paid for the benefit of the remainderman as well as the life tenant. The absolute security of government bonds, both to the life tenant and the remainderman must always be kept in view. They may be purchased at a premium, and sold at a still higher one, in which case, if there is a deduction made from the interest, and added to the principal, to balance the premium, the remainderman will be doubly benefited. Some investments will increase while others will diminish in value. When all things are considered, the better rule, it is urged, is to allow these matters to balance themselves, as, on the whole, they are quite likely to in the end. The arguments against charging the life tenant in such cases with the premiums have thus been elaborated at great length in many of the adjudged cases. Hite v. Hite, 98 Ky. 257, 19 L. R. A. 175; Peckham v. Newton, 15 R. I. 322, 83 Alb. L. J. 424; Bergen v. Valentine, 68 How. Pr. 221; Re Potlock, 2 Redf. 100, 118; Shaw v. Cordis, 143 Mass. 443; Hemenway v. Hemenway, 184 Mass. 446; Whittemore v. Beekman, 2 Dem. 276; Furness's Estate, 12 Phila. 180; Meyer v. Simonsen, 5 De G. & S. 728. The authorities cited in support of the appeal on this point, and 39 L. R. A.

which it is claimed establish the contrary rule, are Farnell v. Tweddle, 10 Abb. N. C. 94; People, Cornell University, v. Davenport, 30 Hun, 177, Reversed 117 N. Y. 549; New England Trust Co. v. Eaton, 140 Mass. 532, 54 Am. Rep. 493; Reynal v. Thebaud, 3 Misc. 187; New York L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Kane, 17 App. Div. 542. We think the court below properly held that the premium upon the bonds could not be charged to the life tenants. Without attempting to show upon which side of the controversy the weight of reason and authority is, the intention of the testatrix, as expressed in the will, must prevail. There were $5,000 of the United States bonds purchased by the trustees, after the erection of the trust, at the same premium. There may be reasons for charging the life tenants with the premium on these bonds that do not apply to the others. But that item is so insignificant that it does not play any part in the controversy. All questions as to the premiums on these bonds were virtually waived on the argument, and we decide nothing as to which party (the life tenant or remainderman) should bear the loss occasioned by the wearing away of the premium. It was admitted at the argument that the parties themselves could adjust that part of the controversy.

With respect to the stock dividends upon the stock of the Western Union Telegraph Company embraced in the trust, it is important to notice the finding of the referee. For the purposes of the case the parties stipulated, and the referee found, that in the fall of 1892 the Western Union Telegraph Company, by a capitalization of accumulated earnings made and retained in its hands, from time to time, increased its capital stock from $86,200,000 to $100,000,000, and, predicated thereon, made a stock dividend of 10 per cent to its stockholders, under which the plaintiffs received in December of that year from the corporation a certificate for 25.4 additional shares of stock; making, with the 254 shares previously held by them, 279.4 shares. There is doubtless much stronger and more weighty authority to support the contention of the appellant with respect to this question than the one just considered. We will not attempt any extended or critical analysis of the numerous cases in which the question whether such a dividend is to be treated as capital or income has been discussed and decided. It would enlarge the scope of the discussion beyond all reasonable limits, and in the end answer no useful purpose. It is quite sufficient to say that they are in hopeless conflict, though, as it seems to us, the general trend of the more recent ones, as well as the weight of argument and reason, sustain the decision in this case. With respect to this question the appeal is sought to be sustained first by a class of cases in England, founded upon Brander v. Brander, 4 Ves. Jr. 800, and followed by Ireing v. Houstoun, 4 Pat. App. 521; Paris v. Paris, 10 Ves. Jr. 184; and Re Barton, L. R. 5 Eq. 238. Apart from the evident inclination of the judicial mind at that day, in that country, to favor entails, perpetuities, and accumulations of property, it can hardly be said that these cases were well considered. Lord Chancellor Eldon admitted this in Paris v. Paris, 10 Ves. Jr. 184, where he said: "I confess

I do not think I can safely rest upon any distinction between this case and those that have been determined. I have had great difficulty in stating the principle that led to them. But in the case from Scotland great inquiry was made as to the length to which practice had carried the decisions here, and at the rolls; and, as it appeared that it had gone to great length, the House of Lords did not think it proper to disturb that." Then proceeding to notice the argument now made in this case, that there is a distinction between stock and cash dividends, he disposed of that contention with a homely but expressive remark. He said: "As to the distinction between stock and money, that is too thin: and if the law is that this extraordinary profit, if given in the shape of stock, shall be considered capital, it must be capital, if given as money." The rule as thus established in England was followed in Massachusetts, more as one of convenience than of justice, in a line of cases that are not quite consistent with each other. Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101, 96 Am. Dec. 705; Daland v. Williams, 101 Mass. 571; Leland v. Hayden, 102 Mass. 542; Heard v. Eldredge, 109 Mass. 258, 12 Am. Rep. 687; Rand v. Hubbell, 115 Mass. 461, 15 Am. Rep. 121; Davis v. Jackson, 152 Mass. 58. The rule was adopted there mainly upon the authority of the early English cases to which reference has been made. The Supreme Court of the United States laid down the same rule in Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525, evidently following the doctrine of the English and Massachusetts cases. Mr. Justice Gray, who delivered the opinion, was a member of the supreme court of Massachusetts when the rule was established in that state. It cannot be doubted that these cases are authority in support of the appellant's contention, and yet, notwithstanding the exalted character of the courts from which they proceed, they are not binding upon us, except in so far as they appear to be founded upon reason and justice. We have recently had occasion to declare the extent to which we are bound by the decisions of even such a great tribunal as the Supreme Court of the United States, and the weight to be given to its judgments upon such questions of general law as we are now considering. Bath Gaslight Co. v. Claffy, 151 N. Y. 24, 36 L. R. A. 664. Moreover, it is by no means clear that the decision in this case is in conflict with the case of Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525. The rule for the determination of the question, whether stock dividends were to be treated as income, or an apportionment of capital, was stated by the learned justice in the following language: "When a distribution of earnings is made by a corporation among its stockholders, the question whether such distribution is an apportionment of additional stock representing capital, or a division of profits and income, depends upon the substance and intent of the action of the corporation, as manifested by its vote or resolution." In this case the resolution recites that the earnings of the corporation had been withheld from the shareholders for almost ten years, that they had accumulated, and that it was the intention of the directors in taking such action, and the shareholders in consenting to it, to distribute such accumulated earnings to the shareholders in the form of stock certificates instead of money. It was therefore the substance and intent of the corporate action to distribute earnings, rather than apportion additional capital. There was in fact no additional capital added. The capital of a corporation is the money or property that it has after deducting its debts. The Western Union Telegraph Company had no more property after passing this resolution than it had before, and hence no more capital. When the resolution was carried out, it had, indeed, more capital stock outstanding, as represented by certificates, but not a single dollar had been added to its capital. It had nothing after passing the resolution that it did not have before. So that, within the rule stated by the learned justice, what the shareholder got in this case represented income, and was income. When the substance of the transaction is analyzed, it will be seen that what the corporation really did was to issue to the shareholders its own obligations, in the form of stock certificates against the accumulated earnings which it had on hand; and these certificates, having a market value, could readily be converted into money by the shareholders. So that the transaction was, in substance, a distribution of profits.

39 L. R. A.

In Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 487, it was said by Chief Judge Andrews: "The right to stock dividends as between tenant for life and remainderman, has not been considered by the court of last resort in this state. The decisions upon the subject in other states and in England are conflicting, and it will be the duty of this court, when occasion arises, to seek to settle the question upon principle, and establish a practical rule for the guidance of trustees and others, which shall be just and equitable as between the beneficiaries of the two estates." This statement with respect to the attitude of this court upon the question was doubtless correct. But, since this utterance was made, cases have been decided in this court which it will be found exceedingly difficult to reconcile with the doctrine of the early English cases and those of Massachusetts. Re Kernochan, 104 N. Y. 618; Re Gerry, 103 N. Y. 451; Monson v. New York Security & T. Co. 140 N. Y. 498; Re Devey, 158 N. Y. 63. In so far as this court has touched the question at all since the decision in Riggs v. Cragg, nothing certainly can be found in the cases to sustain the contention of the appellant. The question had, however, been passed upon in the supreme court, upon full consideration, and the doctrine of the English cases and those of Massachusetts had been repudiated. Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 646; Riggs v. Cragg, 26 Hun, 90; Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. 637; Goldsmith v. Swift, 25 Hun, 201. The same may be said with respect to the action of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, where it has been held that a stock dividend represented income, and belonged to the life tenant. Earp's Appeal, 23 Pa. 368; Moss's Appeal, 83 Pa. 264, 24 Am. Rep. 164. In the latter case it was said: "Where a corporation, having actually made profits, proceeds to distribute such profits amongst the stockholders, the tenant for life would be entitled to receive them, and this without regard to the form of the transaction. Equity, which disregards form and grasps the substance, would award the thing distributed, whether stock or moneys, to whomsoever was entitled to the profits." The same rule was declared in New Jersey and New Hampshire. Van Doren v. Olden, 19 N. J. Eq. 176, 97 Am. Dec. 650; Lord v. Brooks, 52 N. H. 72. There are other cases in these states to the same effect, but it is not necessary to refer to them. It is sufficient to say that in all of them the court refused to follow what is called the "English and Massachusetts doctrine," for reasons that are stated at length, and which seem to be of great, if not convincing, force.

There are three very recent cases where the whole question has been carefully examined, and the leading authorities critically reviewed, by the highest courts in other states. These cases are Hite v. Hite (1892) 93 Ky. 257, 19 L. R. A. 175; Thomas v. Gregg (1894) 78 Md. 545; Fritchitt v. Nashville Trust Co. (1896) 96 Tenn. 472, 33 L. R. A. 856. In each of these cases the court was entirely unembarrassed by any previous impressions or decisions. The question was new, and, from the conflict of authority in other jurisdictions, the courts, with admirable judgment and discrimination, proceeded to determine the question upon principle. It was held in each case that stock dividends, such as the one now under consideration, represented income, and in justice and equity properly belonged to the life tenant. The reasoning of these cases seems to us far more cogent and persuasive than anything to be found in the cases which favor the contrary rule, that a stock dividend, such as was made to the trustees in this case, is an apportionment of capital and not income. It is impossible to read the English cases without being impressed with the statement of the judges, so often repeated, that they found great difficulty in formulating any principle upon which the decisions rested. An attempt to give a reason for the rule was made in one of the more recent cases, but without much success. Sproule v. Bouch, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 638-653. It was all summed up in the end by the court in a single sentence, "What the company says is income shall be income, and what it says is capital shall be capital." This is but another way of saying that whether accumulated earnings belong to the life tenant or the remainderman depends upon the action of the corporation, and that the property rights of such parties under the will are governed by the mere form of capitalization; that the majority of a board of directors may give them to one or the other at their will. While such a rule might have the merit of simplicity and convenience, it ought not to determine the property rights of parties interested in the corporate property. That a testamentary provision of this character, for the benefit of both the life tenant and the remainderman, who are generally the nearest and dearest objects of the testator's bounty, can in this way be voted up or down, increased or diminished, as the corporation may elect, and that such action precludes the courts from looking into the real nature and substance of the transaction, and adjusting the rights of the parties according to justice and equity, is a proposition that cannot be accepted. The mere adoption by the corporation of a resolution cannot change accumulated earnings into capital, as between the life tenant and remainderman. When questions arise under a will, between parties standing in such relations to each other, with respect to the right to accumulated earnings upon capital stock, the courts must determine the questions for themselves, according to the nature and substance of the thing which the corporation has assumed to transfer from the one to the other, and they are not concluded by mere names or forms. For all corporate purposes the corporation may doubtless convert earnings into capital, when such power is conferred by its charter; but, when a question arises between life tenants and remaindermen concerning the ownership of the earnings thus converted, the action of the corporation will not conclude the courts.

The decision of the learned referee in awarding the stock dividend to the life tenants as earnings or income, and in refusing to charge them with the premium upon the bonds, or that part of it that has disappeared by the lapse of time, it is equitable and just, and, we think, is supported by reason and authority.

The judgment should therefore be affirmed, with costs to all parties payable out of the income of the fund.

All concur.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, ex rel. DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA, & WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

William H. CLAPP et al., Respts.

(152 N. Y. 490.)

The cost of reproduction is the proper basis for local taxation of a railroad under a system by which the franchise and personal property are assessable at the principal office of the corporation, so that the real estate alone is subject to assessment by the local authorities.

(Vann, J., dissents.)

(April 20, 1897.)

A PPEAL by relator from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of a Special Term for Livingston County dismissing an application for a writ of certiorari to review an assessment of relator's property for taxation. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rogers, Locke, & Milburn, for appellant:

The assessment was excessive. The method adopted by the assessors in arriving at the value of the real estate was incorrect, and the results were necessarily erroneous.

Real property should be assessed upon estimates directly made as to its value, and not upon presumptions figured upon intricate theories.

People, Manhattan R. Co., v. Barker, 146 N. Y. 813.

NOTE.—As to the mode of assessment of railroad property, see also State v. Virginia & T. R. Co. (Nev.) 35 L. R. A. 759.

As to assessment of intangible values, see Wells, F. & Co.'s Express v. Crawford County (Ark.) 37 L. R. A. 371, and other cases cited in footnote thereto.

The rental is an indivisible thing—not so much from franchises, and so much from rolling stock and plant, and so much for land.

Any apportionment which either the assessors or the court might make must necessarily be mere guess work.

People, Panama R. Co., v. New York Tax Comrs. 104 N. Y. 240; People, Manhattan R. Co., v. Barker, 146 N. Y. 304.

When earnings are taxed already under a separate act it cannot be supposed that the legislature intended to tax them again proportionately in every tax locality in the state.

People, Western U. Teleg. Co., v. Dolan, 126 N. Y. 177, 12 L. R. A. 251.

In the taxation of real property our statutes do not seem to draw any distinction between the lands of natural persons and those owned by corporations.

The corporation's personal property is reached by the assessment of the capital stock, which is to be assessed at its actual value and taxed in the same manner as other personal estate of the town.

People, Manhattan R. Co., v. Barker, 146 N. Y. 304.

These lands were illegally assessed to the relator. They should have been assessed to the owner, the New York, Lackawanna, & Western Railroad Company. That company is a New York corporation.

People, Dunkirk & F. R. Co., v. Cassity, 46 N. Y. 46; Buffalo & S. L. R. Co. v. Erie County Supers. 48 N. Y. 101.

Messrs. J. B. Adams and G. B. Adams, for respondent:

The assessment in question was properly made, to the proper party, and was not excessive or disproportionate.

People, Delaware & W. R. Co., v. Reid, 64 Hun, 553; People, Buffalo & S. L. R. Co., v. Fredericks, 48 Barb. 173, Affirmed in 48 N. Y. 70; People, New York Elev. R. Co., v. New York Tax & A. Comrs. 19 Hun, 460, Affirmed 82 N. Y. 459; People, Buffalo & S. L. R. Co., v. Barker, 48 N. Y. 70; People, Walkkill Valley R. Co., v. Keator, 36 Hun, 592; People, Fitchburg R. Co., v. Haren, 19 N. Y. S. R. 818; People, Rome, W. & O. R. Co., v. Hicks, 40 Hun, 598, Affirmed 105 N. Y. 198; People, Panama R. Co., v. New York Tax Comrs 104 N. Y. 246; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 429, 38 L. ed. 1037; People, Western U. Teleg. Co., v. Dolan, 126 N. Y. 178, 12 L. R. A. 251.

The compromise upon an assessment of $300,000 upon the offer of relator should be treated as conclusive upon relator on the question of value.

People, Warren, v. Carter, 119 N. Y. 557.

The conclusions of the assessors upon conflicting evidence as to value of property assessed are not reviewable in this court.

People, Rome, W. & O. R. Co., v. Haupt, 104 N. Y. 877; People, Rome, W. & O. R. Co., v. Hicks, 105 N. Y. 198.

The assessment in question does not include the franchise of relator's railroad, and does not involve any double taxation, as is claimed by the appellant.

People, Buffalo & S. L. R. Co., v. Barker, 48 N. Y. 70; People v. Home Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 328; Home Ins. Co. v. People, 134 U. S. 594, 33 L. ed. 1025; People, Pennsylvania R. Co., v. 39 L. R. A.

Wemple, 198 N. Y. 1, 19 L. R. A. 694; People, Panama R. Co., v. New York Tax Comrs. 104 N. Y. 240.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court below dismissed the writ of certiorari granted to review the assessment of the relator's real estate in the town of York for the year 1894. The property assessed was about $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles off the main line of the relator's railroad running from Binghamton to Buffalo, consisting of a double track, with about three miles of side track, with three stations, water tanks, and 112 acres of land. The property was assessed at \$300,000. A reference was ordered at the special term to take evidence in regard to the value of the property and the correctness of the assessment. The special term confirmed the action of the assessors, and the order was affirmed by the appellate division.

The only question involved in this appeal is whether the assessors adopted a legal method or rule for ascertaining the value of the property assessed. It is claimed that they adopted an illegal and erroneous principle of valuation, and the assessment made is the result of such rule, and should, therefore, be set aside. It must be borne in mind that all the assessors had to deal with is the real estate already described. They had nothing to do with the personal property, which is assessed at the place where the principal office of the corporation is. Laws 1857, chap. 456, § 3. They have nothing to do with the value of the franchises of a corporation, since they are now taxed under another law. Laws 1881, chap. 861, § 3. The method of arriving at the value of the real estate of the relator for the purpose of taxation which was adopted by the assessors is thus stated by them in their return to the writ of certiorari: "In fixing upon the sum at which the real property was assessed, we considered the same, not as a separate piece of real estate standing alone, but as a part of the extensive and valuable system of railroads leased and occupied by said relator, extending from the city of Binghamton to the city of Buffalo, and as a part of the extensive and valuable system of railroads operated by the relator, and based our said assessment thereof upon the cost, rentals, and earnings of said railroad as shown by the annual report of said relator to the board of railroad commissioners of the state of New York." The valuation was based upon the "cost, rentals, and earnings of said railroad." The relator gave proof, which is uncontradicted, with respect to the cost of reproducing these $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles of railroad with the tracks, roadbed, tanks, and buildings; and their total cost is materially less than the sum at which the assessors fixed the value. It is difficult to formulate from the adjudged cases any general rule or principle applicable in all cases to the valuation of the real estate of a railroad for the purpose of taxation. Cases may be found in the Federal courts containing strong expressions of opinion in favor of the rule adopted by the assessors. But these were cases involving the validity of state laws providing for the assessment of all the property of railroads within the state, real, personal, and mixed, including franchises, and the statute pointed out in terms the mode of assessment, which in some respects included the methods adopted in this case. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 38 L. ed. 1081; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Taggart, 168 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 49. Where the assessors have jurisdiction over all the property of the corporation within the state, whether it be real estate, capital stock, or franchises, they may deal with every element of value that constitutes property of the corporation, or enters into its earning or producing capacity. But in most cases in this state the assessors have jurisdiction only over a part of the corporate property; that is, the real estate. The cost of a railroad twenty-five years ago must be largely increased at the present time by betterments and repairs, and the sum which represents such cost and repairs may not indicate the present value of the property. The earnings of a railroad include the earnings of the personal property as well as the real estate. It includes the use of its franchises; and the profits of operation may, in many cases, be attributed to the skill or ability of the management. The rentals grow out of all real and personal estate and franchises. It is simply impossible to apportion the rentals or earnings, and credit the just proportion to real estate, to personal property, and to franchises. To ascertain the rental per mile, and then capitalize that sum at 6 per cent in order to ascertain the value per mile, as seems to have been done in this case, would include the use of real and personal property and corporate franchises, and such a rule for the assessment of real estate alone is misleading and wholly unreliable. The cost of reproducing these 7 miles of railroad seems to us to be the just and reasonable rule of valuation. There is no reason that we can perceive for assessing this property at a greater sum than the cost of replacement. It may not in every case be worth what it would cost to reproduce it. That would depend upon the income or earning capacity of the road after it is built. But this is the case of a paying railroad, and, when valued at what it would cost to procure the land, construct the roadbed, put down the ties and rails, and erect the buildings and other structures, all new, it is difficult to see any ground for assessing it at a larger sum. The intricate theory of valuation upon which the assessors proceeded included so many elements foreign to the value of the real estate that it cannot be approved. The assessors are not bound by the estimate of the cost of reproduction given by the railroad or its agents. They may inquire into that question themselves, and in their own way, but they have no right to disregard uncontradicted proof. It may, in any case, be competent to consider all the elements of value that they have considered in this case, but in the end, when they come to make their decision as to value, for the purpose of taxation, it may properly be much less, but can never exceed the actual cost of producing the property in the condition in which it is found by the assessors at the time of making the assessment. Such a rule of valuation is reasonable and possible. But to ascertain the value of a few miles of railroad in a country town upon a complex theory based upon the income or rentals of 200 miles in this state of an intricate railroad system extending into other states, is impracticable, and, if permitted, would, in many cases, result in injustice. An assessment based upon the cost of reproduction eliminates from the question all extraneous elements, and at the same time subjects railroad property to its just share of the public burdens. People, Manhattan R. Co., v. Barker, 146 N. Y. 818; People, Panama R. Co., v. New York Tax Comrs. 104 N. Y. 240.

An assessment of the portion of the real estate of a railroad which is within the town, and subject to the jurisdiction of the assessors, upon the basis of the income or profits of the whole system of which it is a part, must necessarily include the use of franchises and personal property which are otherwise assessed, and hence such a principle of valuation must, in some measure at least, impose double taxation. It is doubtless within the power of the state to authorize such a method of assessment, but it has not attempted to exercise such a power. The real estate, the personal property, and the business and franchises are taxable under different statutes, and these three elements into which the corporate property is divided should not be commingled when it is reasonably possible to avoid it. When there is no question before the assessors save the value of that part of the real estate of a railroad which is within the town, the cost of replacing it will ordinarily furnish a just measure of valuation. The principle of assessing a few miles of railroad in a town according to the relations which it is supposed to bear to the whole of a vast and intricate system, or to the income or earning power of the entire system, draws into the calculation so many elements that the process becomes too complex and difficult for even an expert. It is no disparagement of the capacity and intelligence of the average assessor to say that it would present to him a problem incapable of accurate solution, and a rule of action in the performance of his official duty impossible in practice. The process virtually requires the assessors to assign to each mile of railroad its proportionate share of the income of the entire system, and estimate the value of the real estate upon that basis. That such a principle of valuation is misleading and impossible of application with any approach to justice or accuracy is sufficiently shown by what appears in this record. The learned referee, upon whose report the assessment was confirmed, resorted in his opinion to a calculation to show the annual rental of the whole road per mile, and then capitalized that sum at 6 per cent, which produced a result much larger even than that found by the assessors. He then suggests that an allowance should be made for a portion of that rental, since it was to be credited to the use of terminal and other property not embraced in the specific $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles of railroad, and he then proceeds to reduce his figures to correspond with those of the assessors. This shows that the theory adopted, in order to work at all, had to be supplemented in the end by an arbitrary allowance for income that the particular property in question had no share in producing. It is supposed that certain cases in this court, of which the case of People, Buffalo & S. L. R. Co., v. Barker, 48 N. Y. 70, is a leading one, sanctioned this rule of valuation. We think not. Many of these decisions were made before the passage of the act of 1881, imposing taxes on the franchises and business of a corporation, and they doubtless contain some remarks in regard to the earnings and profits of the corporate business as the basis for the valuation of the real estate that would not be strictly accurate if made now. In so far as they hold that the real estate of a railroad in a town is not to be assessed as an isolated piece of land, but with reference to its position as part of a line of railroad with all its incidents, including the business and profits to be derived therefrom, they are doubtless correct. The property in question would be worth practically nothing except for its position as part of a railroad system. It has a value as part of the whole property, and practically no value when detached or severed from it. But the question still remains. What is the reasonable and practical method of estimating that value? Is it by an intricate calculation of the rentals, earnings, or profits per mile capitalized, and then followed by arbitrary deductions on account of the greater earning capacity of some parts of the property over other parts, or is it the cost of reproducing the same part of the railroad? The assessors have to deal with actual, visible, tangible property. A railroad may possess things intangible, as privileges or franchises of great value, and that are very important elements in its earning capacity; but the assessors have no power to include them in the valuation of real estate, and any method of valuation which includes them as a part of the real estate is erroneous. The assessment of the real estate upon a basis of profits or income of the whole railroad must necessarily attribute to the real estate a value which should be shared with the personal property and franchises. This objection is obviated when the real estate is assessed as such, and at a valuation not to exceed the sum at which it could then be produced in its existing condition. Of course, the valuation will vary in each locality according to circumstances, as the cost will vary. In some localities the property may have increased in value from natural causes, and in others it may have depreciated; but these inequalities are practically eliminated when in each locality the real estate is valued according to the cost of reproduction. Where the real estate alone is to be valued without reference to the personal property or franchises, this method will secure the nearest approach to justice, and it can be applied with something like substantial accuracy. When all the property and every element of value may be included in the assessment, as was contemplated by the statutes which were considered in the cases referred to in the Federal court, the assessment may require the application of a different principle.

The order of the Appellate Division and of the Special Term should be reversed, and the proceedings remanded to the assessors for further action.

All concur, except Vann, J., dissenting, and Andrews, Ch. J., taking no part.
39 L. R. A.

Louis E. BOMEISLER, Exr., etc., of Salvatore Cantoni, Deceased, Appt., Elsa FORSTER, Respnt.

(154 N. Y. 229.)

1. An available legal defense to a pending action at law which is furnished by a valid release will not prevent equitable relief in favor of the defendant when the trial of the action at law might affect his reputation and character in the community by reason of charges and revelations as to his past conduct, whether real or fabricated, on which the action was based.
2. An injunction against actions on claims for which a valid release has been made may be granted when the trial at law might affect the reputation and character of the defendant in the community because of charges and revelations as to his past conduct, whether real or fabricated, on which the claims were based.
3. Specific performance of an agreement not to harass a person by suits upon claims which are thereby released may be enforced when a defense of the actions at law would not be an adequate remedy, because the actions, although unsuccessful, might damage his reputation by the charges on which they were based.
4. Evidence of the conduct constituting plaintiff's cause of action is not admissible in a suit by defendant to enforce specific performance of a contract of plaintiff to release the cause of action and refrain from bringing suit upon it.

(November 23, 1897.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing a judgment of a Special Term of the Superior Court of the City of New York in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enjoin defendant from violating a contract not to bring suit on an alleged claim against plaintiff's testator. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William B. Hornblower and Louis E. Bomeisler, for appellant:

The order of the appellate division reversing the judgment and the judgment entered thereon do not state that the reversal is made upon the facts.

In order to sustain the reversal, therefore, it must be shown that an error of law was committed by the trial judge, and the disputed facts as found by him must be taken as correct.

N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1388; Cudahy v. Rhinehart, 133 N. Y. 248; Re Laudy, 148 N. Y. 408.

The appellate division erred in holding that there was an adequate remedy at law, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to equitable relief.

NOTE.—As to the power of a court of equity to protect personal rights, see note to Chappell v. Stewart (Md.) 37 L. R. A. 782.

A party who has twice bought his peace, and has obtained a general release, and a subsequent ratification of the release, is entitled to protect himself from further harassing and annoying litigation by an agreement; and if he is entitled to protect himself by an agreement, he must certainly be entitled to a specific performance of that agreement in equity, and to an injunction, or else the agreement becomes nugatory.

Cantoni v. Forster, 146 N. Y. 405.

An agreement not to sue will be specifically enforced by injunction.

Wilson v. Wilson, 1 H. L. Cas. 588; Sanders v. Rodway, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 230; Phillips v. Berger, 2 Barb. 608. Affirmed 8 Barb. 527; Sampson v. Wood, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. 223, note; Carpenter v. Keating, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. 223; Beach, Inj. 1895 ed. § 567; Baker v. Hawkins, 14 R. I. 359; Wright v. Fleming, 76 N. Y. 517; Deen v. Milne, 113 N. Y. 303; Waterman, Spec. Perf. § 107 and cases cited.

In general, a negative covenant or agreement will be enforced by injunction.

Waterman, Spec. Perf. § 109; Diamond Match Co. v. Roeder, 106 N. Y. 473, 60 Am. Rep. 464; Boardman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 157; Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 848; Pom. Spec. Perf. 2d ed. § 25.

Remedy by specific performance will always be granted, not only as to contracts relating to real property, but as to contracts relating to personal property or choses in action, where the injury caused by a breach cannot adequately be compensated by damages in an action at law.

Withy v. Cottle, 1 Sim. & Stu. 174; Adderley v. Dixon, 1 Sim. & Stu. 607; Wright v. Bell, Dan. Exch. Rep. 95; Buxton v. Lister, 3 Atk. 363; Ball v. Coggs, 1 Bro. P. C. 140; Diamond Match Co. v. Roeder, 106 N. Y. 473, 60 Am. Rep. 464; Johnson v. Brooks, 93 N. Y. 337; Williams v. Montgomery, 148 N. Y. 519; Castoriano v. Dupe, 145 N. Y. 250.

Equity will restrain a vexatious and harassing law suit brought in bad faith.

2 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. 211; Dawkins v. Prince Edward, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 499; Castro v. Murray, L. R. 10 Exch. 213; Norfolk & N. B. Hosiery Co. v. Arnold, 148 N. Y. 265; Jacobs v. Raven, 80 L. T. N. S. 386; Bushby v. Munday, 5 Madd. 297; Carron Iron Co. v. MacLaren, 5 H. L. Cas. 437; Edmunds v. Atty. Gen. 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 345; Vail v. Knapp, 49 Barb. 800; Kittle v. Kittle, 8 Daly, 72; Clapin v. Hamlin, 62 How. Pr. 284; Fild v. Holbrook, 3 Abb. Pr. 377; White v. Caxton Bookbinding Co. 10 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 150; Keyser v. Rice, 47 Md. 208, 28 Am. Rep. 448; Dehon v. Foster, 4 Allen, 545; Dinsmore v. Neresheimer, 32 Hun, 204.

Defendant ratified her said agreement and release by retaining the $6,000 consideration therefor. Having elected to affirm the same, she is now estopped from attacking it.

Crans v. Hunter, 28 N. Y. 389; Pullman v. Alley, 53 N. Y. 638; Cobb v. Hatfield, 46 N. Y. 533; Landsley v. Ferguson, 49 N. Y. 623; Schiffor v. Dietz, 83 N. Y. 807; Gould v. Cayuga County Nat. Bank, 86 N. Y. 82; Allerton v. Allerton, 50 N. Y. 670; Baird v. New York, 96 N. Y. 596; Strong v. Strong, 102 N. Y. 69; Ore- gon P. R. Co. v. Forrest, 128 N. Y. 91; Pryor v. Foster, 130 N. Y. 171; Tallinger v. Mandeville, 113 N. Y. 427.

Equity favors compromise agreements, and will enforce them whenever possible.

Munro v. Alaire, 2 Cal. 327; Sellick v. Adams, 15 Johns. 197; Shepard v. Ryers, 15 Johns. 497; Jackson, Edson, v. Gager, 5 Cow. 387; Davis v. Townsend, 10 Barb. 333; Vosburgh v. Teator, 32 N. Y. 561; Crans v. Hunter, 28 N. Y. 389; Champlin v. Laytin, 18 Wend. 407, 31 Am. Dec. 382; Jacobs v. Morange, 47 N. Y. 57; Wehrum v. Kuhn, 61 N. Y. 623; Zane v. Zane, 6 Munf. 406; Taylor v. Patrick, 1 Bibb, 168; Carode v. M'Kelvey, Addison (Pa.) 56; Okeson v. Barclay, 2 Penr. & W. 581; Chamberlain v. M'Clurg, 3 Watts & S. 31; Norfolk & N. B. Hosiery Co. v. Arnold, 148 N. Y. 269.

The defendant in a court of record is not bound to avail himself, by way of counterclaim, of an independent cause of action existing in his favor against plaintiff. The rule in this respect was not changed by the Code.

Brown v. Gallaudet, 80 N. Y. 417; Davidson v. Alfaro, 80 N. Y. 663.

It is no defense here that an action is pending by defendant against plaintiff, and that he could set up his claim as a counterclaim in such action.

Gillespie v. Torrance, 25 N. Y. 806, 82 Am. Dec. 355; Siemon v. Schurck, 29 N. Y. 598; Brown v. Gallaudet, 80 N. Y. 418; Ruppert v. Haug, 87 N. Y. 141; Lignot v. Redding, 4 E. D. Smith, 285; Barth v. Burt, 17 Abb. Pr. 849; Halsey v. Carter, 1 Duer, 667; Welch v. Hazelton, 14 How. Pr. 97; Ins'ee v. Hampton, 8 Hun, 230.

Mr. Samuel H. Randall, for respondent:

The appellate division, "reviewing all questions of fact and law," determined that the plaintiff did not establish a cause of action entitling him to the relief that he demanded.

It had ample power to either award a new trial or grant judgment absolute, dismissing the complaint upon the merits with costs. And its action and judgment were not erroneous.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1022, as amended by Laws 1894, chap. 688; Billings v. Russell, 101 N. Y. 226; Cudahy v. Rhinehart, 133 N. Y. 248.

The court will not restrain an action at law when the question is the same at law and in equity.

McHenry v. Jewett, 90 N. Y. 58; Wallack v. Society for Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents, 67 N. Y. 23; People v. Wason, 64 N. Y. 170; Wolfe v. Burke, 56 N. Y. 115; Savage v. Allen, 54 N. Y. 453; Stull v. Westfall, 25 Hun, 1; Blaine v. Brady, 64 Md. 878; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co. 84 Fed. Rep. 357; Freeman v. Carpenter, 147 Mass. 23; George Woods Co. v. Storer, 144 Mass. 399; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Moulton, 143 Mass. 543; Onkville Co. v. Double-Pointed Tack Co. 105 N. Y. 658; Jackson v. Bunnell, 113 N. Y. 316; Denny v. Denny, 113 Ind. 22; Travis v. Lowry (Pa.) 7 Cent. Rep. 553; Willard, Eq. Jur. ed. 1889, p. 49, note 1; Knox v. Smith, 45 U. S. 4 How. 298, 11 L. ed. 983.

The appellate division did not err in determining the plaintiff was not entitled to any judgment in this action.

This court may not review the discretion of the appellate division in reversing the judgment with judgment absolute for defendant. Such a decree is not a matter of right even though the contract be proved.

Willard, Eq. Jur. ed. 1889, p. 263, notes 8, B. C. and cases cited; Stevens v. Comstock, 109 N. Y. 655; Tiffin v. Shawhan, 43 Ohio St. 178; Herren v. Rich, 95 N. C. 500; Seymour v. Delancey, 6 Johns. Ch. 222; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 31 N. Y. 91; Peters v. Delaplaine, 49 N. Y. 862; Hamilton v. Harvey, 121 Ill. 469; McComas v. Easley, 21 Gratt. 23; Murdfeldt v. New York, W. S. & B. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 703; Eckstein v. Downing, 64 N. H. 248.

A decree for a specific performance will not be granted upon uncorroborated evidence of the complainant, or of a single witness, when a defendant denies the making of the agreement sought to be enforced.

McMonigle v. McMonigle, 42 N. J. Eq. 64; Stem v. Nysonger, 69 Iowa, 512; Magee v. McManus, 70 Cal. 558; Byrne v. Romaine, 2 Edw. Ch. 445; Harris v. Knickerbocker, 5 Wend. 638; Loose v. Morey, 57 Barb. 561; Hinckley v. Smith, 51 N. Y. 21; Veth v. Gierth, 92 Mo. 97; Holthouse v. Rynd (Pa.) 11 Cent. Rep. 157.

Where it is impossible for the court to make out what the contract was this is a very good reason for not undertaking to enforce such an agreement.

Repetti v. Maisak, 6 Mackey, 366.

Equity will withhold its aid if the agreement is unfair, unreasonable, or unduly obtained or unconscionable, and where the consideration is grossly inadequate; and the probabilities must be taken into consideration in determining whether specific performance of an alleged contract will be decreed.

Harrison v. Polar Star Lodge, No. 652, 116 Ill. 279; Throckmorton v. Davidson, 68 Iowa, 648; Warren v. Halk, 41 Hun, 486; Kelly v. Kendall, 118 Ill. 650; Higgins v. Butler, 78 Me. 524; Green v. Begole, 70 Mich. 602; Jones v. Babbitt, 68 Barb. 611; King v. Knapp, 59 N. Y. 462; Shakespeare v. Markham, 72 N. Y. 400; Livingston v. Peru Iron Co., 2 Paige, 390.

The injunction was obtained by plaintiff's counsel imposing on the court statements which had no foundation in truth, and which they didn't dare to attempt to prove upon the trial.

Banks v. American Tract Soc. 4 Sandf. Ch. 488; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 603, 604; Morgan v. Binghamton, 102 N. Y. 500; Tift v. Dougherty County, 74 Ga. 340; Blaine v. Brady, 64 Md. 373; Troxell v. Haynes, 5 Daly, 389.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff's testator sought in this action to obtain a decree which should restrain the defendant from prosecuting an action at law then pending in the superior court of the city of New York, wherein she was the plaintiff and he was the defendant, or from bringing any other action for the same cause, and which should compel her specifically to perform her agreement not to harass the plaintiff by suits upon any claims of the nature of those described in her complaint. It appears that prior to May 21, 1892, the defendant had charged that Cantoni was the father of certain of her children; that he had promised to marry her, and that they had lived together as man and wife; that he had promised to pay her sums of money, and to make a substantial provision for her in case of his death; and also, that she had rendered services to him as his housekeeper for the period of about seven years. Upon claims of this nature, she had threatened to sue him. On the date above mentioned, she executed an instrument whereby she released Cantoni from all claims and demands that she had or might have against him, and particularly from claims based upon her charge that he was the father of her children. A few days later, however, an action was commenced in her name against Cantoni, to recover the sum of $250,000, on substantially the same claims. Thereupon, and on June 2, 1892, a further settlement was made between them; and at that time, after swearing, in the form of an affidavit, to the effect that her previous release was freely and consciously made, that her charges against Cantoni were false, and that she had no claims against him, she orally agreed, in consideration of $6,000, to discontinue the then pending action, to relinquish all claims she might have, and that she would "not thereafter in any manner communicate with, harass, or annoy the plaintiff by suing him at law or in equity, in person, by procurement, or otherwise, by virtue of any claims she might have," etc. Two years later the action which is now sought to be enjoined was commenced by her, upon substantially the old claims, to recover damages in the sum of $175,000. The making of the release of May 21, 1892, and of the agreement of June 2, 1892, above mentioned, were decided to be proved by the trial judge. His decision was in the form of a concise statement of the grounds upon which the issues were decided (§ 1022 of the Code); and, upon the issue made as to the validity of the release and agreement, he decided that they were upon a valuable consideration voluntarily and intelligently entered into, and not the result of any fraudulent practices or coercion. The decree of the court, at special term awarded to the plaintiff the equitable relief demanded; but, upon appeal, the appellate division ordered its reversal, and that judgment should be entered for the defendant, dismissing the complaint upon the merits.

The order is silent as to the grounds for the reversal or upon which judgment is given for the defendant. Authority is conferred by § 1022 of the Code of Civil Procedure upon the appellate division to review all questions of fact and of law upon an appeal from a judgment upon a decision which does not state separately the facts found, and to grant to either party the judgment which the facts warrant. Where the appellate division, as here, upon reversing a judgment, grants a judgment upon the merits to the appealing party, it might seem as though the case came before this court, upon an appeal, upon its questions of fact as well as of law, despite the absence of any statement in the body of the order that the reversal and direction for judgment were upon the facts. But we are not disposed to believe that the legislature intended any exception to the provisions of § 1388, which require the presumption at our hands that a reversal was not upon a question of fact, unless the contrary clearly appears in the body of the judgment or order appealed from. That contains the only explicit authority for the review by this court of the questions of fact in such a case. That section and § 1838 have reference to trials before the court or before a referee, and we do not think that we should enlarge our province of review beyond the limits set by § 1838. The grounds of the decision of the issues, which § 1023 authorizes to be concisely stated, as a substitute for separate findings of fact, must be regarded as containing statements of those facts which the trial judge or referee deems to be established by the evidence, and his decision has the support of the same presumptions which go to the support of a general verdict. Amherst College v. Ritch, 151 N. Y. 282, 37 L. R. A. 305. A general exception to the decision imposes upon the appellate division the duty to review all the questions of fact and of law; but whether they reverse and order a new trial, or grant a final judgment to either party, their order, to warrant us in reviewing the questions of fact, should state that it was made upon the facts. Our review is therefore confined to the consideration of whether, upon the decision made by the trial court upon the facts, the legal conclusion followed that the plaintiff was entitled to the equitable relief awarded him, and, if there was no error in that respect, whether there were errors of law committed in the rulings upon the trial, which would, in any event, have justified a reversal of the judgment, and rendered a new trial necessary.

Upon reference to the opinion of the appellate division, it appears that the learned justices thought that as there was a perfect defense to the pending action at law, in the release which the defendant had executed to the plaintiff, that general rule in equity should control which forbids the interference by the court to enjoin a pending suit at law, to which there exists a perfect legal defense, or where the ground for relief is as equally available at law as in equity. In our judgment, however, this case presents those exceptional features which make the interference of a court of equity necessary in order that the plaintiff may have the full benefit of the contract which, as the court has decided, was made between him and this defendant. Every case must necessarily be governed in its disposition by its facts and circumstances, and the discretion of the court must be influenced in its exercise by a consideration of the relative injury and convenience which may result from granting or refusing equitable relief by way of injunction. In the remedial exercise of its great power a court of equity proceeds with a discretion which is controlled by legal principles; and if, as in the present case, it is asked to stay an action at law, it must address itself to the consideration of whether, if it be a case where a legal defense to the action in fact exists, the plaintiff should be left to that as an adequate remedy, and whether any appreciable injury can result in denying him the right to establish the existence of some bar to the action at law, and thereupon to have the same enjoined. The difference to the plaintiff between a trial of the action at law, in which all the scandalous matters would be made public, and his reputation more or less affected, according as credence might be given to the statements and charges of the plaintiff therein, and a trial of the action in equity, where the issue would be confined to the question of whether there had been a release and settlement of all claims against him, which formed the basis of the complaint in the pending action, and an agreement not to sue further upon them, is quite perceptible and substantial. The fact of a release would not prevent, in the former case, the ventilation of all the matters of complaint, real or fabricated; whereas, in the latter case, if it should be found that it was validly made, and that there was an agreement not to harass by suits upon claims which had been settled and released, this plaintiff would be spared a public discussion of charges which the settlement between him and the defendant had disposed of. The specific performance of the contract which is found to have been made by the defendant with the plaintiff seems essential to justice, if the latter is to be assured of the benefits of the former's agreement with him. The rule of specific performance will be extended to personal contracts where the party wants the thing in specie, and he cannot otherwise be compensated (Phillips v. Berger, 2 Barb. 608; Story, Eq. Jur. § 716); that is to say, the extension of the rule to such cases is justified where there would not be a complete and satisfactory remedy by compensation in damages, or where the benefits of the contract would not inure fully to the party in whose favor it was made without it was specifically performed.

It must be borne in mind that we are not concerned here with the nature or the weight of the evidence. It was sufficient to support the decision of the trial court as to the matters of fact therein referred to, and the province of this court is limited to the field of inquiry into the disposition made of the principal legal question of the right to any equitable relief, and of any other legal questions, which arose during the proceedings to judgment. Presented in that way, this case appears to us as one where, while there may have been an available legal defense to the pending action at law, that remedy was not adequate to the plaintiff's necessities, and where there could be no adequate remedy short of the enforcement of this defendant's agreement. A specific performance of that agreement is indispensable to the security of the plaintiff against defendant's charges and revelations as to his past conduct, whether real or fabricated, which might affect his reputation and character in the community. This security he must be deemed to have obtained by his contract. It is not upon the principle that equitable relief is due to this plaintiff to protect him from oppressive or vexatious litigation that we think that the decree of the trial court must rest for its correctness; but it is upon the principle that a specific performance of the defendant's agreement with the plaintiff is essential if he is to receive its benefits; and, if he was entitled to specific performance, then the remedy of an injunction, restraining the defendant from doing the act which she has contracted not to do, was proper to be granted. The case of Money v. Jordan, 2 DeG. M. & G. 318, may be referred to as showing how a court of equity will be moved to interfere with proceedings at law on finding that they would be in breach of an oral agreement. There the legal proceedings were to enforce a bond debt, and they were enjoined, upon the ground that the bond creditor had declared that payment would never be enforced. The court found that he had agreed to that effect, and would not suffer him to proceed at law. In our judgment, the equities of this case were apparent, and strong enough to warrant the trial court in exercising its jurisdiction to restrain the pending action at law. Having reached this conclusion, we think that the order of the appellate division reversing the judgment of the special term and directing a judgment for the defendant, was erroneous.

There were numerous exceptions taken upon the trial. The greater part of them related to rulings which excluded evidence bearing upon the charges made in the complaint in the action at law. The objections to such questions were properly sustained. The issues to be tried were whether the defendant executed the release of May 21, 1892, and made the agreement of June 2, 1892, and whether they were invalidated by reason of any fraudulent practices, misrepresentations, or duress in their procurement. Evidence which bore upon these issues was admissible; but it was not competent to go into outside matters, or to try what was in issue between the parties in the other action. The truth or falsity of the charges in the complaint of this defendant, the nature of the relations between the parties, and the promises and conduct of this plaintiff, prior to their settlements, and upon which this defendant predicated her complaint, were wholly immaterial to the issues which were being tried.

But a few of the other rulings need to be noticed. The witness Durant, head clerk for Howe & Hummel, who had appeared as the defendant's attorneys in the earlier action at law, was asked, on behalf of the plaintiff, "What were the statements or promises which she made and authorized you to communicate, as part of the agreement with the plaintiff, to his attorney, and that you did communicate?" This was objected to upon the ground that it was "wholly outside of any agreement that they alleged in their papers, and which they rely upon as part of this settlement," and that it was outside of any instruments which were set forth in the complaint, and formed no part of the agreement or contract relied upon. The objection was overruled, and the witness answered, stating what propositions of settlement he communicated to Cantoni's lawyer at the request of the defendant, and which formed 89 L. R. A.

the basis of the settlement reached. There was no error in admitting the evidence. The complaint did not set up any contract in writing, but merely alleged that, in consideration of the sum of $6,000 paid to the defendant, she contracted and agreed not to harass the plaintiff by suits. To prove that as a fact, Durant, through whom this defendant had acted, according to his testimony, was called as a witness. His evidence did not trench upon the rule which forbids the alteration or variation of a written contract by parol evidence. It simply went to establish the making of the particular agreement not to sue, and to induce which Cantoni paid the money demanded. It was that distinct and independent part of the general transaction leading to a settlement upon which Cantoni might rely for his protection, and of which he would be entitled to compel the specific performance.

Certain evidence was excluded, which bore upon the payment by Cantoni of the expenses and counsel fees of Howe & Hummel. It is difficult to see why the evidence was excluded; but, assuming that it was properly admissible, its exclusion cannot be regarded as an error of any importance. It was not material what the amount paid to Howe & Hummel was, in the absence of anything going to show that they had acted collusively with Cantoni to defraud or deceive the defendant, in settling with the plaintiff.

The defendant was asked whether she had ever released or discharged the plaintiff from the obligations of the contract set forth in her complaint, meaning the complaint in the action at law. The objection to this question was properly sustained. The question at issue was whether she had, for a consideration, agreed not to harass the plaintiff by suits, and whether she had executed the release, as alleged in this complaint. As to that, she had given her evidence, and the question asked assumed the fact that there were obligations resting upon this plaintiff by reason of matters set up in the complaint in the action at law. Those matters, as it has above been mentioned, were not upon trial here.

We have carefully considered all of the other rulings which are not mentioned here, but we fail to find that any material error was committed which rendered it proper to order a new trial.

The order and judgment of the Appellate Division should be reversed, and the judgment of the special term should be affirmed, with costs to the appellant at the appellate division and in this court.

All concur.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

C. W. BROADFOOT

City of FAYETTEVILLE, Appt.

(..... N. C.)

Discrimination in favor of nonresidents of a town or city by a statute granting them partial or entire exemption from penalties for allowing stock to run at large in the streets is not unconstitutional as a grant of any "exclusive or separate emoluments or privileges," or as a denial to any person of the equal protection of the laws.

(December 21, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Cumberland County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful impounding of plaintiff's stock. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. McD. Robinson for appellant.

Mr. G. M. Rose for appellee.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It was admitted by both parties that the result of this appeal depended upon the constitutionality of chapters 141 and 154 of the Acts of 1895. These two acts are substantially identical, save that the first applies to the whole state, while the latter is applicable to Cumberland county only. The 1st section is aimed at the offense of driving live stock into a city, town, or other territory in which stock is forbidden to run at large, with intent to secure the penalty, or to injure the owner, or for hire or reward. Violation of this statute is made a misdemeanor. The 2d section—presumably with the object of discouraging the perpetration of the offense denounced in the 1st section—provides that the poundage or penalty upon the stock of nonresidents of a town or city, which is authorized to impound stock running at large therein, shall not be more than one fourth that levied upon residents, and, further, that when nonresident owners of cattle taken up in said town live more than a mile from said city limits, there shall be no poundage charged. Chapter 141 differs from chapter 154 in that it exempts such last named owners of stock, not altogether, but only for the first three times that the same cattle are impounded. But chapter 154, which applies to Cumberland county only, governs in this case, as it was ratified later. It was seriously argued to us that these acts are unconstitutional, because in violation of article 1, § 7, of the Constitution of North Carolina, which forbids exclusive privileges and emoluments to be granted to any set of men. Then it was further urged that the acts were obnoxious to the inhibition of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws. We find in the statute, however, no violation by the legislature of the organic law of the state or the United States, but simply a police regulation. The act is based upon the idea that residents of the town, who know that stock are not allowed to run at large therein, are more blamable for permitting them to do so than nonresidents whose stock (turned out where it is permissible) by chance, or perhaps driven by someone who wishes to make a profit thereby or injure the owner (as is indicated by the 1st section of the act), get into the town limits and violate the majesty of its ordinances. The statute further takes cognizance of the ordinary things of life in proceeding upon the assumption that the stock of owners living more than a mile from town are so little disposed to leave their native meadows and ranges in order to tramp the barren streets and sidewalks of the distant town, that their doing so is not attributable to negligence in their owners, and is more likely to be caused by designing persons. Hence, in the county of Cumberland, such distant owners are not punishable at all, and, under the general act (chap. 141), only when the same stock have developed such fondness for the town as to have been caught parading its streets three times before. In these provisions we see no "exclusive or separate emoluments or privileges" to any set of men. It was once contended that nonresidents, not being subject to town regulations, were not liable at all when their stock invaded the town limits. But it was held that they were, as legislation then stood, State v. Tweedy, 115 N. C. 704; Rose v. Hardie, 98 N. C. 44; Whitfield v. Longest, 6 Ired. L. 268; Hellen v. Noe, 3 Ired. L. 493. But in this there was no denial of the power of the legislature to provide that owners of cattle which should stray a mile or more to get into the town limits (which they were so little likely to do of their own volition, or by that of their owners) should be exempt from the penalty visited upon residents of the town, who should negligently or intentionally let their cattle roam the streets, and that those living outside the town limit, but within a mile, should be punished less than residents of the town. The latter knew that their stock must roam the town if turned out at all. Nonresidents do not. It has never been held that the special privileges and advantages given the residents of towns by town charters come within the constitutional inhibition against special privileges, and neither can it be justly contended that an exemption, partial or entire, of nonresidents from the penalty for violation of a town ordinance by their stock is unconstitutional. Residents in the county receive none

NOTE.—As to discrimination by a municipality between its own residents and other residents of the same state, see Sayre v. Phillips (Pa.) 16 L. R. A. 49, and note.

As to equal privileges and protection of citizens, see generally note to Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 14 L. R. A. 573.

89 L. R. A.

For later cases respecting discrimination between nonresidents, see also Ottumwa v. Zekind (Iowa) 29 L. R. A. 734; State v. Conlon (Conn.) 81 L. R. A. 55; Com. v. Myers (Va.) 81 L. R. A. 379; State, Hoadley, v. Board of Insurance Comrs. (Fla.) 33 L. R. A. 288.

of the benefits, and, if they are made exempt from some of the burdens of the town, which depends upon them for existence and support, the grievance, if any results, must be removed by the legislature. Still less is this legislation obnoxious to the 14th Amendment, which is now invoked on all occasions, and, if given the scope which has been claimed for it, would swallow up the jurisdiction of the state courts as to every matter. It would be like the old fiction of quo minus, by which, in England, the exchequer court, which had jurisdiction only over matters touching taxation, drew into itself both common law and equity jurisdiction of all other actions (which it was not intended to have) upon the fiction that by committing any injury or damage upon the plaintiff, or failing to pay a debt due him, quo minus sufficiens existit, he is less able to pay his taxes. 3 Bl. Com. 45. But this attempt to make a modern quo minus and an Aaron's rod of a constitutional amendment which was enacted to protect a recently emancipated race from inequality before the law, has been so often rebuked by the Supreme Court of the United States that it is only necessary to cite a very few cases. Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 188, 81 L. ed. 658, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 24; Re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 448, 34 L. ed. 524. "Legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the Amendment." Barbier v. Connolly, 118 U. S. 32, 28 L. ed. 925. It "does not prohibit legislation which is limited either in the objects to which it is directed, or by the territory within which it is to operate. It merely requires that all persons subjected to such legislation shall be treated alike, under like circumstances and conditions." Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 71, 30 L. ed. 580. In Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 207, 32 L. ed. 108, the court held that a statute of Kansas making railroads responsible for injuries sustained by their employees when caused by the negligence of fellow servants was valid, and not forbidden by the 14th Amendment, although the act did not apply to any other corporations than railroads, nor to other employers. The same ruling was made as to a similar statute in Iowa, in Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Her- rick, 127 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 109, and has been cited and approved in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 165 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 611, which reviews the whole subject, and holds, citing many decisions, that, as a rule, statutes making classifications are not forbidden by the 14th Amendment, when they bear equally upon all within each class. Accordingly, it has been often held in this court that a public local act, making that an offense in one district which is not so in another, is a constitutional exercise of the police power, if the act bears alike on all persons within a defined locality, and is within the discretion of the legislature, —as local prohibition acts (State v. Joyner, 81 N. C. 534; State v. Storall, 103 N. C. 416; State v. Barringer, 110 N. C. 525; State v. Snow, 117 N. C. 774); or restricting the sale of seed cotton in certain localities (State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 714). Here, three districts are created, i. e., the town limits, the territory within 1 mile of the town limits, and the territory beyond the 1 mile. The law is uniform, and bears alike upon the residents within each of the designated districts. It is not a discrimination between persons, but a statute applying differently to different districts. A somewhat similar instance is the dividing a city into small districts for local assessments for improvements, those in each district being taxed at a different rate from those in others. Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 32, 17 L. R. A. 380; Hilliard v. Ashville, 118 N. C. 845; Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578, 32 L. ed. 544.

While not exactly analogous, the decisions on this point demonstrate that such and similar matters are not withdrawn from legislative action by any prohibition in the state or Federal Constitution.

No error.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Helen A. RAILTON

v.

Ransom C. TAYLOR et al.

(..... R. I.)

1. The lessor's own negligence in the management and use of that part of the premises remaining in his control, including the heating apparatus, is not within a stipulation that he shall not be liable for any loss to property on the premises if "destroyed or damaged by fire, water, or otherwise, or by the use or abuse of the Cochituate water, or by the leakage or bursting of water pipes, or in any other way or manner."

2. The improper construction of a building or steam-heating apparatus therein does not give a tenant any right of action for negligence on account of damages caused thereby, when the condition has not changed during the tenancy.

3. The use of a defective appliance in a building, by the landlord to the damage of a tenant, may constitute actionable negligence on his part.

(November 22, 1897.)

NOTE.—As to landlord's liability for injury to tenant from defects in premises, see Hines v. Willcox (Tenn.) 34 L. R. A. 824.

As to liability of landlord for condition of part of premises not controlled by tenant, see note to Jones v. Millsaps (Miss.) 23 L. R. A. 156; also note to Dollard v. Roberts (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 238.

89 L. R. A.

ACTION to recover damages against plaintiff's landlord for injury to her property by reason of the alleged negligence of the defendant in managing the heating apparatus. On demurrer to special plea in bar. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James C. Collins and James C. Collins, Jr., for plaintiff:

In the construction of contracts, general words following particulars or specific terms are restricted in meaning to those things or matters which are of the same kind with those first mentioned.

Torrance v. McDougald, 12 Ga. 526; Vaughan v. Porter, 16 Vt. 266; Harris v. Corties, 40 Minn. 106, 2 L. R. A. 349; Gage v. Tirrell, 9 Allen, 299; Lawson, Contr. 389; Wald's Pollock, Contr. 454, note g, 455.

General expressions will be restricted by particular descriptions or additions appended to them.

Jones, Commercial & Trade Contracts, § 220; Lawson, Contr. 389; Leake, Contr. 278; Metcalf, Contr. 278, 230, 283; Harris v. Corties, 40 Minn. 106, 2 L. R. A. 349; Hoffman v. Ethna F. Ins. Co. 32 N. Y. 405, 88 Am. Dec. 387; Lyman v. Clark, 9 Mass. 235; Payler v. Homersham, 4 Maule & S. 423.

General and unlimited terms are restrained and limited by particular recitals when used in connection with them.

Torrance v. McDougald, 12 Ga. 526; Taylor, Land. & T. 376, note; Gage v. Tirrell, 9 Mass. 299; Hatch v. Stamper, 42 Conn. 28; Hawkins v. Great Western R. Co. 17 Mich. 57, 97 Am. Dec. 179; Lawson, Contr. 389; Vaughan v. Porter, 16 Vt. 266; Harris v. Corties, 40 Minn. 106, 2 L. R. A. 349; Rich v. Smith, 121 Mass. 828.

This is a contract depriving the plaintiff of her tort rights; and the policy of the law is very jealous of this form of contract, and will hold the parties to the stricter and narrower constructions.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. § 829.

Mr. James L. Jenks for defendants.

Tillinghast, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of trespass on the case for negligence. The plaintiff is a tenant of the defendant Taylor under a written lease. The declaration alleges, in the first count thereof, that the plaintiff entered into possession of the store in question, which consisted of a portion only of the building owned and controlled by the defendant Taylor; that a portion only of the cellar under said store is occupied by plaintiff; that the remainder of said cellar is occupied by said Taylor, and contains steam-heating apparatus, planned for and used by said defendant in the heating of the stores and rooms in said building; that said heating apparatus was put in by defendant, and is under his control and management; that said store was let to the plaintiff for the purpose of a dry-goods store; and that the defendant Taylor has so negligently managed his part of the premises, including the heating apparatus, and all appliances connected therewith, as to cause large amounts of smoke, dirt, ashes, gases, and an excessive amount of heat to arise into the plaintiff's store, and render the same unfit for the purposes of trade, thereby greatly damaging the stock of goods of the plaintiff; and, furthermore, that said defendant has persisted in said negligence, though often warned by the plaintiff of the damage he was thereby doing. The second count alleges that the plaintiff's store was let to her by said defendant for, and used by her in, the sale of dry goods, fancy goods, etc.; that said defendant kept and used a portion of the cellar under the store for the heating of the building, having furnished the same with steam-heating apparatus; that there were means supplied for the receiving of coal into said cellar and for the removal of ashes therefrom, all of which were put in and constructed in an unsafe and unsuitable condition for the use they were intended for, and to which they were afterwards put; that said cellar was let to and used by one Bliss for the heating of said building, he being a tenant of the upper portions of said building; that said Bliss entered into possession and used said apparatus and the appurtenances thereunto connected, as was intended by said defendant that they should be used, and as a result thereof large quantities of smoke, dust, coal, dirt, ashes, gases, and an excessive amount of heat were caused to arise into the store of the plaintiff; that said defendant was frequently warned of these defects, but neglected to remedy the same; and that by reason thereof the plaintiff has suffered damage by reason of the loss of trade, etc. The third and fourth counts are substantially like the second. After the commencement of the action, the plaintiff, by leave of court, summoned in Harlan P. Bliss as a defendant, and in sundry additional counts charges him with negligence in the management of said heating apparatus, which plaintiff alleges was under his control. Other counts were also added, charging the defendants jointly with negligence in the control and management of said heating apparatus, and also charging that said heating apparatus was improperly constructed as aforesaid, whereby plaintiff suffered damage. To this declaration the defendant Taylor has filed a special plea in bar, setting up that by the terms of the lease entered into between him and the plaintiff it was agreed that he should not be liable for any loss or damage suffered by the plaintiff from any cause or reason whatsoever; wherefore he prays judgment, etc. The provision in the lease relied on in bar of the action is as follows: "And it is also hereby understood and expressly agreed by the parties to this indenture that all merchandise, furniture, and property of any kind which may be on the premises during the continuance of this lease is to be at the sole risk and hazard of the lessee, and that, if the whole or any part thereof shall be destroyed or damaged by fire, water, or otherwise, or by the use or abuse of the Cochituate water, or by the leakage or bursting of water pipes, or in any other way or manner, no part of said loss or damage is to be charged to or borne by the lessor in any case whatever. And the lessee further promises that she will keep whole and in good condition all the window and other glass on the premises, and also the pipes, faucets, and water fixtures, and that she will leave the same whole, and in good condition, at the termination of this lease."

The plaintiff contends that this provision cannot properly be so construed as to exempt the lessor from liability for his own negligence or for that of his servants and agents. We agree to this contention. The exemption clause of the provision above quoted includes two classes of causes of injury which might be sustained by plaintiff, viz., damage by fire and damage by water, and the other and more general terms used in connection therewith are evidently but different forms of these two possible causes of injury, and there is nothing to show that they were intended to embrace matters outside of those specifically named. In other words, the general expression, "or in any other way or manner," does not stand alone, but immediately follows, and is clearly a part of, the specification relating to damage by water, and should be construed as relating to the same subject-matter. Moreover, it appears, by examination of the original lease on file in the case, that the entire provision in question, like all of the other provisions therein, is in print, and that the form used was evidently intended for the city of Boston, as it refers to Cochituate water; and we think it is evident that what the parties had in mind when using the language, "by the use or abuse of Cochituate water, or by the leakage or bursting of water pipes, or in any other way or manner," was such damage only as might result from the use or abuse of public water in said building. If it had been understood or agreed by the parties that the exemption was to extend beyond this, and include another and distinct cause of injury, viz., the lessor's own negligence in the management and use of that part of the premises remaining in his control, including the heating apparatus, they would doubtless have stipulated to that effect, and not have left so important a matter in any doubt. Of course, we do not wish to be understood by what we have thus said as intimating what the legal effect of such a stipulation would be had it been incorporated in the lease. It is a familiar rule in the construction of contracts that general terms are restricted and limited by particular recitals, when used in connection with them. Lawson. Contr. § 389; Vaughan v. Porter, 16 Vt. 270; Gage v. Tirrell, 9 Allen, 805; Harris v. Corties, 40 Minn. 106, 2 L. R. A. 849; Torrance v. McDougald, 12 Ga. 526; Payler v. Homersham, 4 Maule & S. 423, 427; Jones, Commercial & Trade Contracts, § 220. "All words," says Lord Bacon, "whether they be in deeds, or statutes, or otherwise, if they be general, and not express and precise, shall be restrained unto the fitness of the matter and the person." Bacon, Law Maxims, Reg. 10; Hoffman v. Aetna F. Ins. Co. 32 N. Y. 413, 89 Am. Dec. 337. In Saner v. Hilton, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 815, which was an action on a covenant to rebate rent in case of "inevitable accident," it was held that the words imported something ejusdem generis with what had been mentioned previously, and did not apply to that which, though not avoidable so far as the lessee was concerned, was not in its nature inevitable. We therefore decide that the exemption clause in question does not 89 L. R. A.

release the defendant Taylor from liability for his own negligence.

As to the defendant's contention that the rule of caveat emptor applies as to the fitness of the leased premises for the use to which the tenant puts them,—that is, that there is no implied warranty in the lease of a store or warehouse that the building is well built, or fit for any particular use,—we reply that, admitting this to be the law (and the cases are substantially to that effect. See Dutton v. Gerrish, 9 Cush. 89, 55 Am. Dec. 45; McGlashan v. Tallmadge, 37 Barb. 313; Libbey v. Telford, 48 Me. 316, 77 Am. Dec. 229; Lucas v. Coulter, 104 Ind. 81; Taylor, Land. & T. § 822; Wood, Land. & T. pp. 517, 518), yet it is not controlling in this case, for the very obvious reason that here the plaintiff is not claiming that the store in question is not suitable for the purpose for which she hired it, but that the defendant by the negligent and improper management of a certain part of the building and the appurtenances connected therewith other than and outside of that leased by her, has thereby rendered it unsuitable, and caused her damage and injury.

As the defendant's counsel has called our attention to certain defects in the declaration, and as the demurrer reaches back, in effect, through the whole record, and attaches ultimately upon the first substantial defect in the pleadings (Gould, Pl. chap. 9, §§ 36-39; Stephen, Pl. Heard's ed. *144; 6 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 331; Ward v. Sackrider, 3 Cal. 263; Peoria & O. R. Co. v. Neill, 16 Ill. 271; Baldwin v. Cross, 5 Ark. 510; Carlock v. Spencer, 7 Ark. 22; Smith v. State, 66 Md. 219; Ellis v. Ellis, 4 R. I. 122), it becomes necessary to determine as to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's declaration. We think the first count thereof sufficiently states a cause of action for negligence. We think the second, third, and fourth counts are bad in that the plaintiff thereunder seeks to recover damages by reason of the faulty construction of certain parts of the building, and also of the steam-heating apparatus connected therewith. The mere fact that the building, together with said apparatus, was not properly constructed, gives the plaintiff no cause of action, as the defendant had the right to construct his building as he saw fit, so long as he violated no one's rights; and she does not allege that the condition of the premises has been changed since the commencement of the tenancy. See Henson v. Beckwith, 20 R. I. pt. 1, p. 169, 88 L. R. A. 716. If, however, he used a defective appliance in said building, to the plaintiff's damage as tenant, that might constitute actionable negligence on his part. Said second, third, and fourth counts are therefore quashed. We think the counts contained in the amendment to the declaration sufficiently state a case of negligence in the management and use of that part of the premises, including the heating apparatus, which is alleged to have been under the control of the defendants, either jointly or severally, and these counts are therefore sustained. The demurrer is sustained, and the special plea in bar overruled. Case remitted to the common pleas division for further proceedings.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

William T. MURRAY

v.

James A. ALLARD, Appt.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. Petroleum oil is a mineral within a reservation by deed of "all mines, minerals, and metals in and under the land."
2. Possession of land is not adverse to the owner of minerals therein when the land is used merely for agricultural purposes without any denial of the right to the minerals or any assertion of claim inconsistent therewith.
3. Natural gas is a mineral within a reservation of minerals by deed.

(November 23, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Court of Chancery Appeals reversing a decree of the Chancery Court for Fentress County in favor of defendant. In a proceeding brought to determine the title to petroleum under land which had been granted to defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. L. T. Smith and W. T. Murray for appellee.

Wilkes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause was decided for defendant by the chancellor, and his decree was reversed by the court of chancery appeals, and the cause is now before us on appeal of defendant and assignment of errors.

The very interesting question is presented whether petroleum oil is a mineral or not. It arises upon the construction of a deed which conveyed certain lands, reserving to the grantor "all mines, minerals, and metals in and under the land." Subsequent conveyances were made to third persons without reservation, and the present owners hold under a deed conveying in fee simple, and making no reservation and no reference to "mines, minerals, and metals in and under the land." The chancellor was of opinion that petroleum was not embraced in the term "minerals." The court of chancery appeals reversed this holding in a very exhaustive, elaborate, learned, and able opinion, and cite the dictionaries, legal and otherwise, the encyclopedias, and many works of science, and a large array of legal authorities holding to the same effect, and they state that, after a most exhaustive search, they have been able to find but one case holding a contrary doctrine. We can neither elaborate nor improve upon the holding of the court of chancery appeals, and are content to affirm their holding and adopt their opinion as our own.

It is next said that the present owners are protected in their fee simple title to the land by the statute of limitations of seven years. The cause was heard upon an agreed statement of facts, and the agreement upon this feature of the case is that defendants, and those under whom they claim, have had the adverse possession of the land for more than seven years. Inasmuch as the complainant's vendor, Rodgers, is one of the parties through whom defendants claim, and the agreed statement of facts does not show how long the land has been held since complainant parted with the title, the facts necessary to sustain the plea are not made out. In addition, it is well settled that one person may own the surface or soil, and another the minerals and mines and metals, and even the water, and there may be different owners for the several different strata under the earth. In order to make a holding adverse to one who has reserved or had granted to him the "mines, minerals, and metals," there must appear to have been some denial of his right or assertion of claim inconsistent with his right. This does not necessarily appear when a party uses the land merely for agricultural purposes,—a use entirely consistent with the right to mine under the soil by another. Upon all the points raised we are of opinion that the court of chancery appeals is correct, and their decree is affirmed, and the opinion of that court, delivered by Judge M. M. Neil, is appended, and made the opinion also of this court:

"The questions in this case arise from the following agreed state of facts: 'We, William T. Murray, as complainant, and James A. Allard, as defendant, have a controversy over certain rights in the tract of land hereinafter described, which we desire to settle by an agreed case made upon the following agreed state of facts, which case we agree to submit to the chancery court at Jamestown for a decision. In this case the following facts are agreed, to wit: (1) It is agreed that John B. Rodgers, on the 24th day of October, 1853, sold and conveyed to Mathias Wright a certain tract of land in the 13th civil district of Fentress county, Tenn., bounded and described as follows: [Here described]—in which deed said John B. Rodgers reserved to himself, his heirs and assigns, all mines, minerals, and metals in and under said land. Said Wright conveyed said land by general warranty deed without any reservation of said mines, minerals, and metals, and whatever title said deed communicated, under the facts hereinafter set out, pass to the defendant, James A. Allard, to the portion claimed by him, by regular chain of conveyances from Rodgers through Wright and others, which purported to convey an estate in fee, except the deed from Rodgers to said Wright, which reserves the mineral interest as above stated. And said Allard, and those through whom he claims, have been in the actual, open, and notorious possession of said land, under color of title, for more than seven years, claiming adversely to the world to the extent of their title papers which definitely identify the land intended to be conveyed; but had not been operating, or intending to operate, in any mining business on said land since the date of the deed from John B. Rodgers to Wright; neither has any of his ven dors attempted to mine on said land or drill for petroleum oil or natural gas. There is no mineral in, under, or on said land, unless petroleum oil or natural gas is held to be such. That petroleum oil had been discovered in White county, Tenn., and in Wayne county, Ky., or Scott county, Tenn., at what is known as the Martin Beaty well, prior to the deed from John B. Rodgers to Mathias Wright, above referred to. And there are petroleum oil springs in the vicinity of this land which had been discovered at the date of said deed from Rodgers to Wright. (2) That said John B. Rodgers, during his life, and his heirs after his death, have claimed said mines and minerals and metals, including petroleum oil and natural gas, until the same passed out of them, and passed into William T. Murray by judicial sale, who now owns whatever title they owned in said land before said sale. (3) The said William T. Murray, by his agent, went onto said portion of the land last mentioned in said Rodgers' deed, claimed by said Allard, and proposed to drill for petroleum oil and natural gas, and was refused the right to do so by said Allard, who conveyed the same to one Lewis Choate, and warranted the title, the said Allard contending that complainant had no interest in said land—First, because the words "mines, minerals, and metals" do not include petroleum oil and natural gas; second, if they did, the title of said mines, minerals, and metals has long since been barred by the adverse holding under said deeds. (4) Complainant, Murray, contends that petroleum oil and natural gas are included in the words "mines, minerals, and metals," and especially so as there is nothing else for the reservation to operate upon, and that the possession of said Allard, and those through whom he claims, does not extinguish the title of the said mines, minerals, and metals (1) because the facts stated, which are relied upon to effect the bar of the statute of seven years, are not sufficient to establish the character of adverse holding that would effect a bar of his rights or perfect the title of defendants; (2) because their possession was consistent with the complainant's title; (3) the said Murray contends that no cause of action would accrue in such case until the adverse holder invaded mineral rights, and that the cultivation of the soil was not such invasion, and therefore no statute of limitations runs as to said reservation. And it is further agreed that the Honorable T. J. Fisher, chancellor of the 5th chancery division of the state of Tennessee, may pass upon said facts, and render such decree as the law and the facts may warrant. The chancellor and the supreme court, in case of appeal, will consult any and all scientific works and definitions of the words "petroleum oil" and "natural gas," as well as such legal authorities as are found, to aid them in the determination of the question upon the state of facts submitted.' Proper affidavit was attached.

NOTE.—As to nature of property in mineral oil, see Williamson v. Jones (W. Va.) 25 L. R. A. 222, and note; Marshall v. Mellon (Pa.) 35 L. R. A. 816; 89 L. R. A.

Koen v. Bartlett (W. Va.) 81 L. R. A. 128; Williamson v. Jones (W. Va.) 33 L. R. A. 604.

"Upon this state of facts the chancellor decreed as follows: 'That the words "mines, minerals, and metals" did not include oil and gas; also that there had been seven years' adverse holding under the deeds purporting to convey an estate in fee, and this vested the defendant with a perfect title in fee, including the title to oil and gas, and that the adverse holding of James A. Allard, and those under whom he claimed, had extinguished the title of John B. Rodgers, claiming under the adverse reservation as to the mines, minerals, and metals. He thereupon dismissed complainant's case, and rendered judgment against Murray for the costs. An appeal was prayed and granted, and errors were assigned as follows: First. The chancellor erred because he did not find, as a matter of law, that the deed from Rodgers to Wright expressly reserved to himself all of the petroleum oil interest in the land conveyed, and that by the subsequent judicial sale Rodgers' title in the same vested in complainant. Second. The court erred because he did not hold, as a matter of fact, viz.: It not appearing at what time Wright sold the land, and consequently it not appearing how much of the time that the land was adversely held was by Wright under his deed from Rodgers, which deed made the reservation, therefore it does not appear as a fact of record that the defendant has held possession of the land for seven years next before this suit was brought, under deed purporting to convey the entire estate in the land. This fact not affirmatively appearing, the defense of the statute of limitations must fail. Third. The court erred because it does not hold that, as a matter of law, the possession of the defendants was consistent with complainant's title, and that there being a double ownership in the land, no cause of action could accrue in his favor so long as the owner of the surface only exercised his legal rights. The statute of limitations does not begin to run until the mineral rights in the land were invaded.'

'The first question to be determined is whether petroleum oil is included within the language of the reservation of 'mines, minerals, and metals.' In the Century Dictionary 'petroleum' is defined: 'An oily substance of great economical importance, especially as a source of light, occurring naturally oozing from crevices in rocks, or floating on the surface of water, and also obtained in very large quantity in various parts of the world by boring into the rock; rock-oil.' 'Various opinions have been expressed concerning the origin of petroleum,' says Prof. S. F. Peckham in the American Encyclopedia. 'Until quite recently all of these theories were based upon the assumption that it had been derived from vegetable or animal organisms. Some have supposed that it is the product of the decomposition of woody fiber, by which more of the carbon and less of the hydrogen has been evolved than by the decomposition which has produced coal. Again, it has been supposed to be the product of the natural distillation of pyrrbituminous shales and coals. Lesquereux attributes its origin to the partial decomposition of low forms of marine vegetation. Berthulot has advanced the theory that, by the complex chemical changes at present taking place in the interior of the earth, petroleum is continually set free. It may be assumed that petroleum is a normal or primary production of the decomposition of marine or vegetable organisms, chiefly the former, and that nearly all other varieties of bitumen are products of a subsequent decomposition of petroleum, differing both in kind and degree.

The occurrence of petroleum in the lower paleozoic rocks of Pennsylvania and Canada, which contain no traces of land plants, shows that it has not in all cases been derived from terrestrial vegetation, but may have been formed from marine plants or animals,—an opinion further strengthened when we find in the rocks of the tertiary age, in which fossil remains in the higher marine animals occur in abundance, a petroleum comparatively rich in nitrogen.' It is shown, also, in the same authority, that petroleum is procured by a process of mining; that is, by the sinking of wells. It is said that productive wells vary greatly in depth. In some, large supplies have been afforded at 60 and 70 feet, and in others at greater depths to over 1,000 feet. It is said that most of the oil is obtained from wells over 180 feet deep; that shallow wells, exhausted by pumping, are successfully made to yield again by sinking them deeper; that the oil is found at several zones or oil-producing depths; that the pumps are sunk deeper into the well as the supply goes down. And he continues: 'It is observed that, if the pumping is interrupted for a day, the product obtained when it is renewed will be water which is more or less salt. At some wells the flow of water has continued during several days' pumping before the oil is recovered. This never seems to fail entirely, unless it be from some obstruction arresting the flow, and then recourse is had to sinking deeper or enlarging the bore of the hole. Salt water commonly comes up with the oil, and is separated from it by standing in the vats into which the products are received. The proportion of this oil is very variable, and the quantity of the oil pumped from a single well is far from being regular. Sometimes the oil, when first struck, rushes up with great violence, by reason of the carbureted hydrogen gas that accompanies it. This produces a spouting or flowing well, from some of which the yield has been more than 1,000 barrels a day for a long time; but the quantity gradually diminishes until they cease to be flowing wells, and they are then pumped. In a few instances the oil has leaped forth with such violence as to be beyond control, and immense quantities have been lost. These fountains of oil have sometimes taken fire, producing terrific conflagrations and presenting scenes of appalling grandeur.'

"Clearly, from this description of the substance, it could not in any sense fall under the terms 'metal' or 'metallic.' The question, then, to be determined, is, Does it fall within the term 'mines and minerals?' In 2 Rapalje & L. Law Dict. p. 821, it is said: 'In the most general sense of the term, minerals are those parts of the earth which are capable of being got from underneath the surface for the purpose of profit. The term therefore includes coal, metal ores of all kind, clay, stone, slate, and coprolites. "Surface" means that part of the land which is capable of being used for agricultural purposes. Midland E. Co. v. Checkley, L. R. 4 Eq. 19; Hext v. Gill, L. R. 7 Ch. 699; Atty. Gen. v. Tomline, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 762. A mine is a work for the excavation of minerals by means of pits, shafts, levels, tunnels, etc., as opposed to a quarry, where the whole excavation is open. While unsevered, minerals form part of the land, and as such are real estate. When severed they become personal chattels.' In 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, at page 500, the following occurs: "'Mineral" originally signified that which is obtained from a mine, from underground workings as distinguished from that which is quarried. The term is not limited to metallic substances, but includes salt, coal, paint-stone and similar substances,"—citing on the last point, Hartwell v. Camman, 10 N. J. Eq. 128, 64 Am. Dec. 448. In that the question was whether the mineral stone paint passed under the terms 'mines and minerals.' Upon this question the court in that case says: 'The character of the substance; or "stone paint," as the witnesses call it, is given in the bill, and the correctness of the description there given is admitted by the answer and confirmed by the evidence. It is a substance resembling in general appearance red shale, so soft as to be easily cut with a knife when first excavated, but differing in appearance from the surrounding earth. It is found in regular strata or bowlders of different sizes. It hardens when exposed to the air, and when broken up and ground it is used as a paint, and is valuable for that purpose. The manner in which it is procured from the earth, and its particular location below the surface, are particularly described by a witness, who was the foreman in carrying on the works. They commenced working in an old shaft, which had been used for raising copper ore. As they proceeded with the excavation the dip of the paint stone was about 1 foot in 8 or 10, perhaps a little more. At the point of the pit opposite to the side at which the excavation was commenced the paint stone was from 18 to 20 feet from the surface of the earth. The work was carried on by making regular mine shafts of timber, one of which was extended about 56 feet in length, and penetrated about 12 feet into the mountain beyond the open pit. Other pits were made very similar in character. The stratum of the paint stone in the largest pit was found to vary from 6 to 15 feet in thickness. The stratum was uniform, increasing in thickness as progress was made into the mountain. It does not crumble like red shale but goes off in square pieces. It is ground in a mill, and is then fit for use, as a paint, by mixing it with oil. Its value is from $20 to $30 per ton. Professor Doremus is the only scientific witness examined. He says: "It may be called an argillaceous sandstone, alumina and silica being the prominent ingredients—it is not an ore of iron. This comes under the head of argillaceous rocks. I wish to distinguish these classes from ores or metalliferous rocks. The position of this paint material, as it lies in the mountain, is not in veins, but in strata. The extracting of this material as I saw it there would not be called mining." The analysis," the court continues, "only establishes the fact that this is not a metalliferous ore. If the terms "mines and minerals," used in the deed, could, by any fair construction, be confined to metallic substances, the question involved would be of easy solution; for the metallic property found in this paint stone is so small that, for the purpose of extracting the metal, it is of no value. But I do not think the terms should be confined to the metals or to metallic ores. I cannot doubt, if a strata of salt, or even a bed of coal, had been found, they would have passed under this grant. Can this stone paint, then, be fairly and naturally embraced in the term "mineral?" It is a body which is destitute of organization, and which naturally exists within the earth. It is below the surface, distinct from the ordinary earth. It is in strata, and is worked by the ordinary means of mining. And although Professor Doremus says that it is not in veins, but in strata, and that he would not call the mode of extracting it mining, yet this test of his would exclude salt from the class of minerals; for salt, too, is found in strata, and not in veins, and is obtained by shafts, and by the same mode of operation by which this matter is extracted from the earth. It is valuable for its mineral properties, and, by a cheap and easy process of grinding, is converted into a merchantable article adapted to the mechanical and ornamental arts. It is embraced in the definition given by men of science to the term "mineral." In Bakewell's Mineralogy, p. 7, it is said: "The term 'mineral,' in common life, is generally applied to denote substance dug out of the earth or obtained from mines." In Cleveland's Mineralogy, p. 1, the definition is given thus: "Minerals are those bodies which are destitute of organization and which naturally exist within the earth or at its surface." My conclusion is, that this paint stone passed by the grant, and that the defendants have the right to excavate and remove it, and to convert it to their own use.

"In a note in the case of Dunham v. Kirkpatrick, appearing on page 698, 47 Am. Rep., the following appears: 'Freestone is a "mineral," within a reservation in a deed. Bell v. Wilson, L. R. 1 Ch. 303. Coal oil is a "mineral product." Thompson v. Noble, 8 Pittsb. 201. Petroleum is a "mineral and part of the realty." Stoughton's Appeal, 88 Pa. 198. Coal is a "mineral." Henry v. Lowe, 73 Mo. 96. In Tucker v. Linger, 46 L. T. N. S. 894, it was held that flint stones, turned up by the plow in the course of husbandry, were "minerals," within a reservation to the lessor of "mines and minerals, sand, quarries of stone, brick-earth, and gravel pits." This holding was affirmed by the House of Lords. L. R. 8 App. Cas. 508. In Earl Rosse v. Wainman, 14 Mees. & W. 859, the court said that the word, "though more frequently applied to substances containing metals, in its proper sense includes all fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines;" and in Darvill v. Roper, 3 Drew. 294, it was restricted to such products "as are worked by means of mines." More recently, however, in Hext v. Gill, L. R. 7 Ch. 699, the natural meaning of the term was said to be: "Every substance which can be got from underneath the surface of the earth, for the purpose of profit." Again, it has been held to include beds of china clay, while, on the other hand, freestone, quarries of limestone and clay and sand, respectively, have been decided not to be "minerals." In Re Dudley's Settled Estates, Ch. Div. it was held that a lease of salt works, where the brine was pumped from the earth and made into salt, was not a lease of "minerals."

39 L. R. A.

"In the case of Williamson v. Jones, 39 W. Va. 231, 25 L. R. A. 222, the following language is used by Mr. Justice Holt: 'The authorities now very generally—universally, as far as I have examined them—hold petroleum to be a mineral, and as much a part of the realty as timber, coal, or iron ore, except that in proper cases its mobility as a subterranean liquid must be taken into consideration, as in the case of salt water, etc. The courts of the state of Pennsylvania have had many cases, some involving property rights, of great value, in which the point arose, and have examined the question thoroughly, considered it with great care with reference to its being property where it is found, and its character and nature as property in general. "Oil is a mineral, and, being a mineral, is part of the realty." Funk v. Haldeman (1866) 53 Pa. 329, 249. In the case of Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 180 Pa. 285, 5 L. R. A. 731, the master said: 'Gas is a mineral, and while in situ is a part of the land, and therefore possession of the land is possession of the gas.' After quoting this, the court said: 'This deduction must be made with some qualifications. Gas, it is true, is a mineral; but it is a mineral with peculiar attributes, which require the application of precedents arising out of ordinary mineral rights, with much more careful consideration of the principles involved than of the mere decisions. Water also is a mineral; but the decisions in ordinary cases of mining rights, etc., have never been held as unqualified precedents in regard to flowing or even to percolating waters. Water and oil, and still more strongly gas, may be classed by themselves, if the analogy be not too fanciful, as minerals feræ naturæ. In common with animals and unlike other minerals, they have the power and the tendency to escape without the volition of the owner. Their "fugitive and wandering existence within the limits of a particular tract is uncertain," as said by Chief Justice Agnew in Brown v. Vandergrijs, 80 Pa. 147, 148. They belong to the owner of the land, and are part of it, so long as they are on or in it, and are subject to his control: but when they escape, and go into other land, or come under another's control, the title of the former owner is gone.'

"We have found only one authority opposed to the conclusion that petroleum is a mineral, that is the case before referred to, of Dunham v. Kirkpatrick, 101 Pa. 36, 47 Am. Rep. 696. The great weight of authority is not only opposed to that case, but it seems to us to proceed upon false principles. The ground of the decision, as stated in the opinion, is that by the bulk of mankind nothing is considered as mineral except such things as be of metallic nature, such as gold, silver, copper, lead, etc.; that, in the popular estimation, petroleum is not regarded as a mineral substance any more than is animal or vegetable oil; and that it would only be classified as such in the most general and scientific sense. So, in the light of this assumed general view of the bulk of mankind petroleum was held not to fall within a reservation as to minerals. We think, however, that the true meaning of the word 'mineral,' as well as its meaning among the bulk of mankind, must be determined from dictionaries and other similar authorities. We do not think that the bulk of mankind could be regarded as holding that the word 'mineral' applied only to metals. This case seems to be opposed in principle by the later case of Gill v. Weston, 110 Pa. 313, where petroleum was held to be a mineral substance in construing the Pennsylvania act of 1855 concerning the mortgaging of terms on mining lands. The court said in that case: 'It is a mineral substance obtained from the earth by a process of mining, and lands from which it is obtained may with propriety be called mining lands.' In the light of these authorities, we are bound to hold that petroleum is a mineral, and that it falls within the terms of the reservation in the deed referred to in the foregoing case. The same is true of natural gas. We are of the opinion that the first assignment of error, therefore, is well taken.

We are of the opinion, also, that the second assignment of error is well taken. To resolve the point raised by this assignment of error, we must construe the agreed state of facts. From this state of facts it appears that Rodgers conveyed the land, with the mineral reservation, on the 24th day of October, 1853, to Mathias Wright, and that Wright conveyed the land by general warranty deed, without any reservation, to some third party, and then it passed through a series of conveyances to James A. Allard; but the date of the deed made by Wright is not given, nor the date of any other deed, nor how long Allard held after Wright's deed. It thus does not appear from the agreement that there was seven years' adverse possession from the date of the deed of Mathias Wright. The agreement is that Allard and those under whom he claims have been in actual, open, and notorious possession of the land under color of title for more than seven years, claiming adversely to the world to the extent of their title papers, which definitely identify the land intended to be conveyed. Within the expression, 'those under whom he claims,' is not only included Wright, but Rodgers. Therefore it is impossible to say that there was seven years of adverse possession from the deed made by Wright to the third person forward.

'We are of the opinion, also, that the third assignment of error is well taken. In mineral lands the surface, as adapted to cultivation, may be separated from the right to dig under its surface for ore, and one person may hold one of these rights while another holds the other. Stewart v. Chadwick, 8 Iowa, 448; Caldwell v. Fulton, 31 Pa. 475, 72 Am. Dec. 760. So the possession of the soil by the owner for the purpose of tillage gives him no possession of the gas under the surface or of the other minerals. Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 781; Chartiers Block Coal Co. v. Mellon, 153 Pa. 286, 18 L. R. A. 702. In this case it is said: 'The mining of coal and other minerals is constantly developing new questions. Formerly a man who owned the surface owned it to the center of the earth. Now the surface of the land may be separated from the different strata underneath it, and there may be as many different owners as there are strata. Lilli-bridge v. Lackawanna Coal Co. 143 Pa. 298, 13 L. R. A. 627.'

In the earlier days of the common law the attention of buyers and sellers, and, therefore, the attention of the court, was fixed upon the surface. He who owned the surface owned all that grew upon it and all that was buried beneath it. His title extended to the clouds and downward to the earth's center. The value of his estate lay, however, in the arable qualities of the surface, and, with rare exceptions, the income derived from it was the result of agriculture. The comparatively recent development of the sciences of geology and mineralogy, and the multiplication of mechanical devices for penetrating the earth's crust, have greatly changed, the uses and the values of lands. Tracts that were absolutely valueless, so far as the surface was concerned, have come to be worth many times as much per acre as the best farming lands in the commonwealth, because of the rich deposits of coal, or iron, or oil, or gas known to underlie them at various depths. These deposits are sometimes found, however, beneath well-cultivated farms, so that the surface has a large market value apart from the value of the deposits of coal or other minerals under it. In such cases the owner is rarely able to utilize the lower stores of wealth to which he has title, by mining operations conducted by himself, and for this reason he sells them to some person or corporation to be mined and to be moved. So it often happens that the owner of a farm sells the land to one man, the iron, or oil, or gas to another, giving to each purchaser a deed or conveyance in fee simple for his particular deposit or stratum, while he retains the surface for settlement and cultivation precisely as he held it before. The severance is complete for all legal and practical purposes. Each of the separate layers or strata becomes a subject of taxation, of encumbrance, levy, and sale, precisely like the surface.'

The result is that the decree of the chancellor must be reversed, with costs, and a decree entered here affirming the decree of the Court of Chancery Appeals for the complainant in accordance with this opinion.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

J. B. FOWLER, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Mary E. BELL et al.

(90 Tex. 150.)

1. The validity of a chattel mortgage executed by an insolvent foreign corporation in the state which created it, to secure a creditor residing in that state, must be determined by the laws of the state in which the property is situated.
2. The invalidity of an attachment of property of an insolvent corporation will not preclude a purchaser of the property from defending against one claiming it under a mortgage which constitutes an invalid preference.

(November 16, 1896.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Wichita County in favor of plaintiffs in a proceeding brought to foreclose a mortgage. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Mathis & Mathis and Herring & Kelley, for plaintiff in error:

The court erred in rendering judgment for plaintiff foreclosing said chattel mortgage for the reason that the evidence shows that at the time said mortgage was given by the McLeod Artesian Well Company it was an insolvent corporation and had ceased to do business, and such a mortgage was a preference in favor of plaintiff over its other creditors under whom this appellant Fowler holds title to a portion of its property under attachment proceedings.

The laws of the state of Texas do not permit an insolvent corporation to prefer one creditor above another, and the chattel mortgage in question was void for the reason that it attempted to create a preference in plaintiff's favor over other creditors of the corporation.

Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. 86 Tex. 148, 22 L. R. A. 802.

The chattel mortgage having been given upon property which was at the time situated in the state of Texas, the parties then intending that any foreclosure thereof that might become necessary should be in the state of Texas, was controlled and governed by the laws of the state of Texas in determining the rights of the parties thereunder. In such cases the lex fori controls. The validity of a chattel mortgage is a question of local law.

Hall v. Harris, 11 Tex. 809; 7 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. §§ 3715, 3716; Burrill, Assignments, §§ 805, 306; Queen Ins. Co. v. Jefferson Ice Co. 64 Tex. 582; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 959, 960, 964, 965, 967, 968, 970; Jones, Chat. Mortg. §§ 805-307, and note 1; Etheridge v. Sperry, 139 U. S. 276, 277, 35 L. ed. 176; George T. Smith Middlings Purifier Co. v. McGroarty, 136 U. S. 241, 34 L. ed. 348; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 578-578, and notes.

The laws of the state of Texas control the remedies for the enforcement of said chattel mortgage as between appellant Fowler, a citizen of the state of Texas, claiming title to property acquired under judicial process issued by one of the courts of Texas, on the one hand, and appellee, a citizen of another state, claiming a preference given by an insolvent corporation, which act contravenes the policy of the state of Texas, which forbids preferences by insolvent corporations.

Barnett v. Kinney, 147 U. S. 476, 37 L. ed. 247; Story, Confli. Laws, §§ 7, 20, 23, 98, 280, 326, 327, 525; Green v. Van Buskirk, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 150, 19 L. ed. 113.

When the plaintiff found that the property of the insolvent corporation, upon which she had a chattel mortgage, had been seized under attachments by local creditors, if she was not satisfied with the disposition thus about to be made of the property, she should have taken steps to have the property administered by a receiver.

Lang v. Dougherty, 74 Tex. 232; Harrigan v. Quay (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 897; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 864.

Messrs. Corrigan & Hughes, for defendants in error:

A party cannot claim that the property of an insolvent corporation is "a trust fund" for the benefit of all the creditors, and for this reason seek to avoid a chattel mortgage, executed by said corporation for the benefit of certain other creditors, and at the same time appropriate all of said property to himself, by legal proceedings, to wit, an attachment.

Lang v. Dougherty, 74 Tex. 232.

The chattel mortgage in controversy being made in the state of Iowa, by a corporation created by and domiciled in that state, being valid and legal by the laws of Iowa, and being executed in the manner and form as required by the laws of this state, and filed and registered as required by the laws of this state, will constitute a valid lien upon the property situated in this state in the absence of any law in force here prohibiting such a transfer.

Barnett v. Kinney, 147 U. S. 477, 37 L. ed. 248; Weider v. Maddox, 66 Tex. 372, 59 Am. Rep. 617; Ryan v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 65 Tex. 13, 57 Am. Rep. 589; Cantu v. Bennett, 39 Tex. 306; Hall v. Harris, 11 Tex. 809; Butler v. Wendell, 57 Mich. 62, 58 Am. Rep. 329; Chafee v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 71 Me. 514, 36 Am. Rep. 345; Thurston v. Rosenfield, 42 Mo. 474, 97 Am. Dec. 351; Gautier v. Franklin, 1 Tex. 732; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 968; Cobbey, Chat. Mort. § 64, pp. 475, 477; Story, Confli. L. 263; 2 Kent, Com. p. 454; Iowa Code 1873, § 1058; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Fields (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 280; Rue v. Missouri P. R. Co. 74 Tex. 475.

A corporation carries its charter powers with it wherever it goes, whether it be chartered by a special act or by the general laws of the state creating it, and every person who deals with such corporation is bound to take notice of the law of its creation, which was made for the control of its affairs.

NOTE.—As to lawfulness of preference of creditors by insolvent corporations, see Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. (Tex.) 22 89 L. R. A.

L. A. 802, and note; also Adams & W. Co. v. Deyette (S. D.) 81 L. R. A. 497, and other cases cited in footnote thereto.

Life Assn. of America v. Rundle (Relfe v. Rundle), 108 U. S. 222, 26 L. ed. 337; Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 527, 27 L. ed. 1020; Ryan v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 65 Tex. 13, 57 Am. Rep. 589; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 963, 965; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Fields (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 380.

A corporation created under the General Laws of Texas after it has become insolvent and ceased to do business never to resume, has no right to prefer one creditor by mortgage of its property to the exclusion of others. This is not because there is any law in Texas that prohibits such preference, but because the law of Texas creating the corporation does not clothe it with authority to thus appropriate property. The McLeod Artesian Well Company, being incorporated under the laws of Iowa, and being granted such powers by its charter, its mortgage made in pursuance thereof, and conveying property in Texas to certain creditors, will be upheld.

Ibid.; Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co., 86 Tex. 143, 22 L. R. A. 802.

The court did not err in holding that the rights of appellee under said chattel mortgage were governed by the laws of Iowa instead of the laws of Texas.

Weider v. Maddox, 66 Tex. 372, 59 Am. Rep. 617; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 962.

It does not rest with the discretion of the court to give or deny effect to this mortgage according as it may appear or not appear injurious to the rights of the citizenship of this state. Such matters should be a subject of legislative and not judicial discretion. This mortgage is valid here by the comity of the nation and not by the comity of the court.

Weider v. Maddox, 66 Tex. 377, 59 Am. Rep. 617; Story, Conf. L. 890; Guillander v. Howell, 85 N. Y. 659; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 962.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court of civil appeals made the following statement of the case and conclusions of fact: "On the 1st day of March, 1892, the McLeod Artesian Well Company, a private corporation created by the laws of Iowa, and domiciled there, executed to Mary E. Bell its note for $1,000 for money loaned it by her, payable one year after date thereof. On the 3d day of June, 1893, the McLeod Artesian Well Company executed to Mary E. Bell a chattel mortgage, dated June 3, 1893, conveying to her certain property situated in Wichita Falls, Texas, belonging to said company, for the purpose of securing said debt. The mortgage was signed and acknowledged by John E. Craig, the president of said company, on the 3d day of June, 1893, in Iowa, and was sent by him to Rice B. Bell, secretary and treasurer of the said company, who was then temporarily stopping at Wichita Falls, Texas, who also signed and acknowledged said mortgage on the 21st day of June, 1893, at Wichita Falls, and deposited and filed the same on that day with the county clerk of Wichita county, Texas, to be registered as a chattel mortgage.

89 L. R. A.

At the date of the execution of this mortgage, the McLeod Artesian Well Company, by its same officers, executed two other mortgages, conveying this property and all its other property in Texas, except a few articles at Ft. Worth, Texas, of nominal value,—one to secure Mrs. Craig in the sum of $2,000, and one to secure Mrs. Sanford in the sum of $1,000. The McLeod Artesian Well Company is a corporation incorporated by the laws of Iowa in 1891, its stockholders all being residents of Iowa. It has always maintained its principal office at Keokuk, in the state of Iowa, and its president and its officers all reside in said state. Said mortgage was executed in the state of Iowa for the purpose of securing Iowa creditors. At the time of the execution of said mortgage the McLeod Artesian Well Company was insolvent, and had ceased to do business. The laws of Iowa allow an insolvent corporation that has ceased to do business to prefer its creditors. Such power is granted to it by the laws constituting its charter. Said mortgage in favor of Mary E. Bell was given on property situated in Wichita county, Texas, and the same was properly filed and registered by the clerk of said county on the 22d day of July, 1893; and after said mortgage had been properly filed, W. R. Kent brought suit in the county court of Wichita county, Texas, against the McLeod Artesian Well Company for $972, and in said suit procured a writ of attachment, and caused it to be levied upon the property described in said mortgage, and after said judgment in said cause in his favor foreclosing said attachment had said property sold under an order of sale issued from said court on the 4th day of October, 1893, at which sale W. R. Kent bought in all of said property for the sum of $300. Afterwards, to wit, on or about the 1st day of February, 1898, he sold said property, which was then situated in Wichita Falls, Texas, to J. W. Sparger, and Sparger sold it to J. B. Fowler, and delivered the same to him in Hill county, Texas. That at the time of said attachment and sales the mortgage of Mary E. Bell was on file in the office of the county clerk of Wichita county, Texas, and the property was also in said county. On the 6th day of October, 1893, the appellee Mary E. Bell brought this suit in the district court of Wichita county, Texas, against the McLeod Artesian Well Company, on said note for $1,000, interest, and attorney's fees, and to foreclose said chattel mortgage given to secure said note. W. R. Kent was made a party defendant in this suit. On the 27th day of March, 1894, the appellees filed an amended original petition in this suit, in which they made J. B. Fowler a party defendant, alleging that he had converted a portion of said property for which Mary E. Bell had a mortgage, and asked for a judgment against said Fowler for the value thereof. On the 24th day of November, 1894, the case was tried before the district judge without a jury, wherein he rendered a judgment in favor of the appellee against said Artesian Well Company, for the amount of her debt, interest, and attorney's fees; also foreclosing her said mortgage lien as against all defendants; also rendered judgment in favor of appellees against defendant J. B. Fowler for the value of the property taken by him. J. B. Fowler alone prosecutes this appeal."

The only question which we find it necessary to consider is, Was the mortgage given by the McLeod Artesian Well Company in favor of Mrs. Bell valid? If it was not, she cannot maintain this suit to foreclose it, whether the defendant acquired title or not under the judgment foreclosing the attachment lien. The question involved is this: Could the McLeod Artesian Well Company, a corporation doing business in this state, but created under the laws of the state of Iowa, being insolvent, and having ceased to do business, make a mortgage upon its property in this state, giving a preference to one or more creditors over others, which mortgage a corporation created under the laws of this state could not have made under similar conditions? In other words, do the general laws of another state govern in the interpretation of a contract made by a corporation of such state with reference to its property situated in this state, when such contract is in violation of the laws or public policy of this state? Mr. Thompson, in his recent work on Corporations (vol. 6, § 7885), states the rule, which we believe to be correct, as follows: "Without attempting to enumerate, in a single section, all the cases to which this comity does not extend, it may be observed, in the first place, that it does not extend so far as to concede to foreign corporations the powers which their own charters do not permit them to exercise; nor so far as to permit a foreign corporation to exercise powers within the state which a domestic corporation of the same kind is not permitted to exercise under the Constitution and policy of the state." This rule is well sustained by the authorities, of which we cite the following: Falls v. United States Sav. Loan & Bldg. Co. 97 Ala. 417, 24 L. R. A. 174; Gulford v. Western U. Telg. Co. 59 Minn. 332; Hutchins v. New England Coal Min. Co. 4 Allen, 580; Milnor v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 863; Rorer, Interstate Law, 288. Morawetz on Private Corporations (§ 967, vol. 2) states the proposition thus: "It is the charter alone which is recognized by the law of comity, and not the general legislation of the state in which the corporation was formed. The word 'charter' is here used to signify the agreement between the shareholders of the corporation, whether this agreement be contained in a special act of the legislature, or in articles of association, or in either of these taken in connection with certain general laws of the state. The law of comity merely enables the corporators to exercise the franchise of acting in a corporate capacity in foreign states, and the extent of this franchise is determined by the agreement entered into when the charter was accepted. The laws of the state where the corporation was formed by the agreement of the corporators are regarded only so far as they determine the scope and validity of this agreement itself. . . . The general laws and regulations of a state are intended to govern only within the limits of the state enacting them, and the state would have no power to give them extraterritorial force. . . . It follows, therefore, that if a statute enacted by a state,—whether as a general law, or as a special provision in the charter of a corporation,—was enacted for the enforcement of a local policy only, it will not be presumed that such statutory provision was intended by the state, or by the shareholders forming the corporation, to enter into the charter contract, and to regulate the company in its transactions outside of the state; and such enactment will, therefore, not affect the validity of the dealings of the company in foreign states." Applying these principles of law to the facts of this case, it follows that, if the mortgage in question was made contrary to the laws of this state, or to its public policy, it is void, and conferred no rights upon the mortgagee. A corporation created in this state, which has become insolvent, and has ceased to carry on its business, cannot make any disposition of its property which gives a preference to one or more creditors over others, for the reason that upon insolvency and cessation of the business the assets of the corporation by operation of the law become a trust fund in the hands of its directors, to be disposed of for the benefit of its creditors; and any disposition which discriminates between such creditors is a violation of that trust. Lang v. Dougherty, 74 Tex. 226; Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. 86 Tenn. 143, 22 L. R. A. 802. If the McLeod Artesian Well Company had been a domestic corporation, and had made the mortgage in question under the same conditions, it would be void, because contrary to the laws and public policy of this state, as declared in the decision of its court, as above cited; and it must be so held in this case, unless its validity can be supported upon the ground that it is sustained by the laws of the state of Iowa.

Counsel for the defendants in error claim that the mortgage in question in this case is valid for the following reasons: (1) That there is no law in Texas which renders such transaction invalid, but that the decisions of our courts, and especially that of Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. rest upon the ground that the statutes of this state do not confer upon corporations power to make such instruments. (2) Because the transaction is to be governed by the laws of Iowa, where the contract was made, and in which state it would be valid, and not by the laws of Texas. In the case of Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. cited above, Judge Stayton reviewed the authorities exhaustively to show that an insolvent corporation which had ceased to do business could not make a mortgage giving preference to some creditors over others, for the reason which we have before stated, that upon the happening of such conditions the directors of the corporation by operation of law become trustees charged with the distribution of its assets among all of its creditors, and, thus being constituted trustees, they could not deprive the beneficiaries of that trust of their proportionate part of the assets of the corporation by means of conveyances of the property so held to one or more of the creditors in preference to the others. The decision is not placed upon the ground that the authority is not conferred upon the corporation by the laws of this state, as is insisted by counsel for the defendants in error, but in that case it was insisted that a corporation had the inherent right at common law to make such a conveyance. Judge Stayton conclusively showed from the best-considered authorities that the rule claimed applied only to common-law corporations, and not to those created by statute; and then, in order to conclusively show that the rule announced as applicable to insolvent corporations applied in this state under such circumstances, he examined our statutes, from which examination it appeared that no such authority had been either directly or by implication conferred upon corporations in this state. That case clearly settled the law upon this question in Texas, and it is no longer open to controversy that an insolvent corporation cannot, in this state, when it has ceased to perform the business for which it was created, dispose of its assets so as to deprive its creditors of a fair and just distribution of the same.

In support of the second proposition above stated, it is claimed that, this mortgage having been executed in Iowa, where the law permitted such disposition of the property, it is to be governed in its construction and enforcement by the laws of that state. We will remark, however, that it was made with a view to its enforcement in Texas, and embraced alone property situated in Texas. In support of the position taken by counsel, above stated, the following cases are cited: Ryan v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 65 Tex. 13, 57 Am. Rep. 589; Weider v. Maddox, 66 Tex. 372, 59 Am. Rep. 617; Rue v. Missouri P. R. Co. 74 Tex. 479. We will briefly review some of the cases cited by the defendants in error, which, in our opinion, are not in point as authority upon the question here involved. In the case of Ryan v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. the question was whether the law of Missouri or the law of Texas should govern in the construction of a contract for the shipment of goods from St. Louis into Texas over the Missouri, Kansas, & Texas Railroad. It was a case in which performance of the contract began in Missouri and terminated in Texas, and the court held that under such circumstances the law of the place of making the contract would be applicable. In Weider v. Maddox an assignment made in the state of Missouri in accordance with the laws of that state, which embraced personal property situated in Texas, was upheld against the lien of an attachment levied in this state after the assignment was executed and recorded; but it was expressly shown by the opinion that the terms of the assignment did not in any way conflict with the assignment law of this state. Rue v. Missouri P. R. Co. involved the validity of a contract made under these circumstances: Talmage, the general manager of the railroad company, entered into a contract with Rue, by which the latter was appointed stock agent for the railroad company in Texas at a salary of $2,000 a year, and, in addition thereto, the stock yards and feeding pens at several points in Texas and the Indian territory were leased to Rue for a number of years, and he given the exclusive right to feed cattle shipped over that railroad. By the terms of the contract, the profits of this business were to be divided between Rue and Talmage, which was in violation of the Constitution and laws of the state of Missouri, in which state the contract was made, and in which state likewise the railroad company was chartered. There was no law in Texas which would uphold such a contract as that made between these parties. The contract was so obviously contrary to good morals, fair dealing, and honesty towards the railroad company on the part of its officer, participated in by Rue, that it would seem to have been contrary to the public policy of this state, and therefore there was no conflict between the law of Missouri and the laws of public policy of Texas upon this question. We are not called upon in this case to approve or dissent from the opinion delivered in that case. It is not authority in the case now before the court, and cannot be held to control or influence a decision of the question now under consideration.

Defendants in error's counsel cite Re Prime, 136 N. Y. 347, 18 L. R. A. 718, as relevant to the questions under discussion. The only point in that case which could be considered as in the remotest degree akin to this is thus expressed in the syllabus of the case: "A state statute granting powers and privileges to corporations, in the absence of plain indications to the contrary appearing on the face of the act, applies only to corporations created by the state." Manifestly that case has no relevancy to any question now before the court. In Barth v. Backus, 140 N. Y. 230, 28 L. R. A. 47, cited by counsel, the court refused to sustain an assignment, made by a Wisconsin corporation doing business in the city of New York, of personal property in that state, because the law of Wisconsin upon the subject of assignments required creditors to accept the assignment and discharge the assignor, and was considered by the New York court to be in the nature of a bankrupt or insolvent law. If at all applicable, that case does not sustain the contention of the defendants in error. We deem it unnecessary to review the case at greater length. We are earnestly asked to carefully examine Vanderpool v. Gorman, 140 N. Y. 563, 24 L. R. A. 548, which, upon careful examination, we find to be a case in which a corporation created under the laws of New Jersey, doing business in the state of New York, made a general assignment for the benefit of all of its creditors without preferences. An attachment was levied in the state of New York upon the property assigned, and the assignee brought suit to recover damages for the levy upon and sale of the property. The defendant in that suit claimed that the assignment was void on account of the provisions of a statute of the state, which, among other things, provided, "that no corporation shall make any transfer or assignment to any person whatever in contemplation of its insolvency, and every such assignment is declared to be void." It was claimed that the foreign corporation was embraced in the general language of this statute. The court held that the law above quoted did not apply to foreign corporations. That court also held that the right to make such an assignment as was made in that case was inherent in all corporations unless prohibited, and, not being prohibited to the foreign corporation by the terms of the statute, the assignment was not violative of any law in the state of New York. There are two marked distinctions between that case and this: First. The instrument in that case was of a character which the laws of New York permitted to be made, and which the courts of that state held all corporations had the inherent power to make, unless restrained therefrom. In this case the instrument is one which the courts of this state held that no corporation has the power to make unless authorized by statute of this state. Second. In that case the instrument was a general assignment distributing all of the assets of the corporation equally among the creditors, which is not denounced by any decision in this state; while the instrument in this suit is one which is not approved by the New York case, but is directly and emphatically denounced by the laws of this state as embodied in the decision of its courts. The two cases are so dissimilar that the one is not authority in the consideration of the other.

It is also claimed by the defendants in error that, since the plaintiff in error is not seeking to have the property equally distributed among all the creditors of the corporation, he cannot prevail in this suit, and Lang v. Dougherty, 74 Tex. 226, is cited in support of that proposition. The defendants in error were plaintiffs in the lower court, in which they did not seek an equal distribution of the proceeds of the property among the creditors of the corporation, but sought to apply it all to the satisfaction of their debt. The doctrine announced in the case last cited applies with great force to the rights of the defendants in error, and effectually denies to them any right to recover in this case, the mortgage which they are seeking to foreclose being held invalid. The fact that the plaintiff in the attachment suit proceeded contrary to law, and appropriated to his exclusive use a part of the trust fund, will not justify the courts in taking from the purchaser that which was unlawfully appropriated, and, with no greater legal right in them, turning the property over to the defendants in error, to be by them applied to their exclusive benefit. If the power claimed for the artesian well company had been explicitly expressed in its charter, it could not have been exercised in this state by that corporation, because in direct conflict with the laws and policy of this state; and in such conflict the law of this state must prevail over the foreign law. Falls v. United States Sav. Loan & Bldg. Co. 97 Ala. 417, 24 L. R. A. 174. We hold that the mortgage executed by the McLeod Artesian Well Company to Mrs. Bell was null and void, and that the district court erred in foreclosing it upon the property embraced therein, and in giving judgment against the defendant Fowler for the said property, or the value of any part thereof, and that the court of civil appeals erred in affirming the said judgment.

It is therefore ordered that the judgments of the District Court and the Court of Civil Appeals be reversed as between the plaintiff in error and the defendants in error, and the judgment be here rendered that no foreclosure of the said mortgage be had upon the said property, and that the said J. B. Fowler, the plaintiff in error, go hence without day, and that he recover of the defendants in error Mary E. Bell and Rice H. Bell all costs in this behalf expended in all of the courts.

39 L. R. A.

City of SHERMAN, Plff. in Err.,

v.
R. LANGHAM et al.

(.....Tex.....)

1. The validity of the original cause of action cannot be questioned in a mandamus proceeding to enforce performance of a judgment.
2. A judgment upon a tort is not a contract within the meaning of the constitutional provision against impairing the obligation of contracts.
3. A statute reducing the power of a city to levy taxes to pay a judgment does not deprive the owner of the judgment of his property therein without due process of law.

(March 29, 1897.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fifth Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Grayson County in favor of plaintiffs in a proceeding brought to enforce a judgment which had been recovered by plaintiff against defendant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. G. P. Webb and Sidney Wilson for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. R. R. Haslewood and Wilkins & Vinson for defendants in error.

Denman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Langham et al., being the owners of a judgment for $1,164, rendered against the city of Sherman in the district court of Grayson county, on the 29th day of March, 1889, in an action to recover damages for an injury inflicted in 1888, instituted this proceeding September 6, 1894, to revive said judgment, and seeking an order of court compelling the city to pay same, "and, if necessary, to levy a special tax in an amount sufficient to pay said judgment, interest and costs, and apply the proceeds of such levy to the payment of said judgment," and for general relief. From the pleadings and agreed statement, it appears that Sherman was incorporated as a city of 1,000 inhabitants or more, under the general law, but the date of its incorporation is not given; that in 1894 acting under the assumption that it contained less than 10,000 inhabitants, its officers levied, for various purposes, taxes aggregating $1.25 on the $100 valuation; that at the date of the trial of this cause in the court below, on the 29th day of April, 1895, it contained more than 10,000 inhabitants, and no tax for any purpose had been levied for the year 1895; that the revenues derived from said tax of 1894 and other sources were sufficient to meet the current expenses of the city for that year, as it was then maintained, said city then acting under the general law for cities of less than 10,000 inhabitants; that the value of the property within the corporate limits is $4,600,000. There is no evidence in the record as to what the expenses of the city would be for the year 1895 or any subsequent year. The trial court entered a judgment for the plaintiffs against the city reviving the original judgment, and directing a peremptory writ of mandamus to issue, commanding the officers of the city and their successors "to levy and collect a sufficient ad valorem tax upon the property situated within the corporate limits of said city of Sherman, and subject to taxation by said city of Sherman, to pay said judgment, interest, and costs, and the costs of this suit;" said levy to be made at the same time that the other taxes imposed by said city are levied for the year 1895. On appeal by the city to the court of civil appeals, that court affirmed the judgment of the trial court, and ordered that the officers of said city "do proceed at once to levy and collect a sufficient ad valorem tax upon the property situated within the corporate limits of said city of Sherman to pay said judgment, interest and costs, and the cost of this appeal." The city has brought the case to this court upon writ of error, assigning as error the action of the court of civil appeals "in affirming the judgment of the trial court and granting the writ of mandamus."

NOTE.—As to the impairment of obligation of a judgment, see also note to Rockwell v. Butler (Colo.) 17 L. R. A. 611.

That part of article 487, Rev. Stat. 1895, which relates to the question under consideration, is as follows: "Cities having more than 10,000 inhabitants may levy, assess, and collect taxes not exceeding $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent on the assessed value of real and personal estate and property in the city, not exempt from taxation by the Constitution and laws of the state . . . and such cities are hereby authorized to levy, assess, and collect a further tax of 25 cents on the \$100 worth of property for the purpose of paying the debts of such city lawfully contracted prior to the 1st day of January, 1880, not to include any bonded debt." In awarding the mandamus the trial court and court of civil appeals proceeded upon the theory that, since the city did not show that it would be necessary to exhaust its entire general taxing power of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent in order to raise sufficient funds to defray its current expenses, it has not met the prima facie case made by the plaintiffs by showing their judgment unpaid and unprovided for, and the right of the city to levy said tax. Where the city council, in good faith, in the exercise of the discretion conferred upon them by law, fix the current expenses of the city at such a sum that it becomes necessary to exhaust its taxing power, not appropriated to other purposes, to raise same, a general creditor cannot compel the appropriation of a portion of such taxing power, or the proceeds thereof, to the payment of his claim, to the exclusion of such expenses. All persons who deal or come in contact with the city, without securing the setting aside, in the manner provided by law, of a portion of its taxing power, for the satisfaction of their claims, are charged with notice that the very law which renders the city liable to them, and which might have denied all liability whatever, fixes the current expenses of each year as a first charge on its general revenues for that year. To adopt any other rule "would be to destroy the city." In such case the creditor would have to wait until a surplus should accrue, just as any other creditor has to wait upon an impecunious debtor.

And every creditor is presumed to know the extent of the power to tax, and the means to pay on the part of the city at the time of the contract." Tucker v. Raleigh, 75 N. C. 267. If he be not willing to take the only chance of payment held out to him by the very law to which he must look for the city's liability he has the privilege of not so dealing or coming in contact with the city as to render it liable to him either by contract or tort. If, in this case, the council had in good faith, at the date of the trial below, determined the various sums necessary for the various items of current expenses, so as to aggregate such an amount that it would require a tax of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent to raise same, and had levied such tax therefor, it is clear that the court could not have compelled them to set aside any portion of said levy or fund to be derived therefrom for the payment of this judgment, to the exclusion of any part of such current expenses; for the court has no power, even at the suit of a creditor, to control or review the honest discretion of the council in determining whether they will in a given year expend a portion of its revenues for a given thing properly classed as current expenses or the amount they will pay therefor. Denison v. Foster (Tex. Civ. App.) 37 S. W. 167, in which this court refused an application for writ of error; Tucker v. Raleigh, 75 N. C. 267; Cromartie v. Bladen Comrs. 87 N. C. 184; East St. Louis v. United States, Zebble, 110 U. S. 321, 28 L. ed. 162.

It follows that the trial court could not forestall the action of the council, by ordering it in advance to levy a portion of said $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent to pay this judgment; for such order, if valid, would be, in effect, a judicial determination either that the current expenses were not a preference claim on the funds to be derived from such taxing power, or that the council to be assembled for that purpose could not, in the exercise of their honest discretion, fix the amount to be expended for current expenses at such a sum as to require a tax of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent to raise same. The court, by entering the peremptory order to levy out of its $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent taxing power a sufficient tax to pay the judgment, necessarily to that extent forbade and attempted to control the council in the exercise of its discretion in determining the amount to be raised and expended for current expenses. This, we have seen, it has no power to do. It is no answer to say that it had only levied $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent for 1894, and therefrom had realized sufficient to meet the expenses incurred as the city was then administered, for, in the discretion of the council, such expenses, both as to items and amounts, may vary from year to year. If this were not true, a past year could be made to govern all future ones, and the court could virtually destroy the discretion of the council by ordering the appropriation for a series of years of all that part of the taxing power not exercised in such past year to the payment of such judgments as this. Upon this view of the law, the writ of error was granted. We are of opinion, however, that the court might have awarded its writ, directing the levy of the full $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent each year, and the payment of the judgment each year of such of the sums realized from such tax as might not be necessary to pay such claims as were already a charge on said taxing power, such as interest and sinking fund on bonds, and such current expenses as the council, in its discretion, might incur; or might have ordered the exercise, each year, to pay the judgment, of such portion of said 1½ per cent taxing power as might be left after the council had annually made therefrom such levy as, in its discretion, was necessary to raise funds for current expenses, and such levies as were already provided for out of said taxing power, such as provision made for interest and sinking fund on bonds. Therefore, if the city had no other taxing power applicable to this judgment than the 1½ per cent, as seems to be conceded by counsel on both sides, and assumed by both of said courts in the disposition of the case, we would be constrained to reform the judgment awarding the mandamus in accordance with the views above expressed.

Since the submission of the cause, we have reached the conclusion that the judgment of the court of civil appeals must be affirmed upon the ground that the latter portion of the statute above quoted, authorizing the city "to levy, assess, and collect a further tax of 25 cents on the $100 worth of property, for the purpose of paying the debts of such city lawfully contracted, prior to the 1st day of January, 1889, not to include any bonded debt," affords ample warrant for same. The sum necessary to pay this judgment can be raised within the limits of such taxing power. The record does not show that any portion of it has been appropriated to any other claim, and the council have no discretion or power to levy any portion thereof for any purpose other than the payment of "debts lawfully contracted prior to the 1st day of January, 1889, not to include any bonded debt." The only question that can arise is whether this judgment is a "debt lawfully contracted prior to the 1st day of January, 1889," within the meaning of said statute. The broad and just purpose of the statute, which was enacted in 1889, was to enable the cities becoming subject to its terms to pay off their lawful obligations incurred prior to January 1 of that year, out of funds to be raised by the exercise of this special taxing power, without being compelled to resort to their general and permanent taxing power of 1½ per cent, intended to meet their fixed charges such as current yearly expenses and bonded debts. It being incorporated into the Revised Statutes, which, in its "Final Title," declares that "the provisions thereof shall be liberally construed, with a view to effect their objects and to promote justice," we are not at liberty to adopt a narrow construction of same, which would either deprive the city of the power of paying a judgment the justness of which is not questioned without resorting to its general revenues, which it alleges are all needed for current expenses and other fixed charges, or force plaintiffs below to rely upon the precarious remedy above suggested, as the only one open to them for the collection of their claim.

Applying a liberal rule of construction to the statute to effect its purpose, we are of opinion that the liability of the city to plaintiffs began at the date of the accrual of the cause of action in 1888, and not at the date of the judicial ascertainment thereof, by the rendition of the judgment in 1889; that the word

"debts," as used in the statute, is broad enough to include a liability arising out of either tort or contract (Barber v. East Dallas, 83 Tex. 147); that the word "contracted" is used in the statute in the sense of "incurred" (Smith v. Omans, 17 Wis. 395); and that the legality of the obligation was settled by the rendition of the judgment. It results that the judgment in this case is a debt of the city "lawfully contracted prior to the 1st day of January, 1889," and that the council has no discretion but to levy, under said special power of taxation, a tax sufficient to pay same; and therefore the judgment of the court of civil appeals must be affirmed, though we base our conclusion upon different grounds from those presented to and relied upon by that court as justifying the award of the writ.

Brown, J., not sitting.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Denman, J., on November 22, 1897, handed down the following response:

We only deem it necessary to notice two of the grounds for rehearing. The first seeks to question the validity of the original cause of action. This was settled adversely to the city by the rendition of the original judgment, and the question cannot be raised collaterally in this proceeding to enforce such judgment by mandamus. United States, Ranger, v. New Orleans, 98 U. S. 381, 25 L. ed. 225. The second raises the question—not heretofore presented—that pending this appeal the legislature, by special act, of which, by its terms, the courts are required to take judicial notice (Special Laws 1897, p. 41), granted to the city of Sherman a special charter, which declares that it shall levy no tax in excess of 1½ per cent of the taxable property, and distributes such total taxing power among various objects, allowing not to exceed 30 cents on the $100 assessed taxable values "for general purposes and current expense" (§§ 97-102), and that since this act removes the city from the operation of the provision of the Revised Statutes under which we held in the original opinion that the city was authorized to levy a special tax of 25 cents to pay off indebtedness contracted prior to the 1st day of January, 1889, therefore we were in error in affirming the judgment of the court of civil appeals, ordering the levy of a sufficient tax to pay the judgment. To this it is objected (1) that the judgment is a contract, and that the special charter reducing the power of the city to levy taxes to pay the same impairs its obligation, and is therefore prohibited by the Constitution of the United States; and (2) that such charter deprives the owner of the judgment of his property therein, without due process of law. It has been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States that a judgment founded upon a tort is not a contract, within the meaning of the constitutional provision invoked. Louisiana, Folsom Bros., v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 936, cited in Louisiana, Nelson, v. Police Jury, 111 U. S. 716, 28 L. ed. 574. And hence the first objection is not well taken, even if it should be held that a person contracting a debt with a city of less than 10,000 acquires a contract right in the increased taxing power conferred by the charter when such city reaches a population of 10,000. We also understand the decision of that learned court in the case cited to be adverse to the second objection urged above, for it was there said: "The clause of the 14th Amendment cited is equally inoperative to restrain the action of the state. Conceding that the judgments, though founded upon claims to indemnity for unlawful acts of mobs or riotous assemblages, are property in the sense that they are capable of ownership and may have a pecuniary value, the relators cannot be said to be deprived of them so long as they continue an existing liability against the city. Although the present limitation of the taxing power of the city may prevent the receipt of sufficient funds to pay the judgments, the legislature of the state may, upon proper appeal, make other provision for their satisfaction. The judgments may also perhaps be used by the relators or their assignees as offsets to demands of the city; at least it is possible that they may be available in various ways. Be this as it may, the relators have no such vested right in the taxing power of the city as to render its diminution by the state, to a degree affecting the present collection of their judgments, a deprivation of their property in the sense of the constitutional prohibition. A party cannot be said to be deprived of his property in a judgment because at the time he is unable to collect it. The cases in which we have held that the taxing power of a municipality continues, notwithstanding a legislative act of limitation or repeal, are founded upon contracts; and decisions in them do not rest upon the principle that the party affected in the enforcement of his contract rights has been thereby deprived of any property, but upon the principle that the remedies for the enforcement of his contracts, existing when they were made, have been by such legislation impaired. The usual mode in which municipal bodies meet their pecuniary contracts is by taxation. And when, upon the faith that such taxation will be levied, contracts have been made, the constitutional inhibition has been held to restrain the state from repealing or diminishing the power of the corporation so as to deprive the holder of the contract of all adequate and efficacious remedy. As we have often said, the power of taxation belongs exclusively to the legislative department of the government, and the extent to which it shall be delegated to a municipal body is a matter of discretion, and may be limited or revoked at the pleasure of the legislature. But, as we held in United States, Wolff, v. New Orleans, at October term, 1880, 103 U. S. 858, 26 L. ed. 395, and repeated in Louisiana, Southern Bank, v. Pilsbury, at October term, 1881, 105 U. S. 278, 26 L. ed. 1090, in both cases by the unanimous judgment of the court, the legislation in that respect is subject to this qualification, which attends all state legislation, that it shall not conflict with the prohibitions of the Constitution of the United States and, among other things, shall not operate directly upon contracts of the corporation, so as to impair their obligation by abrogating or lessening the means of their enforcement. Legislation producing this latter result, not indirectly as a consequence of legitimate measures taken, as will sometimes happen, but directly by operating upon those means, is prohibited by the Constitution and must be disregarded—treated as if never enacted—by all courts recognizing the Constitution as the paramount law of the land. This doctrine has been repeatedly asserted by this court when attempts have been made to limit the power of taxation of a municipal body, upon the faith of which contracts have been made, and by means of which alone they could be performed. . . . However great the control of the legislature over the corporation while it is in existence, it must be exercised in subordination to the principle which secures the inviolability of contracts." It is true that the court withheld the expression of any opinion as to "the effect of legislation upon the means of enforcing an ordinary judgment of damages for a tort, rendered against the person committing it, in favor of the person injured;" but we do not understand such reservation to affect cities like those of this state, which have no property, and against which no execution can issue, and whose only means of payment is the levy and collection of taxes upon property of others within its limits. In such cases the judgments are virtually against the mass of taxable property within the city; and thereby a legislative policy of compelling the election of proper officers, and securing the vigilant performance of their duties, is sought to be made effective by imposing upon such property, which is assumed to be owned by their constituents, liability for the tortious acts of such officers. This would seem to be, in principle, the same policy that imposed such liability for damages done by a mob. It is very questionable if such policy is founded in real justice, for it is not certain that in actual practice the officers are elected by the owners of the property, a majority of whom may have voted for others. However this may be, it is a mere matter of governmental policy whether it is deemed wise to impose upon such property liability for torts, for the commission of which the owners thereof are not responsible; and, if such policy be changed, the injured party has no legal cause of complaint. It matters not in what shape his claim be, when such change is made it falls with the policy. His judgment can be of no higher dignity than his cause of action, for the judgment is a mere determination of its existence and extent. If the claim can be destroyed by legislation, its collection can be impeded by reducing the taxing power of the city.

89 L. R. A.

We are therefore of opinion that we erred in affirming the judgment, upon the ground that the city had the power to levy the special tax referred to above, and that according to the reasoning of the first portion of our former opinion herein, and the views above expressed, the motion for rehearing must be granted, and the judgments of the Trial Court and Court of Civil Appeals be set aside, and judgment here rendered directing the officers of the city to levy the full 80 cents on the $100 referred to above, as allowed by its special charter, each year, until the judgment is paid, and to pay over on such judgment each year such of the sums realized from such tax as may not be necessary to defray current expenses.

Brown, J., not sitting.

Clarence EDWARDS, Appt.,

v.

STATE of Texas.

(..... Tex.)

Conviction for assault with intent to murder cannot be had in case the accused was at the time of committing the deed insane because of the recent voluntary use of cocaine, morphine, and whisky, although the statute provides that insanity from the voluntary recent use of intoxicating liquor shall be no defense.

(December 1, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Harrison County convicting him of an assault with intent to murder. Reversed.

NOTE.—Morphine and other additions as affecting responsibility and capacity.

- I. Scope and general view of the subject.
- II. Effect on criminal responsibility.
- III. Effect on capacity to contract.
- IV. Effect on testamentary capacity.
- V. As a ground for divorce.
- VI. As affecting insurance.
- VII. As affecting competency of witness.

I. Scope and general view of the subject.

This note is limited to additions other than alcoholic. Addition to the use of drugs producing exhilaration, excitement, or stupor is not drunkenness or intoxication within the legal meaning of those terms.

Thus, the voluntary use of chloroform, habitually indulged in, and habitual intoxication therefrom, do not make a person a common drunkard, and expose him to the penalties prescribed by law therefor, or for disorderly conduct. Com. v. Whitney, 11 Cush. 477.

And addition to the use of opium or morphine is not drunkenness which will authorize divorce under a provision for divorce for drunkenness. See infra, V.

But such additions are closely analogous to drunkenness or intoxication, and appear to have been deemed subject to the same rules with relation to their effect upon responsibility and capacity, and with relation to the evidence by which they may be established.

Thus, one who has seen a person many times in a certain condition resulting from the use of a drug may give his opinion, where he finds the same condition existing, that it was caused by the same drug, whether he be an expert or not. Burt v. Burt, 168 Mass. 204.

And medical or other witnesses who have been with a person for a long period of time, and are familiar with her habits as to the use of morphine and its effect upon her, may be allowed to state their opinions as to whether at the various times when they saw her she was under its influence. Burt v. Burt, 168 Mass. 204.

So, the incapacity arising from the use of morphine by one who did not have the habit fixed upon him is but temporary, and there is no presumption in favor of a continuance of such incapacity. Camp v. Shaw, 52 Ill. App. 241.

But when a will is made upon a death bed and shortly before death, and delirium or stupor from drugs is shown, there is no presumption that it was made during a lucid interval, though such intervals are shown to have existed. Elliott v. Welby, 13 Mo. App. 19.

As to rules with relation to responsibility and

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Webster Blocker and Pope & Lane for appellant.

Mr. John B. Carter, for the State:

Temporary insanity produced by the recent voluntary use of the drugs cocaine and morphine is no defense to crime, but such temporary insanity may be considered by the jury in mitigation of the punishment to be assessed for the act committed.

Wilcox v. State, 94 Tenn. 106.

The excessive recent use of intoxicating liquors producing temporary insanity will not reduce an assault with intent to murder to an aggravated assault.

The habitual use of morphine and cocaine, or either of them, and the recent use of intoxicating liquors combined, producing temporary insanity, will not reduce an assault with intent to murder to an aggravated assault.

capacity with reference to particular subjects, see following subdivisions of this note.

II. Effect on criminal responsibility.

The fact that a person committing a homicide was in a frenzy produced by an overdose of morphine administered to him as a medicine is a complete defense on a prosecution therefor. State v. Rippey, 104 N. C. 752.

And evidence as to what effect deprivation of an accustomed supply of opium would have upon the mind of the accused is admissible in a prosecution for larceny, where it appeared that he was addicted to the habitual and excessive use of opium in some of its forms, and there was evidence from which it might be inferred that at the time of the larceny he had been deprived of his accustomed supply. Rogers v. State, 33 Ind. 543.

Refusal to give an instruction in a prosecution for murder, in which it was claimed that the defendant was insane, and that his insanity was caused by the use of morphine, referring to morphine as a cause for such supposed insanity, is not error, however, where ample instructions with regard to insanity and diseases of the mind were given, though without mentioning any specific drug or liquor as the cause. State v. Mahn, 25 Kan. 182.

But a general charge in a criminal prosecution on the question of insanity, mentioning only the theory of delirium tremens, is not proper where there was testimony to show hereditary insanity, permanent insanity produced by the long and continuous use of alcoholic spirits, delirium tremens, and temporary insanity or frenzy caused by an overdose of morphine administered as a medicine. Equal prominence should have been given to all of the theories of defense legitimately arising on the testimony. State v. Rippey, 104 N. C. 752.

And refusal to instruct the jury in a criminal prosecution in which there was evidence of temporary insanity or frenzy caused by an overdose of morphine, that if the prisoner at the time of the homicide was in a state of mind that rendered him incapable of comprehending the criminal character of his act, and his incapacity was the result of an overdose of a drug he had taken, he should be acquitted, is error, though the court did instruct that insanity is a complete defense to all criminal acts committed under its influence, whether permanent or temporary, and from whatever cause produced. State v. Rippey, 104 N. C. 752.

III. Effect on capacity to contract.

A release given by the plaintiff in an action for damages for a personal injury when he was so much under the influence of opiates taken to allevi-

Penal Code, art. 41, and notes 1-4; Willson's Crim. Forms, 4th ed. art. 41; Wilcox v. State, 94 Tenn. 106.

No stage of insanity produced by the voluntary recent use of cocaine, morphine, or intoxicating liquors, either or all combined, will excuse one for the commission of crime.

Willson's Crim. Forms, 4th ed. art. 41, and notes thereunder; Wilcox v. State, 94 Tenn. 106; United States v. Drew, 5 Mason, 28; 4 Bl. Com. pp. 25, 26; 1 Hale, P. C. p. 30.

Mr. Mann Trice also for the State.

Henderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was convicted of an assault with intent to murder, and his punishment assessed at three years in the penitentiary; hence this appeal.

Appellant's principal defense was insanity.

ate his pain caused by his injury that he was mentally incapacitated to contract, is voidable, and not a defense in such action. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Doyle, 18 Kan. 58.

And where he was thereby mentally incapacitated to contract he is not bound to offer to pay back the money received at the time of giving the release as a condition precedent to his right to recover. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Doyle, 18 Kan. 58.

So, a deed will be set aside where the grantor when he made it had taken large quantities of anodynes consisting of spirituous liquors and morphine administered under medical prescriptions to allay pain, and was in a weak mental and physical condition and incapacitated from doing business, and the grantee took advantage of such condition through fraud and undue influence, while the grantor had no legal advice, and the only consideration was the assumption of a mortgage on the premises conveyed and a debt owed by the grantor. Nielson v. Laffin, 50 N. Y. S. R. 277.

IV. Effect on testamentary capacity.

Proof that a testatrix was addicted to the use of morphia, though useful in ascertaining the cause of actual mental unsoundness, is of no avail to establish its existence unless the other proof in the case clearly shows that it was really present. Miller v. Oestrich, 157 Pa. 264; McCullough's Will, 35 Pittsb. L. J. 169.

And proof that, during a protracted illness of the testator, opium in moderate doses was administered under directions of her attending physician, to alleviate her pain, will not invalidate her will made during such illness, in the absence of proof that the drug did affect her mental powers further than to cause sleepiness or that she was at all affected by it at the time. Re Glockner, 17 N. Y. S. R. 798.

And evidence that a testatrix was addicted to the use of morphia, taking it in moderate quantities for the purpose of obtaining relief from excessive pain resulting from severe and long-continued chronic rheumatism, and at times to quiet restlessness and obtain sleep, and that in a few instances she had delusions as to seeing objects about her that had no existence, which might be accounted for as resulting from the use of morphia, and that she made frequent gifts of money and specific articles to those about her, in two instances giving away valuable real estate, does not show testamentary incapacity. Miller v. Oestrich, 157 Pa. 264.

So, the will of a testator is not invalidated by the fact that morphia and atropia were given him, and that quinine was occasionally administered to allay pain, and that at times they would produce a stupor incapacitating him from performing intelligent

He offered testimony tending to show that at the time of the alleged offense he was insane. The evidence shows that for a considerable length of time—perhaps several years—he had been addicted to the use of morphine, and for the last eighteen months to the use of cocaine; and he was also addicted to the use of whisky. Some three or four days prior to the assault he had been confined to his home under the attention of a physician; had been taking morphine and cocaine, and also drinking whisky. On the same day, prior to the assault, which occurred about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, defendant had taken four or five doses of cocaine, several doses of morphine, and some whisky. Some time in the evening of the 25th of December (the day of the assault) he left his home, going to a saloon,—the prosecutor, Tyler, and his brother, and another party accompanying him. At the saloon they took a gently any important act, where this would pass away in an hour or two, leaving him in his normal condition, except, perhaps, that there was a gradual and general weakening of the vital forces and the will was executed when he was free from pain and the effect of the drug administered the night before had passed away, and the three or four witnesses present testified to the soundness of his mind and memory. Epling v. Hutton, 121 Ill. 555.

And that a testatrix was addicted to the use of morphine, and that she appeared old and weak-minded, will not invalidate her will where her oddities and apparent weakness of mind were probably due to the use of that drug, if she fully understood what she was doing at the time, and possessed sufficient memory and intelligence to dispose of her property, and was not then under its influence. Frost v. Wheeler, 43 N. J. Eq. 577.

So, evidence that a testator's mind was greatly impaired by the use of opium and ardent spirits, and that in consequence thereof he was frequently incapable of transacting business, is not sufficient to repel the presumption of sanity arising from the fact that he wrote his will himself without proving that he was incapable of transacting business at the very time the will was executed. Temple v. Temple, 1 Hen. & M. 476.

And evidence that a testator who died at the age of seventy-eight years had been subject to occasional fits of epilepsy for some years previous to the execution of his will, which had produced great prostration and enfeebled his mental energies and impaired his memory, and that for many years he had been in the habit of taking large doses of laudanum to relieve his sufferings, and at times was childish and incapable of much effort of any kind, and failed to recognize intimate acquaintances, is not sufficient to invalidate his will as against evidence by several witnesses that he gave directions in regard to his affairs, made bargains, transacted business, and was consulted by his neighbors, and was esteemed a man of sound judgment and good business capacity, and that of the attorney who drew the will that he was apparently in perfect possession of his faculties, and fully apprehended the nature of the business he was transacting. Brown v. Torrey, 24 Barb. 583.

Mental incapacity at the time will invalidate a will, however, though it was caused by morphine or other drugs taken for medicinal purposes. Stedham v. Stedham, 32 Ala. 525.

And proof that a testator was addicted to the continued and excessive use of cocaine, and that he was under its influence at the time of the execution of his will, and that he labored under hallucinations that persons were pursuing him and innumber of drinks, the party drinking about a pint of whisky. The defendant and prosecutor immediately thereafter walked out on the porch in front of the saloon, and the defendant took hold of the gallery post, and immediately, without any warning, stabbed the prosecutor with a knife. There had been no previous grudge between the parties, nor did any quarrel or altercation precede the stabbing. An officer immediately came up, and carried the defendant to jail. He asked him what he stabbed the boy for, and he said because he had been after him all morning to go home. (There was no evidence of this fact.) On this state of facts, among other things, the court instructed the jury as follows: "If the defendant, by the voluntary and recent use of cocaine and morphine or intoxicating liquors, or all of them, put himself in a condition that he was incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong as to the particular act charged against him, and he voluntarily took said cocaine and morphine or intoxicating liquors knowing that it would produce such state of mind in him, then, although, at the time of the commission of the act, he might not have known what he was doing, or was incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong as to the particular act charged against him, he would not be excusable for the act, if the act was otherwise criminal. If the normal condition of the defendant was that of a sane person, and his mind was not diseased, but was only temporarily dethroned by the recent use of said medicines, or intoxicating liquors, or all of them, and the defendant voluntarily took them, knowing at the time he did so that it would dethrone his mind, then no state of insanity so produced would be a defense to crime. If, however, tended to do him bodily harm and to incarcerate him in an asylum, and of an illusion that he had bacteria present in his body which were creeping through his skin,—is sufficient to invalidate his will though at times he would talk rationally upon other subjects and his mind would seem to be clear. Re Underhill, 21 Ohio L. J. 279.

And a finding against a will upon the ground of mental incapacity where the testator disinherited a daughter because of her desire to marry a man whom he did not like at a time when he was a bed-ridden invalid subsisting mostly upon whisky and morphine, being drowsy, but not taking the latter in quantities sufficient to affect him mentally, will not be disturbed on appeal, though a majority of the witnesses testified that he was competent. Carlin v. Baird, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 332.

So, the fact that the ordinary effect of morphine is to weaken the power of the will is immaterial in an action to set aside a will on the ground of undue influence where the evidence shows that there was in fact no weakening of the will power and no effort to control the testator. Bush v. Lisle, 30 Ky. 333.

But it may be presumed from the use of opium and ardent spirits to which a testatrix had been addicted for many years, and from great age, that her mental faculties had become so enfeebled and impaired that she would not be very ready to apprehend and understand the provisions of a complicated will as it was read to her without explanation. Rutland v. Gleaves, 1 Swan, 198.

And an instruction in a will contest, that if the jury believe that the will was read to the testatrix correctly, and that she was of sound mind, the legal presumption would be that she understood its contents, is not proper without stating that the presumption was disputable and could be rebutted, where it appears that for several years she had been addicted to the excessive use of opium and ardent spirits, and the will was executed on a bed of sickness a few days before she died, when there were other circumstances calculated to excite suspicion that she was not well advised as to its contents. Rutland v. Gleaves, 1 Swan, 198.

And where the testatrix was a person whose mental faculties had been seriously impaired by the use of strong drink and opiates, and it appears that she had nothing to do with the preparation of her will, or that she ever read or heard it read, or that its contents had been stated to her, proof that she knew what was in it when she signed it is imperatively demanded before it can be admitted to probate. Burritt v. Stillman, 16 Barb. 193.

Costs will not be imposed upon the contestant of a will where the fact is established that the testatrix was addicted to the use of morphine, but will be charged to the estate, as it is proper that full inquiry should be made as to the effect which the habitual use of morphine had produced upon her mind. Frost v. Wheeler, 48 N. J. Eq. 573.

V. As a ground for divorce.

Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 8, § 1, authorizes a divorce from the bonds of matrimony for gross and confirmed drunkenness caused by the voluntary and excessive use of opium or other drugs. Burt v. Burt, 138 Mass. 204.

To warrant a divorce under that statute the use must be excessive, and must cause gross and confirmed drunkenness. Burt v. Burt, 138 Mass. 204.

And a divorce is not authorized where the habit was not gross and confirmed at the time of the filing of the libel though it had been so at times previous thereto. Burt v. Burt, 138 Mass. 204.

And the use of morphine by a wife, which became a confirmed habit after her marriage, going to the extent of causing her to lie in bed at times until 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and causing her to act in a stupid irrational way for long periods of time, will not warrant a divorce after the gross character of her use of morphine had become modified or had been terminated, at the time of the filing of the libel, though she had not entirely abandoned its use. Burt v. Burt, 138 Mass. 204.

Excessive indulgence in the morphine habit is not a ground for divorce, however, under a statute which permits a divorce on the ground of habitual drunkenness. Youngs v. Youngs, 130 Ill. 230, 6 L. R. A. 543, 33 Ill. App. 223; Barber v. Barber (Conn.), 14 Law Rep. 375.

And that a wife was a confirmed consumer of opium in its various forms, and that she continued such habits during the entire period of her cohabitation with her husband, will not warrant a divorce upon the ground of habitual drunkenness. Dawson v. Dawson, 23 Mo. App. 169.

The question in an action for divorce upon the ground of habitual drunkenness in which intoxication by opiates is alleged, is not whether such intoxication is not fully as baneful in its results as alcoholic intoxication, but in what sense the legislature had used the word "drunkenness," and the meaning of the word "drunkenness" in its plain, ordinary, and usual sense cannot be considered as including anything but alcoholic drunkenness. Dawson v. Dawson, 23 Mo. App. 169.

So, the habitual use of opium by a wife to the neglect of her household duties is not cruelty which will warrant a divorce in favor of the husband. Holland v. Holland, 4 Legal Gaz. 572; Bean v. Bean, 11 Lanc. Bar. 138.

And acts of violence committed by a husband toward his wife, provoked by and consisting mainly the defendant, prior to that time, had been affected with disease or bodily suffering, and to cure the disease and allay the suffering he had contracted the use of cocaine and morphine or intoxicating liquors, and that by reason thereof his mind had become, and was, at the time of the commission of the act charged against him, diseased to the extent that he had lost control of his mind, and did not know what he was doing, or, if he did know what he was doing, if he did not have mind sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to the particular act charged against him, then his condition of mind was such as the law would excuse him for any act done in such state of mind so produced." These charges were excepted to by appellant in the motion for a new trial. It will be seen from these charges that the court made no discrimination between insanity, whether produced by the voluntary recent use of cocaine and morphine or intoxicating liquors, or if insanity was produced by the combined use of all these. We understand our statute to regulate insanity produced by the recent voluntary use of intoxicating liquors, but it does not undertake to prescribe the rule with reference to insanity produced by cocaine or morphine. And, in our opinion, the court committed an error in instructing the jury that, if they believed that appellant was insane from the voluntary recent use of cocaine and morphine, it would constitute no defense to the crime alleged, and would go only to the mitigation of the penalty. In our opinion, if appellant was rendered insane from the voluntary recent use of cocaine and morphine, and on account of that did not understand the nature and quality of the act he was doing, and was incapable of forming the intent, then he would not be guilty of an assault with intent to murder. And we go further, and hold that, if his mind was rendered insane by the combined recent use of cocaine and morphine and intoxicating liquors, and that on sistence on his part of attempts by her to take morphine from him while he is in a state of total or partial delirium produced by its use, do not constitute extreme and repeated cruelty, within the meaning of Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 40, §1, making such cruelty a ground for divorce,—especially where the divorce was originally sought on the ground of habitual drunkenness, and the charge of cruelty was added as an afterthought when it became apparent that the divorce would not be granted on the ground of drunkenness. Youngs v. Youngs, 130 Ill. 230, 6 L. R. A. 548.

Proof, however, that a wife was a confirmed consumer of opium in its various forms, using it for the purposes of intoxication, and having fits of excessive hilarity followed by drowsiness, stupor, and occasional complete prostration, and that the habit had become wholly uncontrollable, and that within a period of less than two years she had bought or caused to be bought for her use nearly 200 bottles of opium in its various forms, making reckless efforts to obtain the drug and often leaving the house during the small hours of the night for it, and that she endeavored to hide her purchases from her husband and became untruthful and her moral nature was undermined, and that she disposed of the products of the farm and pawned her jewelry for the purposes of obtaining it, will warrant a divorce on the part of the husband upon the ground of indignities to the person rendering his condition intolerable. Dawson v. Dawson, 23 Mo. App. 169.

VI. As affecting insurance.

A representation in an application for life insurance that the applicant had never been addicted to the excessive or intemperate use of alcoholic stimulants or opium, and that he did not use alcoholic stimulants often or daily, refers to an habitual use, and is not a representation that he did not use such stimulants or opium at all. Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Davey, 123 U. S. 739, 31 L. ed. 315.

And an application for insurance stating that the insured used no narcotics is a representation and not a warranty, and is not violated by the occasional but not frequent use by the insured shortly before his death of a narcotic as a remedy where such representation was not made with a purpose to deceive, and it is not claimed that such use of narcotics increased the risk. Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Thoenes, 23 Ill. App. 495; Higbie v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co. 56 Barb. 462.

And this is true when the drug is administered by a physician in the course of medical practice, 39 L. R. A.

though death is thereby caused. Raimey v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. U. S. C. C. 1st. Dist. (Mass.) set forth in May on Insurance, 3d ed. § 302.

And a negative answer in an application for life insurance, to the question whether the applicant had ever been addicted to the excessive or intemperate use of any alcoholic stimulant or opium, or whether he used any of them often or daily, cannot be found to be untrue so as to invalidate the policy unless the insured had been addicted to such use at the time of the application and prior to the issuing of the policy, using some of them often or daily. Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Davey, 123 U. S. 739, 31 L. ed. 315.

Such a statement with reference to the use of opium must be construed to refer to the use of opium as a narcotic stimulant when in an ordinary condition of health, and not to a use in good faith as a medical remedy in case of disease. Higbie v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co. 66 Barb. 462.

So, in the Earl of Mar's Case cited in 2 Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence, 2d ed. 627, the question was raised whether concealment upon the part of the insured person of the habit of taking laudanum, existing for thirty years, at times to the amount of two or three ounces daily, was material or not in an action upon an insurance policy, was raised but not decided, the jury returning a verdict for the plaintiff based upon a technical point.

Neither is death from an overdose of laudanum while in a drunken condition death by his own hand within the meaning of a condition in an insurance policy upon the life of a person so dying. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Paterson, 41 Ga. 338, 5 Am. Rep. 535.

But the death of the insured from laudanum taken with intent to destroy life is dying by his own hand within the meaning of a condition in a life insurance policy against such death, though done while in a drunken condition. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Paterson, 41 Ga. 338, 5 Am. Rep. 535.

VII. As affecting competency of witness.

An opium consumer is not incompetent as a witness, though the testimony of such a person is unreliable and the jury should be carefully cautioned as to believing it. State v. White, 10 Wash. 611.

And proof that a witness was in the habit of using laudanum is not sufficient to discredit or weaken his testimony unless it also established either that his mind was impaired generally thereby or that he was under the influence of the opiate at the time the testimony was given. McDowell v. Preston, 26 Ga. 528. F. H. B.

such account he was not capable of forming the intent necessary to constitute an assault with intent to murder, he would not be guilty of said offense. We believe it is a correct legal principle, where there is insanity produced by other causes in conjunction with the recent use of intoxicating liquor, that an act done in such a state of mind cannot be attributed solely to the recent use of intoxicating liquors. See 1 McClain, Crim. L. § 159; Roberts v. People, 19 Mich. 401; Terrill v. State, 74 Wis. 278.

For the error of the court in said charges, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

City of HELENA, Appt.,

v.

William DWYER.

(.....Ark.....)

An ordinance making it unlawful to sell fresh pork or sausage made thereof between June 1 and October 1 is unreasonable and void, since it violates the inalienable right of man to procure food.

(November 13, 1897.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Phillips County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce a penalty for violation of an ordinance against selling pork within the city limits. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. W. Nicholls, for appellant:

The ordinance recites the fact that the municipal board of health of said city had determined that the sale of that article of food (fresh pork), within the times in which the sale of it was prohibited, was detrimental to the health of the citizens of such city, and such determination and judgment were, and are, conclusive, unless they violated some express provision of the statute or constitutional laws of the state or United States.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 97, and authorities cited in footnote.

The ordinance was intended as a sanitary one, or one for the security or promotion of the public health; and, if so, then it was entirely competent for the city to adopt it.

Harrison v. Baltimore, 1 Gill, 264; Summerville v. Pressley, 33 S. C. 56, 8 L. R. A. 854; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 147, 24 L. ed. 91; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 67 Ill. 37, 16 Am. Rep. 611; Ex parte Shrader, 38 Cal. 279; Davis v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 17 Ga. 323; Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 138, 21 L. ed. 932.

Messrs. Tappan & Porter, for appellee:

This ordinance being in restraint of trade and being in violation of the rights of private property, is inconsistent with the laws and policy of this state, and is therefore illegal.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 2d ed. 253, 256, 257; Caldwell v. Alton, 33 Ill. 416, 85 Am. Dec. 285.

Beyond the mere general declaration of the board of health that the sale of pork is detrimental to the health of the citizens of Helena, which declaration, if fully acted on, would always debar its sale in that city, there is nothing else of any character before the court, to sustain such an opinion; there is nothing to show that said ordinance was necessary or equitable or that it can be sustained upon principle or authority.

St. Paul v. Laidler, 2 Minn. 190, 72 Am. Dec. 94; Carron v. Den, Martin, 26 N. J. L. 594, 69 Am. Dec. 588; Robinson v. Franklin, 1 Humph. 156, 84 Am. Dec. 627, and notes; Collins v. Hatch, 18 Ohio, 523, 51 Am. Dec. 465.

Battle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The city council of Helena enacted the following ordinance:

"Whereas, the municipal board of health of Helena, Arkansas, at a regular meeting, held on the 30th day of April, 1880, declared the sale of fresh pork detrimental to the health of the citizens of Helena; therefore, be it ordained by the mayor and council of the city of Helena:

"Sec. 1. That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to sell, or offer to sell, within the city any fresh pork or sausage made thereof between the 1st day of June and October in each year.

"Sec. 2. That any person or persons violating this ordinance shall be fined in a sum not less than $5 nor more than $25," etc.

Is the ordinance valid?

In determining the extent of the power of a city council to pass ordinances for the protection of the public health much assistance can be derived from what has been held to be the limitations upon such power of the state, for it cannot be truthfully said that this state can grant to a municipal corporation greater power than it possesses.

The police power of the state is very broad and comprehensive, and can be exercised to promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society. Its limits have not been definitely defined. It is not however, without its limitations. In Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 110, 50 Am. Rep. 686, the court said: "If this were otherwise, the power of the legislature would be practically without limitation. In the assumed exercise of the police power in the interest of the health, the welfare, or the safety of the public, every right of the citizen might be invaded, and every constitutional barrier swept away. Generally it is for the legislature to determine what laws and regulations are needed to protect the public health and secure the public comfort and safety, and while its measures are calculated, intended, convenient, and appropriate to accomplish these ends the exercise of its discretion is not subject to review by the courts. But they must have some relation to these ends. Under the mere guise of police regulations, personal rights and private property cannot be arbitrarily invaded, and the determination of the legislature is not final or conclusive. If it passes an act ostensibly for the public health, and thereby destroys or takes away the property of a citizen or interferes with his personal liberty, then it is for the courts to scrutinize the act and see whether it really relates to and is convenient and appropriate to promote the public health. It matters not that the legislature may in the title to the act, or in its body, declare that it is intended for the improvement of the public health. Such a declaration does not conclude the courts, and they must yet determine the fact declared and enforce the supreme law."

NOTE—As to municipal power over nuisances affecting health, see note to Harrington v. Providence (R. L.) 38 L. R. A. 305.

89 L. R. A.

In Mugler v. Kansas, 128 U. S. 661, 81 L. ed. 210, the court said: "The courts are not bound by mere forms, nor are they to be misled by mere pretenses. They are at liberty—indeed, are under a solemn duty—to look at the substance of things, whenever they enter upon the inquiry whether the legislature has transcended the limits of its authority. If, therefore, a statute purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, has no real or substantial relation to those objects, or is a palpable invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of the courts to so adjudge, and thereby give effect to the Constitution." To the same effect other courts have held. Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315, 12 Am. Rep. 694; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 686, 32 L. ed. 257.

The Constitution of the state declares that "all men are created free and independent and have certain inherent and inalienable rights, amongst which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; of acquiring, possessing and protecting property and reputation, and of pursuing their own happiness." Art. 2, § 2. In Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 692, 32 L. ed. 259, Mr. Justice Field said: "With the gift of life there necessarily goes to everyone the right to do all such acts and follow all such pursuits, not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, as may support life and add to the happiness of its possessor. The right to pursue one's happiness is placed by the Declaration of Independence among the inalienable rights of man, with which all men are endowed, not by the grace of emperors or kings, or by force of legislative or constitutional enactments, but by their Creator; and to secure them, not to grant them, governments are instituted among men. The right to procure healthy and nutritious food, by which life may be preserved and enjoyed, and to manufacture it, is among these inalienable rights, which, in my judgment, no state can give and no state can take away, except in punishment for crime. It is involved in the right to pursue one's happiness."

In People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 386, 52 Am. 39 L. R. A.

Rep. 84, the court, in speaking of the section of the Constitution which declares, "Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law," said: "These constitutional safeguards have been so thoroughly discussed in recent cases that it would be superfluous to do more than refer to the conclusions which have been reached, bearing upon the question now under consideration. Among these no proposition is now more firmly settled than that it is one of the fundamental rights and privileges of every American citizen to adopt and follow such lawful industrial pursuit, not injurious to the community, as he may see fit. . . . The term 'liberty,' as protected by the Constitution, is not cramped into a mere freedom from physical restraint of the person of the citizen, as by incarceration, but is deemed to embrace the right of man to be free in the employment of the faculties with which he has been endowed by his Creator, subject only to such restraints as are necessary for the common welfare. In the language of Andrews, J., in Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 515, 80 Am. Rep. 323, the right to liberty embraces the right to man 'to exercise his faculties and to follow a lawful avocation for the support of life.'" Upon this doctrine the court held that the provision of an act prohibiting the manufacture or sale as an article of food of any substitute for butter or cheese produced from pure, unadulterated milk or cream is unconstitutional, inasmuch as the prohibition is not limited to unwholesome or simulated substitutes, but absolutely prohibits the manufacture or sale of any compound designed to be used as a substitute for butter or cheese, however wholesome, valuable, or cheap it may be, and however openly and fairly the character of the substitute may be avowed and published.

In Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, a statute of the state of Pennsylvania was involved. It provided: "No person, firm, or corporate body shall manufacture out of any oleaginous substance or any compound of the same, other than that produced from unadulterated milk or cream from the same, any article designed to take the place of butter or cheese produced from pure unadulterated milk or cream from the same, or of any imitation or adulterated butter or cheese, nor shall sell or offer for sale, or have in his, her, or their possession with intent to sell, the same as an article of food." The court, sustaining the statute, said: "It [the court] cannot adjudge that the defendant's rights of liberty and property . . . have been infringed by the statute of Pennsylvania, without holding that, although it may have been enacted in good faith for the objects expressed in its title, namely, to protect the public health and to prevent the adulteration of dairy products and fraud in the sale thereof, it has, in fact, no real or substantial relation to those objects. Mugler v. Kansas, 128 U. S. 623, 661, 81 L. ed. 205, 210. The court is unable to affirm that this legislation has no real or substantial relation to such objects. . . . Whether the manufacture of oleomargarine, or imitation butter, of the kind described in the statute, is, or may be, conducted in such a way, or with such skill and secrecy, as to baffle ordinary inquiry, the court, in speaking of the section of the Constitution which declares, "Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law," said: "These constitutional safeguards have been so thoroughly discussed in recent cases that it would be superfluous to do more than refer to the conclusions which have been reached, bearing upon the question now under consideration. Among these no proposition is now more firmly settled than that it is one of the fundamental rights and privileges of every American citizen to adopt and follow such lawful industrial pursuit, not injurious to the community, as he may see fit. . . . The term 'liberty,' as protected by the Constitution, is not cramped into a mere freedom from physical restraint of the person of the citizen, as by incarceration, but is deemed to embrace the right of man to be free in the employment of the faculties with which he has been endowed by his Creator, subject only to such restraints as are necessary for the common welfare. In the language of Andrews, J., in Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 515, 80 Am. Rep. 323, the right to liberty embraces the right to man 'to exercise his faculties and to follow a lawful avocation for the support of life.'" Upon this doctrine the court held that the provision of an act prohibiting the manufacture or sale as an article of food of any substitute for butter or cheese produced from pure, unadulterated milk or cream is unconstitutional, inasmuch as the prohibition is not limited to unwholesome or simulated substitutes, but absolutely prohibits the manufacture or sale of any compound designed to be used as a substitute for butter or cheese, however wholesome, valuable, or cheap it may be, and however openly and fairly the character of the substitute may be avowed and published.

In Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, a statute of the state of Pennsylvania was involved. It provided: "No person, firm, or corporate body shall manufacture out of any oleaginous substance or any compound of the same, other than that produced from unadulterated milk or cream from the same, any article designed to take the place of butter or cheese produced from pure unadulterated milk or cream from the same, or of any imitation or adulterated butter or cheese, nor shall sell or offer for sale, or have in his, her, or their possession with intent to sell, the same as an article of food." The court, sustaining the statute, said: "It [the court] cannot adjudge that the defendant's rights of liberty and property . . . have been infringed by the statute of Pennsylvania, without holding that, although it may have been enacted in good faith for the objects expressed in its title, namely, to protect the public health and to prevent the adulteration of dairy products and fraud in the sale thereof, it has, in fact, no real or substantial relation to those objects. Mugler v. Kansas, 128 U. S. 623, 661, 81 L. ed. 205, 210. The court is unable to affirm that this legislation has no real or substantial relation to such objects. . . . Whether the manufacture of oleomargarine, or imitation butter, of the kind described in the statute, is, or may be, conducted in such a way, or with such skill and secrecy, as to baffle ordinary inspection, or whether it involves such danger to the public health as to require, for the protection of the people, the entire suppression of business, rather than its regulation in such manner as to permit the manufacture and sale of articles of that class that do not contain noxious ingredients, are questions of fact and of public policy which belong to the legislative department to determine. And as it does not appear upon the face of the statute, or from any facts of which the court must take judicial cognizance, that it infringes rights secured by the fundamental law, the legislative determination of those questions is conclusive upon the courts."

But, fortunately the ordinances of municipal corporations are not protected by conclusive presumptions in favor of their validity, as the statute was in Powell v. Pennsylvania. The city council is not the sole judge of their necessity, propriety, or reasonableness. Courts may inquire into their reasonableness when passed under powers granted in general or indefinite terms, and when found unreasonable, may set them aside. Haynes v. Cape May, 50 N. J. L. 55. Such corporations have none of the elements of sovereignty, and must exercise their powers in a reasonable manner, and, when necessary, evidence may be adduced to show that they are unreasonable or oppressive. Corrigan v. Gage, 68 Mo. 541.

The statutes of this state confer upon cities of the first class power "to prevent or regulate the carrying on of any trade, business, or vocation of a tendency dangerous to morals, health, or safety, or calculated to promote dishonesty or crime." Sandel's & H. Dig. § 5313. Under this statute the city council of Helena undertook to prevent the sale of fresh pork "between the 1st day of June and October in each year." It obviously intended to prevent the eating of it in Helena during this time by prohibiting the sale of it. Was the ordinance passed for that purpose a reasonable or lawful exercise of the powers granted by the statute?

Fresh pork is an article of food for general consumption, and when sound, and free from disease, is useful and nutritious. Like all other food, it may become unwholesome when eaten to excess. The quantity eaten, under ordinary circumstances, produces the sickness when it proves unwholesome. Any food is calculated to produce that effect when eaten in the same manner. The mere sale of it is not detrimental to the public health. The fact that individuals may be made sick by it when imprudently eaten does not justify a city council in prohibiting the sale of it. For the same reason it could prohibit the sale of any or all other food. The most delicious food—that which is most liable to be eaten to excess—would be subject to interdiction. If it be conceded that the city council may prohibit the sale of any article of food, the wrongful use of which will or may injure the health of the consumer, then they can prescribe what the citizen of the city shall eat by prohibiting the sale of all other food. The legislature or any of its creatures has no such power. The exercise of such power, we have seen, would be a violation of the inalienable right of man to procure healthy and nutritious food, by which life may be preserved and enjoyed. It would be an interference with the liberty of the citizen, which is not necessary to the protection of others or the public health,—would be an invasion of his personal rights.

Prof. Tiedeman, in his work on the Limitations of Police Powers, in elucidation of this doctrine says: "A still stronger ground for the total prohibition of a trade or business is when the thing offered for sale is in some way injurious or unwholesome. It is not enough that the thing may become harmful, when put to a wrong use. It must be in itself harmful, and incapable of a harmless use. Poisonous drugs are valuable when properly used, but they may work serious injuries by being improperly used, even to the extent of destroying life. . . . Safeguards of every kind can be thrown around the sale of them, so that damage will not be sustained from an improper use of them, but that is the limit of the police control of the trade. Thus, for example, opium is a very harmful drug when improperly used, and it is all the more dangerous because the power of resistance diminishes rapidly in proportion to the growth of the habit of taking it as a stimulant, and a miserable, degraded death is the usual end. . . . But, on the other hand, opium is a very useful and indispensable drug. . . . The sale of it can, of course, be prohibited to minors, and to all who may be suffering from some form of dementia, and to confirmed opium eaters. But it would seem to be taking away the free will of those who are under the law confessedly capable of taking care of themselves if the law were to prohibit the sale of opium to adults in general. But where a thing may be put to a wrongful and injurious use, and yet may serve in some other way a useful purpose, the law may prohibit the sale of such things, in any case where the vendor represents them as fit for a use that is injurious, or merely knows that the purchaser expects to apply them to the injurious purposes. Thus the sale of diseased or spoiled meats, or other food, as food, intending or expecting that the purchaser is to make use of them as food, may be prohibited. So, also, the sale of milk which comes from cows fed in whole or in part upon still slops may be prohibited, if it is true that such milk is unwholesome as human food. In the same manner a law was held to be constitutional which prohibited the sale of illuminating oil which ignited below a certain heat. But it would be unconstitutional to prohibit altogether the sale of either of these things if they could be employed in some other harmless and useful way. For example, the oil which was prohibited for illuminating purposes may be very valuable and more or less harmless when used for lubricating purposes." Pages 294, 295. See also Des Plaines v. Poyer, 123 Ill. 348; Babcock v. Buffalo, 56 N. Y. 268.

The legislature may enact such laws as may be necessary to protect the public against fraud, imposition, or deception in the sale of food, or any impurities, putridity, disease, or unsoundness in the same renders it unwholesome, and may authorize municipal corporations to do so. The public is entitled to protection against imposition by the sale of impure or adulterated food, or of imitations, as pure and genuine. In this respect it needs protection, and to this end the legislature may and can authorize city councils to pass laws. It has accordingly been held that an act is constitutional which prohibits the sale of "milk containing more than 88 per centum of water fluids, or less than 12 per centum of milk solids, or less than 2½ per centum of milk fats." In passing upon the validity of this act in State v. Smyth, 14 R. I. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 844, the court said: "It is equally a fraud on the buyer, whether the milk which he buys was originally good and has been deteriorated by the addition of water, or whether in its natural state it is so poor that it contains the same proportion of water as that which has been adulterated."

If a cow habitually gives milk of a quality so poor as to come within the statute, or, as the defendant puts it in his brief, so poor that as a commercial commodity it is valuable only for the purpose of irrigation, she is of no value as a milk producer, and can have none as such to her owner, unless he can sell her milk to his unsuspecting neighbor for a price greatly in excess of its value, a species of fraud which ought not to be tolerated. The section is but a slight extension of the provision which prohibits the sale of adulterated milk, and, like that, was designed to protect the public against imposition." Com. v. Waite, 11 Allen, 264, 87 Am. Dec. 711; People v. Cipperly, 101 N. Y. 684. Other examples might be given, but this, we think, is sufficient.

The ordinance in question, for the reasons indicated, is unreasonable, invalid, and void, and the judgment of the Circuit Court so holding is affirmed.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

Sarah WILLIAMS

v.

STATE of Georgia.

(.....Ga.....)

*1. There was no error, on the trial of a criminal case, in admitting against the accused evidence showing that she had upon her person and about her premises articles, the possession of which, though not in itself criminal, tended to establish her guilt of the offense with which she was charged, notwithstanding it appeared that the discovery of these articles was made by forcibly entering into her house, and there searching the same and her person, without any warrant or authority of law. Although the search and seizure may have been unlawful, unwarranted, unreasonable, and reprehensible, this did not affect the admissibility of the evidence obtained as a result thereof.

2. The offense of keeping open a tippling-house on the Sabbath day is sufficiently proved by evidence showing that the accused, on at least three different Sundays within the same year, in her dwelling house, sold whiskey by retail to different persons, and on each occasion permitted the same, or a portion thereof, to be drunk on the premises.

(March 12, 1897.)

ERROR to the City Court of Macon to review a judgment convicting defendant of violating the Sunday liquor law. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Marion W. Harris, for plaintiff in error:

The proof fails to establish a tippling-house; so, the verdict is wrong.

Webster's Dict. word Tippling-house; Hus-

*Headnotes by LUMPKIN, P. J.

NOTE.—For constitutional protection against being forced to furnish evidence against one's self in a civil case, see note to Levy v. San Francisco City & County Super. Ct. (Cal.) 29 L. R. A. 811.

39 L. R. A.

Levy v. State, 69 Ga. 54; Harmon v. State, 92 Ga. 455; Cooper v. State, 88 Ga. 441.

There must be a habit of selling and consuming on the premises, as in—

Minor v. State, 63 Ga. 818; and in Thomason v. State, 92 Ga. 456.

Evidence obtained by the state's officers, in pursuance of an unreasonable and an unlawful search and seizure, violates the constitutional rights of the defendant as a citizen of Georgia; and the evidence is inadmissible.

Ga. Const. Bill of Rights, ¶¶ 6 and 16; Code 1882, 4998, 5008 (Code 1895, 5703, 5713); Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746; Entick v. Carrington, 19 How. St. Tr. 1029; Day v. State, 63 Ga. 667; Woolfolk v. State, 81 Ga. 552.

The admission of such evidence thus obtained likewise violates the constitutional rights of defendant as a citizen of the United States, to which the states are by the Constitution inhibited.

U. S. Const. Amend. 4, 5; Code, 5809, 5810; Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746.

The first ten amendments to the United States Constitution, except where in terms relating to Federal affairs, though formerly mere restrictions upon the operation of Federal power, are now become, by virtue of the 14th Amendment, restrictions upon the power of the states to abridge them as to United States citizens.

Re Spies, 123 U. S. 181, 81 L. ed. 80; Landon, Constitutional History, pp. 102, 294-296.

The action of the judiciary department, as well as the legislative or executive, is the action of the state itself. Ergo, abridgment by the state courts is abridgment by the state.

Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 805, 25 L. ed. 664; Re Virginia (Virginia v. Rives),

As to compelling an accused to exhibit himself for identification, see note to People v. Gardner (N. Y.) 28 L. R. A. 699.

100 U. S. 313, 25 L. ed. 687; Re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. ed. 676; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 26, 27 L. ed. 844; Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Minor v. Happersett, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. ed. 627; United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 568; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588.

Mr. Robert Hodges for the State.

Lumpkin, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. On the trial of this case in the court below, Jenkins, a detective, was introduced as a witness in behalf of the state. It appeared from his testimony that on Sunday morning, the 2d day of August, 1896, Mose Lucas and Jesse Bunkley (both colored) came to his house in Macon, and woke him up; Lucas saying that, if he "wanted to catch those parties down on Third street selling whisly, now was the time." He gave to Lucas "a silver quarter, marked with a cross," and "an empty half-pint whisly flask, with a file on the neck thereof," and to Bunkley "a silver ten-cent piece, marked with a cross on the woman's head." Both then went on down the street, in the direction of the house of Sarah Williams, the accused. "In about five minutes these two men came out of Sarah's back yard, and Mose Lucas handed [Jenkins] the same bottle that [he] had given him, and in the same condition, except that it was full of whisly." As to what then transpired, Jenkins testified: "I called Police Officer Charley Moseley, and we went to Sarah's house. We went in, and I walked up to Sarah and put my hand in her apron pocket, took out her purse, and found these two pieces of money in it. The two pieces of money are the same I marked and gave to Lucas and Bunkley. I then searched her house, and found a gallon jug of blackberry wine, and three bottles, to wit, two quart bottles and one half-gallon bottle. One of the bottles was nearly full of whisly, another had only the bottom covered with whisly, and the third, the half gallon bottle, was full of something that looked like whisly, though I have never opened it, and do not know for certain what it contains. . . . I had no search warrant to search either the defendant or the house." Moseley, the police officer, who also appeared at the trial as a witness, corroborated Jenkins as to the account above given of the search made by them, and the finding and seizure of the marked coins and the liquors, and identified a small tin funnel as having also been found at the same time. The "jug of wine, the half-gallon bottle of whisly, the quart bottle of whisly, partly used, and the other bottle of whisly, which contained a little bit in the bottom of it," together with the tin funnel and "the twenty-five-cent and ten-cent pieces of silver money," were then tendered in evidence by the state, and admitted over objection by the accused. All of the testimony of Jenkins and Moseley with regard to the search of the person and premises of the accused, and the seizure of the articles above enumerated, was also specifically objected to on the grounds that this evidence "was obtained under the circumstances just narrated, and particularly 39 L. R. A.

that it was obtained from defendant and her house without a search warrant; that this search was an illegal search and seizure, in violation of the constitutional rights guaranteed to defendant, as a citizen of the state and of the United States, under paragraph 16 of the Bill of Rights of the state Constitution of 1877, and under the United States Constitution; that this was a constitutional right of defendant to be secure in her person, property, home, and effects, from such unlawful, unreasonable, and outrageous searches and seizures. And defendant then and there (at the trial) claimed that right both under the state Constitution and under the Constitution of the United States, which prohibits the state or its officers from abridging the constitutional and inalienable rights, privileges, and immunities of citizens of the United States. Defendant then and there insisted before the court, by way of objection to said evidence, that, should it be admitted to the jury, it would violate the constitutional and inalienable right of defendant to be secure against such searches and seizures; and she then and there expressly claimed this right, privilege, and immunity, not only under the state Constitution, but as one to which she was entitled under the United States Constitution, and especially under the provisions of the 1st section of the 14th Amendment to said United States Constitution; she then and there claiming said rights, privileges, and immunities as a citizen of the United States and of said state."

The position assumed by counsel for the accused does not present for determination a new question. That evidence pertinent and material to the issue is admissible, notwithstanding it may have been illegally procured by the party producing it, was early settled by the English courts. The case of Legatt v. Tollervey, 14 East, 302, to this effect, decided in 1811, followed a previous ruling made in Jordan v. Lewis (1789), the substance of which is stated in a note, as the report of the latter case in 2 Strange, 1122, was meager and imperfect. And such was the rule observed in subsequent decisions. Caddy v. Barlow, 1 Mann. & R. 275; Stockfleth v. De Tastet, 4 Campb. 10; Robson v. Alexander, 1 Moore & P. 448. In this country the question certainly arose as early as 1841. Com. v. Dana, 2 Met. 329. There it was insisted that the issuing of a warrant authorizing a search of the premises of the accused, who was suspected of having in his possession lottery tickets, invaded his constitutional right to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures, and "that the seizure of the lottery tickets and materials for a lottery, for the purpose of using them as evidence against the defendant, . . . [was] virtually compelling him to furnish evidence against himself, in violation of another article in the Declaration of Rights." But Wilde, J., speaking for the supreme court of Massachusetts, summarily disposed of this contention by saying (p. 337): "Admitting that the lottery tickets and materials were illegally seized, still this is no legal objection to the admission of them in evidence. If the search warrant were illegal, or if the officer serving the warrant exceeded his authority, the party on whose complaint the warrant is sued, or the officer, would be responsible for the wrong done; but this is no good reason for excluding the papers seized as evidence, if they were pertinent to the issue, as they unquestionably were. When papers are offered in evidence, the court can take no notice how they were obtained whether lawfully or unlawfully, nor would . . . [it] form a collateral issue to determine that question;" citing Legatt v. Tollerrey, 14 East, 302, and Jordan v. Lewis, 2 Strange, 1122, and adding: "We are entirely satisfied that the principle on which these cases were decided is sound and well-established." Such has been the view since entertained, and consistently adhered to, by the Massachusetts court. Com. v. Certain Lottery Tickets, 5 Cush. 369, 374; Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 4 Allen, 593, 600; Com. v. Welsh, 110 Mass. 359, 360; Com. v. Taylor, 132 Mass. 261, 262; Com. v. Henderson, 140 Mass. 303, 305; Com. v. Keenan, 148 Mass. 470, 472; Com. v. Ryan, 157 Mass. 403, 405; Com. v. Tibbets, 157 Mass. 519, 521; Com. v. Hurley, 158 Mass. 159; Com. v. Brelsford, 161 Mass. 61, 64; Com. v. Welch, 163 Mass. 372; Com. v. Smith, 166 Mass. 370, 376. It may here be remarked that no distinction is, or should be, observed between an unauthorized search of the person, and one which merely involves an invasion of the citizen's constitutional right to be secure in his "houses, papers, and effects;" for none is recognized either by the Federal or by our state Constitution, the right to be secure in the lawful possession and enjoyment of property evidently being regarded as no less sacred than the citizen's right to immunity from an unreasonable search of his person. In Welch's Case, just cited, it appeared that an officer unlawfully seized an object which a daughter of the accused was carrying under the folds of a loose dress, suspecting it to be a bottle of whisky, over the protest of the accused, who was present; but, though the knowledge so acquired by the officer was thus wrongfully obtained, he was nevertheless permitted to testify that the object she was carrying was, "in size and shape, like a quart bottle." In State v. Flynn, 86 N. H. 64, the court was called upon to pass on the same constitutional questions raised in Dana's Case, 2 Met. 329, and unhesitatingly adopted as sound the conclusions reached by the Massachusetts court; holding that "evidence obtained by means of a search warrant is not inadmissible, either upon the ground that it is in the nature of admissions made under duress, or that it is evidence which the defendant has been compelled to furnish against himself, or on the ground that the evidence has been unfairly or illegally obtained, even if it appears that the search warrant was illegally issued." Citing the above cases as authority, Mr. Bishop says: "The evidence which a search warrant procures may be used against the party; not being inadmissible as an admission under duress or as furnished by the prisoner through compulsion against himself, or as otherwise unfairly or illegally, obtained, even if the search warrant was illegally issued." 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 246; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. p. 148. Mr. Greenleaf evidently regarded the admissibility of evidence of this character as no longer a vexed, but as a definitely settled, question; 89 L. R. A.

for in his treatise on the Law of Evidence (§ 254a) he thus briefly deals with the subject: "It may be mentioned in this place that though papers and other subjects of evidence may have been illegally taken from the possession of the party against whom they are offered, or otherwise unlawfully obtained, this is no valid objection to their admissibility if they are pertinent to the issue. The court will not take notice how they were obtained, whether lawfully or unlawfully, nor will it form an issue to determine that question." Almost identically the same language is to be found in 2 Taylor, Ev. 9th ed. § 922. The correctness of the view announced by the supreme court of Massachusetts in the earlier part of this century has long been acquiesced in. In more recent years a few attempts have been made in this country to overturn this now well-established rule of evidence. They have, however, met with anything but success. In Illinois, South Carolina, Alabama, Missouri, Connecticut, and Arkansas, the courts of last resort have declined to venture a departure from this sound doctrine. See Gindrat v. People, 138 Ill. 108, wherein it was held that "the fact that evidences of the commission of a crime are found by a mere private detective on an authorized search of a party's rooms will not, of itself, render the evidence thus found incompetent against the party in whose possession the articles are found, if such evidence is otherwise competent," which ruling was followed in the later cases of Siebert v. People, 143 Ill. 571; and Trask v. People, 151 Ill. 523. See also State v. Atkinson, 40 S. C. 363, holding that papers illegally obtained by searching the room of the accused during his absence were competent evidence against him on a trial for murder; Shields v. State, 104 Ala. 35, holding that "on a trial for carrying concealed weapons, where it is shown that a pistol was found concealed on defendant's person as the result of a forcible search by an officer, the evidence of the discovery of the pistol concealed about his person is admissible against the defendant, although the search was unauthorized and unlawful;" State v. Pomeroy, 130 Mo. 489, wherein it was decided that "it is not a violation of the constitutional provision that no one shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal case to introduce in evidence, in a prosecution for establishing a lottery, tickets, papers, etc., taken from the person and premises of the accused, even though they were seized without authority of law;" State v. Griswold, 67 Conn. 290, 33 L. R. A. 227, laying down the rule that "evidence otherwise pertinent and admissible will not be rejected because it was taken from the possession of the accused by a trespass;" Starchman v. State, 63 Ark. 538, to the same effect, decided July 8, 1896, by the supreme court of Arkansas.

In the present case, counsel for the accused cited and relied upon the case of Boyd v. United States, 16 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746, as sustaining the contention that the constitutional rights of the accused were infringed by admitting the evidence to which objection was made. We do not think the decision rendered in that case is authority supporting this contention. A clear statement of the issues raised in it, and of the precise questions passed on by the Federal Supreme Court, is to be found in Gindrat v. People, 188 Ill. 103, the able opinion in which, pronounced by Mr. Justice Baker, of the Illinois supreme bench, relieves us from any necessity of attempting to show (as he does conclusively) that, so far as the question now before us is concerned, the decision in Boyd's Case is not to be regarded as authoritative, or even pertinent. After citing a number of cases in point, he concludes his discussion of that decision by saying: "We think that the cases last cited, as well as the present case, are clearly distinguishable from Boyd v. United States. In the latter case, the unconstitutional and erroneous order, process, and procedure of the trial court compelled the claimants to produce evidence against themselves, and such order, process, and procedure were also held to be tantamount to an unreasonable search and seizure, while here, and in the other cases cited, the question of illegality was raised collaterally, and the courts exercised no compulsion whatever to procure evidence from the defendants, and neither made orders nor issued process authorizing or purporting to authorize a search of premises or a seizure of property or papers, but simply admitted evidence which was offered, without stopping to inquire whether possession of it had been obtained lawfully or unlawfully. Courts, in the administration of the criminal law, are not accustomed to be oversensitive in regard to the sources from which evidence comes, and will avail themselves of all evidence that is competent and pertinent and not subversive of some constitutional or legal right." The case of Boyd v. United States, was also relied on in Atkinson's Case, 40 S. C. 363, but McIver, Ch. J., speaking for the South Carolina court, after briefly summarizing the points passed on by the Supreme Court of the United States, says: "This case, therefore, while very interesting, as furnishing an able and elaborate discussion of the right of exemption from unreasonable searches and seizures, has no application to the present inquiry." In State v. Pomeroy, also above cited, it likewise was insisted that this decision of the Federal Supreme Court should control; but Sherwood, J., adopted the above extract taken from the opinion of Mr. Justice Baker, as expressing the view of the Missouri court, that Boyd's Case was entirely inapplicable. We confidently entertained the same opinion. Our attention has not been called to any case in which the Supreme Court of the United States has undertaken to pass upon the precise question now before us, nor are we aware of any decision by that court which has any direct bearing thereon. In Re Spies, 128 U. S. 181, 81 L. ed. 80, the question was informally presented to the court, but not decided. Says Chief Justice Waite (page 180, 128 U. S., and page 91, 81 L. ed.): "Something was said in argument about an alleged unreasonable search and seizure of the papers and property of some of the defendants, and their use in evidence on the trial of the case, . . . but we have not been referred to any part of the record in which it appears that objection was made to the use of this evidence on that account. . . . The question whether the letter, if obtained in the manner alleged, would have been competent evidence is not before us."

Irrespective of the many respectable authorities above referred to, and speaking for ourselves, we are satisfied that the contention of the accused, that her constitutional rights were infringed by the ruling of the trial judge admitting the evidence complained of, ought not to be sustained. As we understand it, the main, if not the sole, purpose of our constitutional inhibitions against unreasonable searches and seizures, was to place a salutary restriction upon the powers of government. That is to say, we believe the framers of the Constitutions of the United States and of this and other states merely sought to provide against any attempt, by legislation or otherwise, to authorize, justify, or declare lawful, any unreasonable search or seizure. This wise restriction was intended to operate upon legislative bodies, so as to render ineffectual any effort to legalize by statute what the people expressly stipulated could in no event be made lawful; upon executives, so that no law violative of this constitutional inhibition should ever be enforced; and upon the judiciary, so as to render it the duty of the courts to denounce as unlawful every unreasonable search and seizure, whether confessedly without any color of authority, or sought to be justified under the guise of legislative sanction. For the misconduct of private persons, acting upon their individual responsibility and of their own volition, surely none of the three divisions of government is responsible. If an official, or a mere petty agent of the state, exceeds or abuses the authority with which he is clothed, he is to be deemed as acting, not for the state, but for himself only; and therefore he alone, and not the state, should be held accountable for his acts. If the constitutional rights of a citizen are invaded by a mere individual, the most that any branch of government can do is to afford the citizen such redress as is possible, and bring the wrongdoer to account for his unlawful conduct. The office of the Federal and state Constitutions is simply to create and declare these rights. To the legislative branch of government is confided the power, and upon that branch alone devolves the duty, of framing such remedial laws as are best calculated to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of such rights, and as will render the same a real, and not an empty, blessing. With faithfully enforcing such laws as are thus provided the responsibility devolving upon the executive and judicial branches must necessarily end. We know of no law in Georgia which renders inadmissible in evidence the fruits of an illegal and wrongful search and seizure, nor are we aware of any statute from which it could be logically gathered that the admission of such evidence violates any recognized principle of public policy. Whether or not prohibiting the courts from receiving evidence of this character would have any practical and salutary effect in discouraging unreasonable searches and seizures, and thus tend towards the preservation of the citizen's constitutional right to immunity therefrom, is a matter for legislative determination.

In Rusher v. State, 94 Ga. 863, this court sustained a ruling of the trial court admitting in evidence against the accused, who was on trial for burglary, evidence showing that money, the fruit of his alleged crime, was found in a place of concealment to which he had accompanied the state's witnesses, and in which he had informed them it was secreted. All this evidence—including, not only that which showed the independent fact of the discovery of the money, but also that which related to acts and declarations of the accused necessary to account for the discovery, and explain the manner of it—was held admissible, although it appeared that these very acts and declarations were not free and voluntary, but the result of some sort of constraint or coercion. The foregoing statement fully discloses all that was really involved in the Rusher Case with respect to the admissibility of evidence, and the conclusions reached upon the questions actually presented for decision do not in the least conflict with anything laid down in the case at bar. The headnotes were prepared and the opinion delivered by Ex-Chief Justice Bleckley, the eminent jurist, whose great wisdom and profound learning, demonstrated by his services upon this bench and elsewhere, have made for him a high place among the recognized leaders of judicial thought in this day and generation. Read without a firm grasp upon the facts,—especially the great fact that, while there was evidence enough to show coercion by some means not specified, there was no evidence to show any criminal breach of law, by personal violence or otherwise, in coercing the accused to speak and act,—some of the language used in that opinion is perhaps open to misunderstanding. It does not hold that, as matter of existing law, violence, even to the degree of torture, would render the evidence in that case inadmissible; but the opinion does say that the law ought to be that way, and that any criminal breach of law whatever in the procurement of evidence ought to be a good legal reason for rejecting the evidence so procured. The case being one in which no crime whatever was in sight, as means to coerce either speech or conduct, surely that case afforded no basis for adjudicating one way or the other the rule of existing law which governs the admissibility of speech and conduct brought about by the commission of a crime to induce the same, or to gain information bearing on the offense for which the accused is being tried. It is certainly good law, as announced in the first headnote of the Rusher Case, "that the well-established rule that independent facts discovered in consequence of a constrained confession made by a prisoner are admissible against him, . . . unless it appears that criminal violence was used in procuring the confession or making the discovery." It is only by treating this language as affirming by implication more than it expressly affirms that it can be construed as ruling that the evidence would not be admissible if criminal violence were used in its procurement. When, however, the facts of the case are examined, it is manifest that they afford no basis for such a construction, inasmuch as it did not appear whether there was criminal violence or not. The express affirmation of the headnote, therefore, should not be enlarged by adding to it another affirmation, neither made directly nor called for by the facts. Moreover, if it had been the purpose of the court, or of the writer of the opinion, to lay down more law on the subject than was necessary to rule the case on its actual facts, the phrase "it may be" would have been altogether inappropriate as an opening of the topic. See text of opinion, on page 866, 94 Ga. On page 869, 94 Ga., the opinion says: "The theory of whipping was left wholly unsupported. It has, therefore, no relevancy to the merits of the objection." In view, therefore, of the overwhelming weight of authority by which the decision rendered in the present case is supported, and with the above explanation of the Rusher Case, we are clear that it decides nothing which should constrain us to hold otherwise than we have done on the question now made.

The universally recognized rules governing the admissibility of confessions furnish much light touching the question whether, in passing upon the competency of evidence, the manner in which it was procured is ordinarily to be considered. It is an elementary rule of law that a confession unduly induced by the influence of hope or fear will never be received. This is true, however, not because it may have been procured by improper means, but solely because the truthfulness of a confession thus inspired is of such doubtful probability that it cannot reasonably be regarded as having any probative value. "A confession produced by artifice is not for that reason inadmissible, unless the artifice used was calculated to produce an untrue confession." 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 481, citing numerous instances in which the courts have held confessions competent. So, also, "although confessions made by threats or promises are not evidence, yet, if they are attended with extraneous facts which show that they are true, any such facts thus developed, and which go to prove the crime of which the defendant was suspected, will be received as testimony,—as, for instance, where the party so confessing points out or tells where the stolen property is, or where he states where the deceased was buried, or gives a clue to other evidence which proves the case." Daniels v. State, 78 Ga. 99. And, to the same effect, see Jones v. State, 75 Ga. 825, and Rusher v. State, 94 Ga. 868. Of late, the courts of this country have many times been called upon to pass on the question whether a confession would be received where it appeared that the same had been secured by a detective introduced into the cell of a prisoner in the role of a supposed fellow criminal, with a view to "worming out of" the prisoner admissions which could be construed into a confession of guilt. Heldt v. State, 20 Neb. 492. 57 Am. Rep. 835; People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277; Burton v. State, 107 Ala. 108, and cases cited. Such a practice would, indeed, seem to be a pernicious one; having a tendency towards preventing, rather than towards promoting, the due course of justice. Green v. State, 88 Ga. 518; Smith v. State, 88 Ga. 628. Nevertheless, while judges in dealing with the question have frequently and freely said as much, and have in no uncertain language condemned the practice, we have found no satisfactory authority or reasoning which would warrant the courts to usurp legislative functions by declaring that a resort to such methods is a violation of public policy. On the contrary, evidence thus acquired is generally, if not universally, held to be competent, the manner in which it was procured going only to its credit. Thus, in Heidt v. State, just cited, a profession procured under such circumstances was held to be admissible in evidence, although Chief Justice Maxwell, in delivering the opinion of the court, took occasion to say of the detective who testified to the alleged confession. "A man who will deliberately ingratiate himself into the confidence of another for the purpose of betraying that confidence, and while with words of friendship upon his lips seeks by every means in his power to obtain an admission which can be tortured into a confession of guilt, which he may blazon to the world as a means to accomplish the downfall of one for whom he professes great friendship, cannot be possessed of a very high sense of honor or of moral obligation. Hence the law looks with suspicion on the testimony of such witnesses, and the jury should be specially instructed that in weighing their testimony greater care is to be exercised than in the case of witnesses wholly disinterested." Our own case of Cornwall v. State, 91 Ga. 277, is likewise in point. We quite agree with counsel that in the present case there was an "unlawful, unreasonable, and outrageous" search of the person and the private dwelling of accused. No search is more unreasonable or more obnoxious to our fundamental law than one without warrant, based upon a bare suspicion that a criminal offense has been committed. Pickett v. State, 99 Ga. 12. The offenders certainly deserve to be severely dealt with for thus overstepping the bounds of official authority. Indeed, their offense would seem to call for a more summary mode of redress than is now provided for by the laws of this state. The citizen's right to immunity from such outrages being considered one so sacred as to demand constitutional preservation, it would, in our opinion, be eminently proper for the general assembly to strive to discourage and prevent, as far as possible, a wilful disregard and violation of this right, by providing a punishment calculated to deter petty officials from essaying to act as violators, rather than as conservators, of the law.

2. As will have been observed from the statement of facts which prefaces the first division of this opinion, the accused unquestionably had on hand, in abundant measure, the means wherewith to administer to the demands of those desiring intoxicants,—certainly to such of them as may have wished blackberry wine or whisky. According to the testimony of Lucas, one of the persons whose services were enlisted in securing proof against her, both he and his companion, "on the 2d day of August, 1896, which day was Sunday, went into her house, and bought from her small quantities of whisky, which they were permitted to drink upon the premises." "On two different Sundays" during that year, prior to the 2d day of August, this witness had gone to her house, "and each time bought a drink of whisky from her, and drank it there." Indeed, he testified: "I got it there whenever I wanted it. I went to her because I knew I could get it." Although Lucas further stated that he could not undertake to swear he had ever seen "her sell any whisky to anybody else except" his companion, he did profess to know the character of her house; and the circumstances brought to light by the state's evidence as a whole strongly tended to show that she was carrying on a more or less general, though perhaps surreptitious, Sunday traffic in spirituous and intoxicating liquors. At any rate, "whether the house where the liquor is charged to have been sold was a tippling-house, and whether the defendant kept it open on the Sabbath," were questions directly brought in issue by the evidence, and it was the province of the jury to determine what was the truth in that regard. Kelly v. State, 19 Ga. 426. Our Code does not attempt to define what shall constitute, or be considered, a "tippling-house." "It deals with them [houses of this character] as establishments too well known to need description, and simply prescribes a penalty for keeping them open on the Sabbath day or Sabbath night." Minor v. State, 68 Ga. 821. Doubtless any one of the several slightly varying definitions of the term given by law writers is broad enough to cover such an establishment as that now under consideration. See 2 Bouvier, Law Dict. 732; Black, Law Dict. 1173; Anderson, Law Dict. 1084; Kinney, Law Dict. 656; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 18. Were this otherwise, however, these definitions, purporting to be general only, and not altogether precise or exhaustive, are to be deemed sufficiently flexible and expansive to include every resort of that character which can reasonably be considered as having been aimed at by our statute; for, as was remarked in Minor's Case, 68 Ga. 821, by Bleckley, J., before he became chief justice, "the dictionary definition of a term is frequently the mere air of the music which the accused has attempted to execute with variations. Frequently, too, the variations are so luxuriant and ingenious that the air is much disguised, and to hum it over from the bench is but little assistance to the jury in following the real performance. It is something easier for an offender to baffle the dictionary than the Penal Code, for the former is perplexed with verbal niceties and shades of meaning, while the latter grasps in a broad, practical way at the substantial transactions of men." In this connection, see also Hussey v. State, 69 Ga. 58, 59. Our courts are not very astute in shielding violators of this provision from punishment by resorting to the niceties of verbal criticism, such as would be intelligible only to grammarians and fastidious scholars, but would utterly fail to impress less cultivated minds and tastes, in order to provide for them a way to escape." Sanders v. State, 74 Ga. 85. Therefore, though the establishment presided over by the accused might perhaps be more graphically described as being what is colloquially termed a "blind tiger," as was suggested in the argument before us, it was nevertheless, in a legal sense, a "tippling-house." As to the length of time during which it had existed as such, the offense was fully made out, the proof showing that whisky was sold at retail on at least three different Sundays within the same year. While not professing to know exactly how long a period would have to elapse before a house of this kind could fairly be called a tippling-house, it would surely seem that three weeks would ordinarily be sufficient. Be this as it may, however, that with which we are now called upon to deal was shown by the prosecution to be capable, on the last, if not upon the first, of the three Sundays in question, of fully performing its office as a house of this character; and this being so, it is to be treated as being then in existence, irrespective of the precise date of its inception. When once a house becomes a tippling house, and exists as such, "if the owner keep it open but for a moment" on the Sabbath, he will be guilty of a violation of the statute. Monsee v. State, 78 Ga. 110.

39 L. R. A.

We have therefore reached the conclusion that for no reason assigned by the accused, or disclosed by the record brought to this court, should her conviction be set aside.

Judgment affirmed.

RALEIGH & GASTON RAILROAD COMPANY et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

J. M. SWANSON.

(.....Ga.....)

*1. A contract entered into between a railroad company and a ticket broker, whereby the latter was enabled to sell tickets to individuals, over the company's lines leading from this to another state, at less than the established rate for the sale of tickets by its regular agents between the same points, and for the same accommodations, is in violation of the act of Congress "to Regulate Commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

2. A party to such a contract cannot recover in an action which does not seek to disaffirm, but to enforce, it, by suit for its breach.

3. A demurrer by the defendant upon the ground that such a suit set forth no cause of action should have been sustained.

(December 20, 1897.)

ERROR to the City Court of Atlanta to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for breach of contract to honor requisitions for tickets issued by plaintiff for through carriage of passengers. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Vasser Woolley and Erwin & Brown for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. W. R. Hammond and L. P. Skeen for defendant in error.

Lewis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The questions made in this case arose upon the following state of facts: Swanson brought an action against the Raleigh & Gaston and Seaboard & Roanoke Railroad Companies, as joint lessees of the Georgia, Carolina, & Northern, the Carolina Central, and the Raleigh & Augusta Railroads, which constitute the system known as the Seaboard Air Line, extending from Atlanta, Georgia, to Norfolk, Virginia, for breach of contracts. In his petition he alleged, in substance, as follows: He being a ticket broker in Atlanta, Georgia, and in position to control a great amount of business over the various roads centering there and leading therefrom, defendants, desiring to have tickets over their system handled by him, procured the Suwanee River Railroad Company, a corporation of Florida, to issue a large number of tickets from Ellaville, in that state, via Atlanta, and over the Seaboard Air Line to Norfolk, Virginia, and others to Washington, District of Columbia, via Weldon, North Carolina, which tickets were not to be used from Ellaville to Atlanta, but only from Atlanta to the points above stated. Defendants agreed with plaintiff that, if he would purchase and handle these tickets, they would honor them for passage over their system of railroads to the points named. In pursuance to said agreement, he did purchase a large number of said tickets from the Suwanee River Railroad Company, at such prices as were agreed upon, and as would enable him to sell the same for passage over the Seaboard Air Line below the regular rates established by defendants and make a profit thereon, in the regular course of business as a ticket broker, and sold a great number of said tickets from time to time, all of which were duly honored by defendants over their said lines until September, 1894, when they notified him that said tickets would be withdrawn, and that they would no longer honor them. He then had on hand, undisposed of, a large number of said tickets, which he had purchased from the Suwanee River Railroad Company in accordance with this agreement with defendants, for which he had paid $909, and which were therefore worthless to him, and of no value whatever. In the same month, and shortly after the date when the tickets were so withdrawn, he notified defendants that he held them, and that they were worthless, and demanded that defendants should make them good, and reimburse him in the sum that he had paid for them, which defendants failed and refused to do, but, recognizing their liability to him, proposed that if he would take the tickets he then had on hand, and get the Suwanee River Railroad Company, in lieu thereof, to issue what are known as "exchange orders" on the Seaboard Air Line each order to call for a first class ticket from Atlanta to Norfolk over the Seaboard Air Line, defendants would then honor, from time, as might be presented to them by plaintiff, as many of said exchange orders as would be necessary, at the rate of $9 each, to cover the value of the tickets which he then had on hand. This agreement was entered into on condition that he would guarantee to hold the defendants harmless against loss should the Suwanee River Railroad Company fail and refuse to pay and settle with defendants for said exchange orders. Plaintiff acceded to all these demands of defendants, obtained such exchange orders from the Suwanee River Railroad Company by surrendering to it said tickets which he then had on hand, and tendered *Headnotes by Lewis, J.

NOTE.—For state regulation of rates, see note to Winchester & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Croxton (Ky.) 36 L. R. A. 179.
39 L. R. A.

one of said exchange orders, together with his written guaranty to defendants that he would hold them harmless against loss should the Suwanee River Railroad Company fail to settle with them for said orders, and demanded of defendants a ticket from Atlanta to Norfolk over the Seaboard Air-Line, in accordance with the agreement before stated. Defendants accepted said written guaranty of plaintiff, dated February 7, 1895, and now have the same. The defendants refused to honor said exchange order, but retained it, and refused to deliver to plaintiff a ticket therefor in accordance with said agreement, but, instead, notified plaintiff that they would not honor any of said exchange orders, and would not issue to plaintiff any tickets therefor, as they had agreed to do, until the Suwanee River Railroad Company had made good to them certain arrearages which had accrued prior to the time of the contract between plaintiff and defendants in reference to said exchange orders. Plaintiff, by reason of the breach of said contract, has been damaged $1,212, because the tickets which he would have received under said contract for said exchange orders were worth to him, and would have been sold for, $12 apiece, and he would have been entitled to 101 tickets under said contracts. Plaintiff, by amendment to his declaration to meet one of the grounds of the demurrer of the defendants, more specifically alleged the number or tickets on hand, and the price at which they were bought and the price at which they could have been sold. To this petition the defendants demurred, among others, upon the ground, that the contracts declared on were illegal, and contrary to public policy and the laws of the United States and the state of Georgia, and that it therefore set forth no cause of action. This demurrer was overruled by the trial judge, and we are now to consider whether or not he erred in so doing.

1. Section 2 of the act of Congress entitled "An Act to Regulate Commerce," approved February 4, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 379), provides as follows: "That if any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful." Section 10 of the same act, as amended by the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. at L. 857), provides as follows: "That any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person, acting for or employed by such corporation, who, alone or with any other corporation, company, person, or party, shall wilfully do or cause to be done, or shall willingly suffer or permit to be done any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who shall aid or abet therein, or shall wilfully omit or fail to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or shall cause or willingly suffer or permit any act, matter, or thing so directed or required by this act to be done not to be so done, or shall aid or abet any such omission or failure, or shall be guilty of any infraction of this act, or shall aid or abet therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 for each offense: provided, that if the offense for which any person shall be convicted as aforesaid shall be an unlawful discrimination in rates, fares, or charges, for the transportation of passengers or property, such person shall, in addition to the fine hereinbefore provided for, be liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding two years, or both such fine or imprisonment, in the discretion of the court." One purpose of this act was to prevent any railroad company engaged in the transportation of passengers from any state or territory to another from charging any person or class of persons a rate other than that established for others under substantially similar circumstances and conditions. Such discrimination is declared by the statute itself to be unjust, and cannot be effected, either directly or indirectly, by any device whatever. It would follow from this that any scheme entered into by such a railroad company with a view of placing upon the market tickets, over its line, to be sold to individuals at a less rate than they could be procured at its regular ticket office in the usual course relating to the transaction of such business, would be unlawful. Indeed, the parties to this case seem to recognize that it would be unlawful to place in the hands of a broker tickets direct from its terminus in Atlanta to other points outside of this state, and to charge therefor less than its established rate. It would not necessarily have been in violation of the statute for the Florida corporation, acting in concert with the defendants, to have issued tickets from Ellaville, in that state, via Atlanta, to Norfolk, Virginia, at a less rate per mile than tickets could be procured over defendants' lines alone from Atlanta to Norfolk. Hence, in order to evade the statute, a device was entered into by the parties to this contract to have these tickets issue from Ellaville via Atlanta. The purpose of this was not to sell tickets to parties desiring transportation from Ellaville, but to parties desiring transportation from Atlanta over defendants' lines alone. Therefore that portion of the ticket from Ellaville to Atlanta was discarded under the contract between the parties, and it could have been used only as a mere device to evade the statute; otherwise, why did not the defendant companies issue tickets to the plaintiff directly from Atlanta? To contend that a railroad company can offer tickets to individual passengers, through its brokers, at a less rate than that established for their sale by its regular ticket agents, would enable common carriers, ad libitum, to defeat the very purpose of the statute in question. In the case of Smith v. Northern P. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 208, it was held that "the sale of 'land explorers' tickets' and 'settlers' tickets' at less than the regular rates charged to passengers at the usual ticket offices, as practised by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, is unjust discrimination," and that "the rule under which passenger transportation should be conducted requires absolute equality of payment from all persons enjoying the same accommodations." Prior to the act of Congress above quoted, interstate commerce traffic in this country was regulated by the principle of common law applicable to common carriers. There seems to be a conflict of authority as to whether or not, at common law, common carriers would be bound to make the same charges to all persons for the same service, the weight of authority in this country being in favor of equality of charges. See Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 145 U. S. 275, 276, 36 L. ed. 703, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 92. Perhaps, on account of such conflict, and further for the reason that the several states were powerless to prevent unjust discrimination as to traffic going beyond their respective boundaries, Congress took the matter in charge, with a view of preventing unjust discrimination throughout the country. It was contended by the able counsel for defendant in error in this case that the transaction in question was tantamount only to a sale of tickets at wholesale, and that, under the ruling in the case last above cited, the act of Congress was not intended to ignore the principle that one can sell at wholesale cheaper than at retail. It will be seen from an inspection of that case that the question involved therein was the legality of the sale of what is known as a "party-rate ticket;" that is, a ticket for the transportation of a number of persons from a place in one state or territory to a place situate in another state or territory at a rate less than that charged to a single individual for a like transportation on the same trip. There is no similarity in that respect between the present case and the one just cited. If, instead of issuing a single ticket for a company of ten or more persons, the common carrier had issued in that case a number of tickets to a broker, at such price as would have enabled him to have sold them to individuals at less than the established rate, and had used the term "party-rate ticket" as a device to evade the law, then we apprehend the ruling of the United States Supreme Court would have been entirely different; for the court in that case, on page 284, 145 U. S., and page 706, 36 L. ed., says: "The party-rate ticket, as it appears in this case, is a single ticket covering the transportation of ten or more persons, and would be much less available in the hands of a ticket broker than an ordinary single ticket, since it could only be disposed of to a person who would be willing to pay two thirds of the regular fare for that number of people. It is possible to conceive that party-rate tickets may, by a reduction of the number for whom they may be issued, be made the pretext for evading the law, and for the purpose of cutting rates; but should such be the case, the courts would have no difficulty in discovering the purpose for which they were issued, and applying the proper remedy." This being a contract, therefore, not only declared unlawful by the statute, but made a penal offense by its terms, a suit for the breach thereof cannot be maintained.

2. It is further contended on behalf of the defendant in error that, even if the contract is illegal, it is not malum in se, but malum prohibitum, and that he can recover back the money he paid the railroad. "A broker, or other agent, employed to carry out an illegal transaction, cannot recover for losses incurred or disbursements made by him in the course of the transaction, if he was privy to the principal's unlawful purpose." Clark, Cont. § 213. The same author, on page 494, quotes from Lord Kenyon, to the effect that "there is no case to be found where, when money has been actually paid by one of two parties to the other upon an illegal contract, both being participes criminis, an action has been maintained to recover it back again." Some exceptional cases, however, are recognized by this author, and are undoubtedly sustained by good authority. These he groups as follows: "(a) Cases in which a locus penitentiae remains; and while the agreement is unperformed, money or goods delivered in furtherance of it are allowed to be recovered. (b) Cases in which the parties are not regarded as being in pari delicto, as (1) where the party asking relief was induced to enter into the agreement under the influence of fraud or strong pressure, or (2) where the law which makes the agreement unlawful was intended for the protection of the party asking relief." This case falls within none of these exceptions. This is not an action to disaffirm an illegal contract, and seeking to recover back from the defendants money had and received thereunder before its full execution. Upon the contrary, it is a suit for damages growing out of a breach of the contract. Instead, therefore, of being an effort to rescind the contract, it is really a proceeding to enforce it. Besides, it appears from the plaintiff's petition in this case that payment for these tickets was made, not to any of the defendant railroad companies, but to a railroad corporation in Florida; and it does not appear that the defendants have in hand, or have ever received, any portion of the fund. There is a very patent distinction between this case and the case of Clarke v. Brown, 77 Ga. 606. In that case it appears that the principal deposited money in the hands of his agents, to be used for an illegal purpose, namely, the purchase of futures in pork and grain. It was there held: "He could not set up the illegal contract to recover profits realized thereunder; nor could the agents set up the illegal contract for the purpose of defeating a recovery by the principal of the money deposited with them, and which was held by them." The plaintiff in that case did not rely upon his illegal contract. He was not seeking to enforce the same, and hence the court very properly draws the distinction between that case and the previous rulings of this court on the subject of enforcing illegal contracts. It is true, in the case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Blanchard, 68

Ga. 300, 45 Am. Rep. 480, it is held that, "although a speculation in cotton futures may be an illegal contract, yet an agent who incurs expenses or loss on behalf of his principal, in carrying out such contract, may recover the amount thereof from such principal." But this court has never adhered to that ruling. On the contrary, the principle decided in that case was virtually overruled in the case of National Bank v. Cunningham, 75 Ga. 386, and Cothran v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 83 Ga. 25. It may seem a hardship, in some cases, to allow a party to insist upon his illegal contract as a reason why he should be relieved from his obligations thereunder. The law, in refusing to enforce such contracts, has not in view the benefit of the litigants themselves, but questions of public policy, and the protection of the people against the violation of statutes enacted for the public good.

3. From the above, we conclude that the petition in this case sets forth no legal cause of action, and that, therefore, the court erred in overruling the demurrer thereto.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur except Cobb, J., disqualified.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Peter L. BISHOP, Appl.,

v.

STATE of Indiana, ex rel. Daniel E. GRINER.

(.....Ind.....)

1. The postmaster of a local postoffice is a "deputy postmaster" within the meaning of Const. art. 2, § 9, providing that the office of a deputy postmaster whose compensation does not exceed $90 per annum shall not be deemed lucrative within the provision respecting the right to hold other offices.
2. One who has surrendered or vacated one office by accepting another cannot be restored to any right or title under the first by subsequently resigning the second.
3. The exception in favor of a postmaster whose annual compensation does not exceed $90, in Const. art. 2, § 9, prohibiting a person from holding more than one lucrative office at the same time, must be negatived in an allegation that a person holding another office has forfeited it by becoming a postmaster.

(January 4, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jay County in favor of relator in a quo warranto proceeding to oust defendant from the office of township trustee.

Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John M. Smith and Frank H. Snyder for appellant.

Messrs. D. T. Taylor and D. E. Griner for appellee.

Jordan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was prosecuted in the lower court upon information, in the name of the state, on the relation of the prosecuting attorney, for the purpose of ousting the appellant from the office of township trustee. A judgment of ouster was rendered, from which appellant prosecutes this appeal. The errors assigned are: (1) That the court erred in overruling a demurrer to the information; (2) error in sustaining a demurrer to the answer.

The information charges, substantially, that the defendant, Peter L. Bishop, at the November election of 1894, was elected township trustee of Bearcreek township, in Jay county, Indiana, for a term of four years, and that on the 6th day of August, 1895, he duly qualified as such trustee, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office; that subsequently, on the 9th day of October, 1896, the defendant was duly appointed and commissioned, by the postoffice department of the United States, postmaster at the village of Bryant, in said county of Jay, for a term of four years, and duly qualified as such postmaster at said time, and entered upon the discharge of the duties thereof, and from said day on has continued to hold said office of postmaster, and discharge the duties thereof. By reason of his accepting and entering upon the discharge of the duties of postmaster at Bryant, it is charged that he forfeited and surrendered the office of township trustee, and the prayer is that he be ousted therefrom. The state bases its right to expel appellant from the office in question on § 9 of art. 2 of the Constitution, which is as follows: "No person holding a lucrative office or appointment under the United States, or under this state, shall be eligible to a seat in the general assembly; nor shall any person hold more than one lucrative office at the same time, except as by this Constitution expressly permitted: provided that officers in the militia to which there is attached no annual salary, and the office of deputy postmaster, where the compensation does not exceed ninety dollars per annum, shall not be deemed lucrative; and provided, also, that counties containing less than one thousand polls may confer the office of clerk, recorder, and auditor, or any two of said offices, upon the same person." The contention of counsel for appellee is that appellant, by accepting the office of postmaster, when he was an incumbent of another lucrative office created by the laws of this state, violated the above provision of the Constitution, prohibiting one from holding two lucrative offices; and it is claimed that by this unlawful act he ipso facto surrendered his right to longer hold the office of trustee, and the latter office thereby became vacant. This proposition counsel for appellant to an extent controvert, and they insist that the information is insufficient for its failure to negative the exception in § 9, supra, which provides that the office of deputy postmaster, where the compensation does not exceed $90 per annum, shall not be deemed lucrative. Their insistence is that the pleading, upon any view of the case, must affirmatively disclose that the postoffice in question does not fall within this exception. Counsel, in their brief, say: "When our Constitution was constructed and created, there was one 'general postoffice at Washington, District of Columbia,' and the Postmaster General was in charge, and denominated 'postmaster,' and the different officers throughout the country were known, and in fact designated, as 'deputy postmasters,' by the Federal statute. This was true until 1876, when the postoffices were designated as 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th class, and the lower class only are appointed by the Postmaster General. The others are appointed by the President. In this latter statute the word 'deputy' was dropped, and the offices classified as we have said." In support of their contention they argue that the term "deputy postmaster," as employed in the Constitution, means and includes what is now generally denominated "postmaster," and if the state relies on the positive prohibition of the Constitution, to oust appellant from the office of trustee, it must, at least, by proper averments, show that the annual compensation of the postoffice accepted and held by him exceeded $90, and thereby place him beyond the exception. On the other hand, counsel for the state contended that the information is sufficient, and in support of their contention they say that, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, the various postoffices throughout the state were filled by officials denominated and known as "postmasters," and the term "deputy postmaster," as used in the Constitution, was understood and intended to apply only to a person who was an assistant or deputy of a local postmaster, and for whose acts the latter officer was liable. Therefore they contend that inasmuch as the appellant was a postmaster, and not a deputy postmaster, he in no manner can avail himself of the exception to the prohibition against holding at the same time more than one lucrative office.

NOTE.—As to incompatibility of offices, see also De Turk v. Com. (Pa.) 5 L. R. A. 853, and note; Chambers v. State, Barnard (Ind.) 11 L. R. A. 613, and note; Atty. Gen. v. Marston (N. H.) 13 L. R. A. 39 L. R. A.

670; People, Sherwood, v. State Bd. of Canvassers (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 646; State, Walker, v. Bus (Mo.) 33 L. R. A. 616.

We regret that counsel in this appeal have not given us the aid which they should, in our search for a solution of the controversy on the point involved. The inquiry, under the circumstances, is: What is the correct interpretation of the term "deputy postmaster," as employed in § 9 of art. 2 of the Constitution? The precise question, so far as we have been able to ascertain, has not heretofore been considered by this court. In the cases of Foltz v.

Kerlin, 105 Ind. 221, 55 Am. Rep. 197, and Wood v. State, 130 Ind. 364, the interpretation of the term "deputy postmaster," as now involved, does not seem to have been presented nor considered.

In order to discover the true sense of the term in question, and thereby determine if the exception in controversy can be of any avail to the appellant in this action, we may properly examine the postal laws of the United States passed by Congress prior to the constitutional convention of 1850, which framed our present fundamental law, and learn from such facts if the term "deputy postmaster" was employed therein, and what duties were assigned to such officer. An inspection of the several acts of Congress relative to the postal affairs of the national government passed between the years 1789 and 1827 discloses that the term "deputy postmaster" was used therein, and in other acts subsequently passed, and that it was intended to, and did, apply to the persons who were intrusted with the distribution of the United States mail at the various localities where it was delivered. The Postmaster General was considered the executive head of the postoffice department, and those who served under him at the various towns and cities throughout the country were considered his deputies. See 1 Stat. at L. 733; 4 Stat. at L. 102. By the act of July 2, 1836, the President was authorized, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a "deputy postmaster" for each postoffice where the commissions allowed amounted to $1,000 and over, for the year ending June 30, 1835. 5 Stat. at L. 80. In the act of March 3, 1845, the term "deputy postmaster" is again used, and likewise in the act of March 1, 1847, wherein certain pay is directed to be allowed to "deputy postmasters" in lieu of commissions previously paid. 5 Stat. at L. 732; 9 Stat. at L. 147. By an act of March 3, 1847, the Postmaster General is directed to establish a postoffice at Astoria, Oregon, and appoint a "deputy postmaster" to discharge the duties thereof. 9 Stat. at L. 189, 200. By the act of March 3, 1851, the Postmaster General was directed to furnish stamps, etc., to all deputy postmasters. 9 Stat. at L. 589. Section 6 of the act of March 3, 1853, provided certain regulations in regard to "deputy postmasters." 10 Stat. at L. 249, 255. It is apparent, therefore, that the statutes of the United States, passed before and long after the adoption of our Constitution, applied the term "deputy postmaster" to each and all persons who were incumbents of, and discharged the duties of, the postoffices established at the towns and cities throughout the nation. That these officials, in a legal sense, to a certain extent, were each considered as the deputy of the Postmaster General, is evident. In fact, in many of the decisions of the Federal courts the term "deputy postmaster" was applied to a person filling a postoffice, and such officer is said to be the deputy of the Postmaster General. Boody v. United States, 1 Woodb. & M. 150; Postmaster General v. Early, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 136, 6 L. ed. 577; United States v. Le Baron, 60 U. S. 19 How. 73, 15 L. ed. 525; Ware v. United States, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 617, 625, 18 L. ed. 389, 390; Postmaster General v. Furber, 4 Mason, 333. Many other cases may be found to the same effect, but those to which we have referred will suffice for the purpose which we have in view.

Turning to the proceedings of the constitutional convention leading up to the framing and adoption of the section in controversy, and it appears that, after several propositions were made to exempt postmasters where the office did not exceed a certain annual compensation from the term "lucrative office," the matter of holding more than one lucrative office at the same time was finally referred to the committee on revision and phraseology. The result of their deliberations was embodied in the following sections:

"Sec. 6. No person holding any lucrative office or appointment under the United States or this state shall be eligible to a seat in either branch of the general assembly; provided, that officers in the militia, to which there is attached no annual salary, shall not be deemed lucrative."

"Sec. 1. No person shall hold more than one lucrative office at the same time except as in this Constitution expressly permitted; provided that counties containing less than one thousand polls may confer the office of clerk, and recorder, and auditor, or any two of said offices upon one person: provided, however, that the office of postmaster, where the compensation does not exceed ninety dollars per annum shall not be deemed lucrative."

This committee, after giving the question consideration, seems to have consolidated these sections, and prefixed the word "deputy" to postmaster, and incorporated the whole into § 9 of art. 2 of the Constitution in which form it was reported to the convention, and finally adopted and ratified by the people. Convention Journal, pp. 166, 167, 527 et seq. No reasonable doubt can exist but what the committee on phraseology considered the phrase "deputy postmaster" as the one technically correct and proper to be used, in view of the fact that the postal laws of the United States applied this term to the particular Federal officer which the convention had under consideration, and which had been designated in the section referred to the committee as "postmaster." In the debates of the convention on the question of making a person ineligible to hold more than one lucrative office, the term "postmaster" was generally used. Mr. Owen, a member of the convention, speaking on the question in regard to excluding postmasters from holding offices created by the laws of the state, said: "I ask the gentlemen if there is a single postmaster who receives but $90 a year who is not obliged to do something else for a livelihood. . . . It is not for the sake of the receipts of the office that the postmaster accepts the office, but for the accommodation of the neighborhood. It is wrong then, in my opinion, to deprive them of the right to be elected to the legislature." Debates on the Constitution, pp. 1423, 1424. In the address to the people of the state, prepared by Mr. Owen, and unanimously concurred in by the convention, wherein, among other things, the principal changes made in the old Constitution, under the new one about to be submitted, were pointed out to the electors, is the following: "Postmasters, if their annual compensation be $90 or less, but not otherwise, may be elected members of the legislature." Debates on the Constitution, p. 2042. This announcement or declaration to the electors of the state relative to the provisions of the Constitution which was about to be submitted for their ratification, by the men who had just completed the work of molding and giving it form, certainly must be accepted as revealing what was understood by the term "deputy postmaster," as used in the section in controversy, and the particular officer to whom the term was intended to be applied. It is a rule generally asserted that words or terms used in a Constitution which is dependent upon a ratification by the people must be interpreted in a sense most obvious to the common understanding at the time of its adoption, in the belief that such was the sense or meaning designed. Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 69, 73, 81. Guided by this principle, in the light of the contemporaneous facts and circumstances to which we have referred it is plain, we think, that the term in question, according to the common understanding of both those who framed and those who ratified our Constitution, was understood and intended to mean the office of postmaster as now denominated, and consequently must be applied to such office. Therefore, if the annual salary or compensation of a postoffice in this state is not in excess of $90, in that event such office cannot be considered a lucrative one, within the prohibition of § 9, supra. But, where such compensation exceeds $90, the office must be held to be lucrative; and, under the positive mandate of the Constitution, the incumbent thereof is debarred from holding any other lucrative office created by the Constitution or laws of this state. The settled rule of the common law prohibits an incumbent of a public office from holding a second one incompatible with the first, and the acceptance of the second office will ipso facto terminate his right or title to the first. The authorities affirm that the act of accepting, under such circumstances, the second office, operates as a surrender of the first; and when the officer has been once inducted, under his election or appointment, into the second office, his subsequent resignation of the latter can in no manner serve to restore his right or title to the first office, for it is evident that, when a public office once becomes vacant, a former incumbent cannot be restored to it by his own act. Yonkey v. State, Cornelison, 27 Ind. 286; Howard v. Shoemaker, 85 Ind. 111; Gosman v. State, Schumacher, 106 Ind. 203, and authorities there cited; State, Walker, v. Bus, 125 Mo. 325, 33 L. R. A. 616; People, Kelly, v. Brooklyn, 77 N. Y. 503, 33 Am. Rep. 659; State, Metcalf, v. Goff, 15 R. I. 508; Mechem, Pub. Off. §§ 420, 425, 426; Throop, Pub. Off. §§ 30, 81; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 562u.

The question, however, with which we have to deal in this case, is not one relating to the holding of incompatible offices in defiance of the common law, but relates to the holding of one incompatible with the inhibition of the Constitution. The doctrine of the common law which we have mentioned, however, is in some respects applicable. The test to be applied is not whether the two offices held by the appellant are incompatible with each other, but are they lucrative ones, within the meaning of the Constitution. That the office of township trustee is lucrative is settled beyond controversy. Creighton v. Piper, 14 Ind. 182; Foltz v. Kerlin, 105 Ind. 231, 55 Am. Rep. 197. If the annual compensation of the post-office accepted and held by appellant is over $90, it is manifest that it falls within the constitutional interdiction; and appellant, by accepting it at the time he was holding that of trustee, violated the fundamental law of the state, and his unlawful act in so doing would produce the same result or effect as does the acceptance by an officer of a second/incompatible office under the rule at common law to which we have theretofore referred. It could not be presumed that appellant intended to violate the Constitution by accepting and holding the office of postmaster if it was beyond the exception in question, when he was the occupant of that of township trustee; and the result to be implied from his act in doing so, under such circumstances, would be that he intended to completely surrender and vacate the latter office, and the law would attribute such a surrender as the necessary consequences of the act. 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 5626; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 439; Dickson v. People, Brown, 17 Ill. 191; State v. Buttz, 9 S. C. N. S. 156; Re Corliss, 11 R. I. 638, 23 Am. Rep. 588; State v. De Gress, 53 Tex. 887; Davenport v. New York, 67 N. Y. 456; Hoglan v. Carpenter, 4 Bush, 89. Assuming, therefore, that the annual compensation of the postoffice in controversy exceeds $90, the act of the appellant in accepting it while the incumbent of the office of trustee would operate as a surrender or resignation of the latter; and it would become vacant to the extent, at least, that the proper appointing authority could lawfully proceed to fill the vacancy. This rule, we think, is well affirmed by the authorities cited. Gosman, v. State, Schumacher, 106 Ind., at page 208; Osborne v. State, Michaels, 128 Ind. 129.

But counsel for appellant urge that, in consideration of the fact that appellant subsequently resigned the office of postmaster, as alleged in his answer, consequently this action cannot be maintained. This contention is not tenable. As we previously said, where the first office is once surrendered or vacated by accepting a second, in defiance of law, the officer cannot be restored to any right or title under the first by resigning the second. Counsel refer us, however, upon this question to the cases of Foltz v. Kerlin, 105 Ind. 221, 55 Am. Rep. 197; and De Turk v. Com. 129 Pa. 151, 5 L. R. A. 853. In both of these cases the party was holding the office of postmaster when he accepted and was inducted into the office created by the laws of the state. As the laws of the state could exert no dominion over a Federal officer, as an officer, it was therefore said in the first case to be inconceivable, under such circumstances, that the acceptance of an office created by the state could operate to vacate one held under the statutes of the United States. In Foltz v. Kerlin, 105 Ind. 221, 55 Am. Rep. 197, Elliott, J., intimated that the incumbent of a postoffice, when installed into that of township trustee, might surrender the office of postmaster, and retain that of trustee, but expressly said that 'both could not be held in defiance of the Constitution. In the appeal of De Turk v. Com. 129 Pa. 151, 5 L. R. A. 853, in view of the fact that the officer was postmaster at the time he accepted the office of commissioner, under the laws of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, it was held that he might resign the former and retain the latter. The facts in these two cases, it will be seen, were just the reverse of those in the case at bar. The question as here presented does not in any manner involve the right of the courts of the state to oust the occupant of a Federal office, for in this respect it must be conceded they are utterly powerless. Their right, however, to pass upon the title to an office of one who claims to hold it under the laws of their own jurisdiction, and expel him therefrom, whenever he has vacated it by his act of accepting a Federal office, great or small, in violation of the state's Constitution, cannot be successfully controverted. Likewise a state court has the power, as held in the Foltz Case, to oust one from an office existing under state laws, when at the time he accepted and was installed into the latter he was also the incumbent of an office under the authority of the United States, and insists, under such circumstances, in holding both in defiance of the state's Constitution.

Having reached the conclusions expressed on the foregoing propositions, we may next proceed to consider and determine the ultimate question: Is the information sufficient, in the absence of any averments, to show that the compensation of the postoffice in controversy exceeds ninety dollars per annum? We are of the opinion that this question must be answered in the negative. The action is apparently instituted under the second subdivision of § 1145, Rev. Stat. 1894 (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1131, Horner's Rev. Stat. 1897, § 1131), which provides that "an information may be filed, etc., whenever any public officer shall have done or suffered any act which by the provisions of law shall work a forfeiture of his office." The information under this provision of the Code must state facts sufficient to clearly show a forfeiture of the office in controversy. Chambers v. State, Barnard, 127 Ind. 865, 11 L. R. A. 618. We have seen that the act upon which the state relies to operate as a forfeiture of the office in dispute was the acceptance by the appellant of a second lucrative office,—that of postmaster,—contrary to the provisions of the Constitution. But, as we have heretofore said, § 9 of article 2, which forbids the holding of more than one lucrative office, also makes an exception in favor of a postmaster where the compensation of his office is not in excess of $90 per annum. In the absence of any averment to the contrary, a court would be compelled to presume that the office in question was within the exception reserved by the Constitution. We are not authorized to presume that the positive command of the law has been violated by appellant, and that he must therefore be subjected to a judgment of ouster. At least, as a matter of pleading, the plaintiff was required to negative the exception made in favor of a postmaster whose annual compensation does not exceed $90. Brutton v. State, 4 Ind. 601, 602; Shearer v. State, 7 Blackf. 99; Howe v.

State, 10 Ind. 423; State v. Carpenter, 20 Ind. 219; Wiley v. State, 53 Ind. 516; Burke v. State, 52 Ind. 522; State v. Buckner, 52 Ind. 278; Meier v. State, 57 Ind. 386; Henderson v. State, 60 Ind. 296; O'Brien v. State, 63 Ind. 242; Steenenson v. State, 65 Ind. 409; Whart. Crim. L. 7th ed. § 614; Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr. 9th ed. §§ 238 et seq.; Whart. Crim. Ev. 9th ed. 128; High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 591; Bliss, Code Pl. §§ 202 et seq.; 1 Greenl. Ev. 18th ed. § 79, and note; 1 Chitty. Pl. (1867) 224; Gould, Pl. chap. 4, § 22; Ship. Pl. p. 33; Stephenson, Pl. Heard's ed. p. 443. From the small population of the town of Bryant, as disclosed by the last Federal census, it may be inferred that its postoffice belongs to the fourth class, the annual compensation of which, under the postal laws, seems to be fixed and adjusted quarterly by the postoffice department, and depends, to an extent, on the amount of business done at the office. For the reason pointed out, the information must be held to be insufficient; and the court therefore erred in overruling the demurrer thereto. The answer of the appellant, which set up his resignation of the postoffice in question, was no defense to the action, and the demurrer to it was properly sustained.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the lower court, with instructions to sustain the demurrer to the information, with leave to amend, and for further proceedings in accord with this opinion.

STATE of Indiana, ex rel. John T. MORRIS, Appt.,
v.

Elijah McFARLAND.

(.....Ind.)

The right of the auditor to give a casting vote in case of a tie on a vote by township trustees to fill a vacancy in the office of county superintendent under Rev. Stat. 1894, § 5900, is not limited to a case in which there has been a tie vote by ballot for such officer, but extends to a tie on a viva voce vote on a motion or resolution preliminary to making the appointment or a motion to appoint.

(January 11, 1898.)

A PPEAL by relator from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Martin County in favor of defendant in a quo warranto proceeding to oust defendant from the office of superintendent of Martin County. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Houghton & Marshall and Hiram McCormick for appellant.

Messrs. F. Gwin, Rogers & Rogers, and Ogden & Inman for appellee.

Jordan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This proceeding was instituted, upon information filed in the lower court in the name of the state, on the relation of the appellant, John T. Morris, whereby he sought to eject the appellee, Elijah McFarland, from the office of county superintendent of the county of Martin, and gain admission himself to that office. On the issues joined there was a trial, and special finding of facts by the court, and conclusions of law stated thereon, to the effect that the appellee was legally elected and entitled to the office in dispute, and that the relator take nothing by the action, and judgment was rendered accordingly.

The only material question presented for decision is as to whether the auditor of Martin county, under the facts, was authorized by law to give the casting votes which he did in the proceedings by the township trustees relative to the appointment of a superintendent. A summary of the material facts, as disclosed by the finding, is as follows: There are ten township trustees of Martin county, Indiana, and all of these trustees assembled at the office of the county auditor of that county on the 1st Monday in June, 1897, in compliance with the statute, for the purpose of appointing a county superintendent to succeed the relator, who was then the incumbent of that office, and had held the same for four years prior to said day. The trustees organized by electing one of their number chairman (the auditor acting as clerk, as provided by the statute), and then proceeded to ballot for superintendent, taking 38 ballots, and no one person receiving a majority of all the votes cast, as a result of any one of the ballots taken, the votes cast being distributed among several persons. At the close of the thirty-eighth ballot, no appointment having been made, on motion it was ordered that the meeting adjourn to convene again at 6:30 P. M. on the same day, at which hour the trustees all again convened, and proceeded to ballot until 11:50 P. M. without succeeding in securing the appointment of a superintendent, when, having taken 188 ballots in all on said day, they again adjourned to meet at 8 o'clock A. M. the next day, June 8, 1897, at which time they assembled, and proceeded with the unfinished business before them. After taking 14 more ballots, making a total of 152, and no one, as the result of any of said ballots, having received a majority of all the votes cast, and no two persons having received an equal number of the votes cast on any of said ballots, a motion was then made and seconded that the method of voting be changed from voting by ballot to that of voting upon a motion to appoint; and on the adoption of the motion, as made, five of said trustees voted in favor of the motion and five against it, and thereupon, a tie having resulted, the auditor cast his vote in the affirmative, and the motion was declared adopted. It was then moved and seconded that a resolution be adopted as follows: "Be it resolved by the trustees of Martin county, Indiana, that Elijah McFarland be appointed county superintendent of schools of said county for the ensuing two years." A motion was made to amend the resolution by striking out the name of McFarland, and inserting that of John T. Morris. On the adoption of this motion, five of the trustees voted in favor thereof and five against, and the chairman announced a tie, and thereupon the auditor voted against the proposition to amend, and it was declared lost. A vote was then taken on the motion to adopt the resolution, which resulted in five of the trustees casting their votes in favor of the resolution and five against its adoption, and thereupon the chairman declared a tie, and the auditor then cast his vote in favor of the resolution, and the chairman declared it adopted, and that McFarland had been appointed county superintendent for the term of two years, and the meeting then, on motion, was declared to be adjourned. Other facts are found, showing that McFarland, the appointee, and appellee herein, was eligible to be appointed to the office in controversy, and that he duly qualified under said appointment, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office.

NOTE.—As to casting vote, see note to Lawrence v. Ingersoll (Tenn.) 6 L. R. A. 308; also Magenau v. Fremont (Neb.) 9 L. R. A. 788; State, Rylands, v. 39 L. R. A.

Pinkerman (Conn.) 22 L. R. A. 653; Wooster v. Mullins (Conn.) 25 L. R. A. 694; and Brown v. Foster (Me.) 31 L. R. A. 116.

Rev. Stat. 1894, § 5900 (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 4424; Horner's Rev. Stat. 1897, § 4424), being the statute upon which the appointment of appellee to the office in question is based, omitting parts not essential to the question involved, reads as follows: "The township trustees of the several townships of each county shall meet at the office of the county auditor of such county on the 1st Monday of June, 1873, and biennially thereafter, and appoint a county superintendent. . . . Whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of county superintendent, by death, resignation, or removal, the said trustees, on the notice of the county auditor, shall assemble at the office of such auditor, and fill such vacancy, . . . and the county auditor shall be clerk of such elections in all cases, and give the casting vote in case of a tie, and shall keep the record of such elections in a book to be kept for that purpose." (Our italics.) It is claimed by counsel for the relator that, upon a proper interpretation of this statute, under the facts, the appellee, McFarland, was not legally appointed to the office in dispute, for the reason that he did not receive a majority of the votes cast by the ten trustees present and voting at the time the appointment is said to have been made. Their specific contention is that, in view of the fact that the resolution which named the appellee as the person to be voted for received the votes of but five of the trustees, while those of the remaining five were cast against it, this action of the trustees did not operate to create a tie, within the meaning of the statute, and therefore the auditor was not authorized to vote either for or against the adoption of the resolution. It is insisted that, under the provisions of the statute, it is only where the votes of the trustees have been cast for two persons, each of whom receives an equal number of such votes, that a tie can result, which would warrant the auditor to give the casting vote. It is further urged that the auditor had no right, as he did, to vote, under the circumstances, and thereby change the mode of making a choice by ballot to that of making the appointment by means of a resolution. The law, as we have seen, lodges the authority of appointing a county superintendent in the township trustees of the county.

They, when assembled for that purpose, constitute the body invested with the power to discharge this important duty. The auditor, it appears, is made the clerk of the election, and it is only in the event of an equal division of the trustees (a quorum being present) that the auditor is invested with power to cast his vote for or against the particular proposition involved. The law does not, in terms, prescribe any precise methods, manner, or form by which the trustees shall choose a superintendent, and therefore the form or means by which the appointment may be made is not material. The choice of such officer by the body empowered to make the selection may be ascertained by ballot, or a viva voce vote, or by the adoption of a motion or resolution declaring that the person therein named be appointed to fill the office. See Sturges v. Spofford, 52 Barb. 436, on page 446; State v. Jeffries, v. Kilroy, 86 Ind. 118; State v. Drummond, v. Dillon, 125 Ind. 65.

It is conceded by counsel for the appellant that, had the resolution under which appellee claims to have been appointed received a majority of the votes cast by the trustees it would have been adopted, and he would have been thereby legally elected. It being permissible, then, for a majority of the trustees to designate their choice of a person by either the adoption of a motion or resolution to that effect, upon what tenable grounds can it be asserted that, when an equal division of the trustees present and voting results upon the adoption of such motion or resolution, it does not constitute a tie vote, within the meaning of the statute? That it would be such under parliamentary law or usage is evident. We must confess that we can perceive no sufficient reason for upholding the right of the auditor to give the casting vote, when the tie results from a vote taken by means of a ballot, and denying his right to do so when the trustees are equally divided upon a viva voce vote, taken on making the appointment by means of a motion or resolution. From the number of ballots taken in the case at bar, it must have been evident to all that further efforts to appoint a superintendent by means of a ballot vote would be of no avail; and as the statute commanded that the appointment should be made, it certainly was apparent that, under the existing circumstances, the purpose and object of the law could be more easily and conveniently carried out by the adoption of a resolution naming the person to be chosen. In the case of State v. Drummond, v. Dillon, 125 Ind. 65, all of the trustees, being eight in number, met at the time and place fixed by the law, and, after an organization had been secured, the name of Dillon was presented by a motion to be voted for to fill the office of county superintendent. Four of the trustees voted in favor of the motion, and the other four refused to vote either for or against it. The county auditor, under the circumstances, cast his vote in favor of the motion. While it is true that, in the case mentioned, the vote of the auditor was not considered as a controlling factor, as it was held that Dillon had been legally elected, for the reason that he had received a majority of the votes of a quorum present and voting. The view of the court, however, expressed through Olds, J., speaking as its organ, relative to the question as now involved, was as follows: "In this case the elective body was in session. It consisted of eight members, and it was properly moved that Dillon be elected county superintendent, and four of the eight voted for his election, and the other four declining to vote. If the other four had voted against his election, the law in that case provided that the county auditor should give the casting vote. [Our italics.] It was the duty of all the members of the board to vote for or against the candidate whose name was proposed, and they could not defeat the object of the meeting and avoid the law and prevent an election by remaining silent and refusing to vote either for or against the candidate proposed." The mayor of a city, in this state, by the charter law relative to the incorporation of cities, is made the presiding officer at the meetings of the common council, and in the case of a tie on the part of the members of the council he has the casting vote. It is the frequent practice, where the council is empowered to appoint city officials, to designate the person appointed by the adoption of a resolution, and in the case of an equal division of the council on a vote taken on such a resolution, the right of the mayor to give the casting vote, to our knowledge, has never been called in question, although such power, under such circumstances, has been frequently exercised. In Launtz v. People, Sullivan, 118 Ill. 137, 55 Am. Rep. 405, the charter of the city of East St. Louis authorized the mayor to give the casting vote in case of a tie in the common council. On the adoption of a motion to approve the bond of the city treasurer, four of the eight members of the council voted in the affirmative, the other four refusing to vote, either in the affirmative or negative. It was said by the court in that case that the mayor might treat those who refused to vote as being opposed to the motion, and the result would be equivalent to a tie, and would, therefore, warrant him in voting, as in case of a tie. In the appeal of Carroll v. Wall, 85 Kan. 36, it was held that where the mayor, under the law, had the casting vote when the council was equally divided, he had the power, where a tie resulted on a motion to confirm the appointment of a city attorney, to give the casting vote. These decisions will, at least, serve to illustrate that a tie vote of an assembly, in which event a certain person designated by law is entitled to vote, may and does arise, whether the proposition or matter before the body is attempted to be carried out by the means of a ballot or by a viva voce vote on a motion or resolution.

The very purpose for which the law requires the township trustees to assemble on the day and at the place fixed is to appoint a superintendent, and under no circumstances does the statute contemplate that this purpose or object shall be defeated by any "maneuvering" or "jockeying" upon the part of those charged with the duty of making such appointment. Should we hold the grounds upon which counsel for appellant found their contention to be tenable, then, under similar circumstances, the contest for the appointment of a superintendent might be indefinitely prolonged, and an election of anyone prevented. No construction should be placed upon the statute which might lead to such a result. The legislature, in empowering the auditor to vote in case of a tie, no doubt considered the fact that the trustees might be equally divided, not only on the question as to the individual to be chosen to fill the office, but also on propositions preliminary to making the appointment, and, in case of a tie on any such preliminary question, the auditor must be held to have the right to give the casting vote for or against such proposition. It cannot be said that the appellee herein, under the facts, did not receive a majority of all the votes cast by the electoral body upon the occasion in question; for, as the auditor is empowered to vote in case of a tie, consequently, upon the happening of that event, at least, for the purpose of giving the casting vote, that officer must be deemed and considered to that extent as one of the electoral body, and to his vote the law accords the same force and effect as to that of any one of the trustees, and when cast in the affirmative, as it was in this case, it serves as the crowning act in the election. We are constrained to hold that the auditor in each instance herein mentioned was entitled to vote, and therefore the resolution was legally adopted, and the appointment of the appellee to the office in dispute is in all respects valid. He was not only, under the circumstances, permitted to vote, but the law expressly required him to discharge that duty.

We are aware that the doctrine affirmed in the case of State, Williams, v. Edwards, 114 Ind. 581, sustains the contention of appellant's learned counsel, and therefore that case is in direct conflict in this respect with the conclusion reached in this appeal. It may be said, however, that the construction placed upon the statute relative to the right of the auditor to vote in that decision is narrow and apparently strained, and is unquestionably contrary to the very spirit or object of the law, and, so far as the holding therein conflicts with that in this case, it must be considered and held to be overruled. Some of the earlier decisions of this court, in construing the statute in question, were inclined to be too strict, while the later ones are more liberal, and, as we believe, more in harmony with the spirit or intent of the law. See Wampler v. State, Alexander, (Ind.) 88 L. R. A. 829.

The judgment below, under the facts and the law applicable thereto, is a correct result, and is therefore affirmed.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Iowa, ex rel. James A. HOWE, Appl.,
v.

Mayor, etc., of DES MOINES et al.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. The legislature cannot delegate the power to fix and determine the amount of a tax for a public library, which must be levied by the common council to a board which is not chosen by, and directly responsible to, the taxpayers, unless the people assent thereto.
2. Consent to the levying by a board of a tax for a public library is not given by a vote adopting a statutory plan for such library by which the tax is to be levied by the common council, although the board subsequently provided for is to be appointed by the mayor with consent of the council.

(October 9, 1897.)

A PPEAL by complainant from an order of the District Court for Polk County denying a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to levy a tax for the purpose of erecting a library building and maintaining a library. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Read & Read, for appellant:

All legislative authority, which includes the power of taxation without limitation, is vested in the legislature.

Const. art. 8, § 1; Davenport v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 88 Iowa, 683.

It may confer the taxing power upon municipalities to such extent as it may deem expedient or desirable.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 8d ed. § 740; Cooley, Taxn. 1st ed. p. 51.

A board of library trustees appointed pursuant to the provisions of chap. 41, Acts of the 25th General Assembly, is an agency of the city appointing it, clothed with the power and charged with the duty of performing, on behalf of the city, the acts specified in the statute.

Orois v. Des Moines Park Comrs. 88 Iowa, 674; State, Merrick, v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct. 88 Minn. 285.

The legislature may select such municipal agency as it deems proper to exercise the power conferred, and is not limited in its power in that respect, and compelled to select the city council as the sole municipal agency for the purpose of exercising the taxing power.

State, Merrick, v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct. 88 Minn. 285; Baltimore v. State, Board of Police, 15 Md. 876, 74 Am. Dec. 572.

A statutory provision that commissioners may levy a tax for school purposes is mandatory.

Jones v. State, Board of Public Instruction, 17 Fla. 411.

The statutes make it the duty of boards of NOTE.—As to delegation of authority by legislature, see also Bradshaw v. Lankford (Md.) 11 L. R. A. 582, and note; Dowling v. Lancashire Ins. Co. (Wis.) 81 L. R. A. 112, and other cases cited in footnote.

89 L. R. A.

directors of independent school districts to fix and determine the amount of tax necessary to be levied for the support of the schools within the district, and to certify the amount thus fixed and determined to the board of supervisors, and requires the board to levy the tax thus certified.

Independent Dist. v. Sioux County Supers. 51 Iowa, 658.

No case is found which holds that the power of taxation may not be delegated by the legislature, in the absence of constitutional restrictions and limitations, to be exercised by such municipal authorities, representatives, or agencies as the legislature may provide. Supporting the proposition are found:

Orois v. Des Moines Park Comrs. 88 Iowa, 674; State, Merrick, v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct. 88 Minn. 285; Baltimore v. State, Board of Police, 15 Md. 876, 74 Am. Dec. 572; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 8d ed. § 740; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 22, 71-75.

The question of what tax or for what purpose taxation should be made, is one of policy and expediency, which concerns the legislature only.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 119; Merchants' Union Barb-Wire Co. v. Brown, 64 Iowa, 275.

Messrs. Hubbard & Dawley also for appellant.

Messrs. Bishop, Bowen, & Fleming and J. K. Macomber, for appellees:

The act of the 25th and 26th General Assembly is void in so far as it authorizes the levy of a tax, and in so far as it gives that power to the board of library trustees, it never having been voted on and adopted by the people after these changes were made.

Cornell v. People, 107 Ill. 872.

It is not within the legislative power to compel the city council against its will to levy a tax for the purposes either of maintaining the library or the erection of a library building.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 280, 281; Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 78, 1 Am. Rep. 215.

While the legislature has the right to delegate the power of taxation to municipal and political corporations, it has not the right to delegate that power to any other than the proper legislative body of such corporations. The people have delegated their inherent right of taxation to the legislature. The legislature may again delegate that right back to the people, or to the representatives of the people, the legislative bodies of the different municipal and political corporations of the state. But it has not the right, for unusual purposes, to delegate the right of taxation to any but the legislative body of the municipal or political corporations.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 61; People, McCagg, v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 278; Harward v. St. Clair & M. Levee & D. Co. 51 Ill. 180; Hinze v. People, Halbert, 92 Ill. 406; Updike v. Wright, 81 Ill. 49; People, Dunham, v. Morgan, 90 Ill. 558; Parks v. Wyandotte County Comrs. 61 Fed. Rep. 486; Wyandotte County Comrs. v. Abbott, 52 Kan. 148; People, Park Comrs., v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 227, 15 Am. Rep. 202.

The constitutional provision of the state of Illinois has no different force or effect than that which is implied in all state Constitutions.

Cooley, Taxn. p. 61; Wyandotte County Comrs. v. Abbott, 52 Kan. 148; Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 78, 1 Am. Rep. 215.

Kinne, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The conceded facts in this case are as follows: The city of Des Moines, a city of the first class, in 1882, by a vote of its electors, accepted the provisions of the statute of this state relating to the establishment and maintenance of free public libraries, and had, in the exercise of the powers conferred upon it, established and was maintaining such a library. In pursuance of law a board of library trustees had been appointed, and was exercising the powers and duties imposed upon it. On July 31, 1896, said board of trustees did fix and determine a rate of taxation of one mill on the dollar of the taxable valuation of the property in said city for the purpose of maintaining the public library, and at the same time did fix and determine a rate of taxation of three mills on the dollar for the purpose of creating a sinking fund for the purchase of a lot and the erection of a library building, and did cause said amounts so fixed and determined to be certified to the city council of said city. Said city council refused to levy and certify to the county auditor said amounts so certified to them by said board of library trustees, but did levy and certify one half a mill tax for the purpose of the maintenance of the library. Thereupon this action was brought to obtain a writ of mandamus compelling the city council to levy and certify the rates of taxes fixed and determined by the board of library trustees. As is said by counsel for appellants: "The ultimate question to be determined is whether or not the city council in cities of the first class accepting the provisions of the statute relating to the establishment and maintenance of free public libraries, and maintaining such library, is bound and required to levy and certify the amount of taxes or the rate of taxation fixed and determined by the board of library trustees of said city."

2. On the one hand it is contended that the statute vests in the board of library trustees absolute power to fix and determine the amount of the levy to be made for the purpose of maintenance of the library, and of creating a sinking fund for the purchase of a lot and the erection of a library building, subject only to the limitations in the statute; and that the duty devolves upon the city council to levy and certify the sums so certified to them by said board; that the city council is without any discretion in the matter. On the contrary, the appellees contend that the board of library trustees has no such power; that its power in the matter is advisory merely, and that the city council is invested with a discretion as to the amount or amounts which shall be levied for the purposes mentioned. As in the discussion which may follow reference may be made to various acts of the legislature touching the creation and maintenance of free public libraries, it may tend to brevity to here recite the substance of all such statutes which can have any bearing upon the question under consideration. Chapter 45, Acts 13th Gen. Assem., provided that cities of the first and second classes might levy an annual tax not exceeding one-half mill on the dollar of the taxable property in such city for the maintenance of a free public library and reading room, provided a suitable lot and building be first donated for such purposes. The city council was authorized to appoint officers for such library and reading room. The 14th Gen. Assembly, in chapter 47, extended the provision of the former act so as to include incorporated towns, increased the amount of the levy, and authorized all the municipalities referred to in the act out of the money raised to purchase land and erect buildings or lease rooms. The act also provided that before exercising any of the powers conferred it should be accepted by a vote of the people. The same provisions, in substance, were incorporated in the Code of 1878 (§ 461), in which it was declared that "the establishment and maintenance of a free public library is hereby declared to be a proper and legitimate object of municipal expenditure." Such was the law in force at the time the electors of the city of Des Moines voted to accept its provisions, and to establish a free public library. By chapter 41, Acts 25th Gen. Assem., it was provided that in any city which had accepted the provisions of Code, § 461, there should be created a board of library trustees, to be appointed by the mayor, with the approval of the council. That act vested in said board full power of control over the library, including the power to appoint and remove librarians and employees; that they should have full power over the moneys raised for the library by taxation; and said act also contained the following, viz.: "The board of library trustees shall, before the 1st day of August in each year, determine and fix the amount of rate to be appropriated for one year under § 461 of the Code of Iowa for the maintenance of such library, and cause the same so fixed to be certified to the council, and the council shall make such appropriation and levy the necessary tax for such year to raise said sum and certify the percentage or rate not exceeding one mill on the dollar or such tax to the county auditor, . . . provided that in cities of the first class the city council may and shall levy and certify such further sum of tax as it may deem expedient to create a sinking fund and pay interest under the provisions of chapter 18, Acts of the 22d General Assembly, and acts amendatory thereof." By chapter 99 of the Acts of the same general assembly power was conferred upon the city to levy and collect a tax of not exceeding three mills on the dollar to pay interest on any indebtedness theretofore contracted or to be thereafter contracted or incurred for the purchase of real estate and the erection of a building or buildings for a public library, and to create a sinking fund for the payment of such indebtedness. By chapter 5, Acts 26th Gen. Assem., the tax was authorized to be collected annually. By chapter 50, Acts 26th Gen. Assem., it was provided that the board of library trustees should determine and fix the rate, not exceeding one mill on the dollar, for the maintenance of the library, and not exceeding three mills on the dollar for the purpose of paying for a building and the creation of a sinking fund, and "cause each of the amounts or rates so determined and fixed to be certified to the council, and the council shall levy the taxes necessary to raise said sums respectively for such year and certify the percentage or rates . . . of such tax to the county auditor." In pursuance of the provisions of chapter 41, Acts 25th Gen. Assem., a board of library trustees had been appointed. In March, 1892, the city of Des Moines, as it then existed, by a vote of the electors accepted the benefit of the law relating to public libraries. Prior to the passage of the acts of the 26th General Assembly, the city council was clearly invested with discretionary power as to levying a tax for a library building and for the creation of a sinking fund. The act of the 26th General Assembly in terms seems to require the council to levy and certify the tax certified to it for maintenance and for building or sinking fund so long as the same does not exceed the amount provided by the statute.

39 L. R. A.

3. The questions involved in this appeal are of great interest and importance. Irrespective of our duty to uphold the act of the legislature as constitutional, if it be possible to do so without doing violence to well-known legal principles and accepted canons of construction, our interest in the welfare of the people, which is so largely promoted by the establishment and maintenance of public libraries, would prompt us to give the questions presented most careful consideration. If it be conceded that a tax for the maintenance of a public library and for the erection of a library building is a tax for a public purpose, and hence one which, in furtherance of the general public policy of the state, may be compelled to be levied, may the legislature authorize its levy by the board of library trustees? Touching the power of the legislature to delegate the taxing power, Judge Cooley says: "It is a general rule of constitutional law that a sovereign power conferred by the people upon any one branch or department of the government is not to be delegated by that branch or department to any other. This is a principle which pervades our whole political system, and, when properly understood, permits of no exception. And it is applicable with peculiar force to the case of taxation. The power to tax is a legislative power. The people have created a legislative department for the exercise of the legislative power; and within that power lies the authority to prescribe the rules of taxation, and to regulate the manner in which those rules shall be given effect. . . . There is, nevertheless, one clearly defined exception to the rule that the legislature shall not delegate any portion of its authority. The exception, however, is strictly in harmony with the general features of our political system, and it rests upon an implication of popular assent which is conclusive. This exception relates to the case of municipal corporations. Immemorial custom, which tacitly or expressly has been incorporated in the several state Constitutions, has made these organizations a necessary part of the general machinery of state government, and they are allowed large authority in matters of local government, and to a considerable extent are permitted to make the local laws. This indulgence has been carried into matters of taxation; the state in very many cases doing little beyond prescribing rules of limitation within which for local purposes the local authorities may levy taxes. . . . The legislature, however, in thus making delegation of the power to tax, must take it to the corporation itself, and provide for its exercise by the proper legislative authority of the corporation. . . . What is true of the state is equally true of the municipalities; that the power they possess to tax must be exercised by the corporation itself and cannot be delegated to its officers or other agencies." Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. pp. 61, 63, 65. The doctrine laid down by the learned author is that the delegation of the power to tax by the legislature must be made to the municipality itself, and that it cannot be delegated to other agencies.

The Constitution of the state of Illinois contains the following provision: "The corporate authorities of counties, townships, school districts, cities, towns, and villages may be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes." Ill. Const. 1848, art. 9, § 5. In construing this provision, the supreme court of that state said that the phrase "corporate authorities," as used in the Constitution, must be understood as "those municipal officers who are either directly elected by the people to be taxed, or appointed in some mode to which they have given their assent." People, McCagg, v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 278. The same court, in construing the same constitutional provision, said: "The power of taxation is, of all the powers of government, the one most liable to abuse, even when exercised by the direct representatives of the people; and if committed to persons who may exercise it over others without reference to their consent, the certainty of its abuse would be simply a question of time. No person or class of persons can be safely intrusted with irresponsible power over the property of others, and such a power is essentially despotic in its nature, and violative of all just principles of government. It matters not that, as in the present instance, it is to be professedly exercised for public uses, by expending for the public benefit the tax collected. If it be a tax, as in the present instance, to which the persons who are to pay it have never given their consent, and imposed by persons acting under no responsibility of official position, and clothed with no authority, of any kind, by those whom they propose to tax, it is, to the extent of such tax, misgovernment of the same character which our forefathers thought just cause of revolution. We are of opinion that we do no violence to the language of the clause in the Constitution we have been considering, by holding that it was designed to prevent such ill-advised legislation as the delegation of the taxing power to any person or persons other than the corporate authorities of the municipality or district to be taxed. These authorities are elected by the people to be taxed, or appointed in some mode to which the people have given their assent, and to them alone can this power be safely delegated." Harvard v. St. Clair & M. Levee & D. Co. 51 Ill. 130. In still another case, in which the constitutionality of the metropolitan police act of the city of East St.

Louis was under consideration, and in which the police commissioners were appointed by the act, and given power, not to levy a tax, but to estimate what sum of money would be necessary for each fiscal year to enable them to discharge the duties imposed upon them, and the act required the city council to appropriate and set apart the amount so certified out of the general fund of the city, and, in case the council failed so to do, then it was made the duty of the board of commissioners to issue certificates of indebtedness in the name of the city for the amounts so certified, the court said: "These police commissioners are not the corporate authorities of East St. Louis, and therefore can have no power of taxation. They are not elected by the people of that city, nor appointed in any mode to which the people have given their assent. The act creating them has never been accepted by the people or by the city council, but, on the other hand, as alleged in the bill, the council has constantly denied the authority of the commissioners." Hinsæ v. People, Halbert, 92 Ill. 406. See also Updike v. Wright, 81 Ill. 49; People, Dunham, v. Morgan, 90 Ill. 558.

The legislature of the state of Kansas passed an act authorizing the creation of a board of road commissioners, and empowering them, among other things, to levy taxes. The act was held unconstitutional. Wyandotte County Comrs. v. Abbott, 52 Kan. 148. The question of the constitutionality of the same act came before the Federal court, and the court said: "Does the Constitution of the state of Kansas authorize the legislature to delegate the power of taxation either to the signers of these petitions or to these road commissioners? Can a tax be arbitrarily forced upon the taxpayers of a county, either by the individuals or by officials in whose appointment they have no voice? The power of taxation is a power inherent in all governments. In a constitutional government, the people by the Constitution confer it on the legislature. It is one of the highest attributes of sovereignty. It includes the power to destroy. It appropriates the property and labor of the people taxed. Unrestrained power of taxation necessarily leads to tyranny and despotism. Hence, in all free governments, the power to tax must be limited to the necessities for the purposes of government, and the agencies for local taxation should be fixed and their powers limited by organic law: and they should be so selected as to be directly answerable for their official acts to their local constituencies or districts to be taxed. If they act corruptly those directly interested may then remove them, and appoint others. If those directly interested have no voice in their appointment or power to remove them, they have no means of correcting their abuses. No other rule can secure those to be taxed from oppression and fraud on the part of the taxing officers. In McCullough v. Maryland, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 428, 4 L. ed. 606, Marshall, Ch. J., said: 'The only security against the abuse of this power [the taxing power] is found in the structure of our government itself. In imposing a tax the legislature acts upon its constituents. This is, in general, a sufficient security against erroneous and oppressive taxation.' This reasoning applies with equal force to all kinds of taxation, and has been applied as well to local assessments or improvement districts as to taxes levied in local, political, and municipal corporations. . . . Self-taxation, or taxation by officers chosen by or answerable to those directly interested in the district to be taxed, is inseparable from that protection of the right of property that is either expressly or impliedly guaranteed by all written Constitutions, under our system of government. Of all the powers of government the one most liable to abuse is the power of taxation. If placed in hands irresponsible to the people of the district to be taxed, its abuse is a mere question of time. . . . The act is a plain violation of the principle of self-taxation, and a clear invasion of the right of property. . . . The legislature is not the fountain—not the source—of power. Under our system of government the legislature can exercise only such powers as the people have delegated to that body, either expressly or by necessary implication, by the Constitution. All rights not so delegated are retained by the people. The right to life, liberty, and property is among the inherent and inalienable rights that the people did not commit to the legislature. Constitutions are adopted and governments administered for the protection, and not for the destruction, of these reserved rights of the people. . . . Illegal or oppressive taxation is destructive of the right of property, and is not government, under the Constitution, but is misgovernment." Parke v. Wyandotte County Comrs. 61 Fed. Rep. 486.

The legislature of the state of Michigan passed an act creating a board of park commissioners to be appointed by the governor, with authority to create an indebtedness, and the act was held unconstitutional. Mr. Justice Campbell, in specially concurring, said: "I am not willing, however, to leave out of view an objection which has seemed to me quite as fundamental as the one referred to, and more dangerous, if that be possible, in its tendencies. I think that the very essence of municipal existence consists in a government which allows no discretionary power beyond that of mere administration to be exercised without the immediate or ultimate control of the freemen or their immediate representatives. A city is, and must be, as I conceive, a unit for purposes of government; and all bodies employed in the service of the municipality, and not directly representing the freemen, must act as agencies subordinate to the council. If powers in any way involving the municipal prerogative can be given to any bodies except the common council, to the exclusion of any regulation or control of that body, they can all be so given, and the people may be entirely deprived of representative government. It is a misnomer to apply that term to a system where there is any legislative power over which the people's representatives have no control. A school district is as well organized a municipality as a city, and may coexist with it in territory in whole or in part, as a city may cover the territory of a county wholly or partially. There is no incompatibility between them, and both are separate and in some sense independent popular representative bodies exercising different functions. The duties of the others are no part of the ordinary concerns of towns or city corporations. But from time immemorial every municipal government, properly so called, and acting within its peculiar sphere, has acted through its common council, composed either of the burgesses or their representatives, subject in some cases to checks and vetoes, but not subject to legislation or final action in defiance of their own decisions. Their supremacy cannot be given up by themselves any more than it can be taken from them. No doubt the state can limit their powers, but it cannot transfer them. The appointment and incorporation of boards as mere agencies is competent, and may be very convenient. But making them anything but agencies is a direct invasion of representative government, and would bring into existence a class of cities unknown to our institutions, and very different from the municipal corporations recognized by our Constitution as the authorized recipients of local legislative power. Whether the law of 1871 contains any provisions obnoxious to this principle it is not necessary to discuss. But if there are such provisions, I do not conceive they could be made valid by any recognition from the city. Concurring entirely in the general views of my Brother Cooley, I have not deemed it necessary to do more than indicate very briefly my views on the point which he has waived, which, in my judgment, is inseparable from the principles underlying the decisions heretofore made in People, Le Roy, v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 108, and in People, Hubbard, v. Springwells Twp. Board, 25 Mich. 158. I therefore agree in the conclusion of my brethren." People, Park Comrs., v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202.

Under our Constitution the power of taxation has been vested by the people in the legislature. Iowa Const. art. 3, § 1; Davenport v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 38 Iowa, 643. There is no express constitutional restriction or limitation upon the power of the legislature in this state, and that body may, for proper and legitimate purposes, confer the taxing power upon municipalities. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 740; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 18, 71. Nevertheless, in the absence of such constitutional restriction, the power of the legislature to confer the right of taxation is limited by implication. Prouty v. Stover, 11 Kan. 225. So it is said in Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 73, 1 Am. Rep. 215: "It cannot be maintained that the Constitution confers upon the state government absolute and unlimited legislative power, authorizing all laws affecting the rights and property of the people, not expressly prohibited by that instrument. . . . There is, as it were, back of the written Constitution, an unwritten Constitution, if I may use the expression, which guarantees and well protects all absolute rights of the people. The government can exercise no power to impair or deny them. Many of them may not be enumerated in the Constitution, nor preserved by express provisions thereof, notwithstanding they exist, and are possessed by the people, free from governmental interference." We say, then, that there is an implied limitation upon the power of the legislature to delegate the power of taxation. This, of necessity, must be so, otherwise the legislature might clothe any person with the power to levy taxes, regardless of the will of those upon whom such burdens would be cast, and such person might be directly responsible to no one. Whatever the effect of the constitutional provisions in Illinois and Kansas may be, the reasoning of the cases is in line with the views expressed by Judge Cooley, and it is equally applicable to cases where there are no express constitutional limitations. It is said that it is not true that power to determine the rate of taxes must be committed to the proper legislative authority of the corporation, and certain instances in this state are cited as the power given the executive council to determine the rate of tax for state purposes. Code 1878, § 835. But counsel have cited no instances in the legislation of this state, and we have found none, where the power to tax was conferred upon a board or officer not elected by and immediately responsible to the people, and we are unwilling to extend the right to delegate such power to any body or person not directly representing the people. The danger which lies in delegating such power to any person or board not directly responsible to the taxpayers is so forcibly set forth in the citations we have made that we need not enlarge upon it. If the power to tax may be by them vested in a board of library trustees, against the will of the people, it may be reposed in any other body which is not directly accountable to the people.

Counsel for appellants rely upon the cases of Baltimore v. State, Board of Police, 15 Md. 376, 74 Am. Dec. 572, and State, Merrick, v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct. 33 Minn. 236. The latter case, in its facts, is so different from the case at bar as not to support the contention of appellant; and the Maryland case sustained the constitutionality of an act authorizing the board of police commissioners to levy and collect taxes for the support of the police department of the city. If this case is sustainable at all, it is upon the theory that the state may insist upon the proper exercise of the police power by a municipality, and, if the municipality fails so to do, the state may arbitrarily provide therefor. This is on the theory that one of the objects of the government of the state is to preserve peace and good order.

We have treated this statute as, in effect, authorizing the library board to levy the tax. In fact, it in terms directs them to fix and determine the amount of the tax, which, upon being certified to the council, it must levy. The right to thus fix and determine is equivalent to the right to levy. Now, the uses to which this tax is to be put are local, and the benefits to be derived from such library must necessarily inure mostly to the people of the city of Des Moines. Such being the case, we think that the legislature had no power to vest the levying of this tax in a body not directly responsible to the people of the city. The levy and collection of a tax is a taking of the property of the taxpayer against his will, and such a necessary, arbitrary, and far-reaching power ought not to be conferred upon a body of persons who are not the direct representatives of the people, who are not elected by them, and who, therefore, are not directly responsible to them unless the people assent thereto.

4. The remaining question is, Have the people of the city of Des Moines in any manner assented to the exercise of the power of taxation attempted to be conferred upon and exercised by the board of library trustees? The people of the city did by vote accept the provisions of the law as it then existed. The law then did not authorize any increase in taxation, and the library was under the direct control and management of the city council, who were elected by the people. By subsequent acts of the legislature a board of trustees was established, and their duties and powers fixed; the control and management of the library was by statute vested in said board, and the board was vested with the power of absolutely determining the amount of tax that should be levied. It will be seen that the people assented by their vote to maintaining a public library, which should be under the control of the council which they elected. They never consented to the creation of a board of library trustees which should be in control of the library, and be substantially vested with the power to levy taxes without the consent and against the will of the people. The placing of the extraordinary power of taxation in a body not the direct creation of, or directly responsible to, the people, was in no way involved in the vote of the people had before such powers were conferred or thought of. Here, by an act passed subsequent to the vote of the people, the legislature empowers an irresponsible board (irresponsible in the sense that they are not directly accountable to the people) to fix a tax levy limited in the amount which may be raised each year, but unlimited in duration; so that millions of dollars may be accumulated without consulting the people, or their immediate representatives, the city council. It may be doubted if any statute of this state can be found wherein such extended and unlimited power as to duration of time has been granted to a body of persons to fix what taxes shall be levied for any such purpose. This law authorizes a levy annually upon the taxable property of the city for the purpose of purchasing real estate, and the erection of a building, and to create a sinking fund; absolutely no limit as to the number of years said tax may be levied. Under its provisions millions may be accumulated and spent, and if appellant's theory is correct the taxpayer who assented to the formation and maintenance of a public library simply was then voting upon himself a burden of taxation for a library building and ground which might be endless in duration as to the ultimate amount to be raised, and which might be invested in a building the cost of which would likewise be unlimited. That a body or board, not elected by the people, and not directly responsible to them, should have been clothed by the legislature with such extraordinary powers without proper safeguards to protect the people from unnecessary taxation—which is confiscation—is marvelous. The people of the city of Des Moines never assented by vote or otherwise to any such legislation. Cornell v. People, 107 Ill. 372.

Nor can we agree to the contention that, in 39 L. R. A.

asmuch as the people elect the city council and the mayor, and the mayor appoints the library board with the consent of the council, therefore such board is, in fact, selected by the people, or that thereby the people assented to the legislation creating the board and endowing it with the power to fix and determine the taxes to be levied. If such contention was correct, it would be difficult to find a case of an officer or board vested with taxing powers, no matter by whom appointed, when by the same process of reasoning the original power could not be traced through various offices or agencies to the people themselves. Suppose the act at bar had provided that the board of library trustees for the public library of the city could be appointed by the governor of the state, it would not be contended for a moment that the people by voting for and electing the governor who appoints such a board, thereby gave their assent to such a mode of appointment. No more do they when they elect the mayor and council, whom they must elect in order that the proper business of the municipality may be carried on. Under such an argument, any violation of the taxing power might be ultimately traced to the people, who are the original source of all political power in a government like ours. The power to determine and levy taxes is inherent in government. Its exercise for proper purposes is essential to the very existence of government. When exercised in a lawful manner, and by proper agencies of the state, the burdens imposed must be borne by those upon whom they fall; but when exercised by officers and bodies charged with no direct responsibility to the people the temptation to place upon the people unnecessary burdens under the guise of taxation, and to take from them a portion of their property not needed for legitimate purposes of government, is great. It may be admitted in the case before us that the board of library trustees is composed of high-minded, honorable men and women, and it may be that this board is better qualified to know what such tax should be than is the city council. However that may be, the principle is wrong, and the power of taxation attempted to be conferred upon the trustees is a long step in the direction of permitting boards not elected by or directly responsible to the people to determine what burden the taxpayers' property shall bear. We hold that no officer and no board not elected by and immediately responsible to the people can be made the repository of such power. If this power was given to the city council, and it was abused, the people could, at least, prevent a recurrence of the wrong at the polls; but if it be reposed in a body not elected by the people the remedy is uncertain, indirect, and likely to be long delayed. The absolutely unlimited power of taxation, as to duration, attempted to be conferred by the act under consideration, is of itself a forcible reminder that the power to fix, determine, and levy a tax for local purposes should be conferred upon some body which stands as the direct representative of the people to the end that an abuse of such power may be speedily and directly corrected by those whose property must bear such burdens. The act in question is unconstitutional in so far as it undertakes to confer the arbitrary power upon the board of library trustees to fix and determine the amount of tax to be levied for the purposes therein mentioned, and the city council cannot be compelled to levy (regardless of any discretion) the amounts fixed by the library board, and certified to said council. The questions involved in the case were not raised or considered in Orvis v. Des Moines Park Comrs. 88 Iowa, 674.

The action of the district court in refusing a writ of mandamus and in rendering a judgment against the plaintiff for costs was correct, and the judgment is affirmed.

BROWN SHOE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

Frank HUNT.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. Samples belonging to his employer may be retained to satisfy the hotel bill of a traveling salesman, under a statute authorizing the retention of all property under the control of guests which may be in the hotel.

2. A statute making an employer's samples liable to a lien for hotel bills of his traveling salesman in whose possession they are does not deprive him of his property without due process of law.

(October 23, 1897.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Woodbury County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover possession of certain sample cases and their contents. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Lynn & Foley, for appellant:

Appellee having received the goods, knowing them to be the property of a third party, and that they were not owned by his guest, his lien, if he had any as innkeeper, did not attach.

Cook v. Kane, 13 Or. 482; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Miller, 52 Minn. 516, 21 L. R. A. 229; Covington v. Neuberger, 99 N. C. 523.

The goods were not of such character as to be classed as goods for the convenience or comfort of the guest, but rather such as would enable a person to carry on a trade or business.

Mowers v. Fethers, 61 N. Y. 34, 19 Am. Rep. 244; The Innkeepers' Lien and the Commercial Traveler, 80 Am. Law Rev. p. 142; Fisher v. Kelsoy, 121 U. S. 383, 30 L. ed. 930.

In a judicial proceeding, due process of law requires notice, hearing, and judgment—any orderly proceeding adapted to the nature of the case in which the citizen has an opportunity to be heard and to defend and protect his rights.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 43; People, Witherbee, v. Essex County Supers. 70 N. Y. 284.

The statute in question makes no provisions for the bringing in of a third party or notifying him in any manner of the attempt to enforce said innkeeper's lien, and nothing of the kind was attempted in this case.

Zeigler v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 58 Ala.

NOTE.—As to innkeeper's liens, see note to Singer Mfg. Co. v. Miller (Minn.) 21 L. R. A. 229, 39 L. R. A.

599; South Platte Land Co. v. Buffalo County Comrs. 7 Neb. 258; Hutson v. Woodbridge Protection Dist. No. 1, 79 Cal. 90.

Private property cannot be taken from one person and delivered to another person or applied to the private use of another except by suit instituted and conducted in accordance with the prescribed course of procedure for determining the title to property.

Re Haich, 11 Jones & S. 91.

Neither can it be claimed that the legislative act is due process of law, as it simply undertakes to appropriate the property of one citizen for the use of another.

People, Herrick, v. Smith, 21 N. Y. 598; Garrison v. New York, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 196, 22 L. ed. 612.

Notice is absolutely essential to the validity of the proceeding, and while it may be given by citation in some cases, possibly by statute in others, yet it must be given in some form.

San Mateo County v. Southern P. R. Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 145; Fleming v. Hull, 73 Iowa, 598.

Messrs. S. J. Quincy and Wright & Hubbard for appellee.

Kinne, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause was determined upon the following agreed statement of facts: "This is an action in replevin, in which the Brown Shoe Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Missouri, is plaintiff, and Frank Hunt, of Sioux City, Iowa, is defendant. That immediately prior to and within the last two years, before the commencement of this action, the defendant was the agent and general manager of and for Lola M. Hunt, the proprietor of the New Oxford Hotel, in Sioux City, Iowa. That said hotel was kept for the general accommodation of the general traveling public. That one M. K. Sheehan applied for and was furnished meals, lodgings, extras, and accommodations usually furnished the general public at inns and hotels as a guest of said hotel, which said accommodations were furnished by defendant. That said accommodations so furnished were of the value of $68.60, all of which remains due and unpaid. That, at the time the accommodations for which defendant claims a lien were furnished to the said M. K. Sheehan, the said Sheehan was the authorized traveling agent and salesman of the plaintiff, and engaged in the prosecution of its business; and that the goods described in plaintiff's petition, and taken under the writ of replevin herein, were the samples of stock and the cases containing the same furnished by the plaintiff to the said M. K. Sheehan, for his use in the prosecution of the plaintiff's business. That the amount charged against the said M. K. Sheehan, and for which defendant claims a lien upon the goods in controversy, is the fair and reasonable price of the accommodations furnished by the defendant to the said M. K. Sheehan. That at the time the said M. K. Sheehan became a guest of said hotel, the property and goods described in the petition were in his actual possession and under his control in said hotel, and remained in his possession and under his control in said hotel up to the time when said M. K. Sheehan departed therefrom, and said goods and chattels remained at said hotel until the same were taken under the writ of replevin issued in this action. That the defendant took possession of said goods and chattels described in the petition, and held possession thereof as security for the accommodations furnished to said M. K. Sheehan at said hotel as a guest thereof and does not claim to have any other or further interest in said goods and chattels, except that defendant claims he is entitled to a lien thereon for the value of the accommodations so furnished to the said M. K. Sheehan, under the statutes of this state. That the said goods and chattels were at all times the property of plaintiff, and were at the time the said defendant took possession thereof. The plaintiff's ownership of said goods was well known to the defendant while said M. K. Sheehan was a guest at said hotel, and at the time he took possession of the same. That the plaintiff, before the commencement of this action, demanded the possession of said goods and chattels. That the value of said property is as stated in the petition. That the goods and chattels described in plaintiff's petition were taken under the writ of replevin in this action, and delivered to the plaintiff, and have ever since remained in the possession of the plaintiff. That, in case the plaintiff recovers in this action, it is entitled to the possession of said property, and judgment against the defendant for costs. That, in case defendant prevails in this action, he is entitled to a judgment against the plaintiff, and upon the replevin bond filed in this action and the securities thereon, to the amount of $68.60, and costs of this action." The cause was tried to the court, and a judgment entered in favor of the defendant, and against the plaintiff for $68.60, and for costs, from which plaintiff appeals.

2. Our statute provides: "All hotel, inn, or eating-house keepers shall have a lien upon, and may take and retain possession of, all baggage and other property belonging to or under the control of their guests, which may be in such hotel, inn, or eating-house, for the value of their accommodations and keep, and for all money paid for or advanced to, and for such extras and other things as shall be furnished such guest, and such property so retained shall not be exempt from attachment or execution to the amount of the proper and reasonable charges of such hotel, inn, or eating-house keeper against such guest, and costs of enforcing the lien thereon." Acts 18th Gen. Assem. chap. 181, § 2. It appears from the statement of facts that defendant knew that the goods upon which he claims a lien did not belong to his guest, but were the property of the plaintiff. It is therefore contended that his inn-keeper's lien did not attach to them. Counsel cite several cases in support of such contention. They were cases where the lien claimed was the common-law lien, and not one created by the statute. This applies also to the claim that the goods were not of such a character as to be considered as for the convenience or comfort of the guest, but rather such as enabled the guest to carry on a trade or business. The common-law doctrine that the inn keeper could have no lien against the property of third parties, he knowing their ownership when he received the guest and the property, has been changed by our statute. Under our statute the inn keepers may "take and retain possession of all baggage and other property belonging to or under the control of their guests, which may be in such hotel or inn." Clearly, the legislature intended by the words used to give a lien, not only upon the property in fact belonging to the guest, and which was in the hotel or inn, but likewise a lien upon property placed therein which was under the guest's control. The guest in this instance was a traveling man, selling goods by sample, and the lien is claimed upon these sample goods and the receptacles in which they were contained. These goods were used in the prosecution of his business as a salesman. The nature and character of his occupation were such that plaintiff must be held to know he would be compelled to stop at hotels or inns, and that, in the proper prosecution of his avocation, he would need his sample goods in such hotels or inns. The statute clearly covers such goods as they were, under the control of the guest.

3. The statute is not unconstitutional. It does not deprive the owner of his property without due process of law. It simply provides for a lien and a possession, and makes no provision as to how the lien shall be enforced.

The judgment below is affirmed.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS

Thomas J. WILSON et al., Appls.,

v.

S. B. HUGHES et al.

(.....W. Va.....)

*1. Petroleum oil, as it is found in the cavities of the rock, is part of the realty, and embraced

*Headnotes by ENGLISH, P.

NOTE.—As to rights of life tenants in mines, see also Koen v. Bartlett (W. Va.) 31 L. R. A. 128; Marshall v. Mellon (Pa.) 35 L. R. A. 816; Williamson v. Jones (W. Va.) 38 L. R. A. 604.
39 L. R. A.

in the comprehensive idea which the law attaches to the word "land."

2. The only manner in which a guardian can lease or sell the land of his ward for the purpose of its development, or any other purpose, is in the manner prescribed by statute, under a decree of the court.

3. The petroleum oil underlying a tract of land which has been devised to a life tenant who is in possession, and which is to go to certain infant children after the decease of the life tenant, may be sold, upon the petition of the guardian of said infants, under the provisions of chapter 88 of the Code, or leased; and the life tenant will be entitled to the interest on the royalty during the continuance of the life estate, and then the residue or corpus of the royalty will be paid to the remaindermen.

4. An oil lease, investing the lessee with the right to remove all the oil in place in the premises, in consideration of his giving the lessors a certain per cent thereof, is, in legal effect, a sale of a portion of the land, and the proceeds represent the respective interests of the lessors in the premises.

(November 17, 1897.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Marion County dismissing a bill filed to compel an accounting for oil which had been taken from land in which complainants claimed an interest. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John Bassel, Charles Powell, and William P. Hubbard, for appellants:

The infant need not wait until attaining his majority before exercising his right to assail or set aside a decree affecting his rights which is erroneous, but the period of six months named in the statute is merely the limit of time within which such a proceeding will be entertained.

Tyler, Infancy, 2d ed. § 150; Powell v. Koehler, 52 Ohio St. 108, 26 L. R. A. 480; Walker v. Page, 21 Gratt. 686; Durrett v. Davis, 24 Gratt. 305; Hull v. Hull, 26 W. Va. 1.

Oil in place is part of the body of real estate.

Williamson v. Jones, 39 W. Va. 231, 25 L. R. A. 222.

Courts of chancery, independently of chap. 88, § 12, of the Code, have the right in just such cases as this to prevent injury to the inheritance, and the rules under which a court acts in such cases are well settled.

Tooker v. Annesley, 5 Sim. 285; Waldo v. Waldo, 7 Sim. 261, 12 Sim. 107; Tollemache v. Tollemache, 1 Hare, 456; Ferrand v. Wilson, 4 Hare, 381; Consett v. Bell, 1 Younge & C. Ch. Cas. 569; Gent v. Harrison, Johns. 517; Story, Eq. § 919, and cases cited in note.

The statute for the sale of infants' real estate must be strictly pursued or the proceeding is a nullity. The statute does not authorize a barter or exchange, and does not authorize a sale for anything but a money price.

Perin v. Megibben, 6 U. S. App. 348, 53 Fed. Rep. 86, 3 C. C. A. 443; Faulkner v. Davis, 18 Gratt. 657; Pierce v. Trigg, 10 Leigh. 410.

While the statute in relation to the sale of infants' lands is remedial in its nature and is to be construed liberally, that means that it is to be construed as bringing within its purview like cases as to which the literal meaning of the words did not extend, but which were within the legislative policy indicated by the statute, as in—

Faulkner v. Davis, 18 Gratt. 669.

The most that was ever done or claimed for the life tenant was to give him the interest of the proceeds of the timber sold.

Hussey v. Hussey, 5 Madd. 35; Delapole v. Delapole, 17 Ves. Jr. 151; Milamay v. Milamay, 4 Bro. Ch. 76.

The court will direct the interest of the proceeds to be paid to the tenant for life, though impeachable for waste.

89 L. R. A.

Fletcher v. Ashburner, 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 1008.

The courts of this country decide kindred questions upon the same ground, that it is done for the preservation of value and the benefit of those who may become entitled.

2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 919.

Equity will in any proper case interfere in cases where the tenant in possession is impeachable for waste, and direct timber to be felled which is fit to be cut down and in danger of running into decay, and will thus secure the proceeds for the benefit of those entitled.

1 Spelling, Extraordinary Relief, § 252.

Courts of equity are always prompted to action by the necessity of preserving the property and its value; thus they will not permit an engine and boilers to be torn out of a sawmill and sold separately.

Witmer's Appeal, 9 Wright (Pa.) 455.

Infants are under the special protection of courts of equity whose duty it is to vacate every judgment and decree by which injustice has been done to them.

Newland v. Gentry, 18 B. Mon. 866; Berrett v. Oliver, 7 Gill & J. 191; Lefevre v. Laraway, 22 Barb. 167.

Mr. John W. Mason for appellees.

English, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

J. D. Youst, by his last will and testament, bearing date on the 29th day of November, 1881, devised his home tract of land, situated in Marion county, West Virginia, to his wife, Susanna Youst, during her natural life, and at the death of said Susanna Youst said tract of land was devised to Hermentia Wilson, the wife of Alpheus M. Wilson, during her natural life, to be held by her free from the control of her husband, Alpheus Wilson, as her separate property and estate, and to descend to her heirs at her death; stating in said will that it was his intention to give said home tract of land to his wife for and during her life, and after her decease to the said Hermentia C. Wilson for and during her life, and at her death to descend to her heirs, but with the following charge, limitation, and direction, viz.: That if the said Hermentia C. Wilson should not survive his wife, so as to come in possession of said home tract of land, and, dying during the lifetime of his wife, should leave, surviving her (said Hermentia C. Wilson), no child or children, nor the descendants of any children, then, instead of said tract of land going to the heirs of Hermentia C., he directed that one half of said home tract of land should, at the death of his wife, go to, and be the property of, her said husband, Alpheus M. Wilson, if living, and the other half to the heirs of his sister, Eliza Wade, and the heirs of his deceased brother, Nicholas B. Youst, by his first wife, etc. This will was duly admitted to probate on the 14th day of March, 1889. Alpheus M. Wilson died on the 29th day of November, 1891, and left surviving him, by his wife, Hermentia, three children,—Thomas J., Jehu D., and Clarence L. Wilson. Another child (Stella May Wilson) was born January 11, 1891, and died in April, 1892. After the death of her husband, Alpheus M. Wilson, his widow, Hermentia, was married on the 8th day of June, 1893, to one James W. Powell, by whom she had one child, named Minnie C. Powell, and died in November, 1893, leaving, surviving her, her husband, said James W. Powell, and four children,—three by the first husband, and one by the latter. On the 12th day of July, 1890, the said Susanna Youst, and Hermentia C. Wilson and A. M. Wilson, her husband, and Alpheus M. Wilson, as guardian of Thomas J. Wilson, Jehu D. Wilson, and Clarence L. Wilson, infant children of said Hermentia C. Wilson, leased said tract of land, containing 255 acres, more or less, to the firm of C. E. Wells & Co., for the purpose of mining and operating thereon for oil and gas, for the consideration of one-eighth royalty for all oil removed, and $200 a year for the gas from each and every gas well drilled on said premises. On the — day of November, 1890, the said Alpheus M. Wilson, as guardian for Thomas J. Wilson, Jehu D. Wilson, and Clarence L. Wilson, infant children of Hermentia C. Wilson and Alpheus M. Wilson, filed a petition in the circuit court of Marion county, pursuant to § 12 of chap. 83 of the Code of West Virginia, praying the sale of the interest of his wards in the oil and gas underlying or contained in said tract of land; and such proceedings were had therein that on the 29th day of November, 1890, a decree was entered by said circuit court directing that said A. M. Wilson, as such guardian, should sell the oil and gas underlying said land, either at public or private sale, by making a lease of said land for oil purposes for a term of years, for which the lessee was to deliver one eighth of the oil as rental or royalty, one third of which eighth was to be delivered to the said three infants or their guardian. It appears that in pursuance of said decree the guardian of said infants executed a lease of said land, or of the infants' interest in the oil therein, to C. E. Wells and others, who subsequently assigned said lease to the South Penn Oil Company, and reported said lease to the court, which was confirmed in December, 1890. It further appears that the said South Penn Oil Company proceeded at once to bore for oil on said land, and has produced a large quantity of oil from it; that by the 1st day of June, 1894, the royalty of one eighth of the oil obtained from said land amounted in value to the sum of $22,000. Said Susanna Youst and Hermentia C. Wilson, shortly after the rendering of said decree, assigned two thirds of said one eighth of said royalty to one S. B. Hughes, who up to the 1st day of July, 1894, had received about $15,000 as the two thirds of said royalty thus assigned to him. After the lease of said land for oil purposes was confirmed, another child was born to said Hermentia C. and Alpheus M. Wilson, which was named Stella May, and she was admitted by a subsequent decree of said court to share in said royalty; which last-named child was born on the 11th day of January, 1891, and died in April, 1892. Said Alpheus M. Wilson died on the 29th day of November, 1891. In 1893 his widow intermarried with one James W. Powell, by whom she had one child, Minnie C. Powell; and a few days after the birth of said Minnie C. Powell the said Hermentia Powell died intestate, leaving her husband, said James W. Powell, and four children; and in January, 1894, upon petition filed in the intermediate court, said Minnie C. Powell was admitted as a co-owner in the one eighth of said royalty. Said Susanna Youst is still living; and the said infant children, Thomas J. Wilson, Jehu D. Wilson, Clarence L. Wilson, and Minnie C. Powell, by their next friend, Harrison Manley, filed a bill in the circuit court of said county of Marion, attacking said proceedings as being erroneous and void so far as it was decreed that said infants should share equally with Susanna Youst and Hermentia C. Wilson and Alpheus M. Wilson, her husband, in the value and production of the oil and gas in and under the land in said petition and exhibits described, giving to said infants the one third of said royalty; claiming that, said oil being part of the real estate, the life tenant, during her natural life, was entitled to the interest upon the sum realized as royalty, and that said Hughes as assignee of the life tenants, should be compelled to account for all money received by him as royalty in excess of annual interest upon the one eighth of the oil paid by said lessee, and praying the appointment of a receiver to collect said royalty during the life of said Susanna Youst, and that he be required to pay the interest annually upon the same to said Hughes, and that the entire principal should at the death of said Susanna Youst be paid to petitioners. The complainants in said bill alleged that the decree of November 29, 1890, was based upon the supposition that the three children of said A. M. Wilson and Hermentia C. Wilson were the owners in fee simple of said land subject to the life estate of said Susanna Youst and said Hermentia, and ignored the fact that other and different persons might be the heirs at law of said Hermentia at her death; and they further alleged that the circuit court of Marion county had no authority to take from the complainants, and give to said Susanna Youst and Hermentia C. Wilson any part of the body of said real estate, as was done by said decree of November 29, 1890, and the subsequent decree confirming the sale to said Wells.

The South Penn Oil Company answered said bill, in which answer, after stating the manner in which it claimed the right to the lease of said tract of land for oil purposes, it alleged that said royalty of one eighth of all the oil produced and saved from said land had been delivered to the Eureka Pipe-Line Company, a common carrier of oil, in accordance with the rules and customs of the business, and in accordance with the terms and provisions of said contract, and the proceedings and decrees under which said interests were sold, and under which its right accrued to bore for and produce said oil, and that all of said one-eighth royalty of the said oil as was produced and saved from said land, except so much thereof as may remain unsold and in the custody of the pipe-line company, had been delivered to S. B. Hughes, assignee and grantee of Susanna Youst and Hermentia C. Wilson, and to the guardian of said infants, in accordance with the said decrees and contracts. It denies every allegation of said bill that is in any way intended or calculated to raise any question affecting respondent's title to the oil and gas in said land, and the proper delivery and disposal of the one-eighth royalty of said oil to the persons entitled thereto according to the contracts and decrees of the court creating title in respondent to such oil, and avers that it is not interested, as between the plaintiffs in the case and the defendant S. B. Hughes, as to how the royalty of one eighth of said oil should be thereafter disposed of, but claims that so much of said royalty as has been delivered to the said pipe-line company, or has been disposed of by the plaintiffs or the defendant S. B. Hughes, has been delivered in accordance with the provisions and requirements of said contracts and decrees entered by the court in said proceedings, which said decrees, respondent avers, fully protect said respondent in the delivery and disposition of said royalty of oil so made as aforesaid. Respondent further avers that the payment, delivery, and disposal of said royalty of oil produced from said land was legally made, delivered, and disposed of strictly in accordance with the requirements and provisions of said decrees of said court, to the persons legally entitled thereto under the provisions of said decrees; and it denies the right of the complainants to have said decrees, or either of them, set aside or annulled, or in any manner changed to such an extent as would in any way or manner affect the rights and interests of respondent, or in any way make the said respondent liable to account for such part of said royalty of oil as has been delivered or disposed of by said respondent to said S. B. Hughes under the provisions of said decrees and said contracts and deeds; and said respondent further averred that said orders and decrees under and by which said royalty of oil was delivered and disposed of were pronounced and entered in and by a court of competent jurisdiction, and in and by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter disposed of by said decrees. S. B. Hughes and the Eureka Pipe-Line Company also filed answers to said bill, putting in issue its allegations. The cause was heard on the 18th of July, 1894, and the court dismissed the plaintiffs' bill with costs; and from this decree the plaintiffs obtained this appeal.

The first error assigned by the appellants is that "the circuit court, in its decree of November 29, 1890, erred in directing that two thirds of the royalty or rental reserved by said decree should be paid or delivered to the said Susanna Youst and Hermenia C. Wilson, the life tenants, for the reason that the oil contained in or under said land was part of the body of the estate, as much as coal or other minerals that might have been contained therein, and the court could not under the law authorizing a sale of lands held by the infants in reversion, subject to a life estate, give a part of such real estate to the life tenant; the latter being entitled only during life to the annual interest upon the fund realized from the sale or disposition of the infant's estate under the decree." In considering the questions raised by this assignment of error, and determining the rights of the respective parties to the record with reference to the matters in controversy, it is necessary to look to the source of their title. The tract of land containing 255 acres belonged to Jehu D. Youst at the time of his death; and when we look to his will for the purpose of ascertaining what disposition he made of it, and when he comes to make plain his intention respecting said tract of land, he says: "My intention being to give said home tract of land to my wife for and during her life, and after the decease of my wife to the said Hermenia C. Wilson for and during her life, and at her death to descend to her heirs, but with the following charge, limitation, and direction, viz.: That if said Hermenia C. Wilson should not survive my wife, so as to come into possession of said home tract of land, and, dying during the life of my wife, should leave surviving her (said Hermenia C. Wilson) no child or children, nor the descendants of any children," then, instead of said home tract of land going to the heirs of said Hermenia C., he directs that one half thereof shall go to said Alpheus M. Wilson, if living, and the other half to his sister, Eliza Wade, and the heirs of his deceased brother, Nicholas B. Youst, by his first wife. Under the plain provisions of this will, then, Susanna Youst took a life estate in the 255-acre tract of land, and Hermenia C. Wilson took nothing during the lifetime of said Susanna Youst; and, as it appears that said Susanna Youst survived said Hermenia C. Wilson, it follows that said Hermenia never took any interest in said tract of land. The said Hermenia C. Wilson, at her death, however, left the plaintiffs in this suit, her infant children, who, under said will were entitled to said real estate, subject to the life estate of Susanna Youst. At the time the death of said J. D. Youst occurred, no lease had been made of said land for oil purposes, and no well had been opened or commenced thereon. In March, 1889, however, said Susanna Youst, Alpheus M. Wilson, and Hermenia C. Wilson executed a paper purporting to be a lease of said land to T. M. Jackson & Co., for the purpose of mining and boring for oil upon the usual terms. On July 12, 1890, the same parties, in their own right, and the said Alpheus M. Wilson, as guardian of his three children, Thomas J., Jehu D., and Clarence L., Wilson (Stella May not having been born), made another lease of said land for oil purposes to C. E. Wells & Co., who assigned to the South Penn Oil Company. At the fall term of the circuit court, 1890, a petition was presented, under § 12 of chap. 83 of the Code, praying a sale of his ward's land; and a decree was entered in pursuance thereof, directing the sale by said guardian, through the form of a lease of the oil under said land, for which the lessee was to pay a rental of one eighth, which the court directed to be divided equally between Susanna Youst, Hermenia C. Wilson, and her three children,—one third to the children, one third to said Hermenia C. Wilson, and one third to Susanna Youst. Before the decree of November, 1890, was entered, said Susanna Youst assigned her interest in the one-eighth part of said oil to S. B. Hughes; and on December 2, 1890, Alpheus M. Wilson and his wife transferred their interest in said oil to S. B. Hughes. Now, said Susanna Youst had only a life estate in said real estate, and her rights with reference to said realty were the same as any other life tenant. No well had been commenced or completed on said land at the time of the death of her husband. Under the head of "Mines," 2 Minor. Inst. p. 147

(*128), the author says: "A widow is dowerable of mines and quarries, but only of those which were opened and worked in the husband's lifetime, although what shall be regarded as an open mine or quarry is not always easy to define. It seems that, if any part of a bed or deposit of mineral matter has been excavated for the purpose of mining, the whole bed, and the strata lying under it, are to be deemed, for dower purposes, an open mine and that new pits or shafts may be sunk for the purpose of reaching it. Nor is it less open because the working has been discontinued. On the other hand, for a dowress or any other life tenant to open new mines is waste, which will be punished with damages, and, as being of irreparable injury to the reversioner, will be inhibited by injunction from a court of equity." In the case of Crouch v. Puryear, 1 Rand. (Va.) 258, 10 Am. Dec. 528, it was held that "it is not waste in a tenant in dower of coal lands to take coal to any extent from a mine already opened, or to sink new shafts into the same veins of coal." So, Washb. Real. Prop. p. 208, states the law thus: "A widow is entitled to dower in mines belonging to her husband in fee, which may have been opened during his lifetime, whether within his own land or that of another. . . . But though she may work an open mine, under her claim of dower, to exhaustion, she may not open new ones even within the land set to her as a part of her dower."

The question is whether petroleum oil, as it is found in the rock beneath the surface, is part of the real estate in which it is found; and the same law that applies to the ownership of the surface and soil applies to it. This question has been passed upon by the courts of last resort in different states. Gould, in his valuable work on Waters, § 291, says: "Petroleum oil, like subterranean water, is included in the comprehensive idea which the law attaches to the word 'land,' and is a part of the soil in which it is found. . . . A lease of land for the purpose of mining oil, coal, rock, or carbon oil passes a corporeal interest which is the proper subject of an action of ejectment, and the sale of a proportionate part of the oil to be procured by an oil well is an interest in land, a parol sale of which is void under the statute of frauds." This question was before the supreme court of Pennsylvania in Stoughton's Appeal, 88 Pa. 198, and it was there held that "a guardian has ordinarily power to lease any of his ward's property of such character as makes it the subject of a lease; but without the approval of the orphan's court he cannot dispose of any part of the realty. Oil is a mineral, and being a mineral, is part of the realty, and a guardian cannot lease the land of his ward for the purpose of its development, as it would, in effect, be the grant of the corpus of the estate of his ward." Mr. Justice Gordon, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Oil, however, is a mineral, and being a mineral, is part of the realty; Punk v. Halde-man, 53 Pa. 229. In this it is like coal or any other natural product which in situ forms part of the land. It may become, by severance, personality, or there may be a right to use or take it, originating in custom or prescription, as the right of a life tenant to work opened mines, or to use timber for repairing buildings or fences on a farm, or for firebote. Nevertheless, whenever conveyance is made of it, whether that conveyance be called a lease or deed, it is, in effect, the grant of part of the corpus of the estate and not of a mere incorporeal right. In the case above cited, this is said to be so as to leases of coal lands for the purpose of mining, and there is no reason why the same doctrine should not apply to oil leases." This question was also before this court in the recent case of Williamson v. Jones, 39 W. Va. 281, 25 L. R. A. 222, and it was held that "petroleum or mineral oil in place is as much a part of the realty as timber, coal, iron ore, or salt water;" also, that "it is a part of the inheritance, and an unlawful removal thereof is a disherison of him in remainder, constituting waste, which a court of equity in a proper case will restrain and enjoin."

The plaintiffs in the case under consideration do not appear to be seeking to set aside the sale or lease of their interests in the 255 acres of land in controversy, but they claim that the said Susanna Youst, being entitled only to a life estate in the land, had no right to bore wells and take petroleum oil from the land, and, not having that right herself (when no well had been bored thereon in the lifetime of her husband), as a matter of course she could not assign that right to any other person. Susanna Youst survived Mrs. Hermenia Wilson, and for that reason said Hermenia took no interest in the land or the oil contained therein. But while it is true that said Susanna Youst was not entitled to any portion of the oil contained in the land, and could not bore a well for the purpose of developing the same, yet she was entitled to the surface (that is, to its possession and use during her lifetime, and could prevent any person from entering thereon for the purpose of drilling a well for oil or gas; and although this fact would not prevent the remaindermen, through their guardian, from filing a petition, under § 12 of chap. 83 of the Code, asking a sale of the oil underlying said land, and obtaining a decree for the sale thereof, upon a proper case being presented to the court, yet such decree would be useless in the absence of the consent of the life tenant, Susanna Youst, that the party to whom the oil was sold might enter upon her possession for the purpose of putting down such wells as might be necessary to bring the oil to the surface. At the time of entering this decree the said Susanna Youst and Hermenia C. Wilson were before the court, as well as the guardian and guardian ad item for the infants; and the said Susanna Youst and Hermenia C. Wilson consented that the petitioners might share equally with them in the value and production of the oil and gas in and under the land in their petition and exhibits described (that is, that said petitioners should have an estate in presenti of an undivided one third of said oil and gas in and under said land,—the said Susanna Youst one third, and the said Hermenia C. Wilson one third.) It is stated in the petition filed by A. M. Wilson, guardian for petitioners, that oil had been found in paying quantities on lands adjoining said 255 acre tract, and numerous wells were being put down near to the lines of said tract, which would exhaust the oil underlying the same, and that it was necessary that wells should be drilled at once on said 255 acre tract, or said remaindermen would be deprived of the oil underlying their land by said adjacent wells; and it is presumed that proof of these facts was before the court. It was also stated that neither petitioners nor said life tenants were peculiarly able to put down a well, and, unless a sale of the oil by means of a lease was made, they would, in all probability, be deprived of the oil therein without compensation, and it would promote the interest of said wards to have a sale of their interest therein; and the court (being of opinion that it was clearly shown by said petition and exhibits and the evidence adduced, considering the consent of Susanna Youst and Hermenia C. Wilson and Alpheus M. Wilson, her husband, that the petitioners might together share equally with them in the value and production in the oil and gas in and under the land in said petition described as thereafter decreed and provided, that the interests of the said infant defendants would be promoted by a disposition or sale of their interest in the oil and gas as prayed for in said petition as thereafter provided and decreed, and that the rights of no person would be violated thereby) proceeded to decree a sale of said oil and gas, and directed that the petitioners should have one third thereof, and Susanna Youst and Hermenia C. Wilson the other two thirds. On the 1st Monday in June, 1894, Thomas J. Wilson, Jehu D. Wilson, Clarence L. Wilson, and Minnie C. Powell, infant children of said Hermenia C. Wilson, who sued by their next friend, Harrison Manley, filed their bill in the circuit court of Marion county against Susanna Youst, S. B. Hughes, the South Penn Oil Company (a corporation), and Harrison Manley, administrator of Hermenia C. Powell, deceased, calling upon the said S. B. Hughes and said South Penn Oil Company to state how much had been paid to or received by said Hughes, as the assignee of said Hermenia C. Wilson and Susanna Youst, or in any other capacity, of the royalty paid by said South Penn Oil Company as the lessee of said land, and praying that the decree of November 29, 1890, might be set aside, so far as it gave or attempted to give to three of the complainants one third of one eighth of all oil produced from said land, and gave or attempted to give any portion of said oil to said Susanna Youst and Hermenia C. Wilson, or any other person; also, that there might be a decree against the said S. B. Hughes for all money received by him in excess of what would have been the annual interest upon the entire royalty of one eighth of the oil produced from said land; also, for a decree requiring that all money paid and received for the one-eighth royalty of oil produced from said land be placed at interest during the life of said Susanna Youst, and directing that at her death the principal of such sums be equally divided between complainants; that said South Penn Oil Company and said Eureka Pipe-Line Company be both enjoined and restrained from paying or delivering to the said S. B. Hughes any further share, price, or portion of said royalty of one eighth of the oil produced from said land, until such time as the rights of the complainants to said royalty should be ascertained and determined, and that a receiver be appointed to receive, sell, and collect the proceeds of said one eighth or royalty of oil produced from said land during the pendency of this suit, or until such time as the rights of the complainants therein might be adjudicated. Such proceedings were had in this cause that on the 18th day of July, 1894, a final decree was rendered in the cause dismissing the plaintiffs' bill, and from this decree this appeal was obtained.

39 L. R. A.

The first error relied on by the appellants is that the circuit court erred in its decree of November 29, 1890, in directing that two thirds of the royalty or rental reserved by said decree should be paid or delivered to the said Susanna Youst and Hermenia C. Wilson, the life tenants, for the reason that the oil contained in or under said land was part of the body of the estate, as much as coal or other minerals that might have been contained therein, and the court could not, under the law authorizing a sale of infants' lands held by the infants in reversion, subject to a life estate, give a part of such real estate to the life tenant, the latter being entitled only during life to the annual interest upon the fund realized from the sale of the infants' estate under the decree; and, second, for holding that such decree was not erroneous as against the appellants, and in dismissing their bill filed to correct said decree. These assignments raise the same questions, and may be considered together; and, in doing so, let us refer again to the provisions of the will of J. D. Youst, by which he gave this tract of land to his wife, Susanna Youst, during her natural life. After the death of his wife, he gave said tract of land to Hermenia C. Wilson for life, and at her death the same was to descend to her heirs; and in the event that said Hermenia C. Wilson died during the lifetime of his wife, leaving no child, or the descendants of any children, then the one half of said land was to go to Alpheus M. Wilson, if living, and the other half to the heirs of his sister, Eliza Wade, and the heirs of his deceased brother, Nicholas B. Youst, by his first wife, etc. At the time the decree of November 29, 1890, was rendered, both Susanna Youst and Hermenia C. Wilson were living. Susanna Youst was in possession of the land as a life tenant, and was then a widow; and, as we have seen, she had no right to open a mine on the land she held as life tenant, unless the same had been opened in the lifetime of her husband. This, however, had not been done; and, not having the right to open and work a mine that had not been opened in the lifetime of her husband, it follows that she could not confer that right upon another. Oil in place under the land, as we have seen, has been held in this state to be a part of the realty, and as much so as timber, coal, iron ore, or salt; that it is a part of the inheritance, and an unlawful removal thereof is a disherison of him in remainder, constituting waste, which a court of equity, in a proper case will restrain and enjoin. See the case of Williamson v. Jones, 39 W. Va. 231, 25 L. R. A. 222. Now, can we sustain the decree of the circuit court of Marion county, rendered on the 29th day of November, 1890? Had said court any right to direct a sale of the oil underlying said land, by way of a lease, and apportion the royalty arising from said lease equally between the life tenant in possession, the life tenant in expectancy, and the remaindermen, who were infants? Could the court change the character of the estate held by the infant petitioners from an estate in remainder to an estate in presenti, and could the court authorize Susanna Youst to receive the product of a mine opened on her estate for life, subsequent to her husband's death, and authorize Hermenia C. Wilson to receive one third of the product of the oil wells drilled on said land, in which her estate was dependent on the death of Susanna Youst, to which she might never be entitled, and, as the sequel shows, never was entitled, for the reason that her death preceded that of Susanna Youst? These are questions which must be met and answered, in passing upon the validity of the decree of November 29, 1890. Now, if the court could properly decree a sale of the oil underlying this tract of land upon the petition of the infants, and the testimony showing it was to their advantage to make the sale, was it proper that the product of these oil wells (the royalty) should have been divided as it was? What entitled either of the life tenants to one third of the royalty, and especially Hermenia C. Wilson, who never was entitled to a life estate, she having died before Susanna Youst? A case somewhat similar to the one under consideration is found in 174 Pa. 425 (Blakley v. Marshall). The syllabus reads as follows: "An oil lease, investing the lessee with the right to remove all the oil in place in the premises in consideration of his giving the lessors a certain per centum thereof, is in legal effect a sale of a portion of the land, and the proceeds represent the respective interests of the lessors in the premises. If the lessors in an oil lease are life tenants and remaindermen the life tenants are entitled to the interest on the royalties during life, and at their death the corpus of the fund made up of the aggregate royalties goes to the remaindermen." And this decision, as I think, propounds the law correctly. If the infants, in pursuance of their petition and the testimony adduced before the court, had the right to have the oil underlying the land in which they were interested as remaindermen sold, to prevent its being drawn from the land by adjoining wells, the law provides where the royalty shall go, and what interest the life tenant shall receive. Was the division of the royalty in the manner provided for in the decree complained of in any manner justifiable on the ground of expediency? That it was not is plainly indicated by the fact that there was no reluctance evinced by Susanna Youst in entering into the arrangement by which she received one twenty-fourth of the oil produced from the wells drilled on said land, as the portion to which she was entitled as life tenant. The fact that Susanna Youst showed no hesitation about leasing her interest in this land is manifest from her conduct in deeding all of her interest in the oil produced from said land to S. B. Hughes on the 26th day of November, 1890, three days before the decree was entered in the circuit court, which, by and with the consent of said Susanna Youst and Hermenia Wilson, allowed the infant children aforesaid to share equally with them in the royalty arising from the oil wells drilled upon said land. Susanna Youst had no right to drill an oil well on the land of her deceased husband, and, not possessing the right herself, she could not confer such right upon another. Neither could she consent to the sale of the oil. In other words, her consent would be utterly futile, so far as it supplied any legal foundation for the action of the court in said decree, in dividing the royalty arising from the oil produced on said land as it was; and yet the decree shows that Susanna Youst was present, by her counsel, consenting to the sale, although she had sold and conveyed all interest she claimed in the oil underlying said land, three days before the decree was rendered, to S. B. Hughes. Now, our statute (§ 14 of chap. 88 of the Code) provides that if it be clearly shown by the petition, exhibits, and evidence adduced that the interest of the minor will be promoted by the sale, and the court be of opinion that the rights of no person will be affected thereby, it may order a sale of the estate, or any part thereof, either public or private, on such terms and in such parcels as may be deemed beneficial to the minor, etc. The complainants, however, in their bill, do not seek to set aside the sale for any irregularities in the proceedings of the circuit court in reference thereto, but they claim that, if the court had authority to sell or lease said land for oil and gas purposes, it had no right to decree to said Susanna Youst and Hermenia Wilson, or either of them, any part of the principal of any sum realized from oil produced, or the royalty thereof, from said land, but that the said Susanna Youst, during her life, would have been entitled to receive the annual interest upon the principal realized from said royalty, and that the plaintiffs, the infants aforesaid, would have been entitled to the principal after the death of said Susanna, and in this contention I am of opinion that the plaintiffs were clearly right (following the decision of the supreme court of Pennsylvania in the case of Blakley v. Marshall, 174 Pa. 425, and for these reasons the decree complained of, which dismissed the plaintiff's bill, must be reversed, with costs, and remanded to the circuit court of Marion county, with directions to ascertain the amount of interest that accrued upon the royalties arising from the oil wells drilled on said land during the lifetime of Susanna Youst, which amount, when so ascertained, is to be paid to the assignee of said Susanna Youst; and after deducting said interest the remainder of the royalty is to be paid to Thomas J. Wilson, Jehu D. Wilson, Clarence L. Wilson, and Minnie C. Powell, plaintiffs in said chancery suit.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, THIRD CIRCUIT.

NATIONAL HARROW COMPANY, Appt.

v.

HENCH & DROMGOLD.

(55 U. S. App. 53, 83 Fed. Rep. 38.)

1. An agreement to sell no harrow for less than a schedule price is invalid when made by the owner of the patent with a corporation organized by rival manufacturers of harrows to take title to the patents and license the former owners to operate under them and sell only at schedule prices to be fixed by the corporation.
2. The owners of distinct patents have no right by virtue of their grants to combine for the purpose of restraining competition and trade.
3. The exposure of holders of patents covering similar articles to litigation will not justify them in making a combination in restraint of competition.

(October 20, 1897.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania refusing an injunction to restrain defendants from selling harrows in violation of an agreement with the plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before Dallas, Circuit Judge, and Butler and Kirkpatrick, District Judges.

Mr. W. P. Quin, with Messrs. William Kernan, Edward H. Risley, and Henry M. Love for appellant.

Mr. John G. Johnson, with Messrs. Strawbridge & Taylor, for appellees.

Butler, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The essential facts are well stated by the circuit court as follows:

"The National Harrow Company, a corporation of the state of New York,—to whose contract rights and general purposes the plaintiff, a subsequently created New Jersey corporation, has succeeded,—originated in a written agreement between a number of leading and distinct manufacturers, under various United States letters patent of float spring-tooth harrows, whereby it was agreed that they should organize a corporation under the laws of New York, and would assign to the corporation all United States letters patent which they respectively then owned or should thereafter acquire relating to float spring-tooth harrows, and the goodwill of their business in such harrows, and that they would not thereafter be interested in the manufacture or sale of such harrows, except as agents or licensees of the corporation; that the corporation should issue to the persons, firms, and corporations, respectively, so assigning to it their said patents and the goodwill of their business, exclusive licenses to manufacture and sell upon their own account, subject to uniform terms and conditions, the same style of harrows which they were making and selling just prior to the agreement, and that the corporation itself would not manufacture and sell any style of harrows covered by its licenses; that each licensee should pay to the corporation $1 on every float spring-tooth harrow manufactured and sold by such licensee, and that each person, firm, or corporation transferring to the corporation the goodwill of their float spring-tooth harrow business, and their patents relating thereto, should receive in payment therefor the value thereof as agreed upon or as fixed by arbitration in paid-up stock of the corporation.

"The agreement in the first instance was signed by six different manufacturers, but the contract contemplated and provided that others should come into the arrangement and become parties thereto. Accordingly, other manufacturers of float spring-tooth harrows soon joined the combination, which then embraced twenty-two different persons, firms, or corporations. Thus, almost the entire output of float spring-tooth harrows made in the United States was brought under the regulation and control of this organization, its licensees manufacturing and selling at least 90 per cent thereof.

"The defendants were the owners of two United States letters patent relating to float spring-tooth harrows, under which they had been manufacturing and selling harrows. They joined the combination, and, agreeably to the provisions of the above-recited agreement, they assigned to the New York corporation their patents, and that corporation then issued to the defendants a license to manufacture and sell their old style harrows. The New Jersey corporation, which was formed in furtherance of the general scheme, issued to the defendants a second license on terms and conditions substantially like the former license. These are the two license contracts here sued on. The following stated provisions are common to both licenses: The defendants agree not to sell float spring-tooth harrows, float spring-tooth harrow frames without teeth, or attachments applicable thereto, at less prices or on more favorable terms of payment and delivery to the purchasers than as is set forth in the schedule annexed to the license, unless the licensor should reduce the selling prices and make more favorable terms for purchasers, and that the defendants will not directly or indirectly manufacture or sell any other float spring-tooth harrows, etc., than those which they are thus licensed to sell and market except for another licensee, and then only of such style as he is licensed to manufacture and sell. They agree to pay to the corporation $1 upon each float spring-tooth harrow, etc., manufactured and sold by them agreeably to the terms of the license, and the sum of $5 as liquidated damages for every harrow, etc., manufactured or sold by them contrary to the terms and provisions of the license, and the corporation agrees to defend all suits for alleged infringement brought against the licensees. All the licenses issued by the corporation are upon the like terms and conditions."

NOTE.—As to illegal combination to fix price, see also Lovejoy v. Michels (Mich.) 13 L. R. A. 770, and note; Nester v. Continental Brewing Co. (Pa.) 24 39 L. R. A.

L. R. A. 247; Ford v. Chicago Milk Shippers Assn. (Ill.) 27 L. R. A. 288; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co. (Cal.) 29 L. R. A. 839.

It is manifest, as well from the contract as from the proofs outside of it, that the purpose of the parties was to form a combination between the various manufacturers of these harrows, to prevent competition in business, and enhance prices; and such is the effect of their agreement. The corporation, provided to hold the legal title of the several patents, is merely an instrument to effect this object. The prior owners are still the beneficial owners, with right to continue their business, subject only to the restraint in its management imposed by the contract. The provision for licenses is made necessary by the transfers of title, and is simply another part of the scheme for combination and control of the business of the several patentees. The result would be the same in legal contemplation if the corporation and licenses had been dispensed with, and the contract had provided simply, as it does, for combination and restraint of competition. That such a contract would be unlawful seems clear. While it is true, that all contracts in restraint of trade are not prohibited, and it is sometimes difficult to determine whether a particular one is, there is no room for doubt that such a contract as this, which provides for general and unlimited restraint, is unlawful. To justify restraint, reason for it must be found in the nature of the property or the situation of the parties, as, for instance, in the sale of a business or professional goodwill, and other similar cases. Even then the restraint must be confined within such reasonable limits as the circumstances require. Here there is nothing to justify restraint, and that imposed is without any limitation whatever. The fact that the property involved is covered by letters patent is urged as a justification; but we do not see how any importance can be attributed to this fact. Patents confer a monopoly as respects the property covered by them, but they confer no right upon the owners of several distinct patents to combine for the purpose of restraining competition and trade. Patented property does not differ in this respect from any other. The fact that one patentee may possess himself of several patents, and thus increase his monopoly, affords no support for an argument in favor of a combination by several distinct owners of such property to restrain manufacture, control sales, and enhance prices. Such combinations are conspiracies against the public interests, and abuses of patent privileges. The object of these privileges is to promote the public benefit, as well as to reward inventors. The suggestion that the contract is justified by the situation of the parties—their exposure to litigation—is entitled to no greater weight. Patentees may compose their differences, as the owners of other property may, but they cannot make the occasion an excuse or cloak for the creation of monopolies to the public disadvantage. We do not see anything to distinguish this case, in principle, from Nester v. Continental Brewing Co. 161 Pa. 473, 24 L. R. A. 247; Pittsburg Carbon Co. v. McMillin, 119 N. Y. 46, 7 L. R. A. 46; Morris Run Coal Co. 39 L. R. A.

v. Barclay Coal Co. 68 Pa. 173, 8 Am. Rep. 159; Distilling & Cattle Feeding Co. v. People, Maloney, 156 Ill. 448; Strait v. National Harrow Co. 18 N. Y. Supp. 233. The last of these cases was upon this contract under circumstances substantially like those of the case before us. A similar conclusion was reached by the court in National Harrow Co. v. Quick, 67 Fed. Rep. 130, where this contract was involved.

The doctrine of these cases is not new, and we feel no hesitation in applying it to the contract before us.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

NINTH CIRCUIT.

William HARDMAN, Pf. in Err.,

MONTANA UNION RAILWAY COMPANY.

(48 U. S. App. 570, 83 Fed. Rep. 88.)

Permitting a car labeled powder to stand in such close proximity to its warehouse as to deter the city fire department from attempting to extinguish a fire in the warehouse will render a carrier liable for the loss of goods in the warehouse which would not have been destroyed had the car not been there, although liability as carrier had ceased and there was in fact no powder in the car.

(October 4, 1897.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Montana to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the value of certain property destroyed while in defendant's possession for transportation. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before Ross and Morrow, Circuit Judges, and Hanley, District Judge.

Mr. John W. Cotter, for plaintiff in error:

When the carrier claims exemption on the ground that under the particular circumstances of the case he held the goods, not as a carrier, but as an ordinary bailee, it devolves upon him to show, not only that he has done his whole duty to effect a delivery according to the course of his business, but that he has been guilty of no negligence which has caused or contributed to the loss.

Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. 1891, §§ 354, 355; Wilson v. California C. R. Co. 94 Cal. 166, 17 L. R. A. 685.

The defendant having alleged that it safely carried the goods to the point of destination, and stored them in its warehouse, and that after they were stored they were destroyed by fire, without its negligence or fault, had the burden of proving this defense.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1080; Wilson v. California C. R. Co. 94 Cal. 166, 17 L. R. A. 685; Whart. Ev. § 362.

NOTE.—For liability of carrier as warehouseman, see East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly (Tenn.) 17 L. R. A. 691, and note; also Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nevils (Ark.) 28 L. R. A. 80.

A defendant, even as a warehouseman, must use ordinary care in storing property.

Mont. Civ. Code, §§ 2491, 2810-2816, 2910.

Defendant was required to store the goods with due care in a place of reasonable safety.

Aldrich v. Boston & W. R. Co. 100 Mass. 81, 1 Am. Rep. 76, 97 Am. Dec. 74; Lancaster Mills v. Merchants' Cotton Press Co. 59 Tenn. 1; Story, Bailm. §§ 444-450; Cooley, Torts, p. 758; Schmidt v. Blood, 9 Wend. 268, 24 Am. Dec. 148, note; Wilson v. Southern P. R. Co. 62 Cal. 164; Wilson v. California C. R. Co. 94 Cal. 166, 17 L. R. A. 685; Tower v. Grocers' Supply & S. Co. 159 Pa. 106; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 878.

The defendant had no sufficient means for extinguishing the fire at the time in question.

As a part of its duty to exercise reasonable care, it should have proved sufficient means for said purpose.

Leland v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Iowa) 21 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 108; Story, Bailm. §§ 440-450; 4 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 1831.

Storage of gunpowder in or near the warehouse is negligence if it prevents the firemen from working or attempting to extinguish the fire.

Deering, Neg. § 60; White v. Colorado C. R. Co. 5 Dill. 428, 3 McCrary, 559; 3 Myer's Fed. Dec. Bailment, §§ 6-12.

Any act of defendant which prevented the firemen from extinguishing the fire is negligence.

Metallic Compression Casting Co. v. Fitchburg R. Co. 109 Mass. 277, 12 Am. Rep. 689; White v. Colorado C. R. Co. 5 Dill. 428, 3 McCrary, 559; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 646, note 1.

While it was not shown in this case that there was any powder stored in the car in question, yet, as a proposition of law, the fire company and persons in the vicinity of the fire had a right to judge by appearances, and judge of things as they appeared to an ordinarily prudent person under the circumstances.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 89; Coulter v. American Merchants' Union Exp. Co. 56 N. Y. 585; Dyer v. Erie R. Co. 71 N. Y. 228; Lewis v. Riverside Water Co. 76 Cal. 249; Lawrence v. Green, 70 Cal. 417, 59 Am. Rep. 428; Karr v. Parks, 40 Cal. 188.

Mr. George Haldorn for defendant in error.

Ross, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action to recover the value of certain goods shipped by William Hardman, the plaintiff, from the city of Anaconda to the city of Butte, in the state of Montana, which the Montana Union Railway Company, the defendant, a common carrier between the points named, undertook to carry and did carry, for a consideration paid, and which were thereafter damaged by fire while in the warehouse of the defendant company in the city of Butte. The case was tried before the court below without a jury, pursuant to a stipulation of the parties. The facts found by the court are not, therefore, open to review here. Farwell v. Sturges, 9 U. S. App. 504, 6 C. C. A. 118, 56 Fed. Rep. 782; Skinner v. Franklin County, 9 U. S. App. 89 L. R. A.

676, 6 C. C. A. 120, 56 Fed. Rep. 788; Wile v. Farmers' State Bank, 36 U. S. App. 165, 17 C. C. A. 25, 70 Fed. Rep. 188.

From the findings of the court, these, among other facts, appear: On or about June 21, 1895, the plaintiff delivered to the defendant at the city of Anaconda, to be transported by the defendant, and delivered to the plaintiff at the city of Butte, Montana, the goods in question, paying the defendant for such transportation the sum of $11.09, in consideration of which payment the defendant agreed to deliver the goods to the plaintiff in the city of Butte. The defendant transported the goods to the city of Butte in accordance with its undertaking, and there unloaded the goods from its cars, and stored them in its warehouse in that city, in which they remained from June 21 until the night of July 2, 1895, at which time the warehouse caught fire, inflicting the damage which gave rise to the action. The findings further show that the defendant did not itself have sufficient fire appliances to extinguish or control the fire, but that its warehouse was situated within the city of Butte, which possessed a fire department with sufficient water facilities; that upon the discovery of the fire one of the police officers of the city turned in a fire alarm, to which the fire department immediately responded; that upon the arrival of the department at the scene of the fire it was notified by one of the police officers of the city that a car load of powder was standing immediately adjoining the platform on the south side of the warehouse, and that thereupon the fire department withdrew, upon the order of the chief of the department, until he could make an investigation; that the car was sealed by the employees of the defendant company, and was labeled "Powder," but that by whom it was so labeled did not appear from the evidence; that it was subsequently discovered by the chief of the fire department of the city that the car did not in fact contain any powder, upon the discovery of which fact the fire department was ordered by him to immediately return to the fire and attempt to extinguish it; that a period of about ten or twelve minutes elapsed between the departure of the fire department from the scene of the fire and its return thereto. The thirteenth finding of fact is in these words: "That if the said fire department had not believed that a car load of powder was standing on the track adjoining the said warehouse, and had begun to work at the said fire upon their first arrival, the same could have been extinguished without any loss."

The conclusions of law drawn by the court below, in respect to which errors are assigned, are as follows: "First. That it was not the duty of the defendant to furnish or keep any fire apparatus in the vicinity of the said warehouse, to extinguish fires in or about the same. Second. That the defendant is not liable to the plaintiff for the loss of the said goods so stored in the warehouse as aforesaid, defendant's liability being that of a warehouseman; and it was not guilty of any negligence in connection with said fire, or in extinguishing the same."

The plaintiff in error assigns as error the second conclusion of law above given: "For the reason that the testimony of the defendant's own witness, McGrade, and all of the evidence, shows that the defendant, by its servants and employees, loaded a car labeled 'Powder,' and negligently allowed and permitted the same to stand upon the track near to and adjoining the said warehouse, at a point at or near where the fire occurred therein, and thereby prevented the fire department of the city of Butte from extinguishing or attempting to extinguish the said fire in its incipency, and that the said act of the said defendant and its servants and employees in negligently allowing the said powder-labeled car to be and remain in said position was the direct cause of the plaintiff's loss, and that, if it had not been for defendant's negligence in allowing the said car to be in said position, labeled 'Powder,' the said fire could have been extinguished without any loss or damage to plaintiff."

If the car labeled "Powder" had in fact contained that dangerous combustible, the right of the plaintiff to recover could not admit of doubt, in view of the finding of the court to the effect that but for its presence the fire would have been extinguished without loss. A railroad company, keeping the property of its patrons in its own warehouse for a reasonable time, until it shall be called for, is to be regarded, in the absence of a statute declaring otherwise, as a bailee for hire, and not as a naked depository. Whart. Neg. 2d ed. § 478;

Norway Plains Co. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 1 Gray, 273, 61 Am. Dec. 428; White v. Colorado C. R. Co. 3 McCrary, 559.

The actual storage of powder in such close proximity to the property so held as to prevent, through reasonable fear, firemen from extinguishing the fire that does the damage complained of, would be such negligence as would render the company liable. White v. Colorado C. R. Co. 3 McCrary, 559, and authorities there cited; 8 Myer's Fed. Dec. Bailment, § 613.

Although, as a matter of fact, there was in the present case no powder in the car, yet it was labeled "Powder," which fact indicated to every ordinarily prudent person that it contained that article. The fire company acted, as it had the right to do, upon appearances. While it is not shown that the defendant actually put the powder label on the car, it had the control of the car, and permitted it to remain so labeled on its track by the side of its warehouse, and thus represented to everyone that it did contain powder. The finding of the court below is to the effect that but for the label upon the car the fire that caused the damage sued for would have been extinguished without loss. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Iowa

v.

C. S. PICKETT, Appt.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. The inability of a juror to read or write the English language, which is not known to the defendant in a prosecution until after the trial, does not entitle the later to a new trial.
2. Failure to challenge a juror for cause as to his competency, and to examine him or other witnesses in support of the challenge, is a waiver of the right of challenge, though the fact of incompetency is not known to the party until after the trial.

(December 15, 1897.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Jefferson County convicting him of adultery. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. W. Jacques for appellant.

Messrs. Milton Remley, Attorney General, and Jesse A. Miller, for the State:

If counsel fail to make inquiry of the persons called to act as jurors, and as a result an incompetent juror sits during the trial, the objection to him on the ground of his incompetency is waived and the defendant cannot afterwards take advantage of it.

King v. Sutton, 8 Barn. & C. 417; King, East India Co. v. Despard, 2 Mann. & R. 406; Wharton's Case, Yelv. 24; State v. Powers, 10 Or. 145. 45 Am. Rep. 188; United States v. Baker, 8 Ben. 68; Hickey v. State, 12 Neb. 490; Meeks v. State, 57 Ga. 329; Costly v. State, 19 Ga. 614; Gillespie v. State, 8 Yerg. 507, 29 Am. Dec. 187; M'Clure v. State, 1 Yerg. 208; State v. Davis, 80 N. C. 412; State v. Fisher, 2 Nott & McC. 261; State v. Quarrel, 2 Bay. 150, 1 Am. Dec. 637; Presbury v. Com. 9 Dana, 203; George v. State, 89 Miss. 570; Jones v. People, 2 Colo. 351; Beck v. State, 20 Ohio St. 228; State v. Hinkle, 27 Kan. 308; People v. Coffman, 24 Cal. 230.

An objection to an incompetent juror cannot be made after verdict, even though the disqualification was not known until that time.

Favill v. Shehan, 68 Iowa, 241.

The early doctrine in Illinois (Guykowski v. People, 3 Ill. 476) has since been changed, the Guykowski Case having been expressly overruled in Chase v. People, 40 Ill. 352.

See also Davison v. People, 90 Ill. 231.

In Schumaker v. State, 5 Wis. 324, it was held that a defendant in a capital case did not waive anything and could object to the competency of a juror after verdict.

But in State v. Vogel, 22 Wis. 471, it was held

NOTE.—As to the disqualification of a juror as ground for new trial, see note to Jewell v. Jewell, (Me.) 18 L. R. A. 473.

89 L. R. A.

that in all prosecutions for offenses not capital the incompetency of a trial juror could not be made a ground for a new trial, even though the fact that the juror was incompetent was not known to the defendant until after verdict.

Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 851, is frequently quoted to sustain the doctrine that a defendant in a criminal case cannot waive his legal rights. In this state the contrary doctrine prevails.

State v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa, 578, 88 Am. Rep. 148.

The holding in the Hill Case has been so often modified by the supreme court of Michigan that it stands practically overruled.

People v. Scott, 56 Mich. 154.

In Rice v. State, 16 Ind. 298, it was held that the incompetency of the juror might be taken advantage of after verdict.

But it was held in Oroy v. State, 32 Ind. 384, that as the jurors were all sworn to answer questions touching their competency, and the defendant, having full opportunity to examine them touching their competency in general, did not inquire as to whether or not they were householders, the fact that one of the jurors was not a householder, said fact being first ascertained by the defendant after verdict, did not entitle him to a new trial.

Kingen v. State, 46 Ind. 132; Gillooley v. State, 58 Ind. 182.

In State v. Babcock, 1 Conn. 401, the fact that the juror was not a freeholder was unknown to the prisoner or his counsel. And in State v. Tuller, 34 Conn. 280, it is held that in order to warrant the setting aside of a verdict upon the ground that one of the jurors was incompetent, it must be shown that neither the defendant, nor his attorneys, had knowledge of such fact until after the verdict was returned.

In some states where the incompetency of a juror is discovered after verdict a new trial may be granted, but in order to warrant the granting of a new trial it must be shown that neither the defendant nor his attorneys had knowledge of the incompetency of the juror until after the verdict was returned.

State v. Tuller, 34 Conn. 280; Achey v. State, 64 Ind. 56.

Ohio and Kansas might be said to recognize a like rule, though from the decision in those states it cannot be said that they do not approve the general doctrine.

State v. Hinkle, 27 Kan. 808; State v. Jackson, 27 Kan. 581, 41 Am. Rep. 424; Beck v. State, 30 Ohio St. 228; Parks v. State, 4 Ohio St. 234.

Given, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

One ground of appellant's motion for a new trial is that one of the jurors who sat on the trial cannot read or write the English language, and that appellant did not know that fact until after the trial. It is shown that one of the jurors, a native of Sweden, who had resided in this country for nineteen years, and become a citizen thereof, and an elector of this state, could not read or write the English language. Such being the fact, appellant contends that the court erred in overruling his motion for a new trial. Section 1, chap. 61, Laws 26th Gen. Assem., is as follows: "All qualified electors of the state, of good moral character, sound judgment, and in full possession of the senses of hearing and seeing, and who can speak, write, and read the English language, are competent jurors in their respective counties." See § 382 of the Code. Section 4405 of the Code of 1878 (present Code, § 5360) provides among other grounds of challenge for cause: "A want of any of the qualifications prescribed by the statute to render a person a competent juror." Sections 4407, 4408, Code 1878 (present Code, §§ 5361, 5362), provide that the juror challenged, and other witnesses, may be examined, to prove or disprove the challenge. It does not appear that any challenge was made to said juror, or that he, or any other witness, was examined as to his competency. Appellant contends that the fact of the juror's incompetency, and that appellant did not know that fact until after the trial, was a sufficient ground for granting a new trial; and he cites and relies upon State v. Groome, 10 Iowa, 308. In that case the defendant moved in arrest of judgment, and for a new trial, for the reason that one of the jurors who tried the case was not an elector of the state; and such was found to be the fact. The court says: "It is claimed by the state that the defendant cannot take advantage of this objection to the juror by a motion for a new trial, that he passed his time by not challenging the juror before the trial for cause. We think it is the duty of the state to place twelve legal jurors in the box, and that it is not the duty of the defendant to inquire whether the jurors are qualified or not. It is presumed that the officer whose duty it is to select the jurors will select those who are competent and legal. The law tenders to defendant a jury for the trial of his cause, and by accepting the jury he waives any objection thereto for bias or prejudice of any character whatever, in the mind of any of the jurors; but if either of the jurors was disqualified to act as such, the defendant does not waive his right to objection for this cause, but has a right to a new trial. If the defendant knew at the time the jury was sworn that any of them were not qualified to act as jurors he would have waived his right to object thereafter. It must appear that defendant had knowledge of this fact before it can be inferred that he waived his objection. Without this knowledge, a waiver cannot be inferred;" citing Covles v. Buckman, 6 Iowa, 162. In the cited case, only eleven jurors were called, and both parties, not observing or knowing that fact, accepted the jury. It was held that the parties were entitled to a full jury, that there was no waiver and that appellant was entitled to a new trial. In Faville v. Shehan, 68 Iowa, 242, this court held that when, in a civil action, in the absence of concealment or fraud on the part of his adversary, a party accepts a juror without examination as to his qualifications, he waives objections on account of want of qualifications discovered afterwards. It is said: "A different rule applicable to criminal cases was recognized in State v. Groome, 10 Iowa, 308. We are not disposed to extend the doctrine of that decision in civil cases;" citing a number of cases. In State v. Kaufman, 51

Iowa, 578, 83 Am. Rep. 148, one of the jurors becoming ill, was, with consent of the defendant, discharged; and, with defendant's further consent, the trial was concluded before the eleven jurors. It was held that a defendant in a criminal case may waive a statute enacted for his benefit, and therefore could consent to a trial with eleven jurors. It will be observed that in these cases this court has recognized the right of an accused to waive objections to jurors on the ground of incompetency, or to the panel on the ground of number. In Groom's Case the defendant was held not to have waived the objection to the juror, because it did not appear that he had knowledge of the juror's incompetency until after the trial. The contention before us is not as to the right of an accused to waive an objection to an incompetent juror, but whether he should be held to have waived it by not challenging for that cause, and examining the juror, or other witnesses, to sustain the challenge. Counsel for the state concede that, if the doctrine announced in State v. Groom is to stand, this case must be reversed. They insist, however,—upon a very full citation and review of the authorities on both sides of the question,—that the rule in Groom's Case is so against reason and the current of decisions that it should be overruled. Their citations are so complete that we will not refer to other cases. The following cases do tend quite directly to support the conclusion in Groom's Case, namely Guykowski v. People, 2 Ill. 476; Schumaker v. State, 5 Wis. 324; Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351; Rice v. State, 16 Ind. 298; and State v. Babcock, 1 Conn. 401. These cases are modified, if not overruled, in the following later decisions by the same courts: Chase v. People, 40 Ill. 352; Davison v. People, 90 Ill. 221; State v. Vogel, 22 Wis. 471; People v. Scott, 56 Mich. 154; Croy v. State, 32 Ind. 384; King v. State, 46 Ind. 182; Gillooley v. State, 58 Ind. 182; and State v. Tuller, 34 Conn. 280. The following cases fully sustain the claim that the rule generally observed is that a failure to challenge a juror for cause, as to his competency, and to examine him, or other witnesses, in support of the challenge, is a waiver of the right of challenge, though the fact of incompetency is not known to the party until after trial: King v. Sutton, 8 Barn. & C. 417; King, East India Co., v. Despard, 2 Mann. & R. 406; Wharton's Case, Yelv. 24; State v. Powers, 10 Or. 145; United States v. Baker, 8 Ben. 68; Hickey v. State, 12 Neb. 490; Meeks v. State, 57 Ga. 829; Costly v. State, 19 Ga. 614, at page 628; Gillespie v. State, 8 Yerg. 507, 29 Am. Dec. 187; M'Clure v. State, 1 Yerg. 208; State v. Davis, 80 N. C. 412; State v. Fisher, 2 Nott & M'C. 261; State v. Quarrel, 2 Bay, 150, 1 Am. Dec. 637; George v. State, 39 Miss. 570, at page 590; Jones v. People, 2 Colo. 351; Beck v. State, 20 Ohio St. 228; State v. Hinkle, 27 Kan. 308; People v. Coffman, 24 Cal. 230. These cases are grounded upon the fact that the right to challenge for cause, and to examine the juror, or others, in support thereof, is discretionary, and may be waived, and that, when the party fails to avail himself of this right he must be taken to have waived all objection on the ground of incompetency. A failure to challenge and examine for cause virtually says: "I am content with that jury, so far as cause is concerned; and, if any juror be incompetent for any reason, I waive my right to challenge for that cause." It is not questioned but that a failure to challenge and examine as to any other of the fifteen grounds of challenge for cause provided in said § 4405 of the Code of 1878 would be a waiver as to said causes. We fail to discover why the same rule should not apply to all those causes, and in all cases, civil and criminal. Groom's Case, and those supporting it, are grounded upon the thought that it is the duty of the state to put none but competent jurors in the box, and the accused may presume, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, that those called are competent. This is certainly at variance with the spirit and purpose of our statute as to the mode of selecting and impaneling juries. The right given to challenge for any of the causes named, and to examine the juror, or other witnesses, in support of the challenge, precludes the conclusion that the law assumes to present none but competent jurors, or that a party has a right to so assume. The right to examine for such cause would be an idle provision, if such were the law. The state makes no guaranty as to the competency of jurors, but says to litigants, "Examine for yourselves." In Groom's Case it is held that, by accepting the jury without inquiring as to bias or prejudice, the defendant waived any objection on those grounds. We think that, by the same reasoning, he should be held to have waived the objection for incompetency. No sufficient reason is given for the distinction that is made in some of the cases between civil and criminal cases, and between capital and other criminal cases. The same statutes govern as to the selection of jurors for all cases, civil and criminal. True, different provisions are made for impaneling juries, but none that impose upon the state the duty of presenting none but competent jurors. There is no reason why every party to an action, civil or criminal, should not be held to exercise the right given him to examine as to the qualifications of jurors called to act in his case, and, if he waives that right, to be concluded thereby unless actual prejudice is otherwise shown. See also State v. Betzel, 89 Iowa, 405, 27 L. R. A. 846. Our conclusion is that the rule announced in State v. Groom, 10 Iowa, 808, on this question, is not sustained by the better reasoning, and is not in harmony with the general current of decisions, and that it should be overruled.

89 L. R. A.

This disposes of the only question presented in the partial record before us, and it follows from what we have said that the judgment of the District Court should be affirmed.

TEXAS COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS.

W. E. BURT, Appt.,
v.
STATE of Texas.

(..... Tex.)

1. To permit an answer by an expert on a hypothetical question as to insanity, embracing only the evidence of one party, is not reversible error if both parties subsequently submit and obtain answers to questions containing all the evidence.

2. The trial court may receive evidence until the argument is concluded, whether in rebuttal or not.

NOTE.—Expert opinions as to sanity or insanity.

I. Admissibility; generally.

II. Privilege of witnesses.

a. Effect on opinions generally.

b. Waiver of privilege.

III. From observation or examination.

IV. From the evidence.

a. The general rule.

b. The contrary rule.

V. On hypothetical statements or questions.

a. Admissibility.

b. Hypothesis; upon what based.

c. Evidence in support of hypothesis.

d. Form of question.

VI. Qualifications of experts.

VII. Basis of facts or reasons for opinion.

VIII. Scope.

a. General considerations.

b. Symptoms and causes.

c. Comparison; illustration; speculation.

d. Questions of law for the court.

e. Questions of fact for the jury.

f. The question at issue.

IX. Cross-examination; contradiction; redirect examination.

X. Weight.

a. Generally.

b. As affected by facts and opportunity to observe.

c. As affected by character, bias, and nature of the question.

d. As compared with other expert opinions.

e. As compared with nonexpert opinions.

f. A question for the jury.

I. Admissibility; generally.

The opinions of medical experts, and experts with relation to mental disease, are admissible in evidence generally on an issue as to sanity or insanity. Jamison v. Jamison, 3 Houst. (Del.) 108; Cholce v. State, 31 Ga. 424; Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324, 50 Am. Dec. 329; Com. v. Rogers, 7 Met. 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458; Baxter v. Abbott, 7 Gray, 71; Hastings v. Elder, 99 Mass. 622; People v. Finley, 38 Mich. 432; Clarke v. Sawyer, 3 Sandf. Ch. 351; Re Kiedalsch, 2 Connoly, 438; Gibson v. Gibson, 9 Yer. 329; Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. v. Rodel, 96 U. S. 232, 24 L. ed. 433. And see infra, II., III., and IV.

Without reference to the question of the weight. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. v. Rodel, 96 U. S. 232, 24 L. ed. 433.

And they may be based upon symptoms and circumstances which come within their own observation, or as testified to by others, or upon hypothetical statements or questions assuming their existence. Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324, 50 Am. Dec. 329; Pidcock v. Potter, 68 Pa. 342, 8 Am. Rep. 181; McAllister v. State, 17 Ala. 430, 52 Am. Dec. 180; Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 120; and see supra, II., III., and IV.

39 L. R. A.

3. An opinion as to sanity may be given by a nonexpert witness who has given a very full detail of the facts upon which the opinion is based.

4. Excerpts from standard works on medical jurisprudence cannot be read by counsel to the jury on the question of insanity in a murder trial.

5. After one accused of murder has offered evidence of his demeanor for the purpose of convincing the jury of his insanity at the time of trial, for the purpose of raising the presumption of insanity when the crime was committed, a person who is acquainted with him may testify that he is simulating.

And the testimony of a medical expert examined in a former trial of the same cause, as to the sanity or insanity of the maker of notes the validity of which is in question, is admissible in evidence on a subsequent trial. First Nat. Bank v. Wirebach, 106 Pa. 37.

Expert testimony as to insanity, however, is to be received with caution and subject to patient and intelligent investigation. Wilcox v. State, 94 Tenn. 108.

Medical men are allowed to give their opinions on an issue of sanity or insanity because they are supposed by their study and practice to understand the symptoms of insanity, and to possess peculiar knowledge on that subject, without which the jury would not be able to decide the question correctly. Lake v. People, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 495.

The opinions of an expert from the facts of a case are admissible in evidence as a scientific deduction from the facts, where such facts are not conflicting, and are either admitted or proved. Coyle v. Com. 104 Pa. 117.

They are received because the facts are of such a character that they cannot be weighed or understood by the jury, the expert giving his opinion as to what they do or do not indicate. People v. Youngs, 151 N. Y. 210.

A physician may form an opinion as to the nature of a disorder and its probable effect upon the mind with some degree of accuracy where the symptoms are truly stated to him, because from a long course of experience and observation by himself and others of the profession such has been the ordinary effect of its symptoms. Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 580.

But the opinions of witnesses are never received as evidence where all the facts upon which such opinions are founded can be ascertained and made intelligible to the court or jury. Clark v. Fisher, 1 Paige, 171, 19 Am. Dec. 402.

And medical experts cannot testify as such in a will contest in behalf of the contestants where a prima facie case of testamentary incapacity had not been made out. Re Miller, 26 Pittab. L. J. N. S. 423.

Nor is it an abuse of discretion for the court in a will contest to limit the number of expert witnesses upon the question of insanity to five upon each side. Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

The inquiry as to the opinion of a medical expert on the question of the sanity or insanity of the accused in a criminal prosecution should be as to his condition on the day of the criminal act, and not at the time of the trial, but where the expert is a physician in charge of the prison in which the accused was confined, and his duties have familiarized him with cases of insanity, and he had made an examination of the accused for the purpose of ascertaining his mental condition just before and during the trial, and had observed him from day

6. A physician may give an opinion as to the sanity of a person accused of crime, if it is based upon a sufficient observation of him.
7. A minister who has read authors on moral and intellectual science, but nothing on insanity or medical jurisprudence, cannot give an opinion as an expert upon the sanity of one accused of crime.
8. An opinion as to sanity based on observations of the accused is not inadmissible because at the time they were made the accused was in the jail unwarned.
9. A sheriff may give his opinion as to the sanity of an accused person in his custody, based upon observations made after he had warned him.
10. Express malice is shown in a homicide if the circumstances show such a reckless disregard of human life as necessarily to include a formed design against the life of the person slain.

11. An indictment for murder should charge the use of every means suggested by the proof, where there is doubt about how the death was produced, although it is unnecessary to prove them all.
12. The court may submit to the jury the question of murder in the second degree as well as in the first degree, although the evidence tends to prove only the latter.
13. Where the burden is on the accused to establish insanity, the rule of reasonable doubt does not apply to that defense.
On rehearing.
14. The state may formulate a hypothetical question for an expert as to the into day, and had stated what he had done in examining him, he may speak also as to the mental condition of the defendant at the time of his trial. People v. Hoch, 150 N. Y. 291.

And the testimony of a medical expert as to the sanity of a person accused of crime, founded upon his appearance at the time of the trial, is admissible. McAllister v. State, 17 Ala. 434, 52 Am. Dec. 180.

So, a medical witness may testify in a prosecution for a criminal act in which insanity is alleged as a defense, from an examination made in July, as to whether the accused was insane on the preceding March. Freeman v. People, 4 Denio, 9, 47 Am. Dec. 216.

And a physician who became acquainted with the defendant in a prosecution for homicide, and with his mental condition at a prior period of his life when he was insane, may state his opinion as to his sanity or insanity at that time as bearing upon his mental condition at the time of the commission of the crime. State v. Felter, 25 Iowa, 67.

And physicians who had previously attended the testator on his deathbed may be permitted to testify as to their opinion of his mental capacity immediately before and after the execution of a will during such sickness, accompanied by a statement of the symptoms and appearance upon which that opinion was formed. Hastings v. Rider, 90 Mass. 624.

The exclusion of expert testimony, however, is not prejudicial error where it does not appear that the evidence excluded was in any way material. Morton v. Heidorn, 135 Mo. 608.

And the opinion of an expert as to the condition of a party's mind, based on her physical condition a year and a half afterwards, is too conjectural to be admissible. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Lovelace, 57 Kan. 195.

II. Privilege of witnesses.

a. Effect on opinions generally.

In Allen v. Public Administrator, 1 Bradf. 221, it was held that the New York statutory provision prohibiting physicians from disclosing any information acquired in attending any patient in a professional character, which information was necessary to enable him to prescribe for such patient, is not applicable to the physician of a deceased person in a proceeding to contest his will, upon the question of mental incapacity.

But this doctrine is without support, and has been repeatedly overruled in effect.

Thus, the opinion of physicians as to the unsoundness of mind of a testator during a designated period, based on knowledge acquired by them while attending him respectively in a professional capacity, is inadmissible within the prohibition against divulging professional communications, contained in N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 834. Re Coleman, 111 N. Y. 220; Re Connor, 37 N. Y. S. R. 905.

39 L. R. A.

And a physician who is called by the attending physician of a person whose sanity is in question, and goes in his professional capacity to see the patient, is within the statute prohibiting the disclosure by a physician of any information received by him in a professional capacity, and cannot be called upon for his opinion as to the sanity or insanity of such person based upon such information. Renihan v. Dennin, 103 N. Y. 574, 57 Am. Rep. 770.

So, in Indiana the rule is that a physician who attended a testator in his last illness cannot testify in the will contest as to his mental and physical condition from knowledge acquired by him while in the discharge of his professional duty if objection is made. Heuston v. Simpson, 115 Ind. 62.

And a contestant of a will cannot give his opinion as to the mental capacity of a testator when it is based upon personal transactions and conversations had with the deceased which are rendered inadmissible in evidence by Iowa Code, § 3639. Re Goldthorp, 94 Iowa, 536.

And an administrator who was the testator's family physician cannot testify in an action on the testator's note as to the condition of his mind at the time it was made, under Ala. Code, § 2065, forbidding testimony as to any transaction with or statement by a deceased person. Davis v. Tarver, 65 Ala. 98.

The rule that the statute prohibiting the disclosure of information received in a professional capacity does not cover a case where its prohibition is invoked solely for the protection of a criminal, and not at all for the benefit or protection of the patient who was dead, and a waiver of the prohibition had, therefore, become impossible, does not apply to a mere contest over the patient's property. Renihan v. Dennin, 103 N. Y. 573, 57 Am. Rep. 770.

And the prohibition of the New York Code of Civil Procedure against the disclosure by physicians of professional information applies to an affidavit made by a physician for the purpose of supporting an application for an appointment of a committee of a lunatic or habitual drunkard. Re Hoyt, 20 Abb. N. C. 162.

And a physician who had known the insured for a long time, and who attended him professionally a short time before his death, cannot state how he found him in an action upon the insurance policy in which it is claimed that he committed suicide while insane, as the evidence is incompetent and privileged under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 834, prohibiting a disclosure of information acquired by a physician attending a patient in a professional capacity. Westover v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 99 N. Y. 56, 52 Am. Rep. 1.

The fact that a medical expert was the jail physician of the jail in which a person accused of crime was confined, however, does not create the relation of patient and physician between him and the accused so as to exclude his opinion in a prosecution for a criminal act, in the absence of proof that the sanity of the accused, embracing such facts as it deems proper and competent, and if defendant is not satisfied he has the privilege of submitting his case embracing any or all the testimony introduced on the trial.

15. To obtain a legal answer from an expert on the question of the sanity of the accused, the hypothetical question need not contain all the testimony bearing upon it.

16. Upon trial of one for the murder of his wife, which fact is admitted, testimony is admissible that a short time prior to the homicide a woman was heard to say in defendant's house, "I will stand this thing no longer," when no woman was in the house at the time but the deceased, and defendant is known to have been there a short time afterwards.

17. To warrant reversal for instrucaccused was at any time sick during his confinement, or that the witness ever attended or prescribed for him, or that he derived any of the information upon which his opinion could be based while attending him as a physician. People v. Schuyler, 106 N. Y. 288.

And the opinion of a medical expert as to the sanity or insanity of a person accused of crime, based on an examination made for the people under employment by the district attorney for the purpose of their prosecution, is not subject to the objection that it was based upon information acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity. People v. Hoch, 150 N. Y. 291; People v. Kemmler, 119 N. Y. 580.

So, the physician of the jail where a person accused of homicide was confined prior to the trial, who had medical charge of prisoners in the jail and had examined the accused and kept an eye on the case, may give his opinion on the trial of the case as to the sanity of the accused upon a hypothetical question from which was excluded all personal knowledge of the accused, but which was based entirely upon facts which occurred before he came to the jail, though he was influenced by knowledge acquired by seeing the accused in jail. People v. Schuyler, 106 N. Y. 288.

And an assumption by the court in a criminal prosecution that the mere fact that an expert witness was jail physician created the relation of patient and physician between them, and that the mere existence of that relation was sufficient to exclude his opinion as to the sanity or insanity of the accused, will not be deemed prejudicial error where the assumption was beneficial rather than harmful to the accused in restricting the examination of the witness and embarrassing him in giving his evidence, and it does not appear and cannot be inferred that the accused omitted to prove anything which he otherwise could or would have proved in consequence of such assumption. People v. Schuyler, 106 N. Y. 288.

So, an attending physician of a testator for eight years previous to his decease is not prevented from testifying as to what he knew of the testator derived from what he observed while he was attending him, for the purpose of showing that he was of unsound mind and incompetent to make a will, by a statute prohibiting a disclosure of information acquired in a professional capacity, where it does not appear that the information sought was information of any facts necessary to enable him to act in the capacity of physician, but of facts which were open to the observation of any person who had seen and conversed with him. Staunton v. Parker, 19 Hun, 56.

The burden rests with a party seeking to exclude the testimony of a physician under the provisions of the New York Code of Civil Procedure, § 854, forbidding physicians from disclosing information which were not objected to, they must have been calculated to injure the rights of the complaining party.

(Henderson, J., dissents from proposition 14.)

(June 9, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Travis County convicting him of murder. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. George S. Walton, E. T. Moore, and Walton & Hill, for appellant:

Medical experts may state their own opinions upon the whole evidence if they have heard it all, or upon a hypothetical statement, acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, and which was necessary to enable him to act, to show, not only that the information which he seeks to exclude was acquired in attending the patient in a professional capacity, but also that it was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity. People v. Schuyler, 106 N. Y. 288.

b. Waiver of privilege.

The general rule is that the privilege of a physician under statutes prohibiting the disclosure of confidential communications may be waived by the persons interested.

Thus, a request by a testator to sign his will as a witness thereto is a waiver on his part of the provisions of Iowa Code, § 3643, prohibiting a practicing attorney from disclosing any confidence uniformly entrusted to him in his professional capacity, so as to permit the attorney to speak as to the mental capacity of the testator. Denning v. Butcher, 91 Iowa, 425.

And the privilege given by Iowa Code, § 3643, providing that no physician shall be allowed to disclose knowledge acquired in the performance of his duties as such, may be waived by those whose interest it is to maintain the integrity of a will of a deceased person, thus effectuating the wishes of its maker. Denning v. Butcher, 91 Iowa, 425.

Where an executor of a will calls physicians who attended the testator as witnesses as to his mental capacity in a contest of the will, he waives the provisions of Iowa Code, § 3643, prohibiting them from giving evidence acquired in the performance of their duties as physicians during the lifetime of the testator. Denning v. Butcher, 91 Iowa, 425.

And the prohibition of Mich. Comp. Laws, § 5943, against the disclosure by a physician of any information which he may have acquired in attending a patient in his professional character, may be waived by those representing the patient's interests in a contest of his will after his death, so as to permit the physician to give evidence as to the testator's sanity based upon his observation while in attendance upon him. Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 306.

So, the provisions of Mo. Rev. Stat. 1879, § 4017, rendering physicians incompetent to testify concerning information acquired from a patient in a professional character, prohibit giving an opinion based upon knowledge thus acquired; but the protection offered may be waived by the patient and those representing him after his death, and is waived by calling them as witnesses to give such evidence. Thompson v. Ish, 90 Mo. 180.

The executor or administrator of a party cannot waive the privilege of the deceased party given by New York Code of Civil Procedure, § 834, prohibiting a practicing physician from disclosing information acquired by him in a professional capacity, however, so as to permit him to give evidence on which is in conformity with the whole evidence.

Webb v. State, 9 Tex. App. 490; Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 58 Am. Rep. 688.

In case of opinions as to sanity it must appear that the acquaintance of the witness with the party is such as to enable him to form correct conclusions as to the mental condition.

Thomas v. State, 40 Tex. 68.

Where the text is pertinent and applicable to the issue, and is of standard authors on the subject-matter, the privilege to have the authority before the jury is valuable.

The discretion in this instance was abused.

Wade v. De Witt, 20 Tex. 400.

An expert is one who is conversant with the subject-matter on questions of science, skill, trade, and others of the like kind.

Best, Ev. § 346.

the issue of the mental capacity of the deceased. Westover v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 99 N. Y. 54, 52 Am. Rep. 1.

In Thompson v. Ish, 99 Mo. 180, the New York cases on the subject of the prohibition against physicians giving testimony as to information acquired in a professional character were distinguished on the ground that the New York statute goes further and says that the prohibition shall apply to every examination of the designated persons unless expressly waived by the patient.

In Staunton v. Parker, 19 Hun. 56, however, it was held that heirs-at-law, who are the only representatives of the deceased testator and succeed to his rights, are competent to waive the provisions of the act prohibiting disclosure by a physician of information acquired in a professional capacity so as to enable the physician to testify for the purpose of showing that the testator was of unsound mind and incompetent to make a will.

III. From observation or examination.

An expert witness who has had opportunities of knowing and observing a person accused of crime whose insanity is alleged may give an opinion as to his sanity of insanity based on knowledge obtained from such observation. State v. Potts, 100 N. C. 457; McAllister v. State, 17 Ala. 434, 52 Am. Dec. 180.

If a medical expert in a criminal prosecution is able from a physical examination of the accused subsequent to the criminal act to determine satisfactorily in his own mind the condition of the brain of the accused, and could state from such examination that there was a disease of such long standing affecting it that it must have existed when the crime was committed, the accused is entitled to the evidence. People v. Wood, 128 N. Y. 261.

Thus, a physician who lived near the defendant in a criminal prosecution for a long time, knew him well, and had had frequent conversations with him, may give his opinion as to whether he was sane or insane, though it is not based on the evidence adduced on the trial or upon a hypothetical case stated. Taylor v. State, 83 Ga. 647.

And the opinion of the family physician of the accused, who had been a practicing physician for many years and had attended him when his mind was in a disordered condition, and had particular facilities for observation and knowledge as to his condition, is admissible in a criminal prosecution on the question of his sanity at the time of the commission of the criminal offense. Pigg v. State, 43 Tex. 108.

So, the opinion of a physician of forty years' practice, who had seen, examined, and conversed with the accused in a criminal prosecution one or two days after the commission of the criminal act

An expert need not necessarily be a professional man. If he has studied the subject-matter of inquiry, and understands it, he may give his opinion the same as if he were a professor of the art or science.

Upon what principle of logic or justice can we give to presumption so much power in a case involving the question of sanity as to shift the burden to the prisoner, and in the other cases hold that it does not shift.

Ake v. State, 6 Tex. App. 398, 32 Am. Rep. 586; Com. v. McKie, 1 Gray, 61, 61 Am. Dec. 410.

The burden of proving insanity was not upon the defendant.

People v. McCann, 16 N. Y. 58, 69 Am. Dec. 642; Com. v. McKie, 1 Gray, 61, 61 Am. Dec. 410; Com. v. Rogers, 7 Met. 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458; Hopps v. People, 81 Ill. 385, 83 Am. Dec. 281; State v. Crawford, 11 Kan. 82; State v. Bart- while the accused was under arrest, that he was mentally deranged, is admissible in evidence on a prosecution for such act. Murphy v. Com. 92 Ky. 485.

And where an expert witness in a criminal prosecution in which insanity is alleged as a defense has testified that the accused presented the appearance of an abject and despairing man he may explain the reasons for such appearance. Coyle v. Com. 104 Pa. 117.

So, a medical witness in a criminal prosecution in which insanity is alleged may be asked whether from the whole of his intercourse with the accused it appeared to him that he was insane. Frith's Case, 22 How. St. Tr. 307.

And the evidence of a physician sent to the jail by the district attorney to make an examination of the prisoner's mental and physical condition, as to his opinion of his mental condition, is not subject to the objection that he was thereby compelled to furnish evidence against himself. People v. Kemmler, 119 N. Y. 580.

And the opinion of a family physician of a person accused of homicide, who was also an expert, upon the subject of mental diseases, who had testified to having assisted at the birth of her two children and at other times, and that he was well acquainted with her and her ailments, as to whether from his treatment of her and her ailments and all he knew of her she was of ordinarily good mind or weak minded, is not subject to the objection that the test of legal responsibility is whether the accused was capable of knowing right from wrong, and not whether she was weak minded, as the inquiry as to the character and quality of her mind is material to the question of her capacity to know that the act was wrongful. People v. Worthington, 105 Cal. 166.

The opinion of an expert witness in a prosecution for burglary, as to whether the accused could distinguish between right and wrong to such an extent as to know that it was wrong to commit burglary, however, is inadmissible where in his opinion opportunity had never offered itself for him to determine whether the accused could abstain from the commission of that crime when he knew and believed it to be wrong. Shaeffer v. State, 61 Ark. 241.

And the court in a criminal prosecution will not stop the trial and give physicians unlimited time to observe the accused and form their opinions as to his sanity, where they had delayed the trial for a long time by continuous and dilatory methods, and there was ample time during such delay for the observation of his mental condition. State v. Crisp, 126 Mo. 605.

So, an expert witness in a will contest who has testified fully as to his knowledge of the testatrix may lett, 48 N. H. 224, 80 Am. Dec. 154; Polk v. State, 19 Ind. 170, 81 Am. Dec. 332; Davis v. United States, 160 U. S. 469, 40 L. ed. 499; Coffin v. United States, 156 U. S. 432, 39 L. ed. 481; Brotherton v. People, 75 N. Y. 159; O'Connell v. People, 87 N. Y. 377, 41 Am. Rep. 379; Walker v. People, 88 N. Y. 81; Chase v. People, 40 Ill. 352; People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9, 97 Am. Dec. 162; Cunningham v. State, 56 Miss. 269, 31 Am. Rep. 360; Dove v. State, 3 Heisk. 348; Plake v. State, 121 Ind. 433; Bradley v. State, 31 Ind. 492; McDougal v. State, 88 Ind. 24; Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. Rep. 161.

The charge presented a phase of criminal homicide, and of murder in the first degree which does not arise out of all the facts or any of them in evidence, and is in no way applicable to this case.

give his opinion as to her sanity based upon his own knowledge, such knowledge consisting of the facts which he had already stated. Foster v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233; Puryear v. Reese, 6 Coldw. 21.

And the opinion of a physician who has long been acquainted with a testator and his habits, conduct, and conversation, is admissible in evidence in a proceeding to contest his will on the ground of mental incapacity. Bitner v. Bitner, 65 Pa. 347.

And a physician who had known the testator, and had seen and talked with him at a specified time, may give his opinion in a will contest as to his mental capacity at that time. Rice v. Rice, 53 Mich. 432.

So, an attending physician of a testatrix who was present when her will was executed may give his opinion as to her mental capacity in a will contest, where he fully states her condition, appearance, and conversations at the time. Brown v. Mitchell, 75 Tex. 9.

And physicians called as witnesses in a will contest may be inquired of whether, from the circumstances of the patient and the symptoms they observed, they are capable of forming an opinion of the soundness of her mind, and if so whether they from thence conclude that her mind was sound or unsound. Hathorn v. King, 8 Mass. 371, 5 Am. Dec. 106.

And evidence of a medical attendant in a lunatic asylum in which a testator resided at the time of making her will is admissible on the question of testamentary capacity to show that she was sane, and that her continuance in the asylum was voluntary. Martin v. Johnston, 1 Fost. & F. 122.

So, the physician of a testator who had committed suicide, who had testified to his mental condition during the time he attended him, may be asked in a will contest to state from his personal knowledge whether the testator's condition was or was not an indication of insanity, and what the act of suicide would indicate as to the soundness or unsoundness of his mind. Frary v. Gusha, 59 Vt. 257.

And testimony of an attending physician of a testator to the effect that the fact that the testator judiciously managed his property prior to his last sickness and the making of his will tends to show that he was subject to no delusion while making his will, is competent and admissible. Coryell v. Stone, 62 Ind. 307.

And a question asked an expert witness, who had testified that she had seen and conversed with the testatrix for an hour or two at a time on three different occasions, whether she thought she could have conversed with her an hour and a half and not have discovered any insanity if any existed, is not objectionable as leading. Foster v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233.

So, a practising physician who states on an inquisition of lunacy that he had met and conversed with the alleged lunatic in order to test the

The charge of the court must be confined to the issues raised by the evidence.

Mayfield v. State, 23 Tex. App. 645; Boren v. State, 23 Tex. App. 28; Willson, Crim. L. § 2387.

On rehearing.

We thought the rule of practice on hypothetical questions was settled in this state, by this court.

Webb v. State, 9 Tex. App. 490; Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 58 Am. Rep. 638; Williams v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 39 S. W. 687.

Not having objected to the evidence of Miss Sparks at the time it was introduced does not preclude the defendant from objecting to it by motion to exclude it.

Burke v. State, 15 Tex. App. 167; Gaines v.

condition of his mind, and noticed his general expression and appearance, but had formed no settled opinion as to the depth of his mind, may be asked whether he discovered any evidence of unsoundness of mind, and may be permitted to state his opinion on the question of his sanity or insanity. Re Carmichael, 36 Ala. 514.

And a question asked a physician as to the state of mind of a person whose sanity was in question on a particular day, based upon his appearance, actions, condition, and conversation, is not objectionable as leading and suggestive where he had previously testified at length that he had attended such person for some time including the day specified, and described his ailments and physical condition, and that he had conversed with him. Wheelock v. Godfrey, 100 Cal. 578.

But while medical experts may give their opinions as to the testator's sanity in a will contest where they are based upon observation or examination, they must give the symptoms or circumstances from which they draw their conclusions. Puryear v. Reese, 6 Coldw. 21; Gibson v. Gibson, 9 Yerg. 329.

And depositions of physicians stating their opinion that a party was insane will be rejected where the deponents state no facts on which they ground their opinions. Dickinson v. Barber, 9 Mass. 225, 6 Am. Dec. 58; White v. Bailey, 10 Mich. 155; Hathorn v. King, 8 Mass. 371, 5 Am. Dec. 106.

So, it is the better practice to require an expert witness on the question of sanity or insanity to state the circumstances of his examination, and the facts, symptoms, or indications upon which his conclusion is based, before giving the opinion to the jury. People v. Youngs, 151 N. Y. 210.

But it is not error to permit a medical expert who has made a personal examination of a patient for the purpose of determining his mental condition to give his opinion as to that condition at the time of the examination, without in the first instance disclosing the particular facts upon which his opinion is based. People v. Youngs, 151 N. Y. 210; Crockett v. Davis, 61 Md. 134.

And a physician may give his opinion as to the sanity or insanity of a person on trial for homicide upon the basis of a hypothetical case, together with what he had learned from an examination of him. State v. White, 134 Mo. 404.

An expert witness in a will contest who is competent to give an opinion as to the testator's sanity may give one founded either upon his personal examination of or acquaintance with him, or upon a hypothetical case stated to the witness, so framed as to resemble as near as may be the case under consideration. Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 120.

But an expert witness in a prosecution for homicide, who has stated on a hypothetical case that in Salmon, 16 Tex. 811; Hubby v. Camplin, 22 Tex. 582; Sharp v. Baker, 22 Tex. 306.

Mr. Mann Trice, for the State:

The determination as to whether a hypothetical question should be allowed is one for the court to determine. The form of the question, its length, as to what it should or should not contain, are all questions primarily vested in the discretion of the court.

Rogers, Expert Testimony, §§ 26-38; Luning v. State, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 178; State v. Bowman, 78 N. C. 509; Hunt v. Lovell Gaslight Co. 8 Allen, 169, 85 Am. Dec. 697; Dolz v. Morris, 10 Hun, 202.

It is not the duty of an expert to reconcile conflicting evidence.

Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 496, 9 Am. Rep. 760; Guetic v. State, 66 Ind. 94, 32 Am. Rep. 99; Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 464, 38 Am. Rep. 464.

his opinion the defendant was insane, cannot be subsequently asked to state his opinion as to the condition of the defendant's mind at the time of the homicide judging from a personal examination which he had made since the homicide was committed, and the hypothetical case upon which he had already expressed his opinion, as to what had occurred since, is little or no evidence of the condition of his mind at the time of the homicide. State v. Welsor, 117 Mo. 570.

So, it is not necessary to the admissibility of the opinion of an expert witness in a criminal prosecution upon the question of the sanity of the accused that he should have heard all of the evidence where his opinion is based upon his own knowledge and observation aided by what was said to them by the accused of his feelings and symptoms. State v. Hayden, 51 Vt. 296.

And the opinion of an expert in a trial for murder in which insanity is alleged as a defense is not subject to objection, when offered in evidence, that he had not heard the testimony given with respect to the condition of the defendant's mind, where his opinion was given from his own personal knowledge. State v. Gould, 40 Kan. 258.

And it is not an abuse of discretion for the court to exclude medical experts from the court-room in a criminal prosecution in which insanity is alleged, where they were called, not to declare a scientific opinion based upon other testimony in the case, but simply as witnesses to give their own opinions of the condition of the mental capacity of the accused as derived from personal acquaintance. Johnson v. State, 10 Tex. App. 571.

A physician who had visited an invalid on consultation with his attending physician cannot give his opinion of the mental condition of such invalid at that time in an action brought to avoid a sale of property by him on the ground of insanity based upon representations made to him by the invalid's wife, the attending physician, and other attendants as to his previous symptoms or condition in connection with symptoms he discovered by professional observation and examination. Heald v. Thing, 45 Me. 362.

And a consulting physician cannot give his opinion in a will contest based in part upon his own examination but mainly upon what he was told on that question for the purpose of that examination, not in the patient's presence, of his previous symptoms and condition, by the attending physician. Wetherbee v. Wetherbee, 38 Vt. 454.

And while the family physician of a testatrix may express an opinion upon the actual condition of his patient, yet it is not competent for him to give one upon the direct question as to her capacity to make a will. Hall v. Perry, 87 Me. 569.

If the expert has not heard the testimony (as in this case) each side to the issue has a right to an opinion from the witness upon any hypothesis reasonably consistent with the evidence, and if meagerly presented in the examination on one side, it may be fully presented on the other. The whole examination being within the control of the trial court, whose duty it is to see that it is fairly and reasonably conducted.

Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 58 Am. Rep. 638; Lovelady v. State, 14 Tex. App. 545; Buswell, Insanity, § 263; Rogers, Expert Testimony, p. 65; Whart. Crim. Ev. 419; Jones, Ev. §§ 373, 374.

It is sufficient if the question fairly states such facts as the proof of the examiner tends to establish, and fairly presents his claim or theory. It cannot be expected that the interrogatory will include the proofs or theory of

So, refusal to allow a statement made by an expert called by the government in a prosecution for murder of his opinion of the defendant's mental condition to be read to the jury, but permitting defendant's counsel to use it to cross-examine the witnesses, furnishes no ground of exception. Com. v. Pomeroy, 117 Mass. 143.

And where the trial judge selects competent physicians as experts to make an examination of the mental condition of the accused in a criminal prosecution for the purpose of better preparing them to intelligently state his situation to the jury at the trial, it is not a condition precedent to the trial being proceeded with that they should make a written and detailed report of such examination to the court. State v. Paine, 49 La. Ann. 1092.

IV. From the evidence.

a. The general rule.

The general rule is that an expert witness in an action involving the question of insanity, who had heard all the testimony given on the part of the defendant on that question, may be asked his opinion upon the hypothesis that the testimony given by the witnesses is all true. Negroes, Jerry v. Townshend, 9 Md. 145; State v. Windsor, 5 Harr. (Del.) 512; Schneider v. Manning, 121 Ill. 376; State v. Potts, 100 N. C. 457; McAllister v. State, 17 Ala. 434, 52 Am. Dec. 180; Yardley v. Cuthbertson, 108 Pa. 905, 56 Am. Rep. 218; Pidcock v. Potter, 68 Pa. 842; Foster v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233; Rex v. Searle, 1 Moody & R. 75; Rex v. Wright, Russ. & R. C. C. 456.

Though he has not seen the patient. State v. Windsor, 5 Harr. (Del.) 512.

And that men of medical skill, who have no personal knowledge of the facts, may be asked their opinions whether certain appearances detailed by other witnesses are symptoms of insanity. Doe, Sutton v. Reagan, 5 Blackf. 217, 33 Am. Dec. 406; Rex v. Searle, 1 Moody & R. 75; Rex v. Wright, Russ. & R. C. C. 456.

Thus, an expert witness on the question of insanity, who was present in court and heard all of the testimony claimed to indicate insanity, may be asked in a criminal prosecution as to whether in his opinion the accused was sane or insane at the time of the offense supposing all the facts he had heard testified to, to be true. State v. Hayden, 51 Vt. 296; Com. v. Rogers, 7 Met. 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458; People v. Barber, 115 N. Y. 475.

Though he had made no personal examination and knew nothing of the actual facts. Com. v. Rogers, 7 Met. 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458.

In State v. Hayden, 51 Vt. 296, Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 298, infra, V. b, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case evidence bearing upon the question of the sanity of the testatrix the adversary, since this would require a party to assume the truth of that which he generally denies. This is the universal rule in both criminal and civil cases.

State v. Hanley, 34 Minn. 430; Ballard v. State, 19 Neb. 609; People v. Augsburg, 97 N. Y. 591; State v. Anderson, 10 Or. 448; Conway v. State, 118 Ind. 482; Baker v. State, 30 Fla. 41; McFall v. Smith, 32 Ill. App. 463; Civil Cases: Stearns v. Field, 90 N. Y. 649; Nave v. Tucker, 70 Ind. 15; Hathaway v. National L. Ins. Co. 48 Vt. 335; Daniels v. Aldrich, 42 Mich. 58; Meeker v. Meeker, 74 Iowa, 352; Woolner v. Spalding, 65 Miss. 204; Jackson v. Burnham, 20 Colo. 532.

Counsel may frame the hypothetical question upon the hypothesis of the truth of all the evidence, or of certain facts assumed to be proved for the purpose of the inquiry. The question is not improper simply because it includes only a part of the facts in evidence.

Rogers, Expert Testimony, p. 65; Williams v. State, 64 Md. 384.

Each side in an issue of fact has its theory of what is the true state of facts, and assumes that it can prove it to be so to the satisfaction of the jury, and, so assuming, shapes hypothetical questions to experts accordingly; and such is the correct practice.

Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 464, 38 Am. Rep. 464; Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 496, 9 Am. Rep. 760; Guetig v. State, 66 Ind. 94, 32 Am. Rep. 99; Goodwin v. State, 96 Ind. 550; People v. Goldensohn, 76 Cal. 328; Coyle v. Com. 104 Pa. 117.

When the hypothetical question has been improperly allowed, because not including certain facts it should have embraced, the error was conflicting, while in the case at bar there was no conflict.

So, medical men who were present in court and heard the evidence in a criminal prosecution may be asked on the issue of the insanity of the accused whether, as a matter of science, the facts stated, supposing them to be true, show a state of mind incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong. M'Naghten's Case, 10 Clark & F. 200, 8 Scott, N. R. 595, 1 Car. & K. 130. But see Reg. v. Frances, 4 Cox, C. C. 57, supra, IV. b.

And testimony of medical experts as to the sanity or insanity of a testator is admissible though their opinions are based on facts proved in the case, and not upon facts known to the witnesses. Vance v. Upson, 66 Tex. 478; Kempsey v. McGinnis, 21 Mich. 123.

A proper question to a medical expert on the question of insanity in a criminal prosecution is, "Assuming the facts to be true which you have heard testified to what is your opinion as to the prisoner's sanity or otherwise?" People v. Kleim, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 12.

Or, if the symptoms and indications testified to by other witnesses are proved, and if the jury are satisfied of the truth of them, whether in his opinion the party was insane, and what were the nature and character of that insanity, what state of mind they indicated, and what he would expect would be the conduct of such a person in any supposed circumstance. Com. v. Rogers, 7 Met. 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458.

The opinion of an expert witness upon the question of the sanity or insanity of the accused in a criminal prosecution, however, must be based upon the evidence taken upon the trial then pending, and cannot be based, either in part or in whole, upon newspaper reports of evidence taken at a former trial, as that is nothing but hearsay. Williams v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 39 S. W. 687.

And it is not admissible in evidence where he had heard only a part of the testimony given by one of several witnesses, and the opinion was based upon the testimony thus read and upon a newspaper account of the other testimony. Williams v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 39 S. W. 687.

And a medical witness in a criminal prosecution in which insanity is alleged, who states that he had heard all the evidence as published in the newspapers with a view to make up his mind as to the person's sanity, cannot express an opinion on that subject; only a hypothetical question can be put unless the witness had been in court and heard all the evidence. Macfarland's Trial, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 57.

So, medical experts will not be allowed to determine from the evidence what the facts are, and give their opinions from them. Dexter v. Hall, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 9, 21 L. ed. 73.

And an expert witness on the question of sanity in a criminal prosecution cannot be asked his opinion from the whole evidence where it is conflicting. The question put to him should state specifically particular facts in evidence hypothetically assuming them to be true, so worded that the jury can see upon what particular assumed facts his opinion is based. Coyle v. Com. 104 Pa. 117; United States v. McGlue, 1 Curt. C. C. 1.

Questions put to an expert witness on the question of sanity or insanity in a criminal prosecution on direct examination must be formed hypothetically unless there is no conflict of evidence as to the facts, or unless the expert is personally acquainted with them. State v. Maier, 36 W. Va. 757.

So, a medical expert cannot be asked his opinion respecting the sanity or insanity of a grantor in an action involving the validity of his deed, forming it from the symptoms detailed in the evidence, where the evidence on the subject is conflicting. Dexter v. Hall, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 9, 21 L. ed. 73.

And while medical witnesses may give their opinions in a will contest as to the sanity of a testator they must be predicated upon the facts proved, and when the facts are doubtful they may give their opinions upon cases hypothetically stated. Tingley v. Cowgill, 48 Mo. 291.

And if an expert witness who has heard all the testimony of a particular witness, or of all the witnesses, is permitted to give his opinion upon such evidence, if there is any conflict of evidence, or any doubt as to what the evidence is, he should be required to state fully his understanding as to what facts are established thereby. Bennett v. State, 57 Wis. 69, 46 Am. Rep. 28.

The facts upon which their opinions are founded must be stated, and the jury must be left to determine, not only the truth of the facts, but of the opinions founded upon them. Kempsey v. McGinnis, 21 Mich. 123.

Medical or other professional witnesses called upon to testify as to the sanity of the accused in a criminal case are not to judge of the credibility of the witnesses or of the truth of the facts detailed by them; it is for the jury to decide whether such facts are satisfactorily proved. Com. v. Rogers, 7 Met. 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458.

So, a medical expert cannot give his opinion on the evidence as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time, or whether he was conscious that he acted contrary to law or was laboring under a delusion, as such question involves the determination of the question which the jury is called upon to decide. M'Naghten's Case, 10 Clark & F. 200, 8 Scott, N. R. 595, 1 Car. & K. 130.

And medical witnesses in a criminal prosecution is cured if the cross-examination has supplied the omission and placed before the witnesses all the facts necessary to the formation of an opinion.

Rogers, Expert Testimony, p. 67; Van Hoesen v. Cameron, 54 Mich. 609.

It is not the province of the expert to act as judge or jury. Hence all questions calling for his opinion should be so framed as not to call upon him to determine controverted questions of fact, or to pass upon the preponderance of testimony.

Jones, Ev. § 374; Page v. State, 61 Ala. 16; State v. Cole, 94 N. C. 958; Reed v. State, 62 Miss. 405; Bennett v. State, 57 Wis. 69, 46 Am. Rep. 26; M'Naughten's Case, 10 Clark & F. 200; Inland & Seaboard Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 189 U. S. 551, 85 L. ed. 270.

The truth of facts assumed by the question is in doubtful cases a question for the jury, cannot give their opinions as to the sanity or insanity of the accused based upon the facts and circumstances stated by other witnesses and upon the defendant's conduct at the trial, as this would practically put him in the place of the jury. State v. Felter, 25 Iowa, 67.

The giving of an opinion by an expert witness in a will contest, who had heard all the evidence as to the habits, conduct, etc., of the testator, as to whether the testator was of sound mind from a consideration of all the evidence in the case, is not an assumption of the province of the jury however, where there does not appear to have been any substantial dispute as to the facts upon which the testimony was predicated. Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 50 Ill. App. 87.

So, a medical witness upon the question as to the sanity or insanity must hear the whole evidence in order to qualify him to give an opinion based upon it. Webb v. State, 9 Tex. App. 491.

And a medical expert in a criminal case cannot give his opinion as to the sanity of the accused where he has heard only a part of the testimony, and his opinion is based upon the part heard by him. Lake v. People, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 495, 12 N. Y. 358; People v. Thurston, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 49; Brown v. Com. 14 Bush, 398.

Medical experts on the question of sanity or insanity must state their opinions upon the whole evidence if they have heard it, or upon a hypothetical statement which is in conformity with the whole evidence. Webb v. State, 9 Tex. App. 491.

But error which will warrant a reversal will not be predicated upon the admission upon cross-examination of the opinion of a medical expert as to the sanity or insanity of another based upon the testimony of a single witness, where the expert had heard all the testimony in the case, and had given his opinion, founded upon the whole testimony including such single witness. Webb v. State, 9 Tex. App. 491.

And the opinion of an expert in a trial for murder in which insanity is alleged as a defense, which does not purport to be based on all the evidence in the case, but only on so much of the same as he had heard, is not subject to objection that he had not heard all the evidence. State v. Gould, 40 Kan. 258.

And it has been held that an expert witness upon the question of sanity or insanity may express an opinion upon a defined portion of the testimony in the case assuming its truthfulness, where he is first made acquainted with the whole of it upon which he is to pronounce his opinion. Yardley v. Cuthbertson, 106 Pa. 365, 56 Am. Rep. 218.

And that an expert witness in a will contest may be asked his opinion as to the sanity of the testator, 39 L. R. A.

and if they find that the assumed facts are not proved they should disregard the opinions based upon such hypothetical questions.

Rogers, Expert Testimony, § 378; People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148; Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400; United States v. McGlue, 1 Curt. C. C. 9; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 640; 1 Whart. Ev. § 452.

The trial court should allow testimony to be introduced at any time before the argument is concluded, if it appear to be necessary to the due administration of justice.

Farris v. State, 26 Tex. App. 105; Nalley v. State, 28 Tex. App. 887; Hendricks v. State, 28 Tex. App. 416; Malton v. State, 29 Tex. App. 527; Laurence v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 601; Gonzales v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 611; Malcek v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 14.

No error is shown by the refusal to permit the introduction in evidence of excerpts from based upon the testimony of a witness to which he first listened assuming the testimony to be true. Foster v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 238.

And the rule has been laid down that the trial court in a will contest in which insanity is alleged may, in its discretion, allow or refuse to allow an expert witness, who has testified that he had heard the testimony of certain witnesses as to symptoms and indications of the testator, to state whether, assuming the statements of such witnesses to be true, the testator was of sound mind. Re Storer, 28 Minn. 8.

So, the better and more satisfactory practice is to allow witnesses summoned as experts on the question of insanity in an action involving that issue to remain in the court-room and hear the testimony of all the other witnesses, in order that from the whole testimony they may be enabled to determine from the evidence itself the matter upon which their opinion is desired. Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 58 Am. Rep. 688; Johnson v. State, 10 Tex. App. 571.

But where this has not been done a hypothetical case embracing the facts in evidence may be submitted to them. Johnson v. State, 10 Tex. App. 571.

And refusal to permit an expert witness in a prosecution for homicide, who had heard all the evidence, to give his opinion on the facts stated by the witness as to the state of the mind of the accused at the time of the homicide, is not error where the court decided that the witness might be asked his opinion upon a hypothetical case corresponding to the testimony, or that the testimony might be read and his opinion asked upon it on the supposition that the facts were true. People v. McCann, 3 Park. Crim. Rep. 272.

And an expert witness in a criminal prosecution may be asked for his opinion upon the facts hypothetically stated, and the court is not obliged to have the testimony taken down and read over to him to enable him to express an opinion upon the question of the sanity or insanity of the accused. Choice v. State, 31 Ga. 424.

b. The contrary rule.

The contrary rule has been adopted by a few of the cases which hold the doctrine that the opinions of expert witnesses on the question of sanity or insanity, founded on testimony already in the case, can only be given on a hypothetical case. McMechen v. McMechen, 17 W. Va. 683, 41 Am. Rep. 662.

Within this rule an expert witness should give his opinion as to the sanity of the accused in a criminal prosecution upon a hypothetical statement of the case, and not upon the evidence. McCarty v. Com. 14 Ky. L. Rep. 285.

And expert witnesses should not be asked, in a works on medical jurisprudence, and on the refusal of the court to permit counsel to read same as the views of the authors, as a part of his speech.

Com. v. Wilson, 1 Gray, 838; Boyle v. State, 57 Wis. 472, 46 Am. Rep. 41; Ashworth v. Kittredge, 13 Cush. 193, 59 Am. Dec. 178; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Bratt, 55 Md. 200; Jones, Ev. p. 594.

The extent to which counsel may, in argument, be permitted to read from books, whether legal or scientific, is a matter confided to the sound discretion of the court, and one which this court will not revise, unless it is made to appear that this discretion has been abused to the prejudice of the defendant.

Cross v. State, 11 Tex. App. 87; Hines v. State, 3 Tex. App. 483; Bowen v. State, 3 Tex.

App. 617; Bingham v. State, 6 Tex. App. 169; Foster v. State, 8 Tex. App. 248.

No abuse of discretion is shown in this case. Queen v. Crouch, 1 Cox, C. C. 94; Reg. v. Taylor, 18 Cox, C. C. 77; Rogers, Expert Testimony, § 179; People v. Wheeler, 60 Cal. 581, 44 Am. Rep. 70; Ashworth v. Kittredge, 59 Am. Dec. 178, and notes.

The evidence obtained by observation of defendant was in no sense a confession, therefore admissible, although he was not warned.

Hunt v. State, 83 Tex. Crim. Rep. 252; Adams v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 472.

The circumstances of enormity, cruelty, and deliberate malignity suffice to call for the charge, and to show that the killing was done with express malice, therefore murder in the first degree.

criminal prosecution, to give their opinions on the prisoner's sanity from the evidence given, but may be asked their views generally or with reference to a similar case hypothetically stated. State v. Coleman, 20 S. C. 441.

And a medical man conversant with insanity cannot give his opinion in a will contest as to the sanity or insanity of the testator founded upon the evidence given at the trial in his hearing. Doe, Bainbrigg, v. Bainbrigg, 4 Cox, C. C. 454.

And a witness testifying as an expert should state to the jury the facts upon which he gives his opinion; he can state what insanity is, or what causes insanity, but must assume hypothetical facts when he tells the jury his conclusions. Price v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 38 S. C. 199.

And it is not proper on the trial of an appeal from a decree allowing the probate of a will to ask an expert witness who had heard all of the testimony whether, supposing such testimony to be true, the testator was laboring under an insane delusion or was of unsound mind; the facts upon which his opinion is asked should be put to him hypothetically. Woodbury v. Obeare, 7 Gray, 467.

So it has been held that the opinion of an expert witness in a criminal prosecution, founded upon the testimony upon the general question of sanity or insanity of the accused, is not competent; he should merely give an opinion as to what the facts proved or claimed to be proved indicate as to the mental condition of the accused. People v. Lake, 12 N. Y. 358.

And that a physician called as a witness in a criminal prosecution, who had heard evidence given as to the insanity of the accused, should not be asked his opinion upon the evidence whether or not the accused was of unsound mind, the proper mode of examination being to take particular facts, and, assuming them to be true, to ask the witness whether in his judgment they were or were not indicative of insanity. Reg. v. Frances, 4 Cox, C. C. 57; Overruling M'Naughten's Case, 1 Car. & K. 130, note, 10 Clark & F. 200, 8 Scott, N. R. 595.

Error in permitting an expert witness to give his opinion as to the mental condition of the accused in a criminal prosecution, instead of a hypothetical statement, however, is not a ground for reversal, where the answer to the question did not prejudice the substantial rights of the accused. McCarty v. Com. 14 Ky. L. Rep. 235.

V. On hypothetical statements or questions.

a. Admissibility.

Witnesses who are experts upon the question of mental condition may give their opinions on an issue as to sanity or insanity upon a hypothetical question or statement of facts established by other evidence. Pittard v. Foster, 12 Ill. App. 132; Masie v. Com. 15 Ky. L. Rep. 522; Choice v. State, 31 89 L. R. A.

Ga. 424; Lake v. People, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 495; People v. Thurston, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 49; Pidcock v. Potter, 68 Pa. 342, 5 Am. Rep. 181; Hathaway v. National L. Ins. Co. 48 Vt. 338; Dexter v. Hall, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 9, 21 L. ed. 73. And see cases cited in the following subdivisions of this section.

And an expert witness in a proceeding de lunatico inquirendo may answer a hypothetical question based in part upon proved facts and in part upon the testimony of the other witnesses. Re Mason, 60 Hun. 46.

And refusal to permit all the testimony given in a case to be read as a hypothetical question put to a medical expert in a criminal prosecution is not error where counsel was told that he might assume certain facts and put the usual hypothetical question, which was finally done. People v. Golden-son, 76 Cal. 323.

Nor is refusal to permit an expert witness on the question of testamentary capacity to answer proper hypothetical questions reversible error where he had been permitted to answer other proper hypothetical questions covering the whole case, including everything covered by the questions he was not permitted to answer. Kerr v. Lunsford, 81 W. Va. 680, 2 L. R. A. 668.

So, an objection to evidence of a physician in a criminal prosecution as to the sanity or insanity of the accused, based upon a hypothetical case and an examination, that it is incompetent and immaterial, is worthless. State v. Wright, 134 Mo. 404.

And where a medical witness is subject to a long and minute examination with respect to the sanity of another, and his opinion is elicited upon groups of assumed facts which the evidence indicates, and carefully formed hypothetical questions are put to him without repeating such facts in terms but referring to them as a basis for an additional inquiry, and a long and critical cross-examination is had following the same method, a question on re-examination which does not include the hypothesis should be treated and considered as resting upon the hypothesis assumed in the cross-examination. McGinnis v. Kempey, 27 Mich. 363.

It is not error for the court to require the defendant in a criminal prosecution to submit his hypothetical case to medical experts before the state's rebutting evidence on the question of insanity is given to the jury, and is not ground for reversal where no application was made after the state had finished its rebutting proof to examine the medical experts with the additional evidence of the state before the jury. Dove v. State, 3 Heisk. 348.

b. Hypothesis; upon what based.

A hypothetical question as to mental condition, addressed to an expert witness, should embrace all the facts of the case when there is no dispute as

Clark v. State, 29 Tex. App. 357; Cook v. State, 30 Tex. App. 607; Lewis v. State, 15 Tex. App. 647; Swofford v. State, 3 Tex. App. 76; Gailean v. State, 11 Tex. App. 544; Spearman v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 279.

There must be a total want of reason and power to distinguish between right and wrong in order to excuse crime.

Rex v. Arnold, 16 How. St. Tr. 764; Earl Ferrer's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 947.

The law presumes that all men are sane, and if insanity of any person be alleged it is incumbent on the party alleging it to prove such insanity. Therefore, the correlative rule obtains that the burden of proof rests upon the party alleging insanity.

Best, Presumptions of Law & Fact, 57-70; to such facts, and the witness should take them all into consideration in giving his answer. Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 496, 9 Am. Rep. 760; Lake v. People, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 495; Re Miller, 26 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 428; Webb v. State, 9 Tex. App. 490; Hathaway v. National L. Ins. Co. 48 Vt. 336.

And a hypothetical case submitted for the opinion of the expert on the question of insanity in a will case containing only a partial statement of the material evidence adduced should be excluded. McCullough's Will, 35 Pittsb. L. J. 169.

But a hypothetical case is not subject to objection when it substantially embodies the facts relating to this subject as disclosed by the evidence. State v. Baber, 74 Mo. 232, 41 Am. Rep. 314. See also BURT v. STATE.

Where the facts are in dispute, however, the question should be based upon the facts which the evidence tends to prove. Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 496, 9 Am. Rep. 760; Kelly v. Perrault (Idaho) 43 Pac. 45.

It need not be based upon all the evidence. People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 562; Gueltig v. State, 66 Ind. 94, 32 Am. Rep. 99.

All the facts upon both sides in a will contest upon the issue of insanity should not be incorporated in one question asked an expert witness where the facts on one side conflict with the facts on the other, but attention should be called to their opposing tendencies, and if his skill or knowledge can furnish the explanation which harmonizes them, he is at liberty to set it up. Fairchild v. Baascomb, 35 Vt. 393.

In putting hypothetical questions to expert witnesses on the question of testamentary capacity counsel may assume the facts in accordance with their theory, and it is not essential that they state the facts as they exist, but the hypothesis should be based on a state of facts which the evidence tends to prove. Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 630, 2 L. R. A. 668; Bever v. Spangler, 93 Iowa, 576.

And counsel may assume the facts in accordance with their theory of them. Bever v. Spangler, 93 Iowa, 576.

Keeping within the range of the relevant testimony, they need not embody in the question all the matters of which there is any evidence. Goodwin v. State, 96 Ind. 550; People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 562.

They cannot be based on mere conjecture. Kelly v. Perrault (Idaho) 43 Pac. 45.

And opposing counsel may on cross-examination add to such hypothetical case such facts as he deems the evidence to have established, or subtract from it such facts as he supposes to have been disproved or not to have been proved. Goodwin v. State, 96 Ind. 550; Grubb v. State, 117 Ind. 277.

And the attention of an expert witness on the question of sanity may be called to such facts as are claimed by one party to show sanity, and his opinion taken as to whether the existence of these facts, together with those claimed to have been Greenl. Ev. §§ 42, 372, 378, 689; 3 Starkie, Ev. 404, 405; 4 Starkie, Ev. 1284, 1244, 1246; Shelford, Lunacy, 50; 1 Collinson, Lunacy, 51; Whart. Crim. Ev. 340; Whart. Homicide, 688; Russell, Crimes, p. 20; Buswell, Insanity, 159, 162, 170 et seq.; Jackson, Van Dusen, v. Van Dusen, 5 Johns. 158, 4 Am. Dec. 330.

To establish a defense on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act the accused was laboring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong.

Russell, Crimes, p. 19; M'Naughten's Case, 10 Clark & F. 200; Penal Code, art. 52.

proved by the other party, was inconsistent with the claim of insanity. Prentiss v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234, 17 L. R. A. 494.

Hypothetical questions put to experts upon the question of sanity or insanity should be based upon facts which the evidence tends to prove, but it is not required that they should be based upon conceded facts, nor is technical accuracy required in framing them, but if they are entirely without the support of evidence they should be excluded. Meeker v. Meeker, 74 Iowa, 352; Gueltig v. State, 66 Ind. 94, 32 Am. Rep. 99.

A hypothetical question asked an expert witness upon the question of insanity with a view to eliciting an opinion thereon should include only such facts as are admitted or are established, or which there is evidence tending to show; but it is not a question as to the weight of the evidence, but whether there was any evidence tending to prove the facts. Re Norman, 72 Iowa, 84.

And answers to hypothetical questions put to medical experts on the question of sanity or insanity are not objectionable because they include considerations not referred to in the questions as constituting the basis of the opinion given, where they are such as the testimony tends to prove, and as might have been properly included in the questions. Hathaway v. National L. Ins. Co. 48 Vt. 336.

The question to an expert witness testifying as to a person's mental condition, about which he has no personal knowledge, should contain such assertions of fact, and such only, as counsel may fairly claim that the evidence in the case justifies. Re Barber, 63 Conn. 363, 22 L. R. A. 90.

The hypothesis upon which experts are examined must be based upon facts admitted or established by the evidence, or which, if controverted, the jury might legitimately find on weighing the evidence. People v. Augsburg, 97 N. Y. 501; Re Mason, 60 Hun, 46.

Contestants of a will cannot introduce contradictory evidence upon a given point, and then base hypothetical questions to experts upon the theory that some of their witnesses are correct and some of them mistaken. Prentiss v. Bates, 93 Mich. 567.

And it is not competent to predicate a hypothetical question put to an expert upon the question of the insanity of a person accused of a crime upon all the evidence in the case, whether he has heard it all or not, upon the assumption that he recollects it, as it would then be impossible for the jury to determine the facts upon which the witness based his opinion, and whether such facts were proved or not. People v. McElvaine, 121 N. Y. 250.

In People v. McElvaine, 121 N. Y. 250; People v. Lake, 12 N. Y. 358, supra, IV. a, was distinguished, the court saying that in that case the error was in permitting physicians who did not hear all the evidence relating to mental capacity to give their opinions as to sanity founded upon the portion

Where the defendant relies upon any substantive, distinct, independent matter as a defense, such as insanity, nonage, license to do the act, or the like, then it devolves upon him to establish such defense by a preponderance of the evidence, and it would not be error to instruct in such case that the burden of proving such defense devolves upon the accused.

Jones v. State, 13 Tex. App. 1; Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 200; Donaldson v. State, 15 Tex. App. 25; Lane v. State, 16 Tex. App. 173; Smith v. State, 18 Tex. App. 69; Smith v. State, 19 Tex. App. 96; Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 58 Am. Rep. 638; Stinnett v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 526; Smith v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 18; Giebel v. State, 28 Tex. App. 151; Smith v. State, 22 Tex. App. 317; heard by them. And Sanchez v. People, 22 N. Y. 147, infra, VIII. a, was distinguished, the court saying that the opinion there delivered did not secure the concurrence of the court, and the decision had no reference to the question under consideration here. And People v. Thurston, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 49, supra, IV. a, was criticised, the court saying that the decision failed to secure the concurrence of the court on the ground upon which it was decided, and that no rule was therefore legally formulated by it.

So, in putting hypothetical questions to expert witnesses in a will contest upon the issue of insanity all facts should be excluded which the jury can interpret as well as the expert. Prentiss v. Bates, 88 Mich. 567.

And hypothetical questions cannot be based on conclusions of fact which can only be found by a jury. Ballard v. State, 19 Neb. 610.

And when a medical expert is asked to give his professional opinion upon an issue of insanity with reference to matters not within his own knowledge, and upon a hypothetical case founded upon the testimony of witnesses previously examined in the case, the question put to him must be so shaped as to give him no occasion to mentally draw his own conclusion from the whole evidence or a part thereof, and from the conclusion so drawn express his opinion, or to decide as to the weight of evidence or the credibility of witnesses. His answer must be such as not to involve any such conclusion so drawn or any opinion of the witness as to the weight of the evidence or credibility of the witnesses. McMechen v. McMechen, 17 W. Va. 683, 41 Am. Rep. 682.

c. Evidence in support of hypothesis.

A witness cannot testify as an expert in answer to a hypothetical question on the issue of mental soundness, unless there is evidence tending to prove the matters stated in the hypothetical question. Bomgardner v. Andrews, 55 Iowa. 638; Meeker v. Meeker, 74 Iowa. 362; Re Ames, 51 Iowa. 596; Hovey v. Chase, 52 Me. 305, 83 Am. Dec. 514; State v. Hanley, 34 Minn. 430; Re Lyddy, 24 N. Y. S. R. 607; Prather v. McClelland, 76 Tex. 574.

The hypothesis submitted to an expert witness for an opinion must be based upon the proof, and must not go outside of the facts as to which some evidence has been given, and which therefore could be assumed as the possible truth. People v. Smiler, 125 N. Y. 717; Ballard v. State, 19 Neb. 610.

Thus, expert witnesses in a criminal action in which insanity is alleged cannot be asked questions which assume that a delusion existed in the mind of the defendant in the absence of evidence to support the assumption. State v. Scott, 41 Minn. 335.

And an opinion of a medical expert upon the question of sanity or insanity of a person accused Boren v. State, 82 Tex. Crim. Rep. 637; Williams v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 39 S. W. 687; Whealy v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 39 S. W. 672; Hurst v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 40 S. W. 264; Webb v. State, 9 Tex. App. 512.

To seek to prove insanity from the character of the act would be regarded as nothing less than begging the question.

Ray, Medical Jurisprudence, § 12; Russell, Crimes, p. 23; Reg. v. Stokes, 3 Car. & K. 185.

Hurt, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

W. E. Burt was convicted in the district court of Travis county of murder in the first degree, the jury assessing his punishment at death. The evidence in this case, though cir-of crime, based upon a hypothesis wholly incorrectly assumed or incorrect in its material facts, is of little or no weight. Guetig v. State, 66 Ind. 94, 32 Am. Rep. 99.

So, in Cornwell v. Riker, 2 Dem. 354, the evidence as to mental incapacity of a testatrix, of distinguished alienists who had never seen her and only pronounced her demented on the assumption of the truth of certain hypotheses touching her character and conduct, was rejected upon the ground that the hypotheses were not proved to be well founded.

But while hypothetical questions put to experts upon the question of insanity should be based upon facts which the evidence tends to prove, technical accuracy is not required, and the questions need not be based upon conceded facts. Meeker v. Meeker, 74 Iowa. 352.

And an instruction in a prosecution for homicide, that the opinions of experts upon the question of the sanity or insanity of the accused rests wholly upon the hypothetical questions proposed to them, and the jury must believe from the evidence that the supposed facts stated in the hypothetical question are true to entitle the answer thereto to any weight, is objectionable upon the ground that their opinions may be founded upon other grounds than the assumed truth on the hypothetical question, and that the question of weight is one for the jury. Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. Rep. 161.

The jury is not to take it for granted that the statements contained in a hypothetical question upon the question of sanity or insanity which had been propounded to a medical expert are true, but must carefully scrutinize the evidence, and from that determine what, if any, of such statements are true, and what, if any, are not. Guetig v. State, 66 Ind. 94, 32 Am. Rep. 99.

Whether a hypothetical case on which the opinions of expert witnesses are based in a prosecution for crime in which insanity is alleged as a defense corresponds with the evidence in the case must be determined by the jury in the light of the testimony presented, and whenever it supposes facts not given in evidence it should be disregarded. State v. Pagels, 92 Mo. 300.

And whether the facts assumed in a hypothetical case put to an expert witness have been proved is a question for the jury. State v. Baber, 74 Mo. 282, 41 Am. Rep. 314; Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 496, 9 Am. Rep. 700; Lake v. People, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 495; People v. Thurston, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 49.

And if it is feared that questions contain statements of alleged facts which were not proved, and that the jury might be led to accept them simply because they are incorporated in the hypothesis, the adverse party should ask for an instruction that the facts be not taken for granted, but that the jury should carefully scrutinize the evidence and determine what, if any, of the averments are cumstantial, establishes beyond all controversy that appellant killed his wife and two little children. This being the case, under the circumstances attending the homicide, he was evidently guilty of murder of the highest degree, if sane. The defense was insanity.

First error assigned: It appears that counsel for the state submitted to the expert Dr. Wooten, a hypothetical case, and then asked his opinion as to the sanity or insanity of the defendant. Dr. Wooten answered that he believed him sane. Counsel for state then submitted to the expert a case based on all of the evidence, and received the same answer. Counsel for defendant then submitted his hypothetical case, and obtained from Dr. Wooten the answer that in his opinion the defendant was insane. As appears from the bill of exceptions, full opportunity was given defendant to obtain the opinion of the expert upon any hypothesis supported or inferable from any evidence in the case. Notwithstanding appellant submitted his case to the expert, and counsel for state submitted its case, yet appellant objects, because the opinion was obtained before a full case had been submitted. What, therefore, are the rules governing this proceeding? The supreme court of Indiana, speaking through Coffey, J., in the case of Davidson v. State, 185 Ind. 261, says: "In the examination of expert witnesses, counsel may embrace in his hypothetical question such facts as he may deem established by the evidence, and if opposing counsel does not think all the facts established are included in such question he may include them in questions propounded on cross-examination. Any other course would result in endless wrangles over the question as true. Grand Lodge I. O. of M. A. v. Wieting, 168 Ill. 408.

d. Form of question.

An opinion of a medical expert on an issue of sanity or insanity, based on testimony already in the case and the hypothesis, must be clearly stated so that the jury may know with certainty upon precisely what state of assumed facts the expert bases his opinion. McMechen v. McMechen, 17 W. Va. 683, 41 Am. Rep. 682.

Thus, a question asked an expert in a criminal action, whether, if the defendant having delusions as to his wife's fidelity, and as a reason for such delusions bases his action upon the action of a man rapping upon his bedroom window, that would indicate a derangement of mind upon that subject, is too indefinite to justify an expert opinion upon the issue of insanity. State v. Scott, 41 Minn. 365.

So, after enumerating a great number of facts as the basis for a hypothetical question to an expert on the question of sanity or insanity, it is improper to incorporate the entire testimony of the witnesses without stating that it is to be considered in connection with the other facts and propositions named. Re Barber, 63 Conn. 393, 22 L. R. A. 90.

And a hypothetical question addressed to an expert, seeking his opinion upon the question of sanity or insanity, must be so framed as to fairly reflect the facts admitted or proved by other witnesses. Burgo v. State, 26 Neb. 639; Ballard v. State, 19 Neb. 610.

And such a question is objectionable where it assumes that when the testator said he had a sister and if he knew where she lived he would visit her he referred to a sister whom he knew to have been dead for nearly thirty years, rather than to his living sister. Carpenter v. Bailey, 94 Cal. 406.

So, while a question put to a medical expert on the question of another's mental condition, about which he has no personal knowledge, may not be improper because it includes only a part of the facts in evidence, it would be so if by reason of omission it manifestly failed to present facts which were in evidence in their just and true relation, and caused them to appear in one that is untrue and unjust. Re Barber, 63 Conn. 393, 22 L. R. A. 90.

And a hypothetical question in a will contest covering many things of which there was no proof or offer of proof, including conditions necessarily indicating insanity as well as facts which might be co-existent with sanity, and going into the history, eccentricities, and physical condition of the testator and the personal traits of his relatives, is objectionable as tending to lead the jury to suppose that each of the enumerated circumstances indicated insanity, and to leave them to decide whether the will was suitable and proper. Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

89 L. R. A.

But such a question as to the sanity or insanity of a testatrix, based upon the hypothesis that she would keep picking at her dress, and continuously pecked on the arms of the chair where she was sitting, or on the stove, is not subject to the objection that it was not based on the evidence, where the evidence shows that she did so as a habit or unusually, but did not do so continuously. Re Fenton, 97 Iowa, 192.

And one based upon the hypothesis that she would not engage in any conversation, but appeared to be in a study, is not subject to the objection that it is not based upon the evidence, where it appears from the evidence that she would answer questions and talk some, but would not engage in familiar intercourse and the exchange of thoughts and sentiments. Re Fenton, 97 Iowa, 192.

So, in a hypothetical question to an expert as to his capacity to form an opinion regarding the sanity of a testator, which is attacked because of an insane delusion as to the illegitimacy of his children, which is based on their being disinherited, the true value of the estate and the amount given the children should be stated, and not the inventory value and counsel's statement that the children's share was inconsiderable, amounting to practical disinheritance. Re Barber, 63 Conn. 393, 22 L. R. A. 90.

And a medical expert may be asked, in a will contest upon the ground of mental incapacity, to suppose a man to start suddenly from his tea table under an impression that someone is at his door, when there has been no sound and the door is closed, and he seizes his gun, makes out and afterwards asserts that he chanced from his door a near relative of the family who lived close by, and that he finally disappeared in a corn field, and supposing him to be honest in his belief and that no one was in fact at his door, what he thought of his mental condition. Rush v. Magee, 36 Ind. 69.

It has been held, however, that the proper mode of examining an expert witness upon an issue of insanity is to ask what are the symptoms of insanity, and to take particular facts assuming them to be true and ask whether they indicate insanity upon the part of the person whose sanity is questioned. Reg. v. Frances, 4 Cox. C. C. 57, Overruling M'Naughten's Case, 1 Car. & K. 130, note, 8 Scott, N. R. 595, 10 Clark & F. 200.

And that a medical witness testifying as an expert on the question of mental capacity may be asked his opinion upon a hypothetical statement of facts, and to state what are the symptoms of insanity, the question whether such facts exist or such symptoms are proved belonging exclusively to the jury. Lake v. People, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 495.

The fact that a hypothetical question is so to what facts were, and what were not, established,"—citing Goodwin v. State, 96 Ind. 550; Rogers, Expert Testimony, 39; Stearns v. Field, 90 N. Y. 640.

The proposition asserted in Stearns v. Field, 90 N. Y. 640, is as follows: If "testimony of an expert is proper counsel may ask a hypothetical question, assuming the existence of any state of facts which the evidence fairly tends to justify. An error in the assumption does not make the interrogatory objectionable, if it is within the possible or probable range of the evidence. It seems that such a question is not improper, because it includes only a part of the facts in evidence,"—citing, among other cases, Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 464, 38 Am. Rep. 464. In Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 464, the learned judge says: "Another question raised is as to the admissibility of the hypothetical questions put to medical experts sworn as witnesses. The claim is that a hypothetical question may not be put to an expert unless it states the facts as they existed. It is manifest, if this is the rule, that in a trial where there is a dispute as to the facts which can be settled only by the jury, there would be no room for a hypothetical question. The very meaning of the word is that it supposes, assumes something for the time being. Each side, in an issue of fact, has its theory of what is the true state of the facts, and assumes that it can prove it to be so to the satisfaction of the jury, and, so assuming, shapes hypothetical questions to experts accordingly. And such is the correct practice,"—citing Brickson v. Smith, 2 Abb. App. Dec. 64; People v. Lake, 12 N. Y. 358; Seymour v. Fellows, 77 N. Y. 178.

Counsel for appellant do not contend that the state did not submit to the expert a full framed as to apply to the party by name instead of a supposititious person does not render it objectionable when it must have been understood by the jury to have reference to him, and it cannot be seen that the adverse party was prejudiced thereby. Grand Lodge I. O. of M. A. v. Wieting, 168 Ill. 408.

VI. Qualifications of experts.

A general knowledge as a medical man at least is required to enable one to testify as an expert on questions pertaining to insanity. State v. Crisp, 126 Mo. 605.

Only persons of scientific training upon the subject, and medical men, are to be regarded as experts. Com. v. Brayman, 136 Mass. 428.

The asking of hypothetical questions upon an assumed state of facts for the purpose of eliciting an opinion of a witness upon an issue of sanity or insanity can be justified only upon the theory that the witness is so familiar with the general characteristics of the subject under consideration as to be able to form opinions worthy of consideration, though wholly ignorant of the particular transaction in controversy. Russell v. State, 53 Miss. 367.

And expert evidence in a criminal prosecution on the question of insanity is only entitled to importance when fairly given by one who through experience, study, and scientific eminence is properly accredited to give it, and upon a hypothesis which is true in the relation of all its parts to the whole case upon the subject of inquiry. People v. Kemmler, 119 N. Y. 530.

Thus, a minister of the gospel who had read some authorities on moral and intellectual science, but nothing on insanity or medical jurisprudence, is not qualified as an expert to give his opinion in a criminal prosecution as to the sanity or insanity of the accused. BURT v. STATE.

And testimony of a witness in a prosecution for homicide that he had had experience with men claimed to be insane, and had taken charge of them and taken care of them, does not show a sufficient qualification to authorize him to give an opinion as to mental capacity as an expert. State v. Crisp, 126 Mo. 605.

Nor does a witness in a criminal prosecution qualify himself to give his opinion as to the sanity of the defendant as an expert by testimony that he had observed his eyes while in court, and that he had been a good deal with insane persons and noticed their eyes, noticing a difference in his eyes and those of insane persons, where it does not appear in what capacity he came in contact with insane people, or what opportunities for observation he had. McLeod v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 381.

But a Catholic priest who was regularly educated 89 L. R. A.

and had officiated as a priest for ten years, a part of whose preparatory education was to become competent to pass upon the mental condition of communicants in his church to the end that the rights of his church administered to invalids or dying persons might be administered to persons ascertained to be in a proper state of reason, and who was daily required to exercise and pass his judgment upon the mental condition of such persons, is an expert who may give his opinion in evidence as to the sanity or insanity of a testator in a will contest. Toomes's Estate, 54 Cal. 509, 35 Am. Rep. 83.

And proof that a witness in a will contest had been a nurse in an insane asylum for many years, and had had extended experience in nursing the insane in private houses and in large institutions, and that she had conversed with the testatrix for an hour or two at a time on three different occasions, is sufficient to lay a foundation for her opinion as to the sanity or insanity of the testatrix. Foster v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233.

So, physicians who are in general practice, and nurses, are competent witnesses in a will contest on the question whether pulmonary diseases, nervous derangements, and general debility would in the progress of the disease as indicated by the facts impair the mental powers at the time the will was executed two hours before testatrix's death. Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 368.

And physicians who have been practising their profession for a number of years, and have given the subject of medical jurisprudence some attention by reading works on the subject and by attending lectures, may testify on the question of the existence of the disease of insanity. Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 496, 9 Am. Rep. 760.

A regular and continuous practice by a physician in his profession for thirty years entitles him to be regarded as an expert on questions of mental soundness or unsoundness. Flynt v. Bodenhamer, 80 N. C. 205.

And a practising physician of twenty-eight years' standing, in charge of an institution for the feeble minded, who had studied the disease of insanity sufficiently to give a medical opinion as to such disease and diagnose a case of insanity, is a competent witness in a trial for murder on the question of the insanity of the accused, the extent of his experience and learning going to his credibility, and not to his competency. Montgomery v. Com. 88 Ky. 509.

And the evidence of a physician called as a witness on a question as to the mental soundness of a decedent by both parties, who showed that he has been in practice for seventeen years prior to the death of such decedent, who gives evidence on behalf of the defendant, cannot be objected to when called upon by the plaintiff upon the ground that case as the basis of his opinion, and, if this contention is made, it is not true. The contention is that counsel for the state submitted a case based upon its testimony, exclusive of that for the defense, and obtained the opinion of the expert, and then proceeded to submit to the expert a case based upon all the evidence, and that the opinion should not have been given until a full case had been submitted. Not that a full case was not submitted, but that it was not submitted until after an answer was given by the expert. Nor is it contended that counsel for defendant did not submit a full case to the expert, and obtain his opinion thereon. The bill of exceptions shows that this was done. Now, then, a case based upon all the evidence was presented to the expert by counsel for the defendant, as well as counsel for the state. This being so, we cannot hold that the answer which was obtained under the above circumstances should be held error for which this judgment should be reversed. Suppose counsel stating the hypothetical case should, unintentionally or through ignorance, omit to embrace therein a fact relevant to the question of sanity, and the opposing party should object, because all the facts are not embraced within the hypothetical case, calling attention to no fact omitted; would he be permitted to complain? Should the judgment be reversed because of such error, if this should be error? Certainly, no. If every fact which is relevant must be included in the hypothetical case to authorize an answer from the expert, then, we assert, there are but few lawyers, if any, in this state or elsewhere, who have the capacity to correctly submit a hypothetical question of this character. Take a case in he was not proved to be an expert. Wheelock v. Godfrey, 100 Cal. 578.

So, a physician and surgeon of fourteen years' practice and experience, who had studied psychological medicine and had experience with mental diseases, may give his opinion in a criminal action whether the manner in which the alleged criminal act was done, the circumstance of the absence or presence of apparent motive, and the whole details of the transaction would be considered by scientific men in determining the question of sanity or insanity, though it was not shown that he had made diseases of the mind a special study. State v. Reddick, 7 Kan. 143.

And a physician of experience who had been the medical adviser of a testator and practised for many years in his neighborhood, and who saw and conversed with him a short time before the making of his will, is competent to give his opinion as to the testator's sanity, in a will contest, though he had not made mental diseases a special study. Baxter v. Abbott, 7 Gray, 71; Hastings v. Rider, 90 Mass. 624.

And an experienced physician who treated a wound on the neck of a person accused of homicide about four hours after the commission of the act, and conversed with him at the time, is competent to testify as to his opinion of his state of mind at that time. State v. Larkins (Idaho) 47 Pac. 945.

So, the rule has been laid down that physicians and surgeons of practice and experience are experts upon the question of sanity or insanity, and that it is not necessary that they should have made the particular disease involved in the inquiry a specialty to render their testimony admissible as that of an expert. Hathaway v. National L. Ins. Co. 48 Vt. 836.

Within this rule physicians who knew the accused in a criminal prosecution personally, and had observed him in jail since the commission of the offense, may be permitted to give opinions as to his mental condition where in the course of their practice they had a fair proportion of cases of mental diseases under treatment, though they did not profess to be experts in such diseases. Phelps v. Com. 17 Ky. L. Rep. 706.

And the evidence of an expert witness in mental diseases in a will contest that the testator was insane is not rendered incompetent by the fact that he had testified that he was ignorant of the effect of a certain disease included in the facts assumed in questioning him upon a person's mental condition. Nash v. Hunt, 118 Mass. 237.

And the testimony of a testator's family physician in a will contest describing the testator's apparent physical condition and that he appeared as if in the last stages of second childhood is admissible, though he was not an expert in mental diseases and had not attended him for ten years previous to his death, and had only seen him a few times for two or three years previous to that time, and had had his last interview with him five years before his death. Lewis v. Mason, 109 Mass. 169.

Upon the other hand, however, it is held that to render an opinion admissible in evidence on the question of sanity or insanity it is essential that the witness should be an expert on the general subject under consideration; and that no acquaintance with cognate pursuits will suffice unless the matter inquired about is common to both. Russell v. State, 53 Miss. 367.

And that the opinion of a witness called as an expert on the question of sanity or insanity may be excluded where he testifies that he has not made diseases of the mind a special study, only as a general practitioner. Hutchins v. Ford, 82 Me. 263.

Within this rule, a physician cannot give an opinion as to the sanity or insanity of another, where he had previously stated that though a practising physician of twenty years' standing he had never made the subject of mental disease a study, and was not an expert in such matters, and was not an expert in psychological medicine. Russell v. State, 53 Miss. 367.

And a graduate in medicine and a practising physician who was not conversant with insanity in any of its various forms, and who never had had the care and superintendence of insane persons or made the subject of mental disease a study, is not competent to express his opinion in a prosecution for crime, based on the evidence which he had heard, as to the sanity or insanity of the accused. Reed v. State, 62 Miss. 406.

And the opinion of physicians on the question of the sanity or insanity of a person cannot be given in a criminal prosecution where their testimony discloses that they are not experts in insanity, and they did not have sufficient opportunity for examination to express an opinion. State v. Crisp, 126 Mo. 605.

So, the rule that skillful and reputable physicians may testify to the mental condition of their patient when they have had adequate opportunity of observing and judging of their mental qualities does not apply to one who was not an attending physician and had made a single examination pendente lite in order to inform himself as a witness. Fayette v. Chesterville, 77 Me. 23, 62 Am. Rep. 741.

And the opinion of a physician of twenty years' standing on the question of sanity or insanity of another is not admissible in evidence where he had previously stated that although he had several years before been for a short time such person's physician he had not seen him for a considerable period and had no knowledge of his condition at the time in question. Russell v. State, 53 Miss. 367.

which there are a great number of witnesses, each swearing to acts and conversations of the accused covering a great number of years, to all manner of social and business transactions, to his facial expression, etc. Who would be able to cull from this huge mass of testimony that which was relevant to the question of sanity, and submit it to the expert, without omitting some fact that perhaps would be pertinent to the issue of sanity? Failure would be inevitable, and to permit the opposing party to object, because all of the facts were not embraced in the hypothetical case, and on appeal reverse the judgment on this account, would result in the reversal of all judgments in this character of cases, or altogether deprive the party of the benefit of expert testimony on a hypothetical case. This being the probable result of such a rule, with much greater reason should we hold, where, as in this case, a full case has (whether by the state or the defendant) been submitted as the basis for an answer, that there would be no error, and especially no reversible error. We are not treating of a case in which the expert gave an opinion without hearing all of the evidence. This was the question discussed in Webb v. State, 9 Tex. App. 490, and in Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 58 Am. Rep. 688, referred to by counsel for appellant. Judge White, in his opinion in the latter case, says: "Where the expert has not heard the evidence, each side has the right to an opinion from the witness upon any hypothesis reasonably consistent with the evidence, and, if meagerly presented in the examination on one side, it may be fully presented on the other; the whole examination being within the control of the court, whose duty it is to see that

So, twenty years of medical experience confined to the ordinary business falling within the range of a country practitioner is not ordinarily sufficient to qualify one to testify as an expert upon questions of insanity upon hypothetical questions as to supposed facts of which he has no personal knowledge. Russell v. State, 53 Miss. 387.

And a physician who had not made a special study of insanity, and had considered the matter only so far as to determine whether a patient was in such a condition of mind as to require a treatment for insanity and if so to call in the services of a physician who had made a special study of the subject or recommend the removal of the patient to a hospital for the treatment of the insane, cannot be interrogated as an expert in a criminal action concerning the sanity or insanity of the defendant's mind upon a hypothetical case as arising out of the testimony. Com. v. Rich, 14 Gray, 335.

And the extent of a witness's acquaintance with the subject upon which he testifies as an expert may always be inquired into to enable the jury to weigh his evidence. Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 496, 9 Am. Rep. 760.

So, in Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 396, the competency of a physician and surgeon who for more than thirty years had devoted his attention almost exclusively to the treatment of patients suffering from mental maladies, to testify as to the effect of disease in its last stages in impairing the mental powers of persons of sound mind, was questioned upon the ground of his want of experience in that particular line, but the point was not passed upon.

Whether an expert witness on the question of mental soundness is competent or not to testify as an expert is a question for the court. Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 496, 9 Am. Rep. 760; Eggers v. Eggers, 57 Ind. 461; Fayette v. Chesterville, 77 Me. 28; Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 120; Flynt v. Bodenhamer, 80 N. C. 205.

And it is not affected by the witness's own opinion as to his own qualification or competency. Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 120.

And its decision is usually final, though it may be reviewed in extreme cases where a serious mistake has been committed through some accident, hindrance, or misconception. Fayette v. Chesterville, 77 Me. 28, 52 Am. Rep. 741.

And one who gave testimony in a court of law as an expert upon the question of soundness of mind will be presumed on appeal to have been properly qualified where nothing appears to the contrary. Melendy v. Spaulding, 54 Vt. 517.

So, after a lapse of thirty years it will be presumed that visits required by statute to be made to a lunatic asylum by medical attendants were duly made, and that the examinations were properly conducted; and the opinions of such attendants, formed on such visit, as to the sanity of a party then residing in the asylum visited with reference to testamentary capacity are admissible on that issue though the scope of their official duty was rather as to hygiene than as to sanity. Martin v. Johnston, 1 Post. & F. 122.

VII. Basis of facts or reasons for opinion.

Facts which are properly admitted to establish the mental condition of a testator in a will contest may be considered by an expert in arriving at his opinion as to the testator's condition of mind. Bever v. Spangler, 93 Iowa, 576.

The jury should know upon what basis of facts the opinion of an expert as to mental capacity is founded as its pertinence depends upon whether they find the truth of the facts upon which it rests. Wetherbee v. Wetherbee, 38 Vt. 454.

And in making hypothetical questions in regard to insanity a rule should not be laid down which will excuse any portion of the actual history of the case of which evidence has been given on the ground that these matters have no tendency of themselves to support the claim of insanity. Prentiss v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234, 17 L. R. A. 494.

To entitle the opinion of a medical expert on the question of sanity or insanity to the regard of the jury it should be satisfied by the other evidence in the cause that the symptoms did exist in the particular case under consideration. Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 580.

An opinion is not evidence unless the jury find the facts proved upon which it is based, and when such facts are found the opinion is a fact for the jury to consider in connection with the other evidence. Foster v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233.

Unless the jury in a will contest treat physical or mental manifestations given in evidence as faults they cannot treat as evidence the opinions of professional witnesses based thereon. Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 123.

So, expert witnesses cannot be asked questions which call for their conclusions upon facts not stated. Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 90.

And an expert witness on the question of sanity or insanity may be asked by either party as to the reasons on which his opinion is based, or he may with leave of court give such explanation on his own account. Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 58 Am. Rep. 688.

